START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

June 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-037

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library
(August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 01/1996
1461 - 0334 - 024 - 07
CAT 840 3594
29 - 10

Kodak

REEL 37

Volumes 67-68

Tanglewood
1939-41
to BSO, Pops
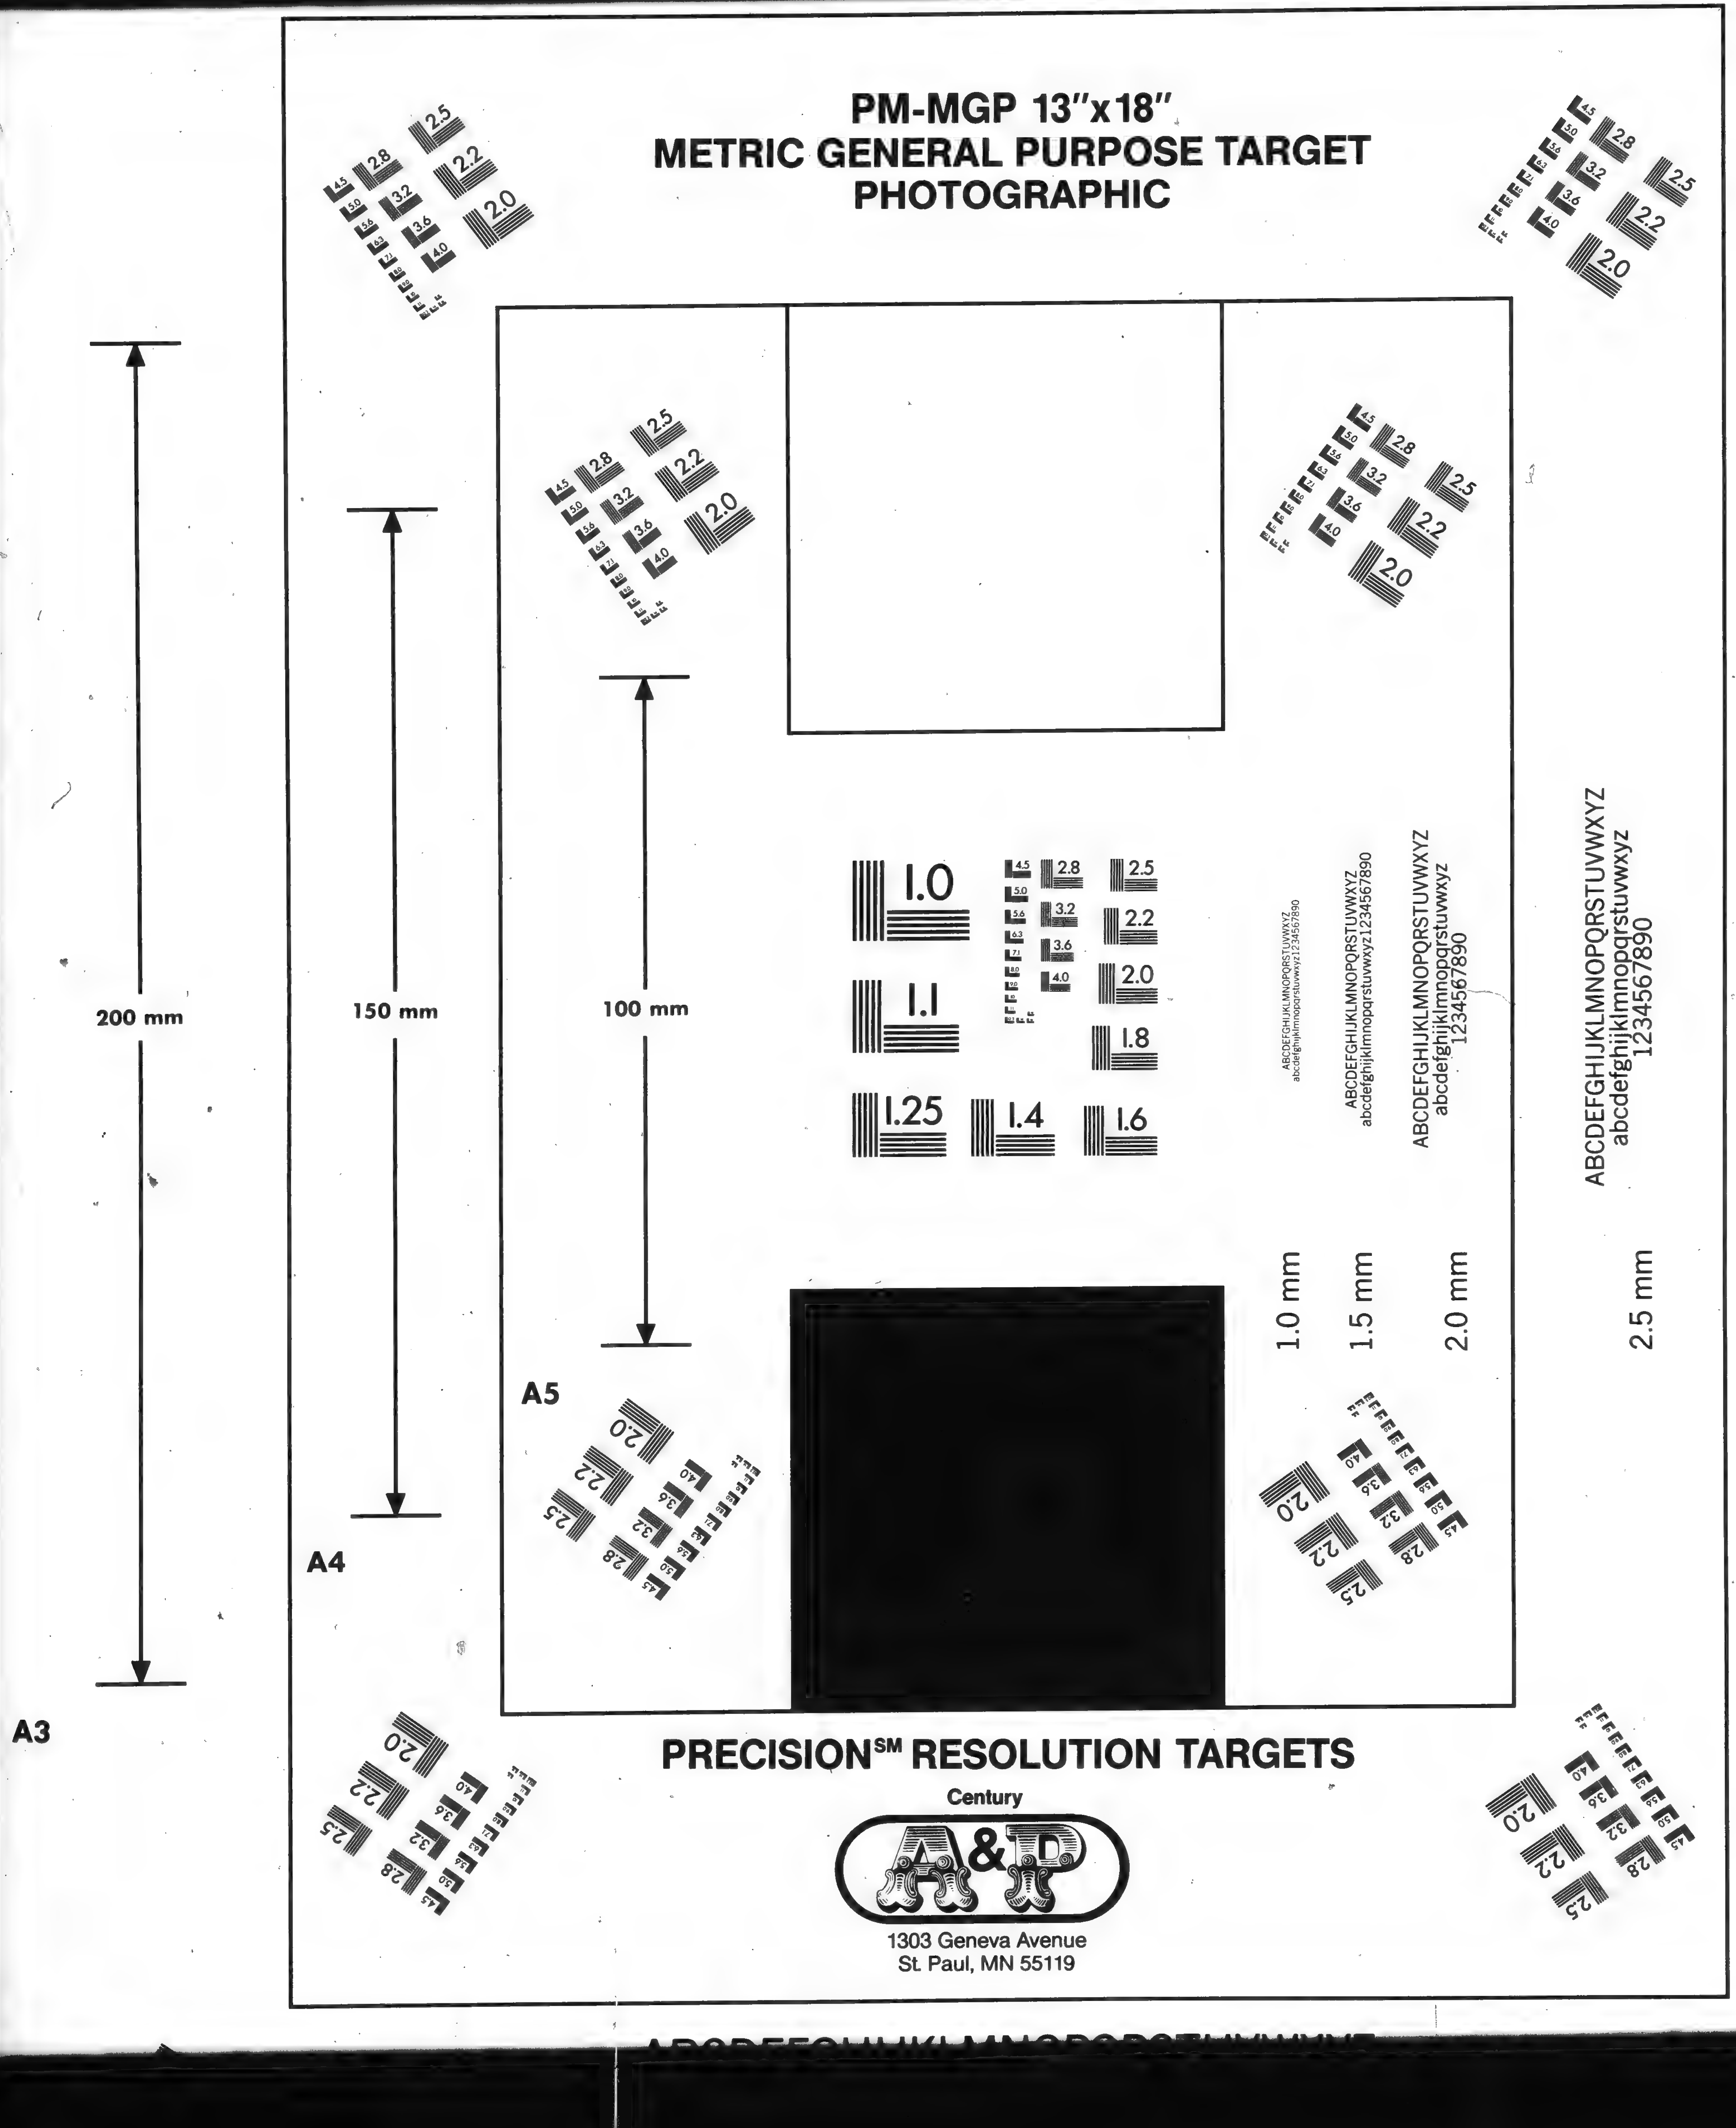
1940

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES
DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS
AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

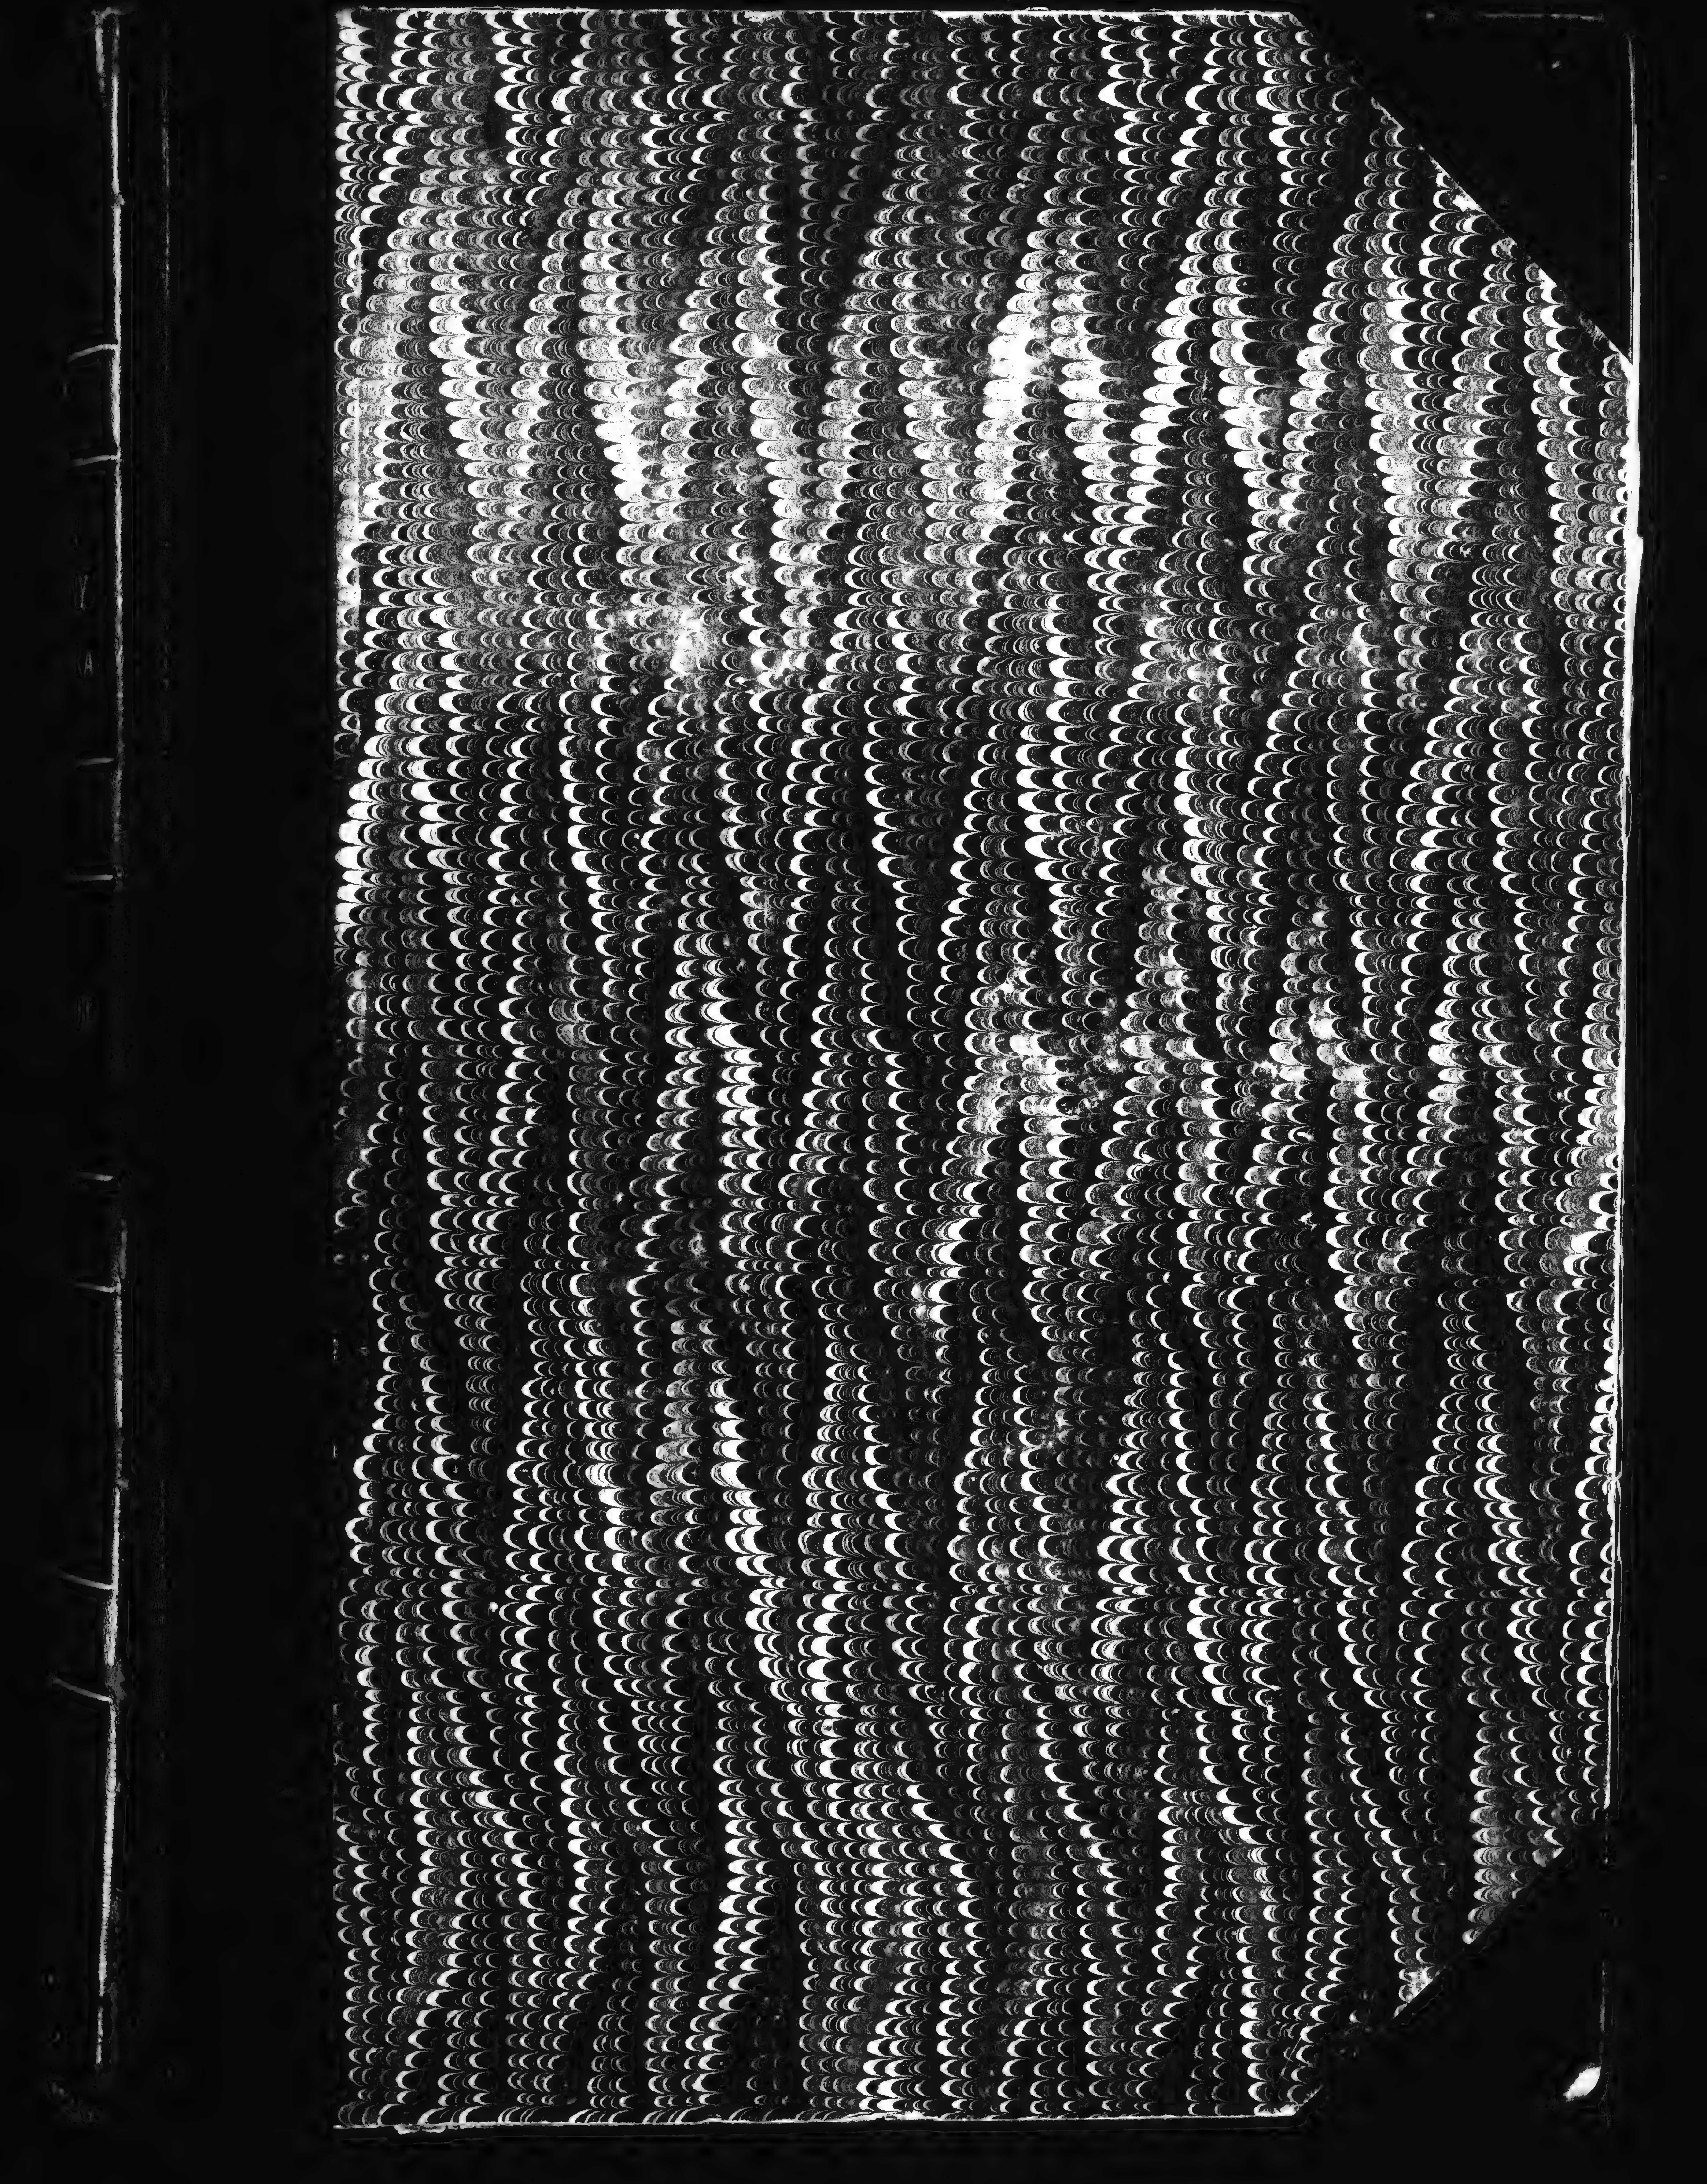
VOLUME 67

Tanglewood

1939 - 1941

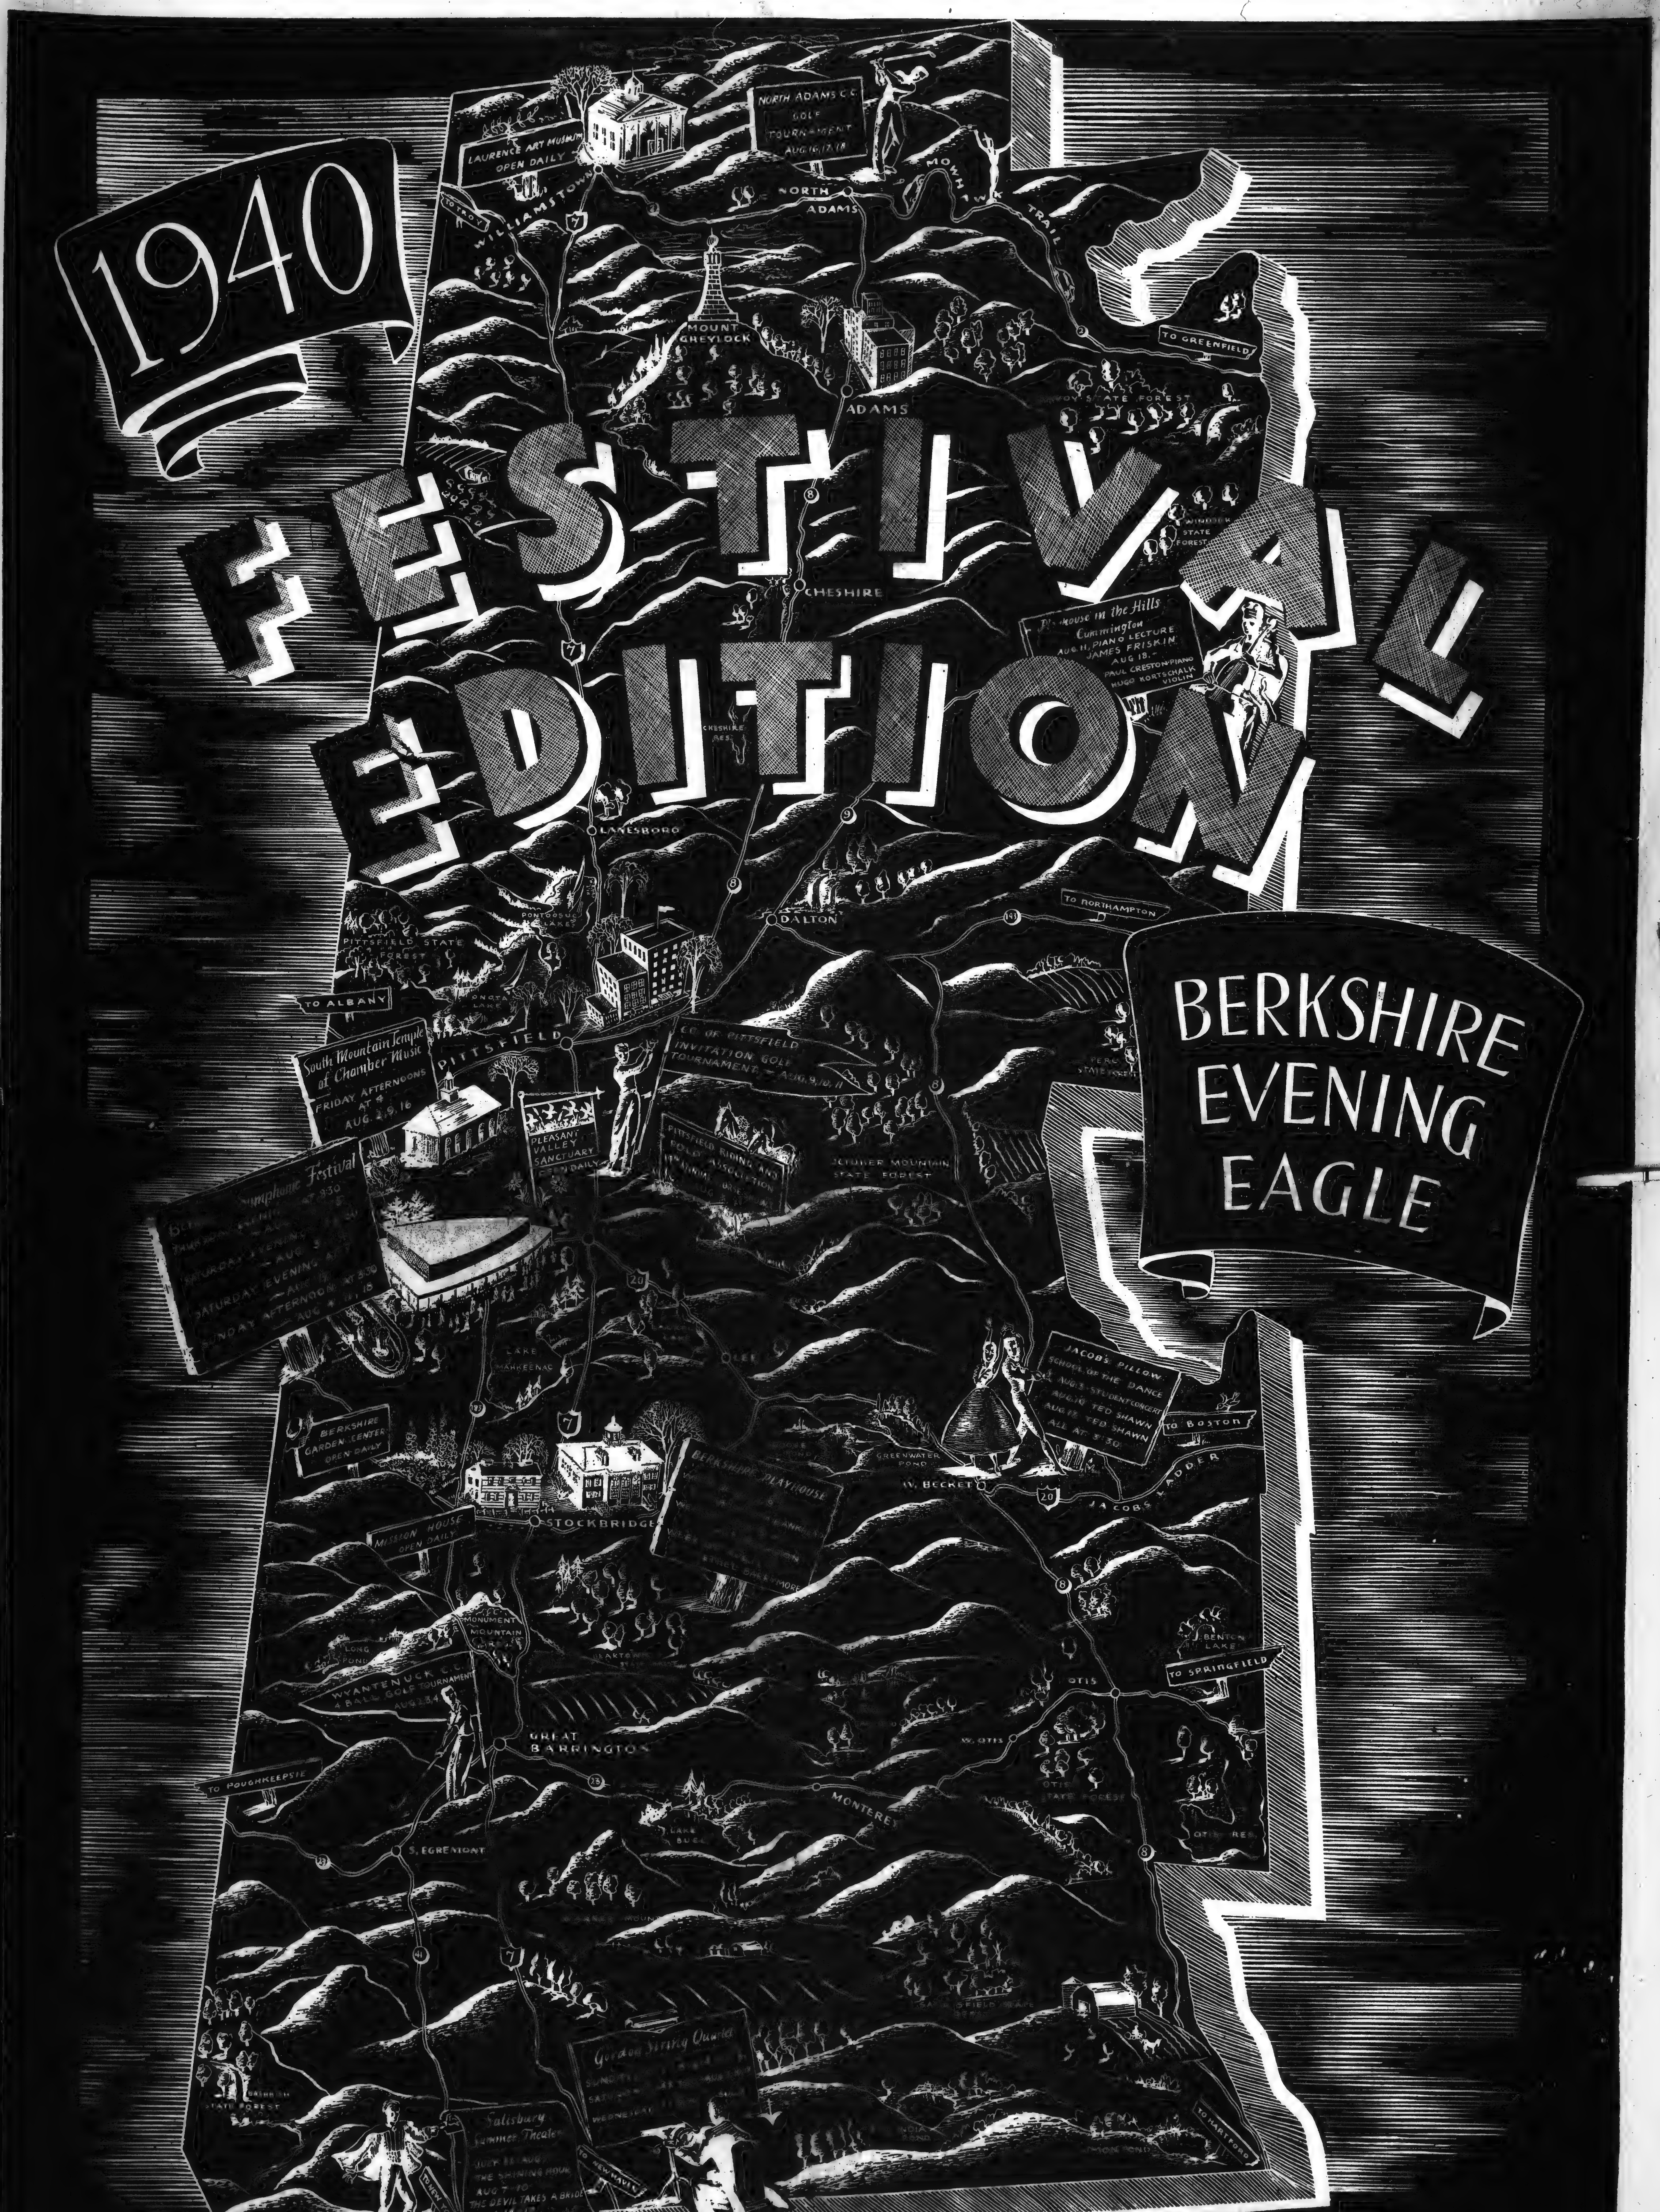


BLANK PAGE

1940

FESTIVAL EDITION

BERKSHIRE EVENING EAGLE



LAURENCE ART MUSEUM
OPEN DAILY
NORTH ADAMS C.C.
GOLF TOURNAMENT
AUG.16,17,18
TO TROY
WILLIAMSTOWN
NORTH
ADAMS
MOHAWK TRAIL TO GREENFIELD
MOUNT GREYLOCK
ADAMS
SAVOY STATE FOREST
WINDSOR
STATE FOREST
CHESHIRE CHESHIRE
RES.
Playhouse in the Hills
Cummington
AUG.11, PIANO LECTURE
JAMES FRISKIN
AUG 18.-
PAUL CRESTON-PIANO
HUGO KORTSCHALK
VIOLIN
LANESBORO
PONTOOSUC
LAKE
DALTON TO NORTHAMPTON
PITTSFIELD STATE FOREST
ONOTA
LAKE TO ALBANY
PITTSFIELD
South Mountain Temple of Chamber Music
FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
AT 4
AUG. 2,9,16
C.C. OF PITTSFIELD
INVITATION GOLF TOURNAMENT - AUG.9,10,11
PLEASANT VALLEY SANCTUARY
OPEN DAILY
PITTSFIELD RIDING AND POLO ASSOCIATION
PERU
STATE FOREST
OCTOBER MOUNTAIN
STATE FOREST
Symphonic Festival
THURSDAY EVENING AT 8:30
SATURDAY EVENING
AUG. 3
SATURDAY EVENING AT 8:30
SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT
AUG. 4, 11, 18
LAKE
MAHKEENAC
LEE
BERKSHIRE GARDEN CENTER
OPEN DAILY
JACOB'S PILLOW
SCHOOL OF THE DANCE
AUG.3 STUDENT CONCERT
AUG.10 TED SHAWN
AUG.17 TED SHAWN
ALL AT 3:30
TO BOSTON
GREENWATER
POND
W. BECKET
JACOBS LADDER
BERKSHIRE PLAYHOUSE
ETHEL BARRYMORE
STOCKBRIDGE
MISSION HOUSE
OPEN DAILY MONUMENT MOUNTAIN LONG
POND
WYANTENUCK C.C.
4 BALL GOLF TOURNAMENT
AUG.2,3,4
BENTON
LAKE TO SPRINGFIELD
OTIS
W. OTIS
GREAT BARRINGTON TO POUGHKEEPSIE
MONTEREY LAKE
BUEL
OTIS
STATE FOREST
OTIS RES.
S. EGREMONT
Gordon String Quartet
SUNDAY
SATURDAY
WEDNESDAY
STATE FOREST
INDIA
POND
TO HARTFORD
Salisbury Summer Theater
JULY 31-AUG 5
THE SHINING HOUR
AUG 7-10
THE DEVIL TAKES A BRIDE
AUG 14-17
A NEW PLAY TO NEW YORK TO NEW HAVEN

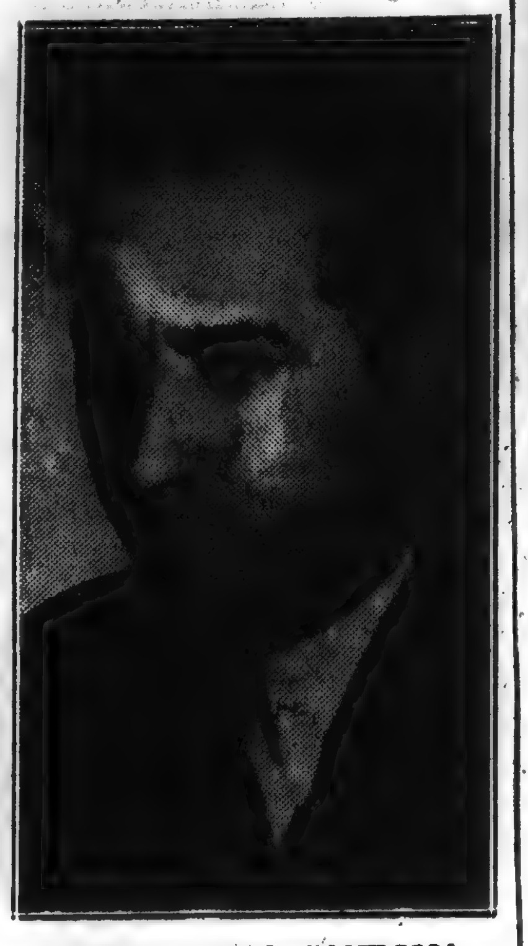
Soloists for the 1940 Festival

With the Orchestra

ALBERT SPALDING

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY



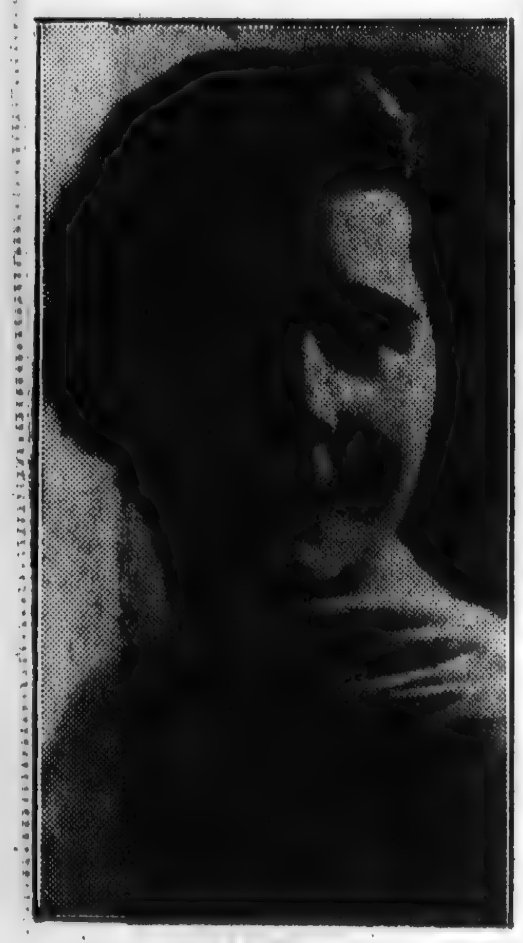
JESUS MARIA SANROMA

DOROTHY MAYNOR
Soprano

With the Chorus

ELISABETH SCHUMANN

ALEXANDER KIPNIS
Baritone



VIOLA SILVA
Contralto

WILLIAM HAIN
Tenor

The First Bank in Southern Berkshire County

Organized 1825

The Housatonic National Bank of Stockbridge

A member of:

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation
Federal Reserve System

New England Council
Berkshire Hills Conference

American Bankers Association
Massachusetts Bankers Association
Berkshire County Clearing House

MOUNT HOPE FARM

At Williamstown

Announce The Appointment Of

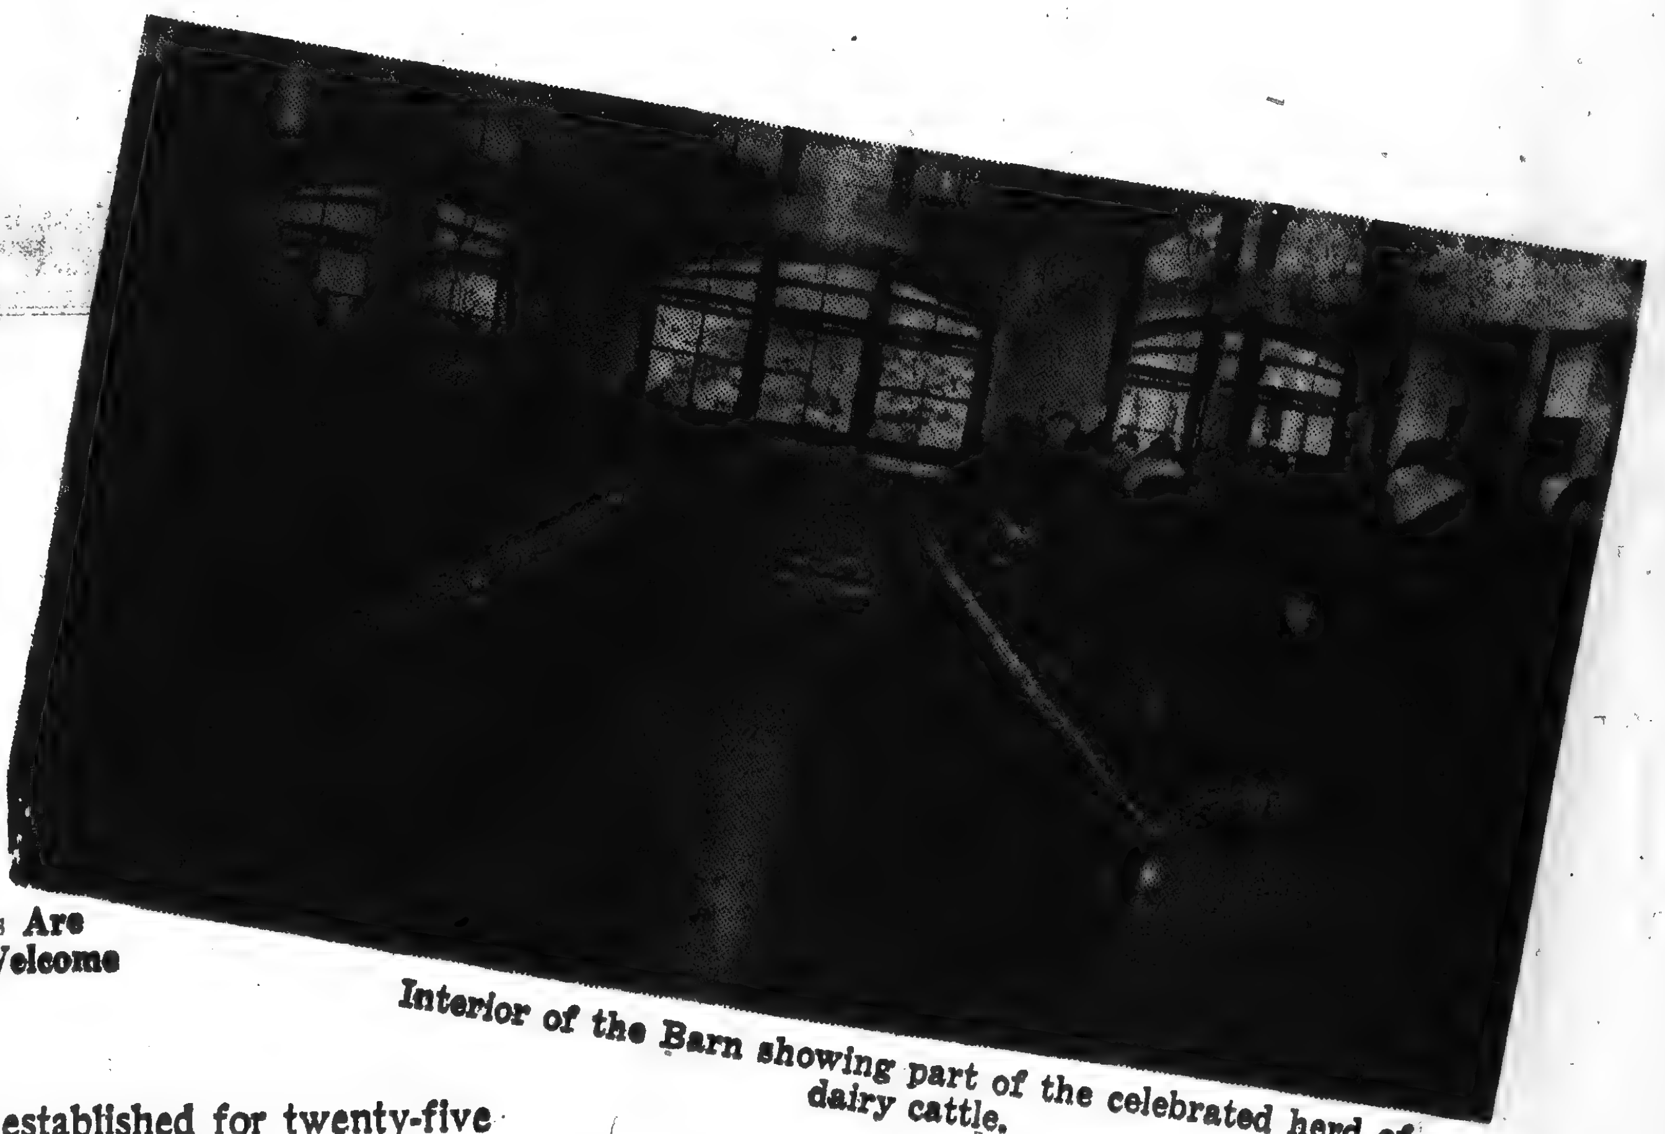
PITTSFIELD MILK EXCHANGE, INC.

As Sole Distributors For

MOUNT HOPE FARM MILK

View of the Barn at Mount Hope Farms, one of the finest arranged dairy barns in the country.

Visitors Are Always Welcome



Interior of the Barn showing part of the celebrated herd of dairy cattle.

Mount Hope Farm has been established for twenty-five years and is devoted to the improvement of all farm practices and animals.

Ours was the first herd in the State to be awarded the certificate as free from Bang's disease, which many times is the cause of Undulant Fever.

Our barn has continually received the highest score given by the Massachusetts dairy inspectors, and our milk has always exceeded the sanitary requirements.

The health of our cattle is carefully guarded, and we are continually working on improved methods of feeding.

We have one of the few hay driers in the country and produce a feed high in vitamin content to be used in the winter months while the cows are artificially housed.

And Now —

Pasteurizing this milk under the strict laboratory control of the Pittsfield Milk Exchange means that all the original quality and purity produced in this milk is preserved and protected for your family's health and enjoyment—right to your homes.

You Have Always Wanted To Enjoy Mount Hope Farm Milk—Now Get It Conveniently—Call

Pittsfield Milk Exchange Inc.

120 Francis Ave. F. A. CARROLL, GEN. MGR. EST. 1920 Tel. 2-1561

Distributors of
All Dairy Products—Goat Milk From the White Goat Farm of Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski—Walker Gordon Products. Daily Retail Distribution in Pittsfield—Dalton—Lenox—Lee—Stockbridge—West Stockbridge—Egremont—Great Barrington.

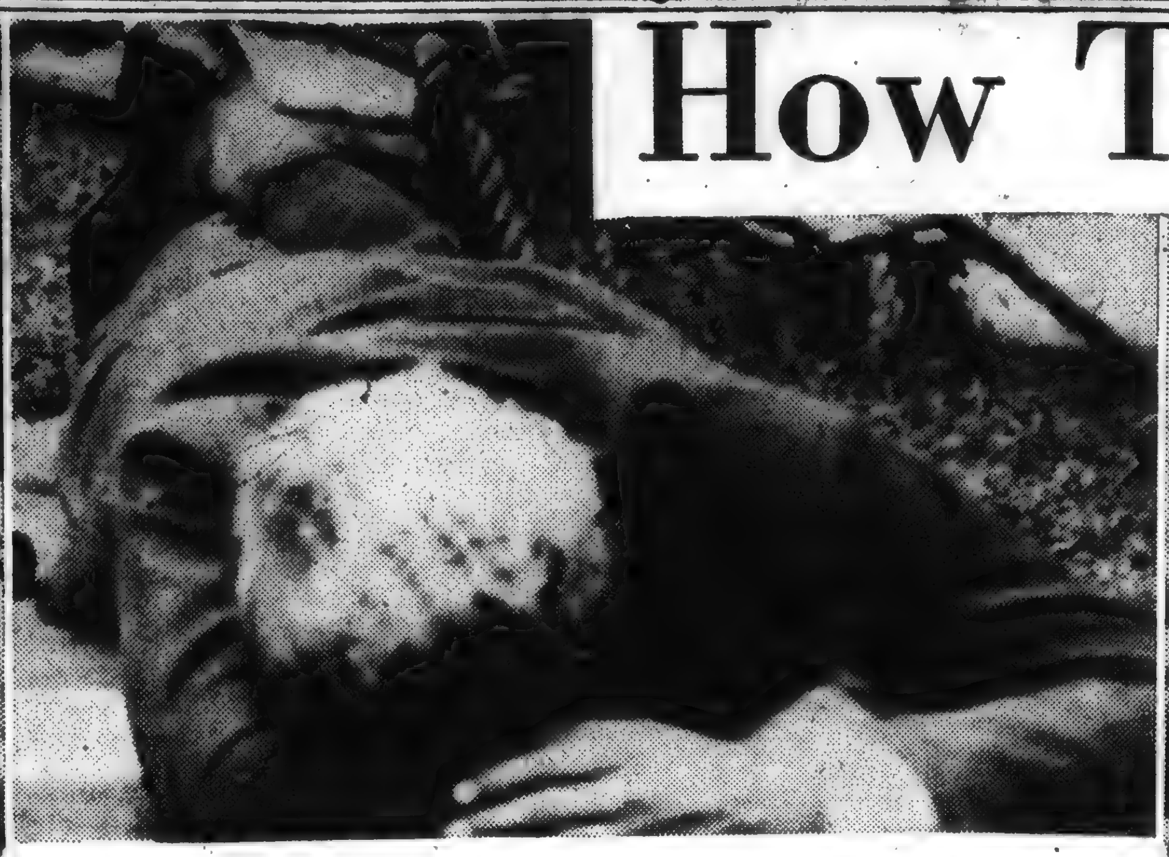
How To Listen to a Symphony

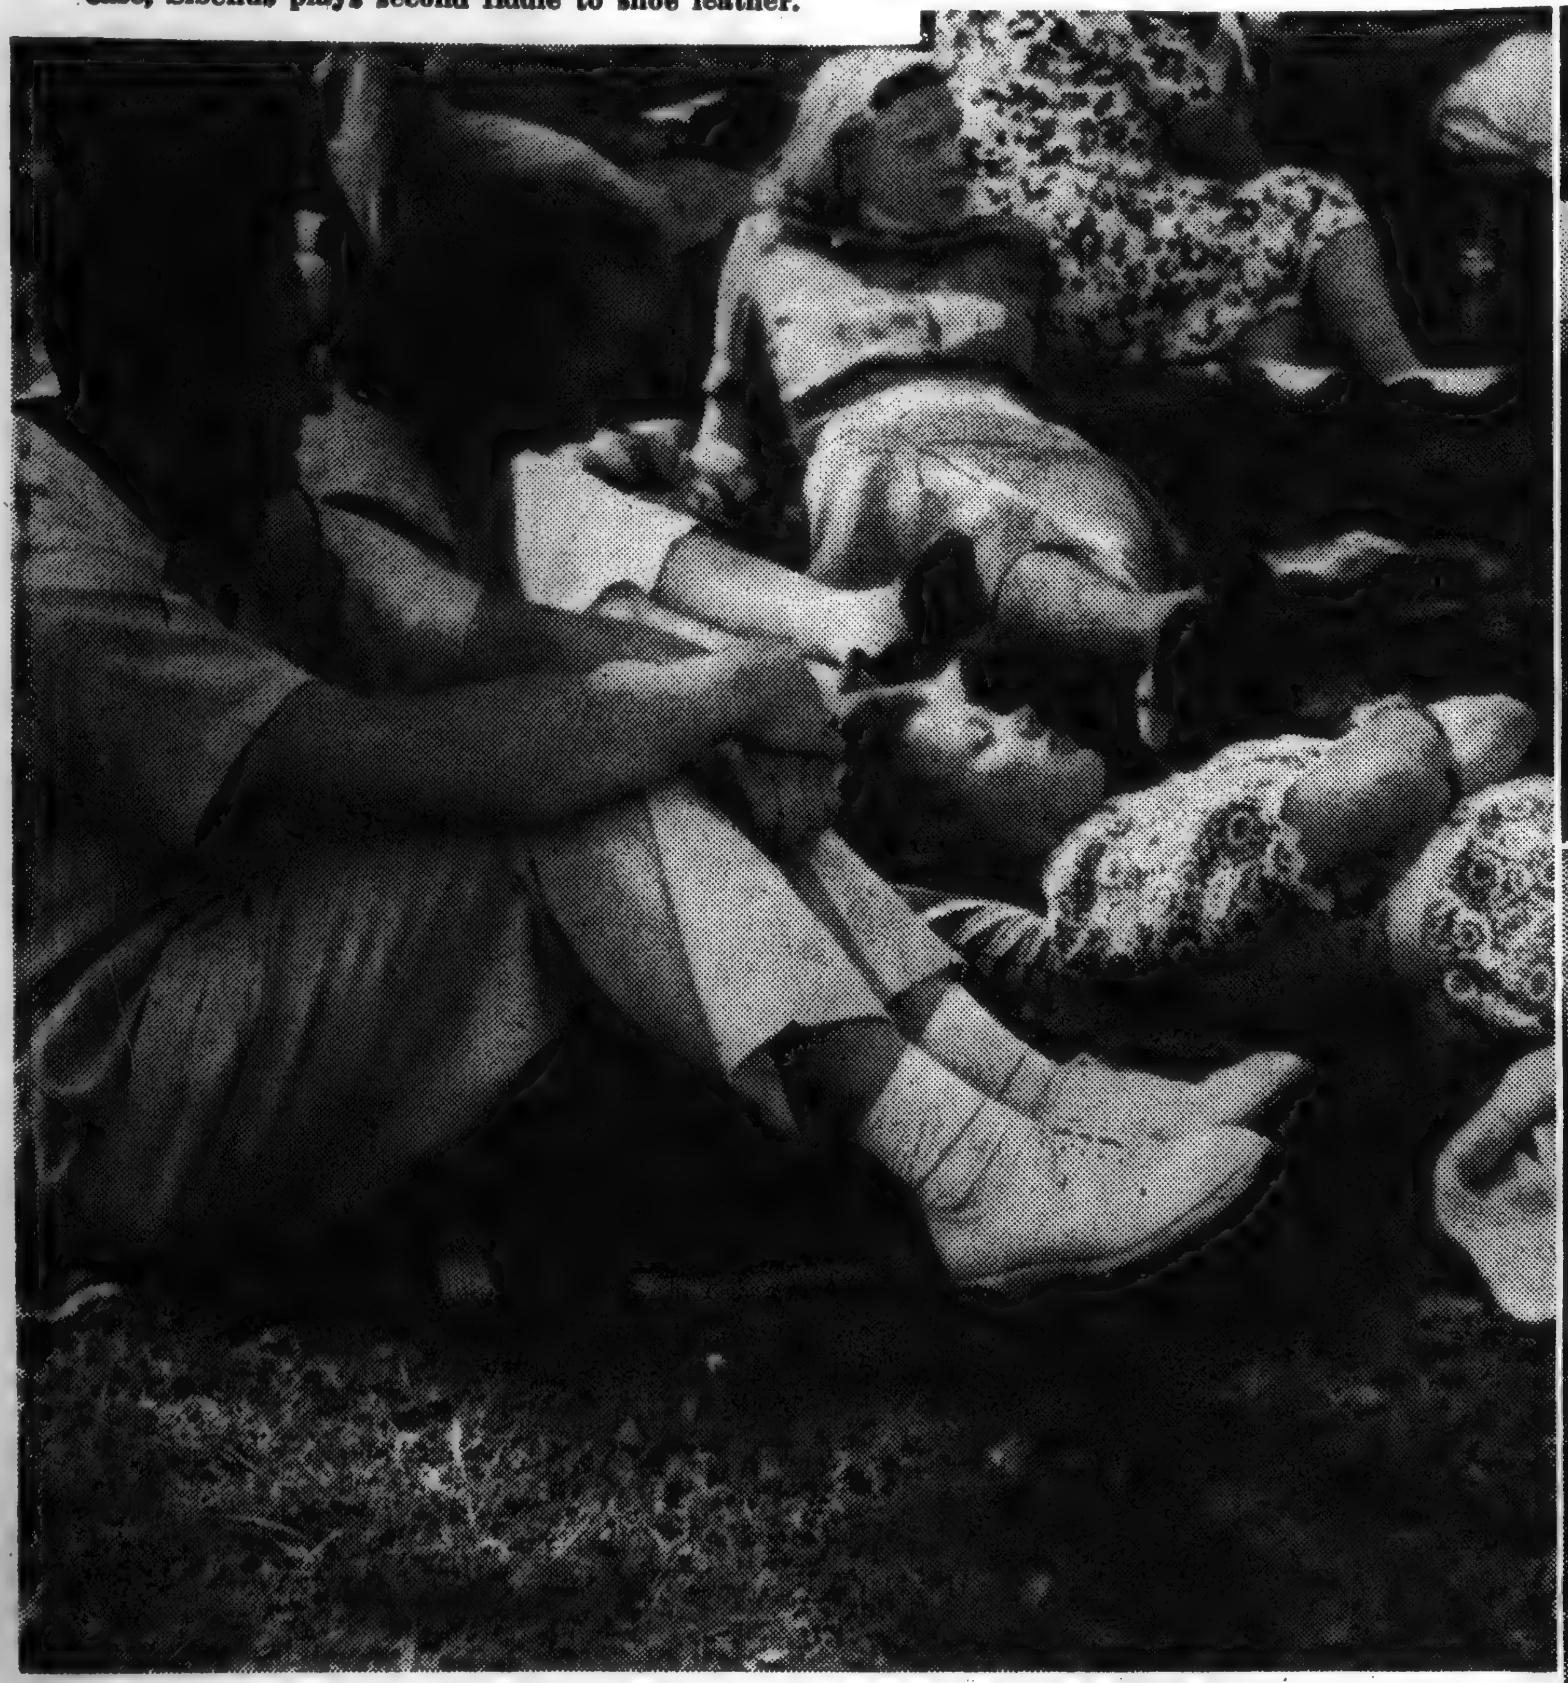
ONE-TWO-BUTTON-MY-SHOE—This is a symphonic-listening opportunity for the double-jointed only. In this particular case, Sibelius plays second fiddle to shoe leather.



THE BOO-HOO—Adapted from the approach used by brides who have just been told that dinner was lousy, this position (also called the Artificial Respiration method) shuts out practically everything, some times even music and air. It is also effective since anyone looking at you can't tell definitely whether you're passionately listening to the music or just asleep.

THE THINKER—This is a variation of the Flying Buttress, adapted particularly to bench-sitting, but vulnerable to practical jokers.

THE YOGA (at left)—This semi-Buddha position of lap-contemplation is the mark of the real symphonic-lover, requiring as it does the ignoring of complaints from muscles unadapted to being tied in double running slipknots.



THE KNEE-HUG—Far and away the favorite outdoor method of symphonic listening. Besides keeping the vertebrae off the ground, it permits sight-seeing. The girl at the top is using the Double-Elbow technique while the listener directly below her favors the Lying-in-State or Everything-but-a-Lily position.

RECLINING VENUS (at right)—A combination between a Cleopatra come-hither technique and setting up exercises, this sky-gazing position is satisfactory for symphonic attention if you don't get pleural pneumonia or circulatory stoppage in the hands.

THE FLYING BUTTRESS—Also called the Roman Orgy position, this is tenable only for short periods unless you bring a shovel and dig a hole for the hip bone. It also is not recommended for music-lovers with toupees.

THE TRIPOD—This technique, feasible only in seats, not only supports the head but also allows scratching the nose or twiddling the mustache, if any.

Advertising

Is a Printed Promise!

It is a business statement made with the knowledge that public opinion will pass judgment upon it. Advertising that does not meet approval is costly and unprofitable.

The wise advertiser is very careful in selecting the material presented in his advertising. He does not waste your time, nor your money. He respects both, but still more important to him is your opinion.

Advertising is jealous of its influence and thoroughly conscious that it must be preserved and conserved. It knows it must lead and not mislead.

The Berkshire Eagle

Opening of Berkshire Music Center Makes 1940 Memorable

300 Music Students Gather At Tanglewood for Six Weeks

Outstanding New Adventure Represents a "Dream Come True" for Dr. Koussevitzky

By JOHN N. BURK
Program Annotator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tanglewood usually uninvaded through most of the year save by a trickle of visitors, has been, since July 8, a populous place. The new Berkshire Music Center, established by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and now in the midst of its first season, has appropriated every part of the orchestra's magnificent estate, from the front entrance, where students arrive by private cars, bus, bicycles, or foot, down to Lake Mahkeenac, where from the pier through the trees the splash of swimmers is heard in the hotter hours of the day.

Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Center, summed up its greatest value when he wrote in an introductory announcement: "We have chosen a practical method so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

300 Students

The 300 members of the school, equally divided as to sex, most of them youthful and of college age, some of them teachers, were drawn to the new venture by just this prospect which the director offered. They have gathered from each point of the compass and often from a long distance. They have been quick to take advantage of "living and working in music" by constant association with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On the morning following the impressive opening exercises of July 8, Dr. Koussevitzky gave a significant address on "Interpretation," after which the departments, in groups large and small, were at once hard at work. A visitor drawn by chords of Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture" floating across the grass from the Shed would have found there unprecedented activity. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of 60, the members of which had scarcely seen each other until that moment, was playing with assurance and finish. A young man, one of the chosen few of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class, was on the platform, while Dr. Koussevitzky sat in the audience and occasionally interrupted the playing by an electrical flash signal, to advise conductor and orchestra, or walked up to the stage to give the conductor a confidential direction. Sitting about in the front rows, listening intently, were the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, each noting how the parts for his own instrument were progressing. The pupils of conducting were, of course, there, watching every halt, every counsel, every repetition.

In the barn down the hill below Hawthorne Street the Festival chorus was newly assembled and already deep in the opening Kyrie of Bach's mass in B minor, their grand objective for the Festival performance on August 16. G. Wallace Woodworth, who as conductor was to be responsible for this transformation, was goading the five-part choir to a fine, rounded unity, with no audience for Bach's glorious strains except an pathetic herd of cows grazing on the sloping meadow.

Time Out for Lunch

In the garage, which, like the barn, has been converted into a room for ensemble work, Dr. Herbert Graf was coaching the 20 singers whom he has accepted for drilling in operatic interpretation. This manifold agglomeration of musical sound I, freed from mutual interference by distances between buildings, ceased altogether at high noon. A bus equipped as a cafeteria, contrived and supervised by Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel, backed into a surrounding platform and immediately provided trays of hot and cold dishes to the several hundred students, who carried them to shady spots on the surrounding lawn.

At half-past three the entire school was addressed by Olin Downes in the Shed, and an hour later Miss Gadd of the English Folk Dancing Society received a large number on the stage of the newly built little theatre and launched the company in the cross steps and convolutions of country dancing.

These were only the larger activities, for classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; in music in the schools, under Howard Abell; in composition, under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, as well as groups for the preparation of chamber music, helped to fill out the full schedule of a single day.

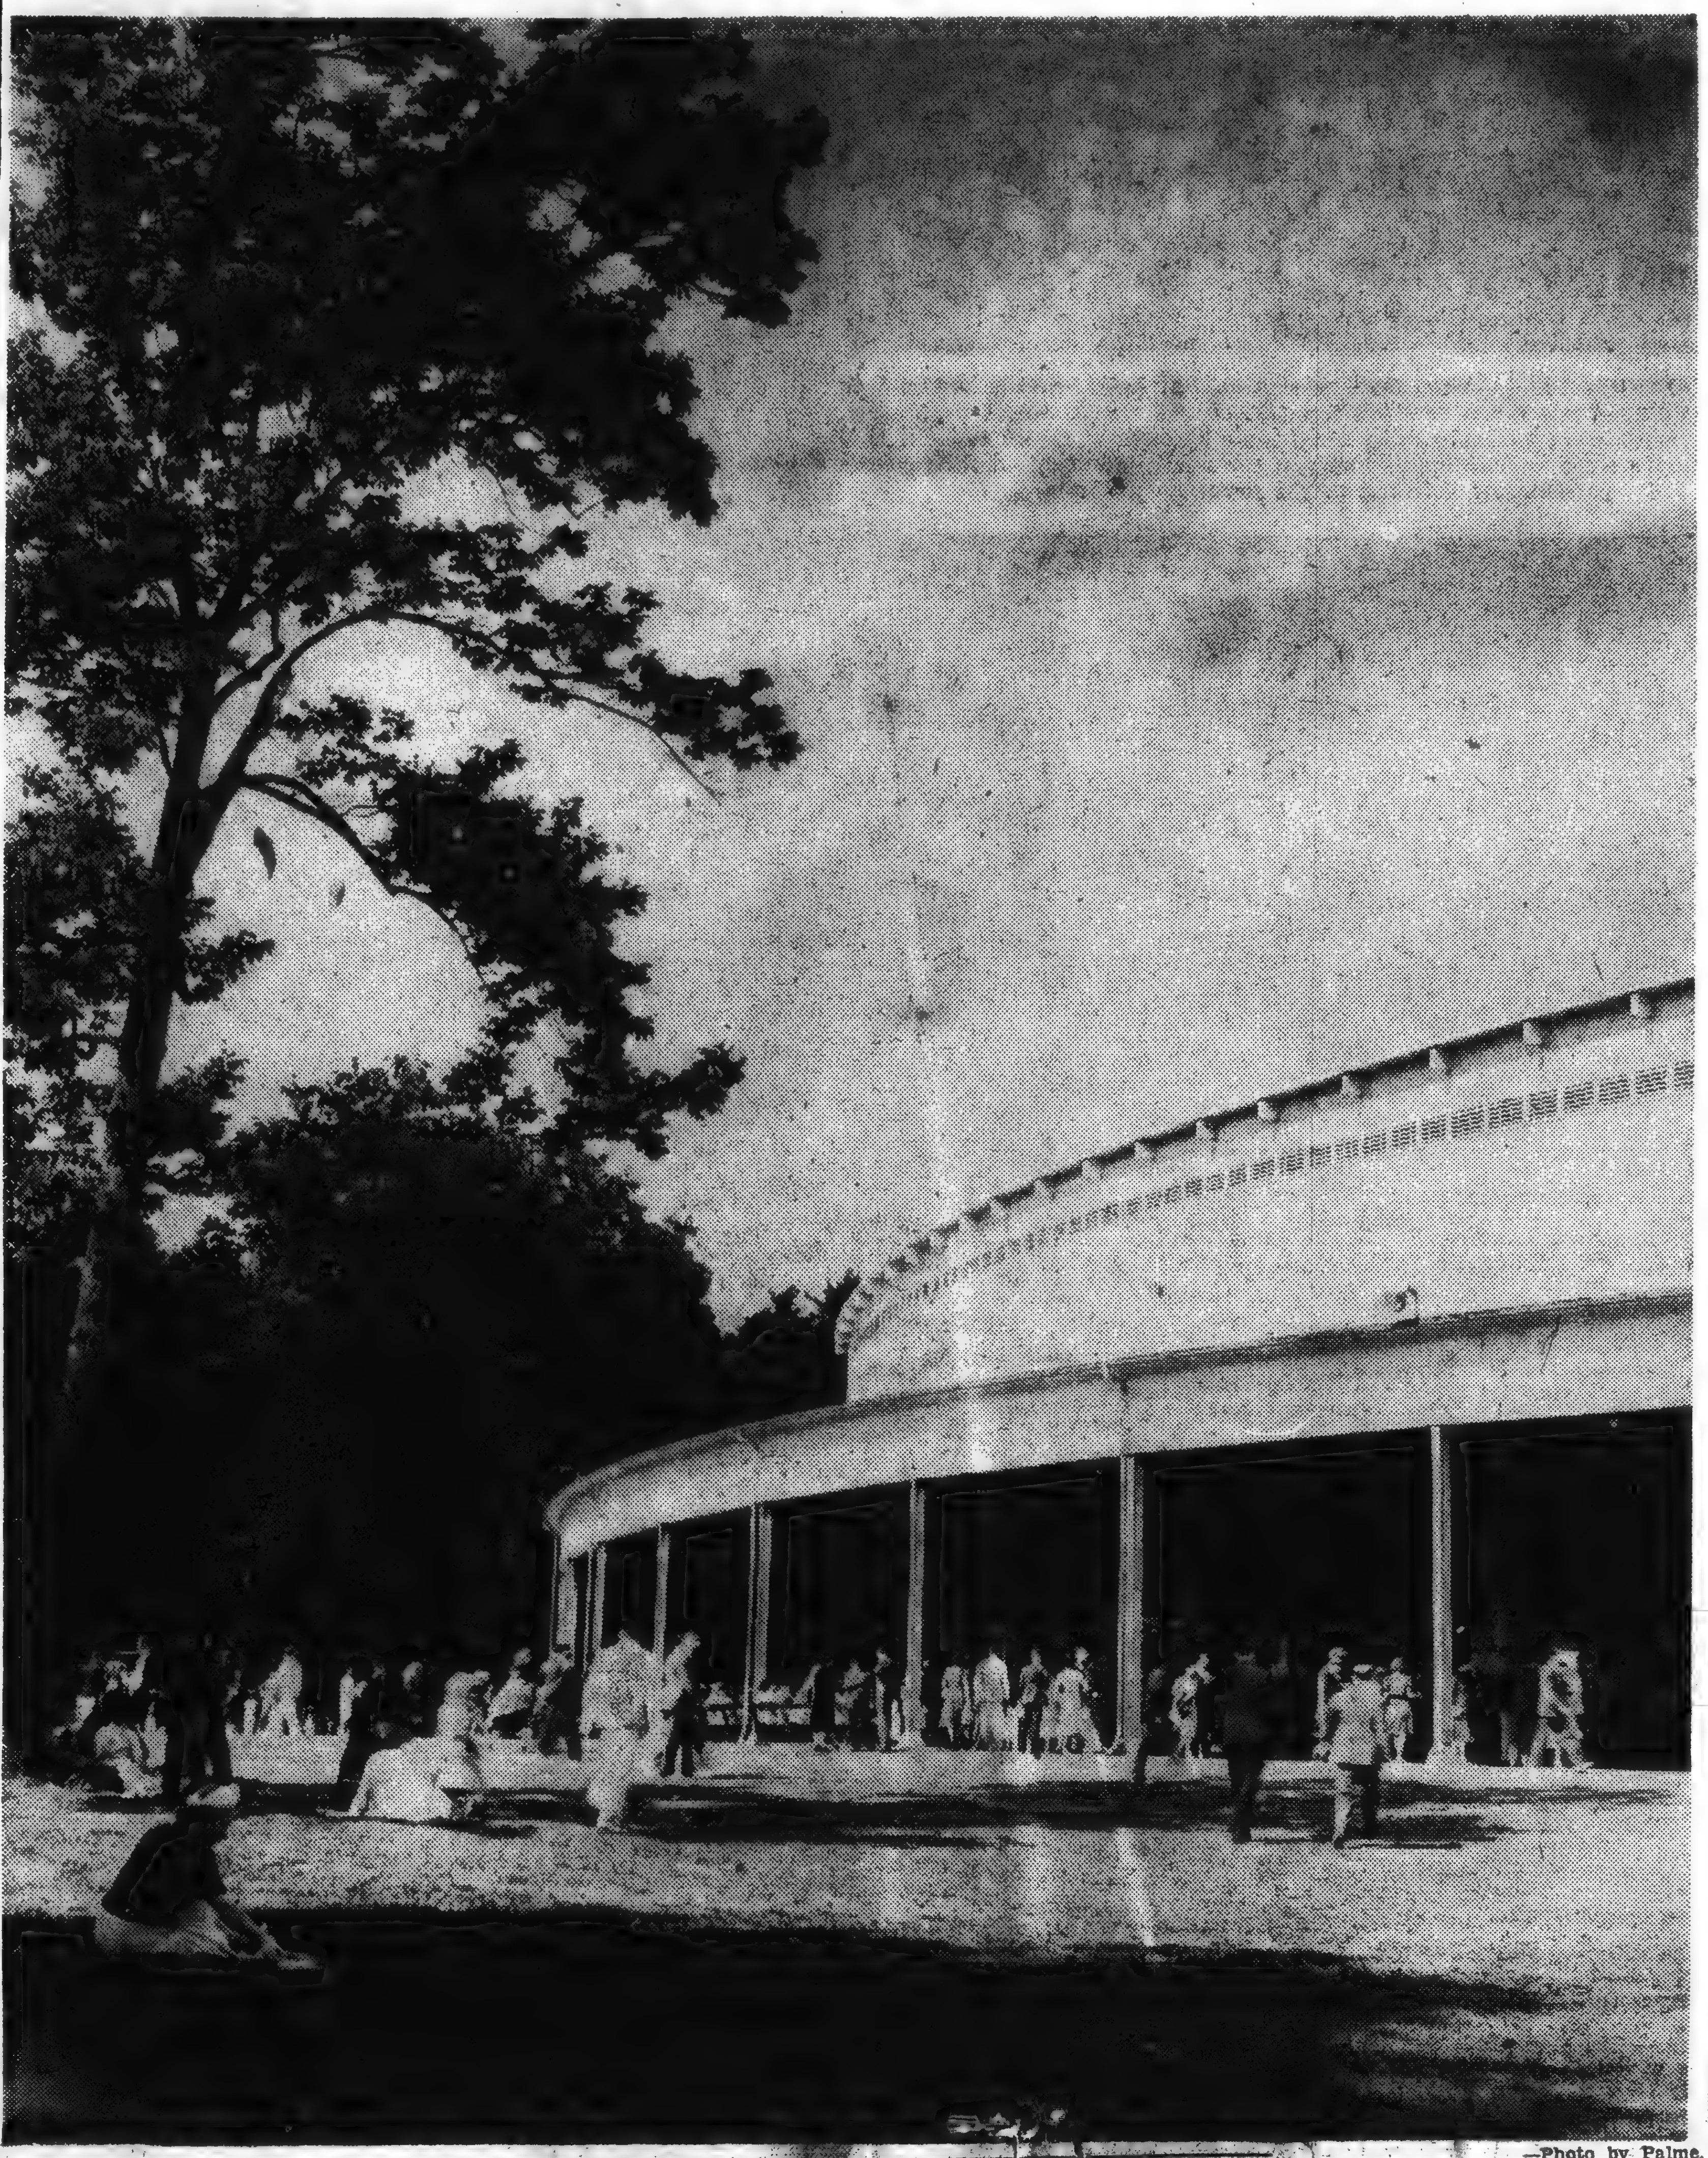
Guest lecturers for the entire school and talks by members of the faculty to the academy with musical illustrations lend further variety and interest to this paradise for a musical amateur. Olin Downes, Walter Prichard Eaton, Randall Thompson, Abram Chasins, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, and Augustus Zanzig are among the celebrities who have addressed the school.

The school in its second three weeks, which coincide with the Festival performances, will continue its classes, although on a somewhat reduced scale for the reason that the majority of the faculty will be occupied with their own rehearsals for performances. Nevertheless, the orchestra and chamber groups will continue to practice and prepare school concerts. They will also have the privilege of attending the Festival rehearsals and performances. The final, full rehearsals of Bach's mass will first bring the Festival Chorus of 250 into direct contact with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky. The performance of the mass thus becomes, in a sense, the climax of six weeks' endeavor by the Academy.

More Satisfying Session Unlikely

"Whatever the length of future seasons, they are unlikely to offer a more satisfying session of music-making than that Dr. Koussevitzky tendered to his listeners yesterday."—Irving Kolodin in the New York Sun, Aug. 14, 1939.

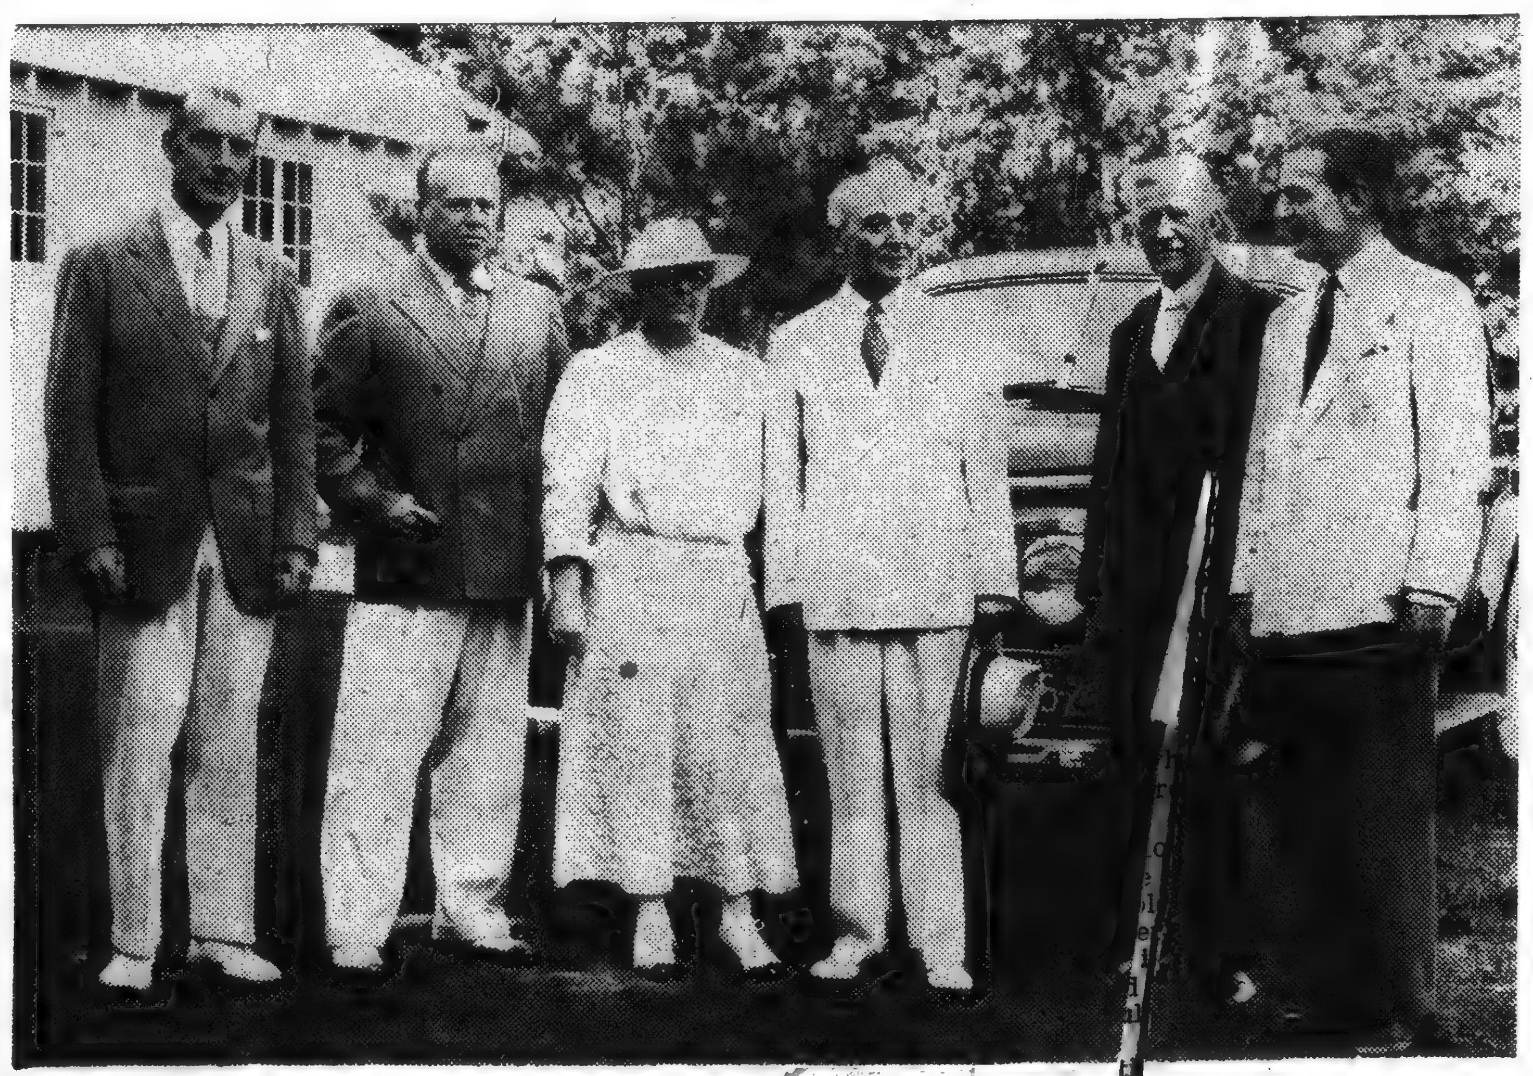
The Shed Remains the Focal Point of Tanglewood



—Photo by Palme.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Shed at Tanglewood, here pictured during one of the 1939 Sunday afternoon concerts, is the hub of activity for the Berkshire Music Center as it is for the Festival itself.

Christeners of a Musical Infant



Participating in the formal ceremonies which opened the Berkshire Music Center July 8 were, from left to right: Reginald Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and member of the Center faculty; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center; Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony, and Albert Spalding, famed American violinist and Berkshire resident.

Tanglewood a Summer Mecca

"Last week was the final week for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which becomes at this time of year the mecca for thousands who pour into Stockbridge, Lenox and as far south as Great Barrington, Mass., to enjoy one of the rarest treats that America has to offer. You sat happy and content in the marvelous out-of-doors auditorium, watching the lights fall among the pine trees while gentle, chilly breezes wafted the scent of pine and a summer night to your nose. There is nothing like it anywhere in America."—Martha Blair in the Washington Times, Aug. 14, 1939.

Festival Chronology

1934 In May, the late Dr. Henry Hadley broached to prominent Berkshire residents the idea of an outdoor summer symphonic series. Received with enthusiasm, the idea grew with the amazing and yet quietly efficient speed which has characterized the Berkshire Symphonic Festival through its six years of existence. By June an organization had been set up and the Dan Hanna estate just west of Stockbridge Bowl was offered as a site. On the night of Aug. 23, under the benign face of a full moon, Dr. Hadley raised his baton over 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society Orchestra to start the Festival on a career whose brilliance could not have been predicted that night even by the most optimistic. Some 6000 people attended the three concerts in the first series. So successful was the adventure from all angles that in the fall, the Festival became a corporate enterprise.

* * *

1935 With an orchestra slightly enlarged in personnel, Dr. Hadley returned the following summer to play before 7500 music-lovers. A huge circus tent, erected on the grounds as rain insurance, came in handy on the final night when continued rain through the day made open bench-sitting a problem. During the series, the Berkshire Musical Association chorus of 200 voices directed by Horace Hunt joined the orchestra and Pianist Rudolph Ganz became the Festival's first soloist. After receipts were counted up, the Festival was in the red, a situation immediately remedied by friends willing to expend more than enthusiasm on a project they considered a rich promise.

* * *

1936 The Festival's third season brought Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time. Scene of that year's concert was Holmwood, the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson on the Lenox-Stockbridge Road, today the site of Foxhollow School. Under a mammoth tent, the Boston Symphony played three concerts in August before a total of 15,000 people, twice as many as attended the series of the previous year. The Festival was on its way up.

* * *

1937 If any year were to be singled out as the Festival's most important, 1937 would demand consideration. First came the gift of a permanent home to the Boston Symphony, Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. On the rolling acres along the north shore of Stockbridge Bowl, Nathaniel Hawthorne once wrote. Broad lawns were ready for such use as the Festival might consider. It was a good beginning. Next came the decision to double the number of concerts. An even bigger tent was erected. Western Union put a branch office in the old Tappan house on the grounds. The National Broadcasting Company arranged to put the three-hour all-Wagner concert on the air. The Festival, in its fourth season, had become an event of national importance. Came the Wagner concert, and came the deluge. The sky thundered and the tent thundered and even the percussive Wagner had to give in. The National Broadcasting Company played piano solos from its New York studios and dance music from Chicago. What had been hope for a permanent outdoor auditorium turned into determination. After the last of the 30,000 people had departed from the two weeks' series, the Festival got down to business. In hardly any time at all, $80,000 was raised and on the last day of 1937, ground was broken for the Shed. It was a significant year.

* * *

1938 Dedication of the huge Shed, originally conceived by Eliel Saarinen and built under the direction of Joseph Franz, unique in musical architecture and amazing in its acoustical properties, high-lighted the opening of the 1938 series. Even continuous rains before the series started could not faze the Festival. A total of 36,000 people came from 40 states, Canada and Europe, to hear the six concerts.

* * *

1939 Announcement of the plans for the Berkshire Music Center almost overshadowed the brilliance of the six concerts of the 1939 season. The assurance that the Festival's interpretive place in the world of music was to be augmented by a creative, developing project, gave added proof that at Tanglewood was being mobilized one of the most dynamic, vital forces in music today. But the 1939 season had other memorable moments, outstanding among them the "discovery" by Dr. Koussevitzky of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, called by an important critic, "one of the great voices of our day."

* * *

1940 This year marked the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center on Monday, July 8, with some 300 students and a faculty including such famous names in music as Dr. Koussevitzky, Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Herbert Graf and G. Wallace Woodworth. This season marks also the Festival's first nine-concert series. The Festival keeps on making musical history.

Stand and Cheer As Series Closes

"Everyone stood and many cheered in the music shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon after the trumpet calls of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had closed the second symphony of Jean Sibelius and, with it, the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival . . . Ringing trumpets accompanied by the steady [illegible] the trombones [illegible] effect [illegible]ed by the tremendous ovation from the audience made living drama out of that last 10 minutes."—Thomas Archer in the Boston Transcript, Aug. 14, 1939.

★

Great Barrington Mfg. Co.

Great Barrington, Mass.

Welcomes You to the Berkshires

★

E. D. JONES & SONS CO.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

★

Makers of High Grade
Machinery for Paper
Mills Since 1856

★

Makes
a light lunch refreshing

DRINK Coca-Cola

BYRON WESTON
COMPANY

DALTON, MASS.

Makers of High Grade
Rag Content Papers
Ledgers Indexes Bonds

THE CLARK-AIKEN
COMPANY

ESTABLISHED 1888
INCORPORATED 1919

MANUFACTURERS OF Paper Mill Machinery
Founders and Machinists
LEE, MASSACHUSETTS

★

HURLBUT PAPERS

High Grade Book, Covers and Technical Specialties

HURLBUT PAPER COMPANY

Manufacturers in South Lee, Massachusetts
Since 1806

An Invitation to Visit

YANKEE LOOMS

FINE WOOLENS . . .

for Every Member of the Family

YANKEE LOOMS cordially invites you to visit its display rooms where distinguished materials, woven according to the best traditions of New England craftsmanship, are on exhibit.

These superior, authentic fabrics are ideally suited for clothing for men, women and children. Despite their high quality, prices are astonishingly reasonable.

40 Daly Avenue, Dalton, Mass.
The first street east of the Post Office
HOURS—8:30 A. M. to 5:00 P. M. Daily
8:30 A. M. to 1 P. M. Saturdays

MAIL ORDERS FILLED
If you cannot visit us, write and tell us what types of clothes you are interested in. We will send samples—FREE

MISSING
PAGE(S)

A Capsule Preview of the Festival Programs

* * * * * * *

Tchaikowsky To Be Honored

By JAY C. ROSENFELD
Music Critic of The Eagle

SERIES 1
CONCERT 1

The first symphonies of, respectively, Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. A remarkable opportunity to observe what different flavors and colors can be poured into the same molds. Mark well the general outlines of the Beethoven; his successors, on this program as well in chronology, use the same proportions. Each symphony has four divisions of contrasting moods, following the classical pattern. They all even make use of the optional device of a sober stately introduction before entering into the main business of their first movement. The sequence of the movements, allegro, slow, playful, and swift again, is identical. They all even are the product of men of the same age—30. Observe what time did to musical thought, and musical acceptance, in round numbers, in 1800, 1840 and 1900.

SERIES 1
CONCERT 2

All those with weak hearts better stay away from this one. Starting with century-old but perpetually-young Berlioz' Overture to Benvenuto Cellini, and proceeding through the Strauss "Don Quixote" with Piatogorsky and Burgin and Lefranc taking the bows, a late symphony of Roy Harris, who will be in the audience, some Debussy and Ravel, this is as different from the classical works of the first concert as day is from night. It will be the first time an instrumentalist has appeared as soloist with the orchestra in the Shed. There is much speculation about the effectiveness of this experiment. Each number on this program is played without any interval, each one being complete in an integral unit.

SERIES 1
CONCERT 3

After a classical program, and then one almost entirely berserk, comes one with a happy mixture of early, late and half-way. The Mozart symphony should need no guide-posts; the Stravinsky caprice is an example of a carbonated extravaganza, one with the sparkle injected artificially—nevertheless with a sparkle—and then, to close, a Brahms symphony. Brahms eschews all funny business and gets down to brass tacks at once in this, his second. The lovely theme starts with the first note. Only a word more on this—listen to the cellos when the second movement starts. Stravinsky uses the piano not as a purely solo instrument in his caprice, but more as did Strauss in "Don Quixote," as a member of the orchestra to whom is given special prominence. Remember, unless you are a soloist-idolator, that the orchestra will not have been a bystander while all this was going on. This holds for the Strauss as well as for the Stravinsky.

SERIES 2
CONCERT 1

If you remember your Baedeker in re Brussels and the statue of the Count Egmont, pause to consider the history of that gallant hero, who lived four centuries ago in honor, and died a martyr. Or if you recall your Goethe, the lines he wrote in 1788 wherein he makes the people implore: "Sicherheit und Ruhe! Ordnung und Freiheit!" That is what the people of Brussels were searching for in 1540!

Beethoven made the introduction to this concerto much too long for the comfort of the soloist. Don't get impatient if he doesn't start for several minutes. Although Tchaikowsky wrote six symphonies, only the last three are found in present-day orchestral repertories. The fourth dates from 1877. Tchaikowsky came to America in 1891 for the purpose of dedicating the new concert hall just built in New York —Carnegie Hall. He stayed about a month, directing in Philadelphia and Baltimore as well. His impressions of America are interesting and curious. The third movement of this symphony, played pizzicato by the strings—that is, by plucking instead of bowing—ought to give you a thrill. The ensuing finale will provide you with a bit of contrast, to say the least.

Jay C. Rosenfeld

SERIES 2
CONCERT 2

The sixth symphony of Beethoven, called the "Pastorale," has become almost the theme song of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It has been left off scarcely a single year's lists. Its bucolic nature and inherent beauty, however, hardly need any persuasive argument to justify its performance anywhere, any time. Beethoven adds to the indications for performing naive but unusual amplifications of his intentions: "Pleasant feelings aroused on arriving in the country," and so on. The symphony has five movements, but the fourth, which is the "storm," goes without stopping into the fifth which reflects "joyous and thankful feels after the storm. The "Pathetique" is one of the three to be played in this week's program commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth. His last, its title is supposed not only to reveal the mood of the music but the dominant humor of the life of its composer. Yet Ivan Melnikoff reports that while everyone thought Tchaikowsky was a gloomy man, "he was extremely affable, always amiable and cheerful, with an inexhaustible source of exultancy."

SERIES 2
CONCERT 3

Beethoven's fourth symphony lies between the "Eroica," (the one in which the original dedication to Napoleon was scratched out as he learned more of his one-time hero's actions), and the famous fateful fifth. This is important only because its comparative mildness is the more remarkable when its neighbors are borne in mind. This happens also to have a slow introduction before the main body of the first movement is reached. The Coriolanus overture was not suggested by the Bard of Avon's piece but by a local boy of Beethoven's acquaintance, a now obscure German poet, Heinrich von Collin. Yet Beethoven's music was so much greater than Collins's drama that Richard Wagner wrote that the music is still a perfect tonal description of that scene in the last act of the Shakespeare play in which Coriolanus, struggling against the pleading of his mother and wife, submits to them and goes to his tragic death. The Tchaikowsky fifth is so full of choice morsels that, blindfolded, one would be certain to pick a tasty bit. Be sure and be on the watch, after the luscious eight bars of the opening chorus, for the French horn in the familiar second movement.

* * * * * * *

Organ and Chorus in Debuts

SERIES 3
CONCERT 1

Charles Sanford Terry wrote that Bach, "Relieved of the duty to provide Sunday cantatas and the Good Friday Passion, devoted the early months of 1733 to the preparation of a work for presentation to his sovereign, as a token of devotion, an indication of his skill, and a diploma for the post of Hofcomponist, which he coveted." The work was the B minor mass, a composition in dimensions comparable to the pyramids of Egypt, and probably as everlasting in devotion and sincerity, as immeasureable as the aspirations of a man of the most profound faith. The mass will mark the debuts of the new Tanglewood organ and the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

SERIES 3
CONCERT 2

This program compares in character to the Saturday night of the first series. It starts with compositions by two of the most prominent men now writing music, Prokokieff and Hindemith. The latter will be in the audience. The former will be remembered for his "Lieutenant Kije" and "Peter and the Wolf." The appearance of Dorothy Maynor brings to the entire Festival audience the opportunity to hear a vocalist whose appearance on these very grounds before a select group only a year ago provided the impulsion which has rocketed her to national notice. Faure and Respighi follow.

SERIES 3
CONCERT 3

Three symphonies comprise the final program of this Festival, the G minor of Haydn, the seventh of Sibelius and the first Brahms.

The Haydn is Number 88 in a complete catalogue of slightly over 100 symphonies. The Sibelius is played in one movement, and was first heard on a Festival program in 1937; in fact, it was the first Sibelius to be heard at a Berkshire Symphonic Festival. As the Festival had opened with a first symphony (Beethoven), so it closes with the analagous one of Brahms. He was 43 before he wrote his first symphony. He held off, because he considered it "no laughing matter" to write a symphony after Beethoven. The harsh dissonances in the introduction provided a subject of discussion for many a moon. Today we "hear" them quite easily. The melody of the second movement is especially lovely. The final movement has a slow introduction which leads into the principal theme, one of those statements in music which is not only gratifying to the ear, but fills one's soul with noble resolves and lofty purposes. On what better note can we be sent home?

Congratulations
To the Berkshire Festival

The Shed—Insured by Wheeler & Taylor, Inc.
Tel. 1
GREAT BARRINGTON

THE GREYLOCK
NATIONAL BANK
ADAMS, MASS.

Extends a Hearty Welcome to the Visitors
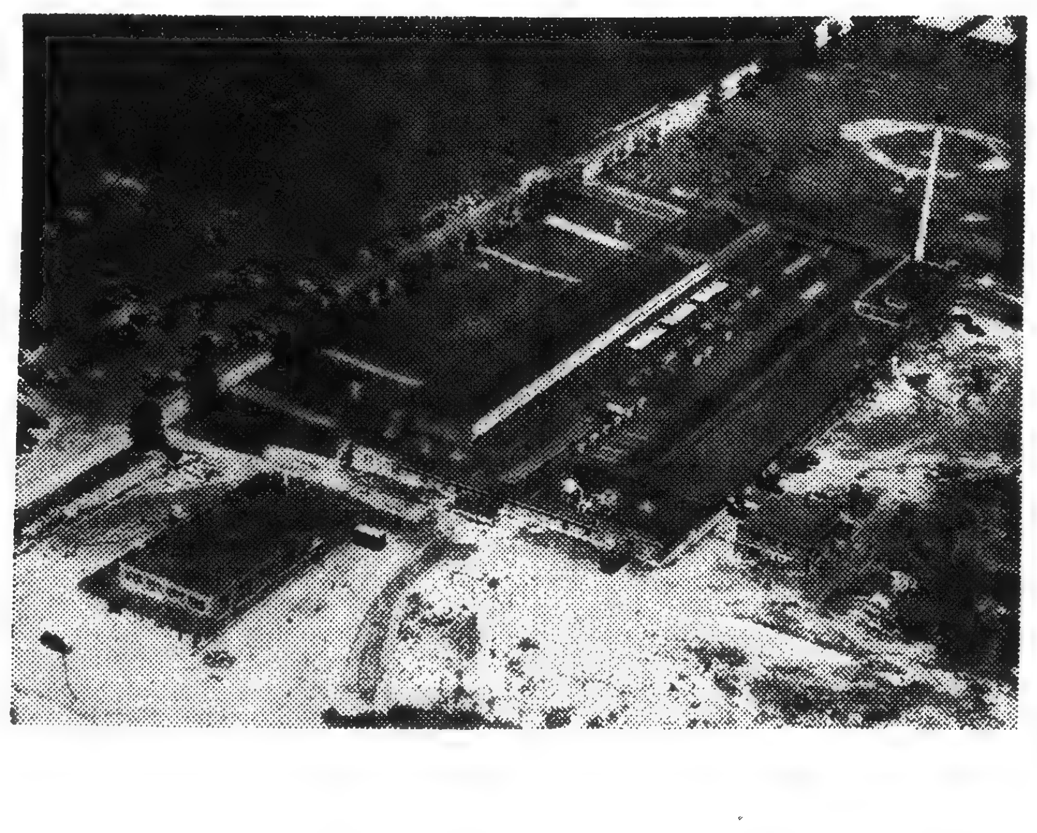
in Berkshire County

THE NATIONAL MAHAIWE BANK
OF GREAT BARRINGTON
Great Barrington, Massachusetts
Established in 1847

Every Banking Facility at Your Disposal

Growing! Growing! Grown!



Growing amazingly is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. At Tanglewood today lovers of music are treated to the ultimate in musical art and expression. From a modest beginning consisting principally of an idea and enthusiasm, in 1934, the Festival has grown until today its world significance is generally accepted. What the future holds, no one dares venture—except, that built on a firm foundation, with inspiring leadership within its own organization and within the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it must go forward with continued achievement.

Growing, too, is the Plastics Department of the General Electric Company—and equally fast. Five years ago a comparatively insignificant division lost in the vast factories of the Pittsfield Works, General Electric's progressive measures have resulted in the largest and most modern plastics molding plant in the United States for Pittsfield. Employment in this period has doubled. A second building has just been completed. New applications for Textolite almost daily result from the ingenuity of trained engineers and skilled craftsmen. And plastics in Pittsfield continues to grow.

Fully grown is the Pittsfield Works of the General Electric Company, the leading transformer manufacturing plant in the world. Providing employment for thousands in Berkshire County, paying high wages and by far the largest single tax bill, producing high quality products in keeping with General Electric's theme of "More Goods For More People At Less Cost," the Pittsfield Works year in and year out is a most important factor in Berkshire County's progress.

The General Electric Organization of Pittsfield Extends Its Best Wishes for the Continued Success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

GENERAL GE ELECTRIC

A Capsule Preview of the Festival Programs

* * * * * * *

Tchaikowsky To Be Honored

By JAY C. ROSENFELD
Music Critic of The Eagle

SERIES 1
CONCERT 1

The first symphonies of, respectively, Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. A remarkable opportunity to observe what different flavors and colors can be poured into the same molds. Mark well the general outlines of the Beethoven; his successors, on this program as well in chronology, use the same proportions. Each symphony has four divisions of contrasting moods, following the classical pattern. They all even make use of the optional device of a sober stately introduction before entering into the main business of their first movement. The sequence of the movements, allegro, slow, playful, and swift again, is identical. They all even are the product of men of the same age—30. Observe what time did to musical thought, and musical acceptance, in round numbers, in 1800, 1840 and 1900.

SERIES 1
CONCERT 2

All those with weak hearts better stay away from this one. Starting with century-old but perpetually-young Berlioz' Overture to Benvenuto Cellini, and proceeding through the Strauss "Don Quixote" with Piatogorsky and Burgin and Lefranc taking the bows, a late symphony of Roy Harris, who will be in the audience, some Debussy and Ravel, this is as different from the classical works of the first concert as day is from night. It will be the first time an instrumentalist has appeared as soloist with the orchestra in the Shed. There is much speculation about the effectiveness of this experiment. Each number on this program is played without any interval, each one being complete in an integral unit.

SERIES 1
CONCERT 3

After a classical program, and then one almost entirely berserk, comes one with a happy mixture of early, late and half-way. The Mozart symphony should need no guide-posts; the Stravinsky caprice is an example of a carbonated extravaganza, one with the sparkle injected artificially—nevertheless with a sparkle—and then, to close, a Brahms symphony. Brahms eschews all funny business and gets down to brass tacks at once in this, his second. The lovely theme starts with the first note. Only a word more on this—listen to the cellos when the second movement starts. Stravinsky uses the piano not as a purely solo instrument in his caprice, but more as did Strauss in "Don Quixote," as a member of the orchestra to whom is given special prominence. Remember, unless you are a soloist-idolator, that the orchestra will not have been a bystander while all this was going on. This holds for the Strauss as well as for the Stravinsky.

SERIES 2
CONCERT 1

If you remember your Baedeker in re Brussels and the statue of the Count Egmont, pause to consider the history of that gallant hero, who lived four centuries ago in honor, and died a martyr. Or if you recall your Goethe, the lines he wrote in 1788 wherein he makes the people implore: "Sicherheit und Ruhe! Ordnung und Freiheit!" That is what the people of Brussels were searching for in 1540!

Beethoven made the introduction to this concerto much too long for the comfort of the soloist. Don't get impatient if he doesn't start for several minutes. Although Tchaikowsky wrote six symphonies, only the last three are found in present-day orchestral repertories. The fourth dates from 1877. Tchaikowsky came to America in 1891 for the purpose of dedicating the new concert hall just built in New York —Carnegie Hall. He stayed about a month, directing in Philadelphia and Baltimore as well. His impressions of America are interesting and curious. The third movement of this symphony, played pizzicato by the strings—that is, by plucking instead of bowing—ought to give you a thrill. The ensuing finale will provide you with a bit of contrast, to say the least.

Jay C. Rosenfeld

SERIES 2
CONCERT 2

The sixth symphony of Beethoven, called the "Pastorale," has become almost the theme song of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It has been left off scarcely a single year's lists. Its bucolic nature and inherent beauty, however, hardly need any persuasive argument to justify its performance anywhere, any time. Beethoven adds to the indications for performing naive but unusual amplifications of his intentions: "Pleasant feelings aroused on arriving in the country," and so on. The symphony has five movements, but the fourth, which is the "storm," goes without stopping into the fifth which reflects "joyous and thankful feels after the storm. The "Pathetique" is one of the three to be played in this week's program commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth. His last, its title is supposed not only to reveal the mood of the music but the dominant humor of the life of its composer. Yet Ivan Melnikoff reports that while everyone thought Tchaikowsky was a gloomy man, "he was extremely affable, always amiable and cheerful, with an inexhaustible source of exultancy."

SERIES 2
CONCERT 3

Beethoven's fourth symphony lies between the "Eroica," (the one in which the original dedication to Napoleon was scratched out as he learned more of his one-time hero's actions), and the famous fateful fifth. This is important only because its comparative mildness is the more remarkable when its neighbors are borne in mind. This happens also to have a slow introduction before the main body of the first movement is reached. The Coriolanus overture was not suggested by the Bard of Avon's piece but by a local boy of Beethoven's acquaintance, a now obscure German poet, Heinrich von Collin. Yet Beethoven's music was so much greater than Collins's drama that Richard Wagner wrote that the music is still a perfect tonal description of that scene in the last act of the Shakespeare play in which Coriolanus, struggling against the pleading of his mother and wife, submits to them and goes to his tragic death. The Tchaikowsky fifth is so full of choice morsels that, blindfolded, one would be certain to pick a tasty bit. Be sure and be on the watch, after the luscious eight bars of the opening chorus, for the French horn in the familiar second movement.

* * * * * * *

Organ and Chorus in Debuts

SERIES 3
CONCERT 1

Charles Sanford Terry wrote that Bach, "Relieved of the duty to provide Sunday cantatas and the Good Friday Passion, devoted the early months of 1733 to the preparation of a work for presentation to his sovereign, as a token of devotion, an indication of his skill, and a diploma for the post of Hofcomponist, which he coveted." The work was the B minor mass, a composition in dimensions comparable to the pyramids of Egypt, and probably as everlasting in devotion and sincerity, as immeasureable as the aspirations of a man of the most profound faith. The mass will mark the debuts of the new Tanglewood organ and the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

SERIES 3
CONCERT 2

This program compares in character to the Saturday night of the first series. It starts with compositions by two of the most prominent men now writing music, Prokokieff and Hindemith. The latter will be in the audience. The former will be remembered for his "Lieutenant Kije" and "Peter and the Wolf." The appearance of Dorothy Maynor brings to the entire Festival audience the opportunity to hear a vocalist whose appearance on these very grounds before a select group only a year ago provided the impulsion which has rocketed her to national notice. Faure and Respighi follow.

SERIES 3
CONCERT 3

Three symphonies comprise the final program of this Festival, the G minor of Haydn, the seventh of Sibelius and the first Brahms.

The Haydn is Number 88 in a complete catalogue of slightly over 100 symphonies. The Sibelius is played in one movement, and was first heard on a Festival program in 1937; in fact, it was the first Sibelius to be heard at a Berkshire Symphonic Festival. As the Festival had opened with a first symphony (Beethoven), so it closes with the analagous one of Brahms. He was 43 before he wrote his first symphony. He held off, because he considered it "no laughing matter" to write a symphony after Beethoven. The harsh dissonances in the introduction provided a subject of discussion for many a moon. Today we "hear" them quite easily. The melody of the second movement is especially lovely. The final movement has a slow introduction which leads into the principal theme, one of those statements in music which is not only gratifying to the ear, but fills one's soul with noble resolves and lofty purposes. On what better note can we be sent home?

Congratulations
To the Berkshire Festival
The Shed—Insured by Wheeler & Taylor, Inc.
Tel. 1
GREAT BARRINGTON

THE GREYLOCK
NATIONAL BANK
ADAMS, MASS.

Extends a Hearty Welcome to the Visitors
in Berkshire County

THE NATIONAL MAHAIWE BANK
OF GREAT BARRINGTON
Great Barrington, Massachusetts
Established in 1847

Every Banking Facility at Your Disposal

Growing! Growing! Grown!

Growing amazingly is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. At Tanglewood today lovers of music are treated to the ultimate in musical art and expression. From a modest beginning consisting principally of an idea and enthusiasm, in 1934, the Festival has grown until today its world significance is generally accepted. What the future holds, no one dares venture—except, that built on a firm foundation, with inspiring leadership within its own organization and within the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it must go forward with continued achievement.

Growing, too, is the Plastics Department of the General Electric Company—and equally fast. Five years ago a comparatively insignificant division lost in the vast factories of the Pittsfield Works, General Electric's progressive measures have resulted in the largest and most modern plastics molding plant in the United States for Pittsfield. Employment in this period has doubled. A second building has just been completed. New applications for Textolite almost daily result from the ingenuity of trained engineers and skilled craftsmen. And plastics in Pittsfield continues to grow.

Fully grown is the Pittsfield Works of the General Electric Company, the leading transformer manufacturing plant in the world. Providing employment for thousands in Berkshire County, paying high wages and by far the largest single tax bill, producing high quality products in keeping with General Electric's theme of "More Goods For More People At Less Cost," the Pittsfield Works year in and year out is a most important factor in Berkshire County's progress.

The General Electric Organization of Pittsfield Extends Its Best Wishes for the Continued Success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

GENERAL GE ELECTRIC

Unique Organ To Make Debut During 1940 Festival

Instrument Synthesizes Old and New

By EMERSON RICHARDS

The Tanglewood organ is unique. It does not follow the traditions of the "Romantic" organ developed in America and England during the lush days of the early 20th century. Tanglewood presents an organ that is subtly different from the instrument to which we have been accustomed. And yet there is nothing revolutionary about Tanglewood.

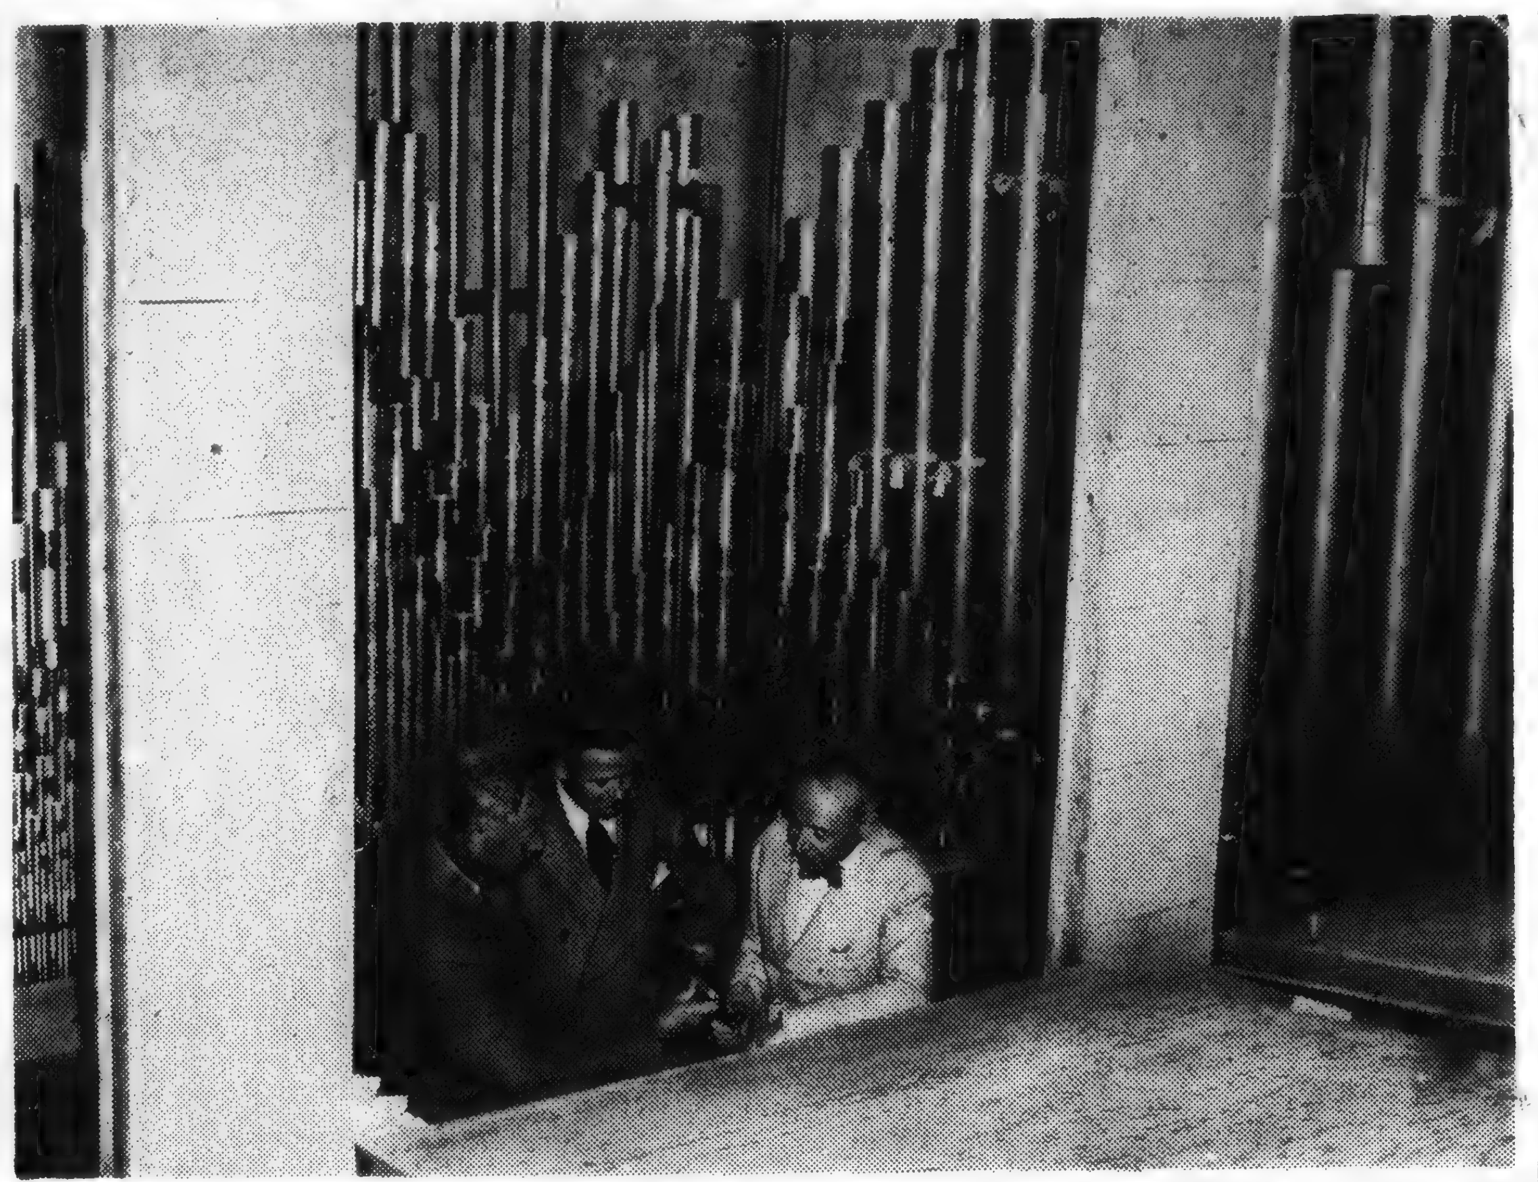
The modern organ has its roots in the German and French organ of the 18th century, the Schnitgers, the Silbermanns and the Clicquots. With the advent of electricity, the old type of French and German organ disappeared in favor of the high pressure, highly individualistic organs in which the eight-foot tone was overwhelmingly predominant. Many of the individual voices were quite attractive but the organ, as an ensemble instrument, practically ceased to exist. The great literature of the organ from Bach to Franck had been written for the older type of ensemble instrument. Most of these compositions were of the polyphonic type, demanding an organ in which the various voices could be heard with equal clarity. The "Romantic" organ, gravitating towards an orchestral ensemble with a thick, heavy bass, was unable to express such music suitably. Consequently, the compositions of the great masters became almost meaningless when played on the modern American or English organ and the organ recital, in turn, began to decline in popularity among musicians.

Renaissance

About 1920 a re-examination of the existing 18th century organs led to a renaissance of the so-called "Baroque" type of organ with its much lighter bass, its greater reliance upon brilliant mixtures and a more complete development of a chorus nature, together with a suppression of the high pressure orchestral tone colors.

This revolution in the art of organ design was first brought to the attention of the American organ public about 1930 by the writer of this article. In 1937, after a period of investigation in Germany, G. Donald Harrison, then technical director of the Aeolian Skinner Company, designed a Baroque organ for the Germanic Museum at Harvard University. This organ created a sensation and no little controversy among the older type of organists who were wedded to the old style of Romantic organ, and the younger and more progressive organists who saw in the new design greater possibilities for the rendition of true organ music.

The Germanic organ was not a slavish imitation of the old German organ. It has been the idea of Mr. Harrison to take the sound principles underlying the old Baroque ensemble and develop them into a streamlined American version of a modern organ in which every voice is intended to have a distinct part in the chorus and where the organ itself is intended to be distinctly an ensemble instrument designed primarily for playing the literature of the organ. The new organ is necessarily more brilliant, flexible, sharply defined and inherently colorful than the older type of organ and yet always distinctly an ensemble instrument.



G. Donald Harrison explains the workings of the new Tanglewood organ to Organist E. Power Biggs and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the loft above the shell.

Carnegie Foundation Gives Funds

Makeshifts

Up to date Conductor Koussevitzky has been compelled to put up with various makeshifts where organs have been required in conjunction with the orchestra. Last winter he heard the Germanic organ and decided that a similar organ must form part of the equipment at Tanglewood. The Carnegie Foundation provided the necessary funds and G. Donald Harrison is the artist who produced this very fine organ. The funds available did not admit of a large instrument, yet the favorable acoustics give the impression of a sizeable organ. Mr. Harrison has made every pipe count in the ensemble, with the result that there is a clearness and colorful brilliance of effect not usually found in the organ familiar to an American audience. The organ is situated immediately over the orchestra shell, in what amounts to a duplicate of the shell, speaking through the six openings to be seen immediately above the shell itself. It employs a modern electric action but the organ itself is very simple in its construction. There are no borrowed pipes and every stop is voiced to blend with every other stop, so that there is a complete homogeneity of effect throughout the instrument. Most of the representative tone colors of the modern organ are present, from the faintest whisper of the strings to the full brilliance of the complete ensemble but without the muddiness and stodginess characteristic of the type of organ which it replaces.

To some extent this new type of instrument is a musician's organ. It is an exacting instrument to play, requiring much greater technical ability than the older type of organ, but its chief interest lies in the fact that it reveals the music as the composer intended. It leads to an understanding of the great polyphonic school of organ music not heretofore available to Americans. The great Bach becomes human, not an exercise in mathematics. This will become quite apparent when the organ is used in conjunction with the orchestra in the B minor mass.

Because of the superior acoustics at Tanglewood the organ naturally sounds bigger than it really is and under the masterful playing of the organist, E. Power Biggs, it fortunately has a competent and sympathetic musician to exhibit its manifold excellencies. The large number of musicians and music lovers who are attracted to the Festival will undoubtedly be greatly impressed by this renaissance in organ design

E. Power Biggs at the console of the new organ, with Dr. Koussevitzky as interested spectator.

Ted Shawn To Appear At Becket

Return of Dancer Climaxes Season Of New School

Dance lovers visiting the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have opportunity to see the final programs of the Berkshire Hills Dance Festival, the Saturday matinee series being given at Jacob's Pillow, nine miles east of Lee.

These programs replace the lecture-demonstrations of Ted Shawn, renowned dancer and founder of the Shawn School of Dance for Men, now the Jacob's Pillow School of the Dance. Both the school and the Berkshire Hills Dance Festival are directed by Mary Washington Ball, teacher of dancing at the State Teachers' College, Cortland, N. Y.

Mr. Shawn himself is scheduled to appear on the final date of the dance festival, Aug. 10. He will present a program of his best-loved solos such as Berkshire audiences have enjoyed during the past seven summers.

Among other well known artists who have been featured on the festival are Maria Gambarelli, premiere danseuse of the Metropolitan Opera Company; La Meri, famous for her presentations of the dance cultures and philosophies of various races; Miriam Winslow and Foster Fitz-Simons, outstanding among the younger concert dancers; and the Arthur Murray dancers, specialists in exhibition ballroom dancing.

Students in Recital

The festival program Saturday afternoon, Aug. 3, will be presented by students at Jacob's Pillow. This group has been working under the direction of Miss Winslow and Mr. Fitz-Simons. They will offer dances composed during the summer.

"Let's get a Coca-Cola"

DRINK Coca-Cola

Singer To Give Story Of Tchaikowsky Romance

The 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens today appropriately commemorates the 100th anniversary of the birth of the great composer Peter Ilyich Tchaikowsky, with the Boston Symphony's playing the first, second, fourth, fifth and "Pathetique" Symphonies under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

On Friday, Aug. 9, at 2:30, during this Tchaikowsky "week," the role of Nadejda von Meck, the true story of whom was told for the first time by Catherine Drinker Bowen in her book, "Beloved Friend," will be enacted by Lillian Beall Hicks, Michigan artist, in Pittsfield at the Berkshire Museum.

Since "Nadejda" combines the drama and music history of the Russian composer's career, the solo drama offers a most unique program for the Tchaikowsky centenary year—and has been performed on various occasions as a special anniversary program.

Story of Friendship

The drama "Nadejda," the story of the acquaintance of Mme. von Meck and Peter Tchaikowsky, has been written for a single actress by Virginia Balinger, of the National League of American Pen Women, and was directed by Katheryn Vincent Mayer of Detroit.

The Berkshire-Pittsfield presentation is one of a series of summer programs presented by Lillian Hicks, which are sponsored by the Artist Bureau of the Michigan Federation of Music Clubs. The drama was recently enacted at the Colony Town Club in Detroit and is to be featured as the opening program of the Detroit Tuesday Musicale in October.

Settles Down

"When the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is written, 1939 will go down as the year when success, having looked interestedly around, decided to settle permanently at Tanglewood." Carl E. Lindstrom in the Hartford Times, Aug. 11, 1939.

And It Came To Pass

"The Festival came to its termination on a note of triumph for all concerned. Although the attendance has been the largest in the six-year history of the Festival, all indications point to a still greater attendance next summer. There is a possibility that the season henceforth will be at least a week longer than in the past to meet the growing demand for seats." Noel Straus in the New York Times, Aug. 14, 1939.

Another Chapter

"On Saturday night and Sunday afternoon the final concerts will be presented and another interesting chapter will have been added to this unique phase of American cultural development." The Lawrence Tribune, Aug. 11, 1939.

Shaker

Continued From Sixth Page

tiles are carefully woven of the best materials. The pill-maker is but one of countless instances of Shaker ingenuity, the result of introducing new industries or expanding old ones on a wider, communal scale. The Believers often evolved their own methods and means. As time went on, these means were improved, even by borrowing from the world. But the guild-like method and the reliance on hand-labor never essentially changed. Though the Shakers anticipated the age of combined, large-scale production, once it had dawned they could not compete with the machine and a rapidly expanding industrialism. Both the rise and decline of the order were affected by economic conditions in the larger society in which it played a useful, important but impermanent role.

The Shaker collection represents, in fact, a lost period of American industry and craftsmanship. Unlike most objects of "folk art," the materials which compose it are the product, not of isolated individuals about whom little is known, but of a culture group with a recorded history. The Shaker movement persisted long enough to develop a definite philosophy and have its principles tested in the crucible of experience. As a sustained experiment in sociology and religion, it played a part—how influential it is difficult to say—in the development of the country. The manifestations of that culture, the craft and art which reflect so directly its character, are therefore of the utmost historical import. They may be enjoyed and utilized apart from such considerations. But they should never be scattered nor their latent meaning forgotten.

LEE
NATIONAL BANK

LEE, MASSACHUSETTS
Est. 1835

Member of Federal Reserve System and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

SIXTIETH SEASON, 1940-1941
OCTOBER 10 - May 3

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conductor

SYMPHONY HALL . . . . . . BOSTON
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
6 TUESDAY AFTERNOONS
6 MONDAY EVENINGS

CARNEGIE HALL . . . . . NEW YORK CITY
5 EVENING CONCERTS
5 SATURDAY AFTERNOONS

ACADEMY OF MUSIC . . . BROOKLYN, NEW YORK
5 EVENING CONCERTS

METROPOLITAN THEATRE . . . PROVIDENCE, R. I.
5 TUESDAY EVENINGS

The Orchestra will also give concerts in Cambridge (8); Hartford (2); New Haven (2); New London; Rochester, N. Y.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, Ohio; Ann Arbor; Toledo; Pittsburgh (2); Northampton; Worcester, Mass.; New Brunswick, N. J.; Newark, N. J.; Philadelphia.

The OFFICERS and TRUSTEES of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Inc.
ERNEST B. DANE, President
HENRY B. SAWYER, Vice-President
ERNEST B. DANE, Treasurer

HENRY B. CABOT
ERNEST B. DANE
REGINALD C. FOSTER
ALVAN T. FULLER
JEROME D. GREENE
N. PENROSE HALLOWELL
M. A. De WOLFE HOWE
ROGER I. LEE
RICHARD C. PAINE
HENRY B. SAWYER
EDWARD A. TAFT
BENTLEY W. WARREN
G. E. JUDD, Manager
C. W. SPALDING, Assistant Manager

Anyone leaving name and address (specifying the series in which they are interested) with the Berkshire Music Center Office at Tanglewood,—will receive full information.

May we remind you that ALL
RCA-VICTOR RECORDINGS of the
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Under the Direction of
Serge Koussevitzky
ARE ON SALE AT Wood Bros
421 NORTH ST. DIAL 7478
A Music Store for Over 50 Years

Foot Pals TRADE MARK
For Men
"SHOES WORTH WEARING"

In either brown or black this handsome Brogue is a "natural" in any "current" wardrobe. Outstanding in style it is custom built for service and comfort. Wing tipped and effectively perforated; comes in all sizes.

MADE IN THE BERKSHIRES
BY WALL-STREETER
SHOE CO.
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

Graves & Hemmes,
Inc.
105 Main St.,
Great Barrington, Mass.
General Contractors for Tanglewood
Music Shed
We Construct All Types of Buildings
Large or Small Residences
Mill Construction
Insulation
Modern Dairy Barns
Public Buildings
Kitchen Remodelling
WE INVITE YOU TO BRING YOUR CONSTRUCTION PROBLEMS TO US

The Lee Savings Bank for 88 years has served the real estate requirements as well as the financial welfare of the public of Central Berkshire.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANKS STABILITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

INCORPORATED 1852
LEE SAVINGS BANK
LEE, MASSACHUSETTS

Gate Crashers Make Life Interesting

Admissions Department Now an Army

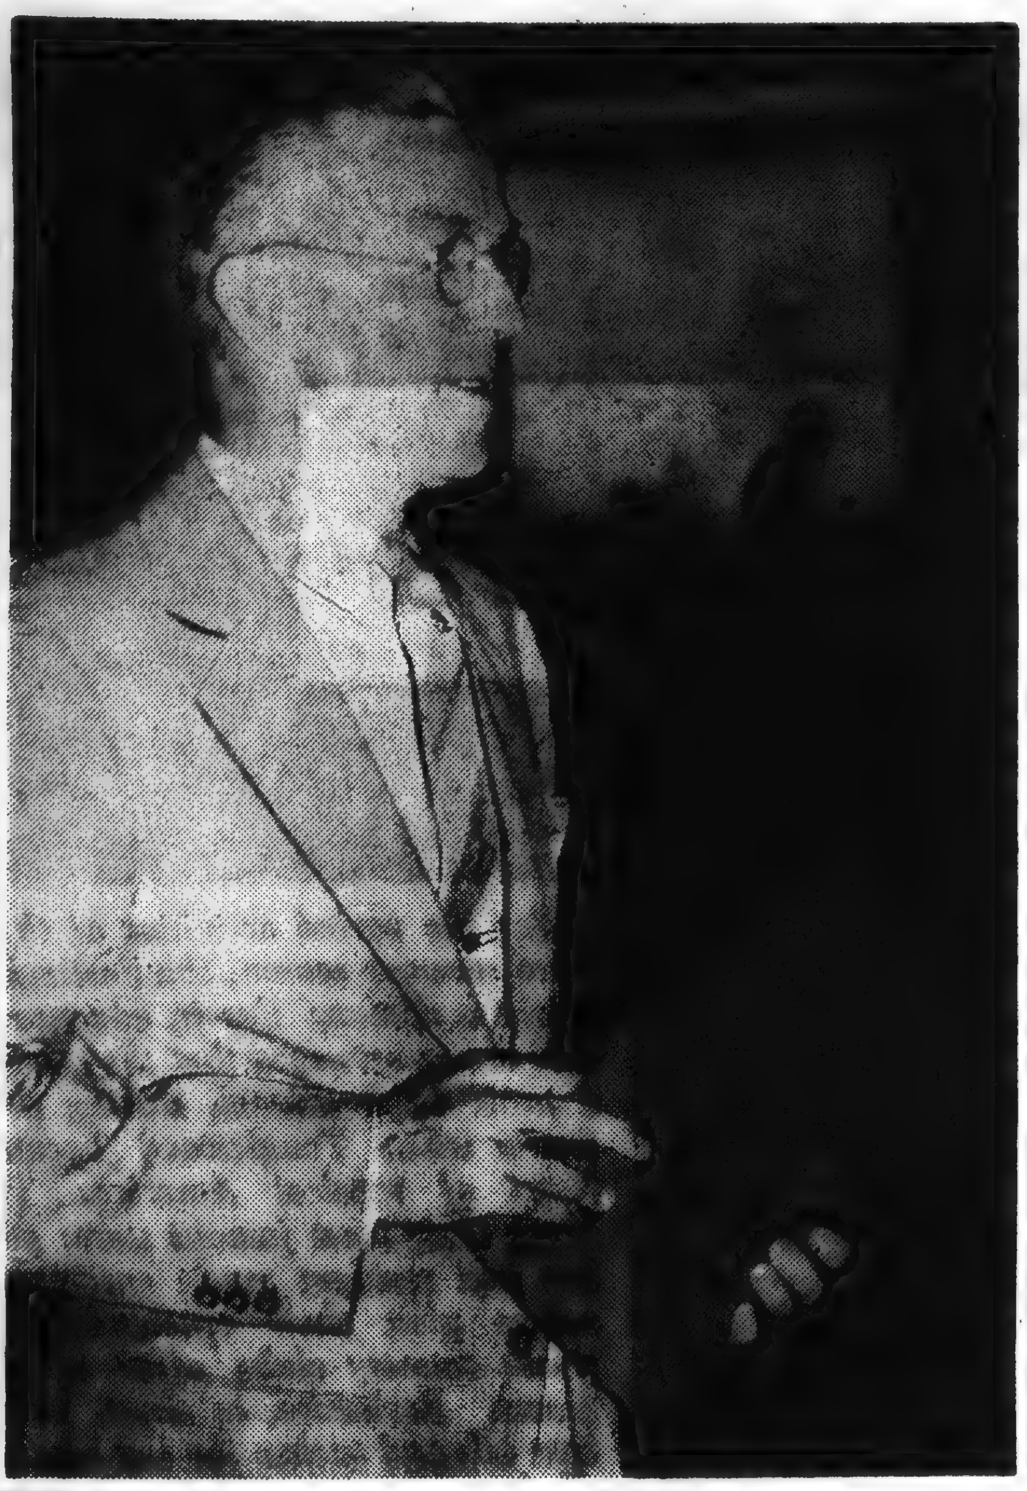
To the public, the admissions department of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival seems a minor detail in a large undertaking; to the success of the Festival, it is highly important.

In at least one way, this subdivision of the Festival organization can estimate its effectiveness and its efficiency on the basis of the amount of annoyance it causes—for one of its most important functions is the limiting of admission to authentic ticket-holders. Even in the rarefied cultural atmosphere of music there are gate crashers.

But Willard M. Sistare, Pittsfield insurance man who heads the 175-member admissions department knows his business. For the past 20-odd years he has done the same job for the Eastern States Exposition, a record of experience in a specialized field which got him his unpaid job with the Festival at the beginning of its second season in 1935.

From 20 to 175

The admissions department naturally has grown with the Festival. From a force of 20 in 1935 (16 ushers and 4 ticket-takers), the department has developed in five years to an army of 175. There are 12 ticket-takers under William P. Wookey; 15 box section ushers under Fred T. Francis; 30 ushers in the blue section under C. Alec Henry and Norman B. Hollister; 32 ushers in the red section under Carl A. Germeck and Neill F. Bridges; 45 program girls (15 per series) under Martha Hick and Hazel P. Cande; 24 aides (8 at each series) under Charles M. Weeks 3d and Rodric L. Jones; 2 first aid men; 8 checkers, and 6 ushers in the special reserved section.



Willard M. Sistare, chairman of the admissions department of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is caught by the candid cameraman at the Shed, with the orchestra silhouetted in the background.

With traffic lanes to the various sections running smoothly and ushers familiar with row letters and seat numbers, the department's next biggest problem is the gate crashers.

Gate crashers, at least the ones who have moved on the Festival, are a nervy but unimaginative lot. So far as Mr. Sistare can remember, nobody has thought up a really good story as to why he has no ticket or why he should be allowed in to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Usually they claim to be the guests of Festival President Gertrude Robinson Smith or Orchestra Manager George E. Judd, the pupils of Dr. Koussevitzky or the wives of members of the orchestra. The low in imagination is reached by those who solemnly declare they have lost their tickets.

It would be a simple matter if people without tickets could merely be denied entrance. But there's always the chance that the distinguished looking gentleman actually is the guest of Miss Robinson Smith; or that the excited woman really is the wife of a second violinist; or that the young couple did lose their tickets. So every claim has to be checked, which takes time.

Reluctance To Pay Brings Many a Tale

Just Friends

A couple of years ago, Roger W. Wellington of Pittsfield was keeping his eagle eye on the grounds two hours before one of the afternoon concerts. He spied a group of five girls crossing the lawn and proceeded to ask for their tickets as a matter of routine. They regretted having none, but said they were the guests of Mr. Judd. To their consternation, Mr. Wellington said, "Fine, here comes Mr. Judd now. He's probably been looking for you." They allowed there must have been some mistake and made rapidly for an exit.

There are also a lot of honest mistakes. During one of the rainy programs some years ago, a man and woman came rushing in for shelter, the former thrusting a pair of stubs at the ticket-taker, who looked at them, raised his eyebrows and asked, "What are these?" They turned out to be two rainchecks for a Red Sox-Yankees ball game at Fenway Park. The gentleman had the right tickets in another pocket.

Once in a while, the admissions department indulges in a bit of foxy business itself. A couple of years ago, Aide Chairman Weeks thought he'd like to get acquainted with Screen Actress Miriam Hopkins, who made somewhat of a stir when she appeared in a box one night. A doer and not a dreamer, young Mr. Weeks approached Miss Hopkins and reported that Miss Robinson Smith had sent him over to ask Miss Hopkins if she would like to see the famous Tanglewood gardens. She would and did. Mr. Weeks is reticent about further details.

Things like this must get around. At any rate, Chairman Sistare this year has received applications for jobs in his department from students, both Berkshire and distant, at Smith, Mount Holyoke, Eastman School of Music in Rochester, Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, Juilliard School in New York, Brenau College in Georgia, University of North Carolina, Yale School of Music, St. Paul's School, Portsmouth (R. I.) Priory School, RPI and Oberlin.

Prophesies Permanence For Festival

"Judging by its first three concerts, the 1939 Berkshire Festival has continued the notable record of sucess made by its recent predecessors, both in its artistic standards and in constantly increasing public interest, and, so far as anything can be predicted in this unpredictable age, can be regarded as an institution of assured permanence. It has developed to an extent which its founders might well have considered unduly optimistic to hope for in five years when they held their first three concerts in 1934." Francis D. Perkins in the New York Herald-Tribune, Aug. 13, 1939.

Worth It

"These are magnificent concerts, set in a garden spot of such sylvan beauty as to beggar description. They are worth all the fuss and heat and bother of a motor jaunt some 155 miles from New York." Cue Magazine, Aug. 12, 1939.

Dr. Koussevitzky Expects Five Great Conductors in Five Years

An enquiring reporter confronted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his rooms in the mansion house at Tanglewood where the new Berkshire Music Center was in progress. It was a short interview, between one conducting pupil and the next, a brief pause in the midst of a very busy morning in a very busy place. The conductor of an orchestra and director of a school showed no signs of fatigue, despite the fact that he was giving generously of his time and energies to the small group of young men admitted into his class in conducting.

"Inspiring"

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke buoyantly and with eagerness: "We are all working hard, and we are enjoying our work. I am speaking not only for the pupils, but for myself and my colleagues of the faculty. There is extraordinary talent among the young people who have come to us. To work with them is inspiring and makes one feel years younger. I have noticed that the other teachers feel as I do. They are so absorbed in what we are doing, so interested in the young musicians in their charge, that the hours go by unnoticed."

Asked about the prospects that conductors of importance might emerge from the school, he answered quickly and with conviction: "I can promise you in the course of the next five years, five conductors of the first order. And besides that, 20 conductors of high ability, conductors who will be valuable wherever they may go."

Note in Re Shirtsleeves

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra in shirtsleeves, and even Dr. Serge Koussevitzky himself in that state of informal attire, did not faze an audience of crushing proportions which gathered in the shed of Tanglewood here this afternoon for the closing concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival" The New York Herald-Tribune, Aug. 14, 1939.

Unrivalled

"Here was disclosed the Boston orchestra's unrivalled musicianship. The entire performance was a masterpiece." Hampshire Gazette, Northampton, Aug. 11, 1939.

Outstanding Voice of Day

"One of the outstanding voices of the day was brought to light in Lenox Wednesday afternoon when Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, appeared as soloist at the annual picnic given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the members of the Bostn Symphny Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood." Noel Straus in the New York Time, Aug. 12, 1939.

Phone Lenox 174-W
RICHARD DAVIS
Photographs
Church Street,
Lenox, Mass.
Portrait and Commercial Photography
Wedding Groups
Copies
Photo Finishing and Enlarging

OAKWOOD INN
Enjoy complete rest and comfort at the Inn, surrounded by its six acres of beautifully landscaped gardens ●It is but a few minutes' walk to the centre of the town, close to all churches and cultural activities. Open all year.
Golfing—Tennis—Swimming
Horseback Riding Nearby
OWNER IVY L. CLOUGH
MANAGEMENT ADOLF WENDT
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.

Sheffield Inn
SHEFFIELD, MASS.
On Route No. 7
Phone Sheffield 48
A pleasant ride for Lunch or Dinner
A comfortable Room for the Night
Stuart M. Beard 2d
Owner & Manager

HOMES AND ESTATES
IN BERKSHIRE COUNTY ARE NOW BEING OFFERED
BELOW MARKET VALUES!
HENRY P. TOBEY
Real Estate and Insurance
321 Main St. Gt. Barrington

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
rightly ranked with the greatest living conductors, as indeed the Boston Symphony Orchestra is counted among the finest the world has ever heard.
The majority of the works to be rendered at the Berkshire Festival are recorded by Dr. Koussevitzky on Higher-Fidelity Victor Records and will be found on our shelves for your immediate selection.
We invite you to visit this new record department, where a cordial welcome awaits you and where you may comfortably select Victor Records of all grades from Glenn Miller or Tommy Dorsey style at 35c to Bach Mass in B Minor at $25.50.
THE GOLD SHOP
148 North St.
MAIL ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED

Pontoosuc Lodge
On Beautiful Pontoosuc Lake—Pittsfield, Mass.
Samuel Ellins, Prop. Mrs. Minnie Morgan, Mgr.
Spend a Pleasant Vacation With Us
Reasonable Rates by the Day, Week or Season
All Rooms With Bath All Sports

THE BRADFORD HOUSE
Lenox-Pittsfield Road
Lenox, Mass.—Ben Karp, Manager

Overnight Guests
Luncheons—Dinners—Suppers
Open All Year 'Round

Terrell's Travel Bureau and Gift Shop
Cruises
Airplane and Hotel Reservations
Mount Hope Farm Products
Room 3 16 South St.
Tel. 6258

Lucilles
Main Street - - - Stockbridge, Mass.
Near Playhouse
For Really Excellent Food
Visit Lucille's
Luncheons—Dinners
Afternoon Tea Served
Phone 335

"...and a Coca-Cola"

DRINK Coca-Cola

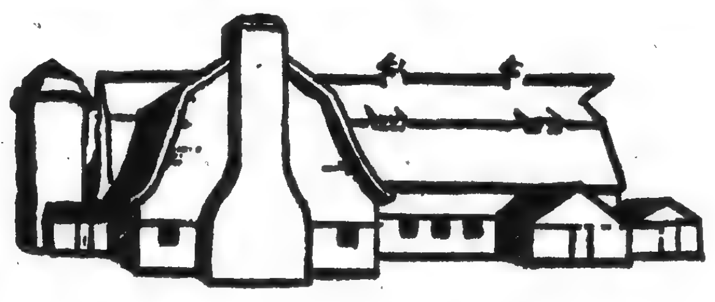
Forget-Me-Not Tea Room
WILLIAMSTOWN
Drive Over and Enjoy One of Our Delicious Sunday Dinners
Steak, Ham or Chicken Pattie dinners served every day $1
Steak or Broiled Chicken $1.50
Dinner Parties Accommodated
A Very Attractive Gift Shop
Tel. 379

A cheerful spot in Lenox to Lunch or Dine or spend an evening among kindred souls.
The Log Cabin
Rose and Tod Burke - - - Tel. 8108

THE GATEWAYS
at Routes 7 and 20
Lenox, Massachusetts
GUESTS
T. J. O'Brien, Owner-Manager

The 1896 House
Williamstown, Mass.
REALLY FINE FOOD
DANCING NIGHTLY
We Accommodate Parties and Banquets

Camp Merrill
Pontoosuc Lake
Tennis, Swimming, Canoeing, Boating, Picnic Facilities, Dancing, etc.
PUBLIC WELCOME



Jug End Barn
So. Egremont, Mass.
One of New England's Most Unique Resorts
Transient Meals Served
Swimming Riding Tennis Winter Sports

Hear Your Favorite Recordings on the CAPEHART
reproducing instrument as only the Capehart can reproduce them.
Models on display from $159.50 to $1045.00
THE GOLD SHOP
148 North St.
Pittsfield's Exclusive Capehart Distributor

Knickerbocker Hotel WINES, BEERS, LIQUORS
Dancing Every Saturday Night
Music by Our Hotel Band
John V. Mooney, Mgr.
CANAAN, CONN.
Tel. Canaan 272

Telephone 6374
Tables for Bridge
The Yellow Aster Tea Garden
Pittsfield-Lenox Road
Luncheon Dinner
Afternoon Tea
OPEN ALL YEAR

Richmond Hotel
North Adams
Visit Our Grill
For Good Food
at Reasonable Prices

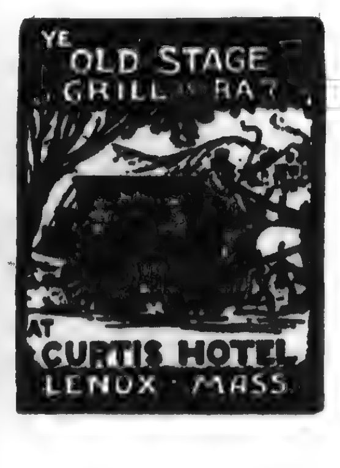
the place for


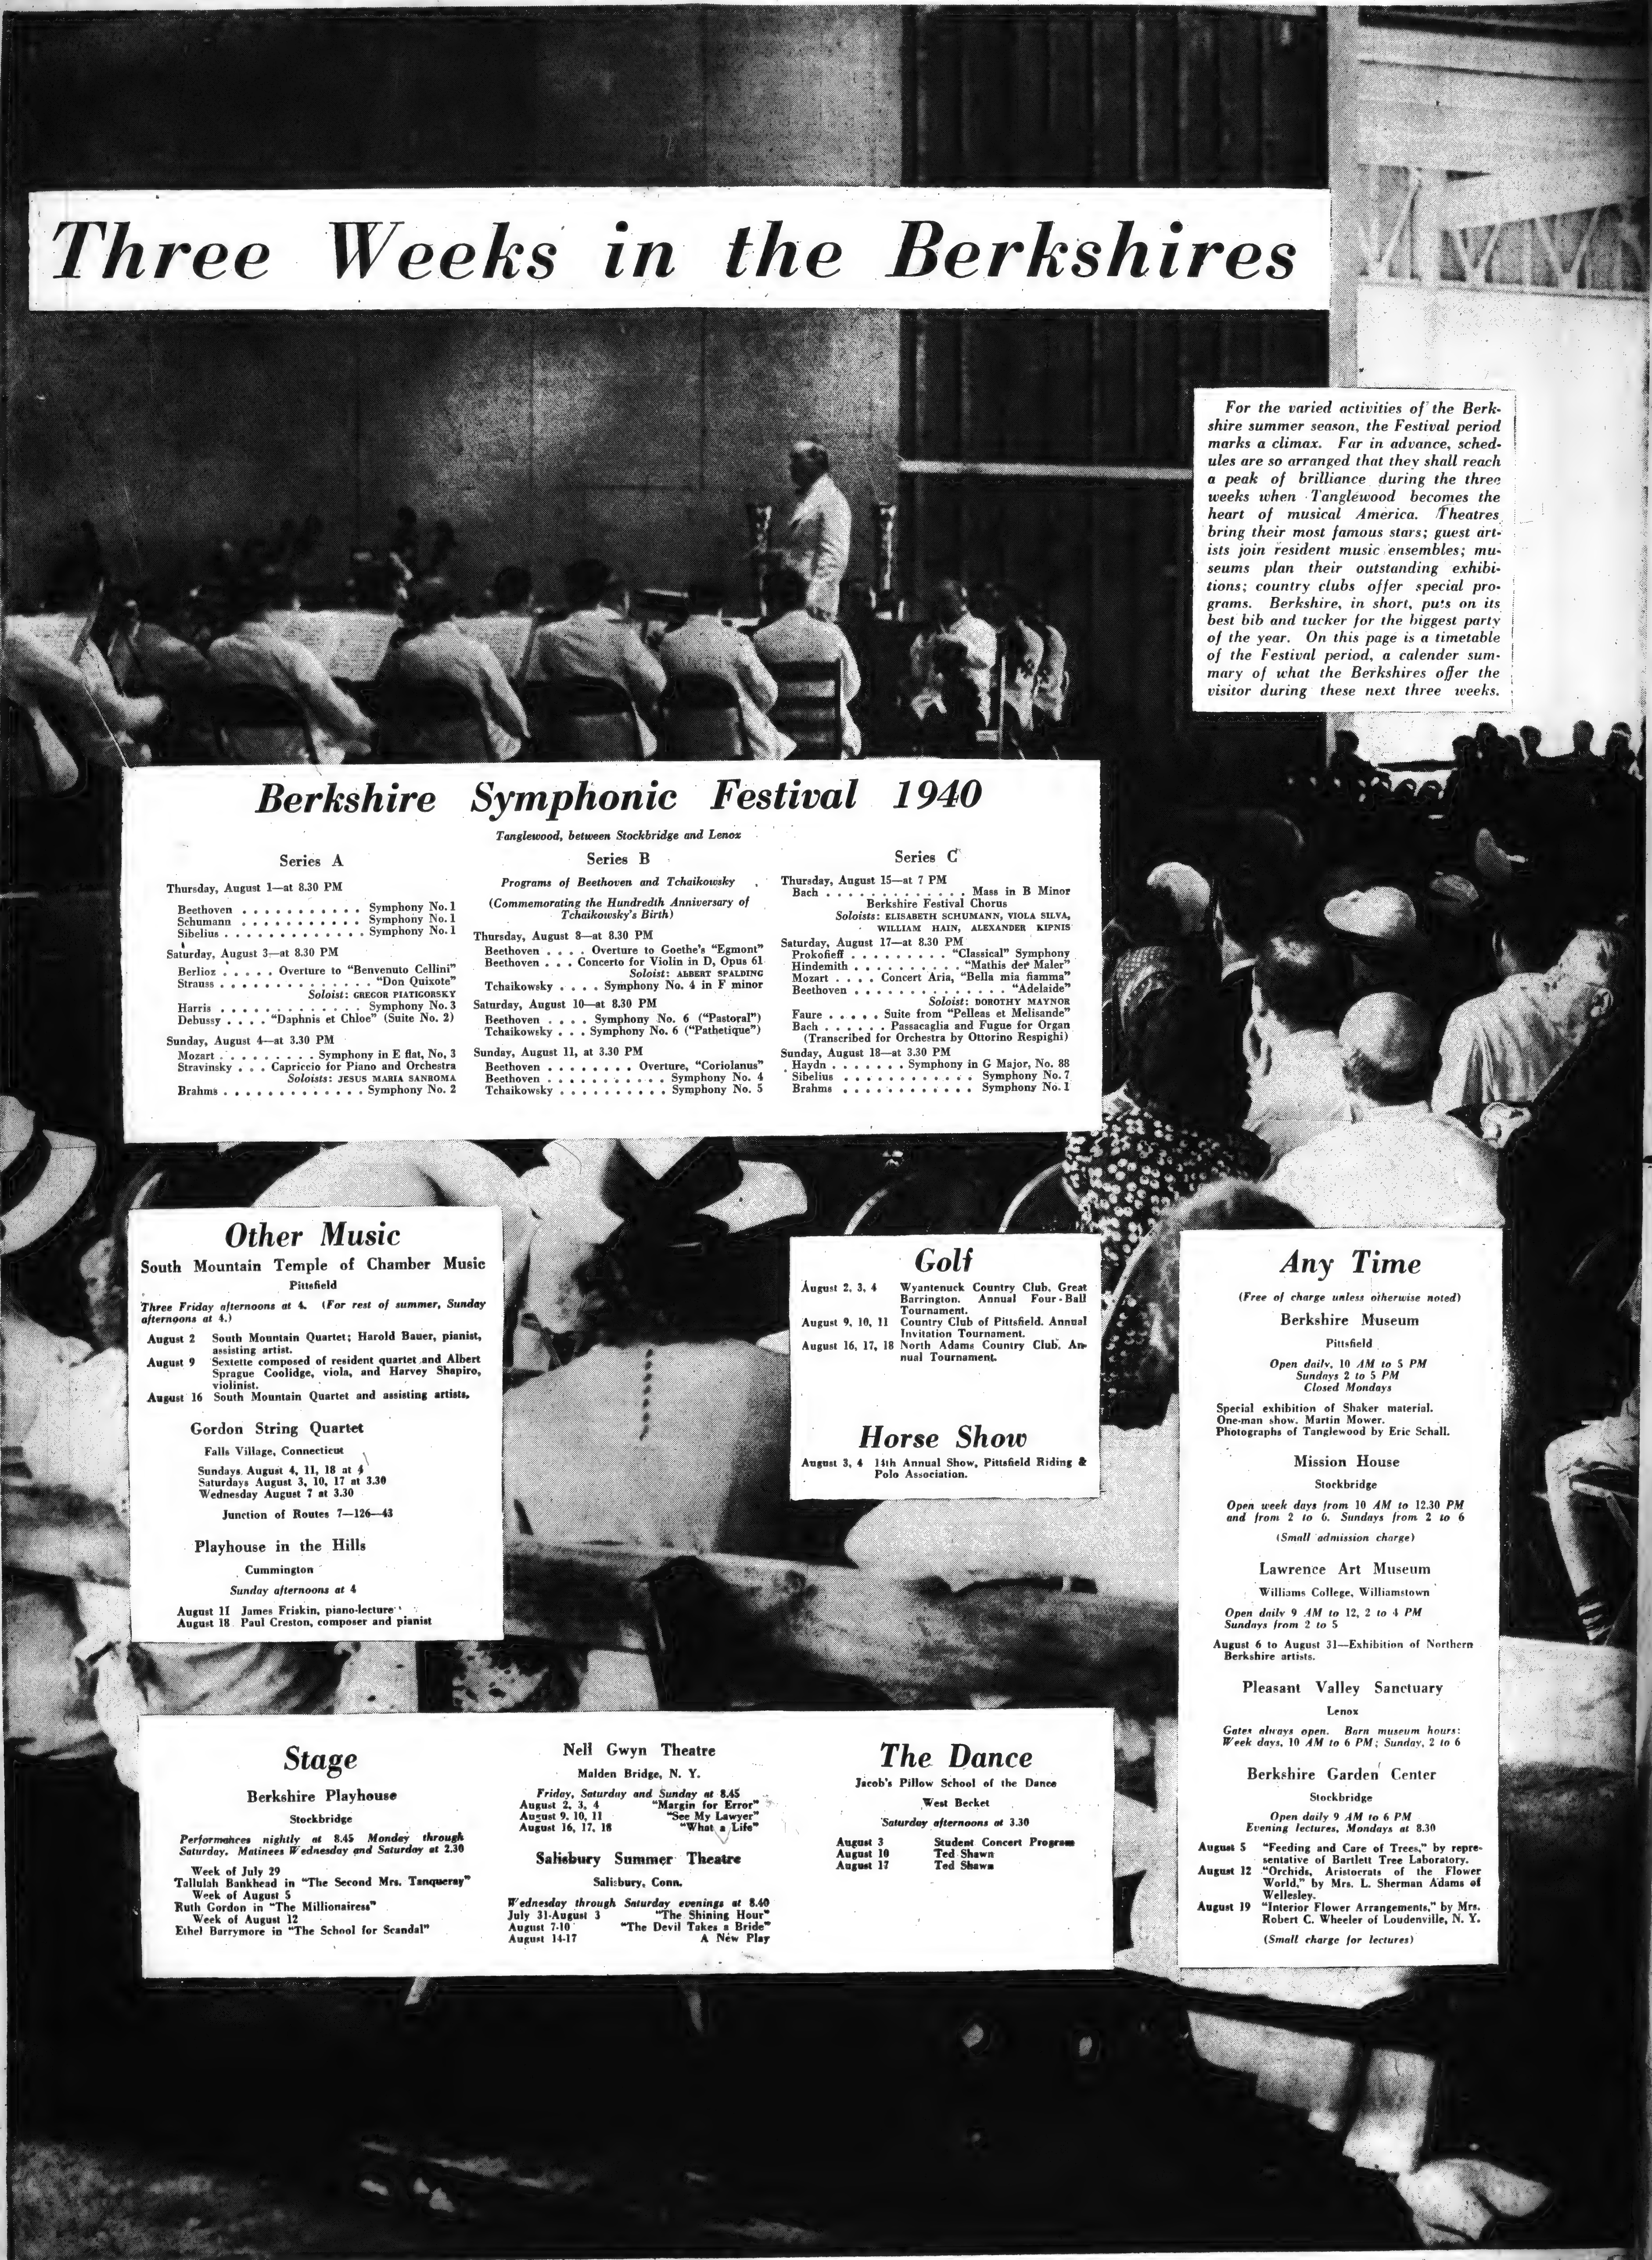
YE OLD STAGE GRILL BAR
AT CURTIS HOTEL LENOX MASS
● A DELICIOUS LUNCHEON . . . . .
● THE PERFECT DINNER
● A BIT OF LATE . . . SUPPER
● AN EVENING OF MUSIC 9.00 TO 12.00 DANCING
TABLE D'HOTE AND A LA CARTE SERVICE 7.30 A. M. TO MIDNIGHT
WINES AND LIQUORS UNTIL 1.00 A. M.

Immaculate Conception Church
THE SHRINE OF OUR LADY OF LOURDES
New Lebanon, N. Y.
An architectural gem, situated on the Pittsfield-Albany Road, 11 miles from Pittsfield and 24 miles from Albany.
The Shrine, since its beginning, has been a spiritual and cultural inspiration to thousands of pilgrims. In eleven years, over 200,000 visitors have registered.
Services each Sunday, 3.30 PM. A series of sermons by prominent speakers. Sunday masses, 9.30 AM and 11.30 AM.
For rest and comfort of visitors, an Old English Garden is landscaped—flowers, paths and illuminated fountain.
The garden is enclosed and has garden chairs and benches.
Just Across the Road from the Shrine

new columbia masterworks

COLUMBIA is proud to have Artur Rodzinski among its many conductors and we are proud to have a COLUMBIA franchise that we may serve you in supplying your favorite recordings. Select your records from our large assortment of popular or classical works.
Mail orders promptly filled.
THE GOLD SHOP
148 North St.
Pittsfield's New Music Dealers—In the Heart of the Berkshires

THE PLACE TO PICNIC
Gibson's Grove
LAKE BUEL,
GREAT BARRINGTON
Camps and Cottages To Rent
Bathing—Boating—Fishing
Canoes and Boats for Rent
Try Our Sellner Water Chute Toboggan



Three Weeks in the Berkshires

For the varied activities of the Berkshire summer season, the Festival period marks a climax. Far in advance, schedules are so arranged that they shall reach a peak of brilliance during the three weeks when Tanglewood becomes the heart of musical America. Theatres bring their most famous stars; guest artists join resident music ensembles; museums plan their outstanding exhibitions; country clubs offer special programs. Berkshire, in short, puts on its best bib and tucker for the biggest party of the year. On this page is a timetable of the Festival period, a calender summary of what the Berkshires offer the visitor during these next three weeks.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival 1940

Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox

Series A

Thursday, August 1—at 8.30 PM

Beethoven	Symphony No. 1
Schumann	Symphony No. 1
Sibelius	Symphony No. 1

Saturday, August 3—at 8.30 PM

Berlioz	Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Strauss	"Don Quixote" Soloist: GREGOR PIATIGORSKY
Harris	Symphony No. 3
Debussy	"Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No. 2)

Sunday, August 4—at 3.30 PM

Mozart	Symphony in E flat, No, 3
Stravinsky	Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra Soloists: JESUS MARIA SANROMA
Brahms	Symphony No. 2

Series B

Programs of Beethoven and Tchaikowsky

(Commemorating the Hundredth Anniversary of Tchaikowsky's Birth)

Thursday, August 8—at 8.30 PM

Beethoven	Overture to Goethe's "Egmont"
Beethoven	Concerto for Violin in D, Opus 61 Soloist: ALBERT SPALDING
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 4 in F minor

Saturday, August 10—at 8.30 PM

Beethoven	Symphony No. 6 ("Pastoral")
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique")

Sunday, August 11, at 3.30 PM

Beethoven	Overture, "Coriolanus"
Beethoven	Symphony No. 4
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 5

Series C

Thursday, August 15—at 7 PM

Bach	Mass in B Minor Berkshire Festival Chorus Soloists: ELISABETH SCHUMANN, VIOLA SILVA, WILLIAM HAIN, ALEXANDER KIPNIS

Saturday, August 17—at 8.30 PM

Prokofieff	"Classical" Symphony
Hindemith	"Mathis der Maler"
Mozart	Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma"
Beethoven	"Adelaide" Soloist: DOROTHY MAYNOR
Faure	Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande"
Bach	Passacaglia and Fugue for Organ (Transcribed for Orchestra by Ottorino Respighi)

Sunday, August 18—at 3.30 PM

Haydn	Symphony in G Major, No. 88
Sibelius	Symphony No. 7
Brahms	Symphony No. 1

Other Music

South Mountain Temple of Chamber Music

Pittsfield

Three Friday afternoons at 4. (For rest of summer, Sunday afternoons at 4.)

August 2	South Mountain Quartet; Harold Bauer, pianist, assisting artist.
August 9	Sextette composed of resident quartet and Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Harvey Shapiro, violinist.
August 16	South Mountain Quartet and assisting artists.

Gordon String Quartet

Falls Village, Connecticut

Sundays August 4, 11, 18 at 4
Saturdays August 3, 10, 17 at 3.30
Wednesday August 7 at 3.30

Junction of Routes 7—126—43

Playhouse in the Hills

Cummington

Sunday afternoons at 4

August 11	James Friskin, piano-lecture
August 18	Paul Creston, composer and pianist

Golf

August 2, 3, 4	Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington. Annual Four-Ball Tournament.
August 9, 10, 11	Country Club of Pittsfield. Annual Invitation Tournament.
August 16, 17, 18	North Adams Country Club. Annual Tournament.

Horse Show

August 3, 4	14th Annual Show, Pittsfield Riding & Polo Association.

Any Time

(Free of charge unless otherwise noted)

Berkshire Museum

Pittsfield

Open daily, 10 AM to 5 PM
Sundays 2 to 5 PM
Closed Mondays

Special exhibition of Shaker material.
One-man show. Martin Mower.
Photographs of Tanglewood by Eric Schall.

Mission House

Stockbridge

Open week days from 10 AM to 12.30 PM and from 2 to 6. Sundays from 2 to 6

(Small admission charge)

Lawrence Art Museum

Williams College, Williamstown

Open daily 9 AM to 12, 2 to 4 PM
Sundays from 2 to 5

August 6 to August 31—Exhibition of Northern Berkshire artists.

Pleasant Valley Sanctuary

Lenox

Gates always open. Barn museum hours: Week days, 10 AM to 6 PM; Sunday, 2 to 6

Berkshire Garden Center

Stockbridge

Open daily 9 AM to 6 PM
Evening lectures, Mondays at 8.30

August 5	"Feeding and Care of Trees," by representative of Bartlett Tree Laboratory.
August 12	"Orchids, Aristocrats of the Flower World," by Mrs. L. Sherman Adams of Wellesley.
August 19	"Interior Flower Arrangements," by Mrs. Robert C. Wheeler of Loudenville, N. Y.

(Small charge for lectures)

Stage

Berkshire Playhouse

Stockbridge

Performances nightly at 8.45 Monday through Saturday. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday at 2.30

Week of July 29
Tallulah Bankhead in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray"
Week of August 5
Ruth Gordon in "The Millionairess"
Week of August 12
Ethel Barrymore in "The School for Scandal"

Nell Gwyn Theatre

Malden Bridge, N. Y.

Friday, Saturday and Sunday at 8.45

August 2, 3, 4	"Margin for Error"
August 9, 10, 11	"See My Lawyer"
August 16, 17, 18	"What a Life"

Salisbury Summer Theatre

Salisbury, Conn.

Wednesday through Saturday evenings at 8.40

July 31-August 3	"The Shining Hour"
August 7-10	"The Devil Takes a Bride"
August 14-17	A New Play

The Dance

Jacob's Pillow School of the Dance

West Becket

Saturday afternoons at 3.30

August 3	Student Concert Program
August 10	Ted Shawn
August 17	Ted Shawn

8

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

OCT 29 1939

TO OPEN ACADEMY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky, its conductor, will open an Academy of Music at "Tanglewood" next July, offering advanced instruction to a limited number of students and a general session for a large school. The term will culminate in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NOV 16 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

PITTSFIELD, Nov. 16 (AP) — Berkshire symphonic festival announced today that Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky would appear at the Berkshire festival for three weeks next year instead of two.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

NOV 16 1939

Festival Announces Three Weeks of Concerts by Boston Orchestra and Koussevitzky

Another move establishing Tanglewood as a music center of preeminence was made by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees yesterday when they voted to extend the 1940 season of concerts by the Boston Symphon Orchestra from two to three weeks. The concerts wil be given the first three weekends in August.

This decision, made after several conferences with trustees of the orchestra, will enable members and subscribers, to have a wider choice of the series of concerts they wish to attend. Many members have already signified their desire to attend all three series but those who will find it impossible to attend more than two or one series will have that choice.

Six Weeks' Activity

The extension to cover three weekends will mean six weeks of musical activity at Tanglewood since the orchestra plans to open its academy in charge of Serge Koussevitzky and Dr. Wallace G. Woodworth of Harvard University in July.

More complete details of the enlarged scope of the Festival will be announced soon. Yesterday's meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith in Stockbridge with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president presiding.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
NOV 16 1939

Berkshire Festival To Be Three Weeks

Boston Symphony to Appear in August

PITTSFIELD, Nov. 16—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky will be at Tanglewood for a three weeks' festival next summer, instead of two. The festival concerts will be given the first three weeks in August.

Three other weeks will be given over to the Tanglewood Academy, which will be directed by Koussevitsky and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

NOV 17 1939

Outdoors in the Berkshires

By CLAY PERRY

Quadruplet Pine

Here is one to add to the proposed "collection" of unusual trees. On the Tanglewood property at Stockbridge Bowl, near the Lenox Brotherhood clubhouse on the lake shore, soars a four-ply white pine tree that is the hugest in trunk circumference we have ever seen in Berkshire and, unique in its production of four separate perpendicular branches, growing out of the main trunk and soaring to an estimated height of 100 feet above the ground.

A Huge Bole

The main trunk, at the height of a tall man's head measures 15 feet seven inches, according to Superintendent Gaston of the Tanglewood estate, and we measured the width of the trunk as high as we could reach and found it to be over six feet across. In addition to the huge bole and its quadruplets, a fifth trunk rises so close by that its trunk and branches mingle with the others, and at a distance gives the impression of five large white pines growing in a clump. The fifth trunk, however, is an entirely separate tree, so the giant cannot be called the Dionne quintuplets of the forest world.

A Centurion iant

The great tree is in good condition, save for some dead wood high up in its magnificent crowns and an estimate of its age places it at more than a century. Indeed, the seed that sprouted from the ground here on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac may have started to grow before the beginning of the 19th century, for the four stems which start at a height of ten to fifteen feet above ground testify to a delayed growth due to injury of some sort which killed off its original leader and its second, third and fourth. But after each discouragement, from unknown causes, it sent up another leader and each of the four stems grew to trunks that now range from two to almost three feet in diameter as they soared toward the sky. A triumph of persistence which produced a mass of wood and foliage which has its own peculiar grace and beauty. The tree does not look freakish or ugly, it has such magnificent proportions that it might well attract a sculptor, and its fifth trunk, the standby, appears as if it had acted as a model for it has a perfectly round bole, and rises without much taper, flush from the ground. The whole group is so well hidden in a clump of hemlocks and birches that it is not visible in its division of trunks save from certain points south of it.

Paul Bunyan Job

Some hundreds of trees have been removed, on the Tanglewood estate, to make way for its development and to relieve crowded conditions for the trees themselves. You would not know it unless you had visited the place often before it was taken over for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Besides this, a dozen truck-loads of dead-wood were removed after trimming, in addition to piles of brush that were burned, and the trimming job is not yet finished.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

NOV. 17 1939

Berkshire Festival To Be Three Weeks

Boston Symphony to Appear in August

PITTSFIELD, Nov. 16—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky will be at Tanglewood for a three weeks' festival next summer, instead of two. The festival concerts will be given the first three weeks in August.

Three other weeks will be given over to the Tanglewood Academy, which will be directed by Koussevitsky and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 17 1939

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS SET THREE WEEKENDS

Festival Next Summer to Include Nine Programs by Boston Symphony

Pittsfield, Nov. 16—Three weeks of concerts were promised for next summer by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees following a meeting that terminated a series of discussions on the question today. The concerts will be given the first three weeks in August.

Several conferences with trustees of the orchestra, the Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitzky resulted in today's announcement. Many have already signified their desire to attend all three series, which, like those of the past summer, will consist of three concerts each.

The extension to cover three weekends will mean six weeks of musical activity at Tanglewood, since the orchestra plans to open its academy in charge of Dr Koussevitzky and Dr Wallace G. Woodworth of Harvard university in July.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 18 1939

EXTEND BERKSHIRE MUSIC

Festival Trustees and Boston Symphony Add 3 Concerts

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 17—The requested extension of the Berkshire Symphony Festival appearances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from two to three weeks has been voted by the festival trustees with the concurrence of the orchestra trustees, it was announced yesterday.

The move extends musical activities at Tanglewood to six weeks, since in July the orchestra plans to open its academy—a master school for musicians and devotees of musical appreciation. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Professor G. Wallace Woodworth of the Harvard faculty of music will be in charge.

Nine festival concerts instead of the former six will be given in the first three week-ends in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 18 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL EXTENDS PROGRAM

Pittsfield, Nov. 17—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has announced three weeks of concerts in 1940 by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The extension from two weeks to three weeks was made after several conferences with trustees of the orchestra. This means six weeks of musical activity at Tanglewood, since the orchestra's academy opens there in July. The festival concerts will be held the first three weeks in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
NOV 18 1939

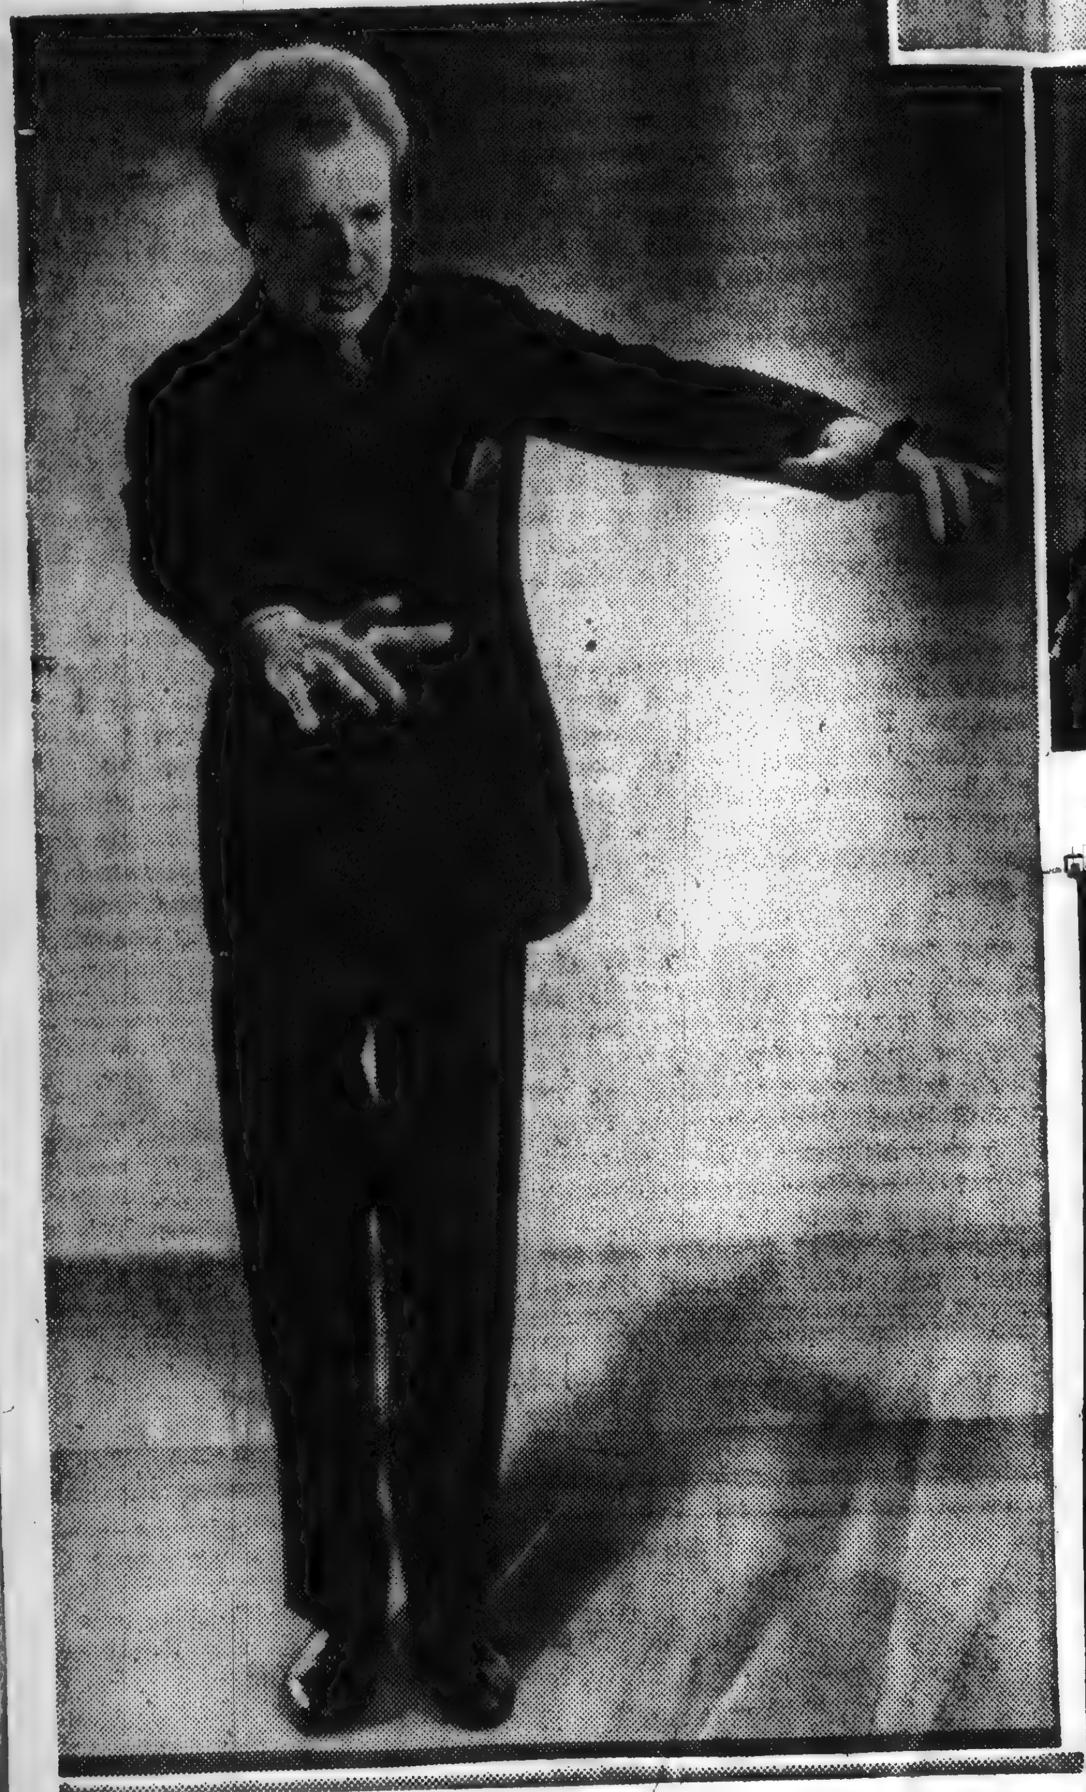
THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
NOV 17 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 19 1939

MUSIC OF THE TIMES: NEWS AND CURRENT COMMENT

STOKOWSKI AND KOUSSEVITZKY COME TO TOWN FIRST TIME THIS SEASON



The New York Times Studio

Although New York's own orchestra, the Philharmonic-Symphony, will be away on tour, there will be plenty of symphonic fare this week. The Philadelphia and Boston will be here. Here is Stokowski (left) leading some Philadelphians and Koussevitzky the Bostonians.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

AMERICAN PROGRAMS

Koussevitzky to Offer Two Concerts Devoted Entirely to Native Works

By OLIN DOWNES

NO one of the major conductors of our leading Eastern orchestras has produced as many works by young Americans as Dr. Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This is characteristic of Koussevitzky's sympathy with modern musical trends, manifested in earlier days by his championship of many rising European composers. He has now turned, with constantly increasing interest, to the American field. He has said, more than once, that he believes a strong creative pulse is beating now in our native music. He finds the younger men especially accumulating technique and experience, and coming rapidly nearer to the expression of something native in their scores.

These convictions have grown upon the Boston Symphony's conductor. The result is that, for the first time in the history of this city, the New York season of the visiting organization opens with two programs devoted exclusively to American compositions. Whatever the appraisal of their artistic value may prove to be, this event can only be called a mile-post in the development of American music. It should be added that Koussevitzky has not planned these programs with the object of making a generous gesture in the direction of our native composers. He has arranged them with the conviction that they will offer distinctive entertainment to two of the most experienced and exacting audiences in the world.

* * *

EIGHT men are represented at the two concerts. Of these, one, Arthur Foote, born in Salem, Mass., in 1853, died two years ago. All the others are living and active in creative work, the youngest of them, William Schuman of this city, being 29 years old. The others are Edward Burlingame Hill (b. Cambridge, Mass., 1872; John Alden Carpenter (Park Ridge, Ill., 1876); Walter Piston (Rockland, Me., 1894); Howard Hanson (Wahoo, Neb., 1896); Roy Harris Lincoln County, Oklahoma, 1898), and Randall Thompson (New York, 1899).

Of this group, Foote, Hill and Carpenter were pupils of John Knowles Paine and gained their early musical training at Harvard. So also did Walter Piston, his teachers being of a later generation than Paine, till he went to Paris to study with Nadia Boulanger; and Randall Thompson, who, after leaving Harvard, studied composition for two years with Ernest Bloch.

Hanson studied music with his mother and at Luther College in his home town, and later at the Institute of Musical Art in New York and Northwestern University before winning the Prix de Rome in 1921. Harris received his early education in California, then began the systematic study of composition with Arthur Farwell, also with Bliss, Altschuler and Scalero, and finally with Nadia Boulanger in Paris.

* * *

SCHUMAN was a pupil of that admirable musician Max Persin of this city, in harmony; of Charles Haubiel in counterpoint, and of composition with Roy Harris.

Immediate reactions to Koussevitzky's courageous announcement have been principally in two directions. The first question raised is, "Shall we be bored?" The second question looks farther. It is, "Maybe they can write symphonies. It's evident that technically the American composer can now express himself, but has he produced any genuinely American music?"

To the second question Dr. Koussevitzky was asked by wire by THE TIMES to reply. These are his words: "The development of music in America follows the same course as music in Europe, only it takes bigger strides. There is no American music as there is no German or French music, for music is a universal language, but its development is manifold. Music may reflect either folklore of a people for a certain epoch or great human ideals. Thus in America some composers are influenced by folk melodies, by dance rhythms, while others produce music of universal scope and motion. These different trends of the creative genius of American composers will be represented at our two concerts in New York."

If these words are to be taken literally they will certainly appear to some readers as open to argument. That music never lives and passes its local boundaries unless it is universal in its communications is self-evident. But we had thought that there was German and French music; American music also. We could not by any stretch of the imagination call Wagner's music anything but German; Verdi's anything but Italian; Bizet's or Debussy's anything but French, universal as their music is in sign.

Recently in Boston Stravinsky asked an interviewer what Russian music was. Well, it would have been possible to answer Mr. Stravinsky by telling him that his "Oiseau de Feu" and "Petruchka," for example, are Russian music, and that his piano concerto in which he seeks to emulate Bach, and his ballet "Apollon musagète" are not.

* * *

WE think of some unmistakable American music, too. We would include in this category the best marches of John Philip Sousa; the "Dixie" of Dan Emmett; much of the American dance music and many of the ditties from popular operettas and the like. These composers use the same chord or a few of the same chords, employing them in simple ways, that European masters have used for centuries. Nevertheless, the expression is unmistakably American—as unmistakably as the experiments of Stravinsky when he attempted to write in a "jazz" way were not American, Russian, nor neo-classic, or indeed anything of importance; just the same as the experiments of Debussy and Ravel with jazz idioms remained unmistakably French music. The idiom matters much less than the spirit. The spirit colors the idioms in ways often very difficult to define, but when a composer of genius writes with feeling for his soil it is recognized.

Have American symphonists reached a place in their development where they provide music of incontestably American savor? Many of our writers, playwrights and architects, and some of the painters, are unmistakably of America and from nowhere else. But the composers have seemed to certain of the more pessimistic to be last in reflecting the scene, environment and life of the nation, as artists in other fields unmistakably are doing. It is now, or should be, the composer's time.

These are questions which Dr. Koussevitzky's programs are calculated to answer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 26 1939

FESTIVAL MENACE SEEN IN BERKSHIRE TRUCKING TRAFFIC

Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 25—(AP)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire symphonic festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on inter- village roads in Southern Berkshire. It suggested the state might "make possible the canalizing of motored freight on efficient roadways resigned to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

NOV 26 1939

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Trucks Said To Threaten Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Nov. 25 (AP)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquillity of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on inter - village roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested the state might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next Summer.

Trustees Propose Beauty From Trucks and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on intervillage roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested that the state might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

ENT COMMENT

s Studio
k. The

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 26 1939

Berkshire Festival Group Wants Trucks By-Passed From Village

Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 25.—(AP)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire symphonic festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the Mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on intervillage roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested the State might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

NOV 22 1939

Who's News Today

By Lemuel F. Parton.

New York, Nov. 21 (NANA)—Dorothy Maynor's big, rich velvety voice brings critical praise comparable to that which hailed Marian Anderson. The young Negro soprano, who also has a trace of Indian ancestry, won both the audience and the critics at her town hall concert in New York, this being her first public appearance with the exception of tours with the Hampton Institute choir. The musical cognoscenti herald another great voice and a potentially great artist.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., patron of music and donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, heard Miss Maynor sing and obtained for her an invitation from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, to the symphony picnic near Stockbridge, Mass., last August. Her songs ranged from the "Ho-yo-to-ho," from Wagner's "Die Walkuere," through deep, crooning lieder to a dazzling range of coloratura. Her triumph before such Olympians of music opened the way to her town hall concert.

She is the daughter of the widow of a Methodist minister, now living in New York. A native of Norfolk, Va., she studied at Hampton Institute, and, after her graduation, became the pupil of Dr. John Finley Williamson, of the Westminister choir school of Princeton, N. J. She later studied with Wilfred Klanroth of New York. Her present teacher, also of New York, is Alan Haughton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 26 1939

FESTIVAL MENACE SEEN IN BERKSHIRE TRUCKING TRAFFIC

Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 25—(AP)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire symphonic festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on inter- village roads in Southern Berkshire. It suggested the state might "make possible the canalizing of motored freight on efficient roadways resigned to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

NOV 26 1939

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Trucks Said To Threaten Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Nov. 25 (AP)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on inter - village roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested the state might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next Summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

NOV 26 1939

Berkshire Festival Trustees Propose Saving Area's Beauty From Trucks

Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 25.—(AP.)—Declaring "the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed today the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield pointed out the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concert-goers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on intervillage roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested that the state might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

NOV 27 1939

THREAT TO BEAUTY OF BERKSHIRES SEEN

Stockbridge Festival Trustees Propose Truck Roads to By-Pass Villages.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 26—(AP) Declaring "the future of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now seriously threatened unless some way is found to preserve the beauty and tranquility of the Berkshires," festival trustees proposed yesterday the building of truck roadways "to by-pass high-value residential areas."

A letter accompanying a resolution sent to Selectmen of six Berkshire towns and to the mayor and council of Pittsfield said that the festival "has become an institution of national importance" with more than $100,000 invested in its physical properties and with 36,000 concertgoers bringing "a very sizeable volume of new business for the entire region."

The resolution called upon the officials to "do their utmost to regulate motorized freight traffic on intervillage roads in southern Berkshire. It suggested that the state might "make possible the canalizing of motorized freight on efficient roadways designed to by-pass high-value residential areas."

The ~~Boston Symphony~~ orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will extend its festival concerts to three weeks next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TIMES TRIBUNE

DEC 9 - 1939

Koussevitzky's Dream Of School Comes True

Boston, Dec. 9.—(AP)—On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

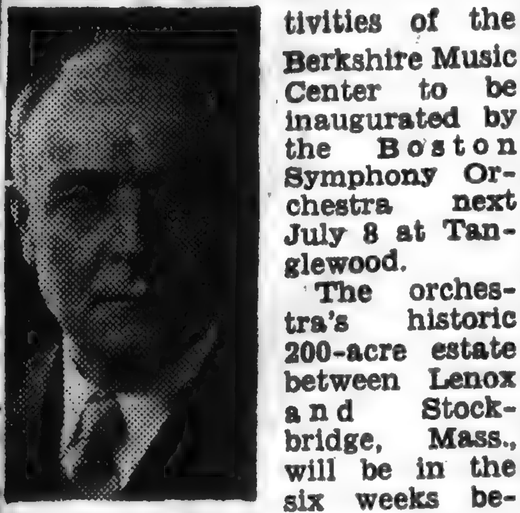
Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 9 - 1939

Boston Symphony Orchestra Announces Curriculum For Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge

Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood.



Dr. Koussevitzky

The orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals and to all of the Festival performances.

Pointing out that the Center will be concerned primarily with collective performance, Dr. Koussevitzky states that "it will supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered upon developing individual technical equipment. We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

The Music Center will be in two sections—the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions.

Dr. Koussevitzky is to be director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestra conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra.

Dr. Graf

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the noted American composer, and by Paul Hindemith, considered one of the most significant composers today.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is the chairman of the department of music at Harvard, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is music editor of the New York Times. A course in folk dancing, open to the school without charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, the Academy Orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell, head of the music department of Milton Academy, will have a class in methods of teaching music in schools.

Special lecturers will be Dr Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation Association.

A limited number of scholarships will be available. The Music Center will give no diploma or academic credit. The catalogue of the Music Center is obtainable by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, MAINE
PRESS HERALD

NOV 28 1939

Truckman, Spare Our Towns!

Boston Globe

The motor today, like the railroad of a century ago, threatens the loveliness of the New England village. In places where the trains could be, and were, routed not through but past the village, as in South Framingham, new towns sprang up without destroying the charm of the old.

Berkshire County, which has so often of late led the hunt in civic enterprise, is leading it again. Motorized freight traffic threatens the peace and seemliness of those old towns which are a national treasure of landscape and architecture. The appeal is being made to Selectmen, to the city of Pittsfield, and to the state authorities to build by pass, traffic highways to save the villages and rural roads from destructive desecration. It is the more to the point since the annual Symphonic Festivals at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing ~~36,000 visitors~~, have increased the sheer economic value of the region's scenic beauty.

The energy and forethought of these Berkshire citizens will have to be imitated by all New Englanders who care to keep unmutilated the splendid landscape masterpieces of their country and towns.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
Nov. 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

NOV 29 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

DEC 9 - 1939

Berkshire Center

Details of activities at the Berkshire Music Center, to be opened next July 8 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at ~~Tanglewood~~, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., were announced today.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the new school, will hold classes in conducting. Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. G. Wallace Woodworth will conduct the chorus which will be formed among pupils of the school. There will be a course in folk dancing under the direction of Douglas Kennedy. A series of lectures will be given by Randall Thompson, Olin Downes, Carleton Sprague Smith, Dr. Archibald T. Davison and others. The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will occupy three weeks instead of the usual two in 1940.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
DEC 9 - 1939

Tanglewood Faculty Is Announced

ANNOUNCEMENT was made today of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center which is to be inaugurated by the ~~Boston Sym~~phony Orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty.

There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals and to all of the Festival performances.

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer and by Paul Hindemith who is considered one of the most significant composers of today.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth Assistant Director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is the Chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University. He is the Conductor of the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
DEC 9 - 1939

FACULTY FOR MUSIC CENTER IS ANNOUNCED

Eminent Authorities to Conduct Courses at Berkshire Next Summer

A large and distinguished faculty will be available when the Berkshire Music Center directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky opens at Tanglewood, ~~Stockbridge~~, for its first six weeks' season July 8, to Aug. 18. Thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will make up the faculty.

In Two Sections

There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. Among other works, Bach's "B Minor Mass" will be heard.

The Music Center will be in two sections, the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and amateur orchestra.

The Faculty

Serge Koussevitzky is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra.

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith, who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University. He is the conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is the music editor of the New York Times.

Folk Dance Course

A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Academy Orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell will have a class in the methods of teaching music in schools. Mr. Abell is the head of the music department of Milton Academy.

Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library, and Augustus D. Zanzig, ~~director of~~ music, National Recreation Association. Further lecturers will be announced at a later date.

The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 16 in all, and 14 additional members—making an orchestra of 30 who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance.

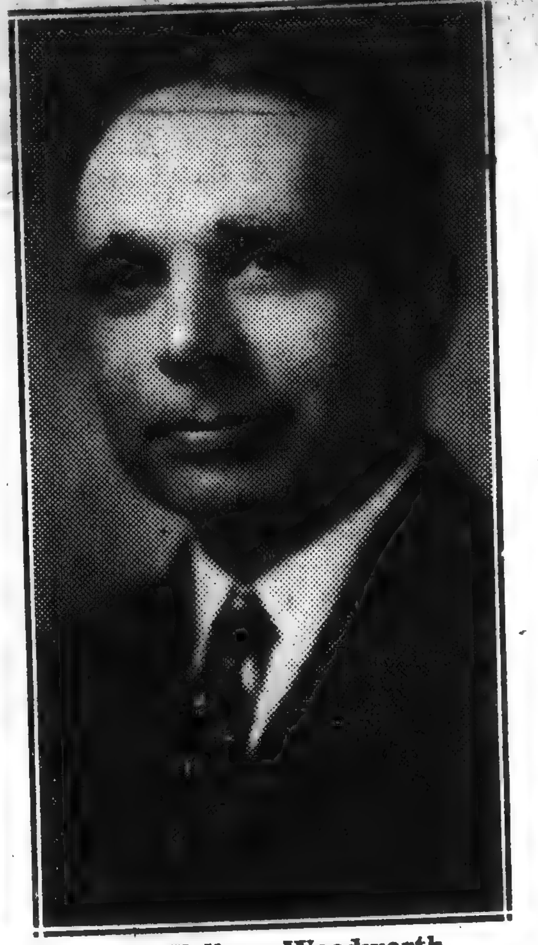
The general tuition for the center (Institute and Academy) will be $100, this fee to include all privileges of choral, orchestral and champer groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An additional charge of $20 will be made for each special course taken. The privilege of auditing special classes, although restricted, will be without extra fee. A limited number of scholarships will be available. The Music Center will give no diploma or academic credit.

Living accommodations, with board and lodging in the near vicinity, will be arranged on a cost basis.

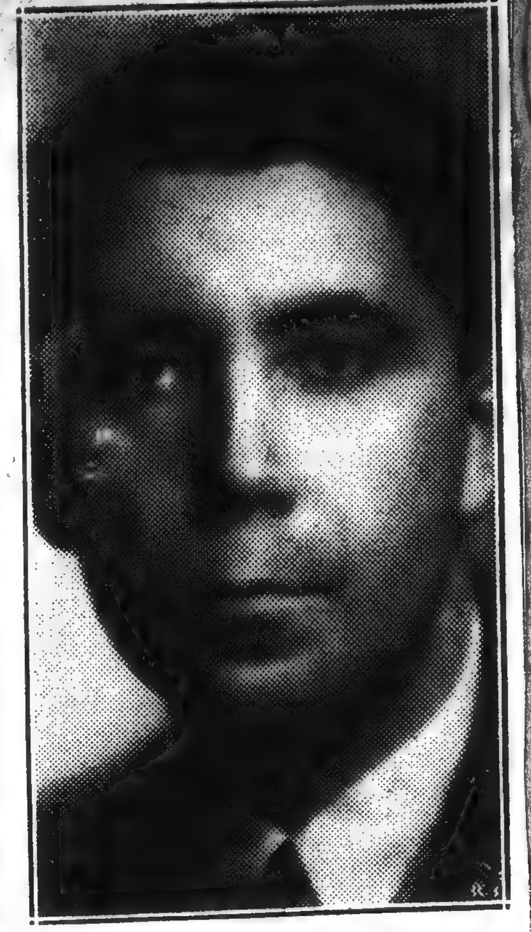
Outstanding Musicians To Be in the Berkshires

Aaron Copland

Richard Burgin



G. Wallace Woodworth



Herbert Graf

Tanglewood Faculty And Plans Announced

Dec 9, 1939

Berkshire Eve. Eagle

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Assembles Brilliant Group To Assist at Music Center

For six weeks beginning July 8, Tanglewood, permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Berkshire Music Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music."

Catalogue Published

The Boston Symphony Orchestra which is establishing the Center announced today the publication of its catalogue with complete details concerning the faculty, subjects and activities planned at Tanglewood.

A number of physical changes are contemplated at Tanglewood including accommodations which might be used for the luncheon period of the Center and a lecture hall. Changes are to be made in the garage, the barn south of Hawthorne Street and the dwelling so that existing buildings will be utilized to fullest possible extent.

Class in Conducting

At the Center there will be a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the Festival performances.

Koussevitzky Defines Aims

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director,

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
DEC 9 - 1939

Koussevitzky Forming School For Musicians At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Conductor To Teach In Non-Profit Institute Next Year

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

BOSTON, Dec. 9—On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

SOME CAN REST

There are some odd features in the Berkshire music center. One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls a summer of creative rest in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose, the cream being the small group which Dr. Koussevitzky will instruct in conducting. For the benefit of these there will be a unique training orchestra, composed of 30 Boston Symphony men.

There also will be two other orchestras, one advanced, the other amateur. Dr. Koussevitzky will have as well a chorus to be trained in Bach's B Minor Mass, which will be given the third and last week of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Stage work will be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, composition by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth, and so on through a complete faculty.

SUUUPLEMENTAL

"But," says Dr. Koussevitzky, "the school will supplement, not duplicate, the training available in established schools of music, where attention is usually centered chiefly on developing the technical equipment of the individual."

The plan also supplements the Boston Symphony's plan for providing year round work of dignity and value for the members of its orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
DEC 10 1939

Noted Conductor To Have Unusual School Of Music

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

BOSTON—(AP)—On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of an unusual school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

There are other odd features in the "Berkshire music center." One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a Summer of creative rest" in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose, the cream being the small group which Dr. Koussevitzky will instruct in conducting. For the benefit of these there will be a unique training orchestra, composed of 30 Boston Symphony men.

There also will be two other orchestras, one advanced, and the other amateur. Dr. Koussevitzky will have as well a chorus to be trained in Bach's B minor mass, which will be given the third and last week of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Stage work will be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, composition by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth, and so on through a complete faculty.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERIDIAN, MISS.
STAR
DEC 10 1939

LAUNCHING UNIQUE SCHOOL OF MUSIC IN UNITED STATES

Boston, Dec. 9 (AP) — On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

There are other odd features in the "Berkshire music center." One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a summer of creative rest" in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
DEC 10 1939

BERKSHIRE CENTER CHOOSES FACULTY

New Music School to Open on July 8 With Large List of Notables as Teachers

A faculty of distinguished musicians and pedagogues was anouced yesterday for the first season of the Berkshire Music Center, to begin next July 8, at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be the director of the center, which will be divided into two sections: the Institute, limited to those with thorough preliminary training, and the Academy, which will have no formal entrance requirements. The Academy will comprise the school chorus and amateur orchestra, and its main work will be done in general sessions devoted to lectures, concerts, singing and playing.

The Various Courses

Dr. Koussevitzky will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will hold courses in advanced musical composition. Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will have a class in operatic interpretation.

G. Wallace Woodworth, the assistant director, will conduct the chorus. He is chairman of the Music Department at Harvard and conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. A course in folk dancing, open to the entire student body without extra charge, will be given by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony. Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the school orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley, will conduct the Academy Orchestra and hold classes in chamber music. The orchestral faculty will also include sixteen principals of the Boston Symphony and fourteen regular members. Howard Abell, head of the Music Department of Milton Academy, will have a class in teaching methods in schools. Boris Goldovsky will assist in the opera classes.

Special Lecturers

Special lecturers for the first season will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the music division of the New York Public Library; Augustus D. D[illegible] director of music of the National Recreation Association, and [illegible]nes, who will give historical lectures.

Members of the Music Center will be trained in a chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next season in a performance of Bach's B minor Mass. The festival has been extended from two to three weeks, and will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term of six weeks.

General tuition will include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, rehearsals and festival performances. An additional charge will be made for each special course taken. Auditions in special classes, though restricted, will be given without extra fee. There will be a limited number of scholarships, principally for advanced students. The Music Center will give no diploma or academic credit.

Through the cooperation of the Lenox School for Boys, dormitory accommodations and meals will be available to center students. The lake front at Tanglewood will be open for student campers.

Further information may be obtained at Symphony Hall, Boston, or at the Music Center headquarters in Steinway Hall, this city.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
DEC 10 1939

MUSIC CENTER IN BERKSHIRES NEXT SUMMER

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Players to Conduct Novel School of Training

A new and unprecedented movement destined to affect the musical development of America is foreseen in the announcement of the Berkshire Music Center made public today. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, has been working on the project for three years and now, with the full sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a prospectus gives the elaborate plans which are to be put into operation next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires.

"Tanglewood", between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, a place of busy musical life. Dr. Koussevitsky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchesetra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitsky, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified orchestra rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

Aims Defined

In a statement at the beginning of the catalogue, these aims and purposes are defined by the Director: "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer." The training received here will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music.

Both skilled and unskilled are invited, for the Music Center will be in two sections — the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra, general courses and lectures.

Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, composers of note, will be on hand for courses in composition. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation, explaining ideas gained through experience at the Metropolitan Opera and other similar houses. G. Wallace Woodworth, Assistant Director of the Music Center, will conduct the chorus; Mr. Woodworth is chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Olin Downes is listed for a series of lectures on the forthcoming programs of the Festival, and a course in Folk Dancing open to the entire school will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, Pres. of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra plays under Richard Burgin, and the Academy Orchestra under Malcolm Holmes. Howard Abell is listed for a course in teaching of music in the schools. Special lecturers for the present year are Dr. Archibald T. Davidson, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, Director of the Curtis Institute of Music; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library, and Augustus D. Zanzig, Director of the National Recreation Association.

Ideal Setting

No recommendation is needed for the loveliness of the Berkshire setting and the appropriateness of the quiet and beauty for creative work in the summer months. Some may erect tents for living accommodations while others can find room and board at the Lenox School for Boys. The general tuition for the Center will be $100, as all-inclusive of choral, orchestral, and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, and school concerts, Festival rehearsals and performances.

The first comment likely to be made when viewing the scope and importance of this great plan will be "an American Salzburg," but the idea, actually, is quite different and far broader. America may acknowledge its debt to, and pleasure in, the Salzburg that was, but the opportunities and requirements of a plan like this make it a very orignal and most important undertaking.

—H. EARLE JOHNSON.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 10 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
DEC 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 13 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUN
DEC 10 193

Koussevitzky's Music School Dream Coming True In July

Boston, Dec. 9—(AP)—On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

There are other odd features in the "Berkshire music center." One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a summer of creative rest" in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose, the cream being the small group which Dr. Koussevitzky will instruct in conducting. For the benefit of these there will be a unique training orchestra, composed of 30 Boston Symphony men.

There also will be two other orchestras, one advanced, and the other amateur. Dr. Koussevitzky will have as well a chorus to be trained in Bach's B Minor Mass, which will be given the third and last week of the annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

Stage work will be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, composition by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth, and so on through a complete faculty.

"But," says Dr. Koussevitzky, "the school will supplement, not duplicate, the training available in established schools of music, where attention is usually centered chiefly on developing the technical equipment of the individual."

The plan also supplements the Boston Symphony's plan for providing year round work of dignity and value for the members of its orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALBAN
TIMES-UNI
DEC 10 1939

MUSIC WORL

By EDGAR S. VAN O'LINDA

THE first concert of the 30th season of the Albany Mendelssohn club will be held in Chancellors hall, Wednesday evening, December 13, at 8:30 p. m. In the absence of Mark Andrews, the club will be directed by Dr. T. F. H. Candlyn, and will be assisted in the final group of Christmas carols by the boy choristers of St. Paul's Episcopal church.

The guest soloist, in her first Albany appearance will be Miss Edwina Eustis, contralto, well known through her extensive work in radio, opera and the concert stage. The complete program for Wednesday night's concert is as follows:

Hymn Before Action	Davies
Chorus of Bacchantes	Gounod
Viking Song	S. Coleridge—Taylor
The Mendelssohn Club
Invocation di Orfeo (Euridice)	Pert
Brindisi (Lucretia Borgia)	Donizetti
Chere Nuit	Bachelet
Seguidilla (Carmen)	Bizet
Edwina Eustis
Wayfarer's Night Song	Martin
May Night	Brahms (Arr. Mark Andrews)
The Bird of the Wilderness	Horseman
The Mendelssohn Club
Intermission
The Battle of Jericho	Negro Spiritual
The Vast Unnumbered Throng	Grieg
The Hundred Pipers	Whiting
Summer Evening	Palmgren
Czecho-Slovakian Dance Song	Krone
The Mendelssohn Club
Since First I Met Thee	Rubenstein
Comin' Through the Rye	Kingsford
Slumber Song of the Madonna	Bantock
Edwina Eustis
Break Forth, O Beauteous, Heavenly Light	Bach
Bring a Torch	Old French
O Holy Night	Adam
O Come, All Ye Faithful	John of Reading
The Mendelssohn Club

Joel Dolven will assist the accompanist, Fred Kalohn in the second piano part of The Hundred Pipers and sing the incidental solo in Summer Evening. Richard B. Fisher will be heard as solist in the Vast Unnumbered Throng. Amos Allen will be at the piano for Miss Eustis.

* * *

Mrs. Laura Nelliger Ross, chairman and Mrs. Faye Smiley Stowell, co-chairman are in charge of the Monday Musical club's program at the Albany Institute of History and Art, tomorrow evening at 8:30 p. m. Called "Musical Album," costumes incidental to the periods of music being illustrated will be used through the courtesy of the institute. The program follows:

PIANO SOLOS

Rondo	Mozart
Minuet	Mozart
Margaret May Leonard
Soprano solos—
Jeannie, with the Light Brown Hair	Foster
My Old Kentucky Home	Foster
Oh, Susanna	Foster
Mrs. John A. McCormack
Reading	Selected
Mrs. Faye Smiley Stowell
Contralto solos—
Saphic Ode	Brahms
Lullaby	Brahms
Mrs. Joseph Beaupre
Soprano and alto duet—
Whispering Hope	Hawthorne
Laura N. Ross and Mrs. Marion Dwyer
Minuet—
Danced by Dorothylee Canty, Leila Wagar, Mary Zimmerman and Alyce Brady.
Soprano solo with violin obligato
Serenade	Gounod
Ave Maria	Gounod
Mrs. J. Russell McMann and Mrs. Frederick B. Stevens.
Piano solos—
Romance	Schumann
Scherzo	Mendelssohn

The Colonial dancers are from the studio of Gertrude and Oscar Hallenbeck, Loring Dunn, curator of the Albany Institute of History and Art has co-operated with the chairmen in the preparation of the program and arranged the use of the costumes, among which are gowns worn and formerly owned by Mrs. Daniel Manning, and Mrs. Charles Sumner Hamlin, who was Huybertie Pruyn.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC

Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center which is to be inauguraated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next ~~July 8 at Tangle~~wood, the orchestra's summer home. These details will be set forth in the catalogue of the Music Center which is published forthwith, and which is obtainable by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor.

There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the Festival performances.

OSCAR LEVANT, the witty pundit of the airwaves, who will bring his piano-playing genius to the Ford Sunday Evening Hour tonight.

(5)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

DEC 10 1939

MUSIC CENTER IN BERKSHIRES NEXT SUMMER

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Players to Conduct Novel School of Training

A new and unprecedented movement destined to affect the musical development of America is foreseen in the announcement of the Berkshire Music Center made public today. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, has been working on the project for three years and now, with the full sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a prospectus gives the elaborate plans which are to be put into operation next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires.

"Tanglewood", between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, a place of busy musical life. Dr. Koussevitsky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchesetra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitsky, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified orchestra rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

Aims Defined

In a statement at the beginning of the catalogue, these aims and purposes are defined by the Director: "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer." The training received here will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music.

Both skilled and unskilled are invited, for the Music Center will be in two sections — the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra, general courses and lectures.

Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, composers of note, will be on hand for courses in composition. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation, explaining ideas gained through experience at the Metropolitan Opera and other similar houses. G. Wallace Woodworth, Assistant Director of the Music Center, will conduct the chorus; Mr. Woodworth is chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Olin Downes is listed for a series of lectures on the forthcoming programs of the Festival, and a course in Folk Dancing open to the entire school will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, Pres. of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra plays under Richard Burgin, and the Academy Orchestra under Malcolm Holmes. Howard Abell is listed for a course in teaching of music in the schools. Special lecturers for the present year are Dr. Archibald T. Davidson, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, Director of the Curtis Institute of Music; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library, and Augustus D. Zanzig, Director of the National Recreation Association.

Ideal Setting

No recommendation is needed for the loveliness of the Berkshire setting and the appropriateness of the quiet and beauty for creative work in the summer months. Some may erect tents for living accommodations while others can find room and board at the Lenox School for Boys. The general tuition for the Center will be $100, as all-inclusive of choral, orchestral, and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, and school concerts, Festival rehearsals and performances.

The first comment likely to be made when viewing the scope and importance of this great plan will be "an American Salzburg," but the idea, actually, is quite different and far broader. America may acknowledge its debt to, and pleasure in, the Salzburg that was, but the opportunities and requirements of a plan like this make it a very orignal and most important undertaking.

—H. EARLE JOHNSON.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 13 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 10 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
DEC 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
DEC 10 1939

Koussevitzky's Music School Dream Coming True In July

Boston, Dec. 9—(AP)—On his estate in Russia many years ago, long before he ever thought he would conduct the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

There are other odd features in the "Berkshire music center." One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a summer of creative rest" in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose, the cream being the small group which Dr. Koussevitzky will instruct in conducting. For the benefit of these there will be a unique training orchestra, composed of 30 Boston Symphony men.

There also will be two other orchestras, one advanced, and the other amateur. Dr. Koussevitzky will have as well a chorus to be trained in Bach's B Minor Mass, which will be given the third and last week of the annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

Stage work will be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, composition by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth, and so on through a complete faculty.

"But," says Dr. Koussevitzky, "the school will supplement, not duplicate, the training available in established schools of music, where attention is usually centered chiefly on developing the technical equipment of the individual."

The plan also supplements the Boston Symphony's plan for providing year round work of dignity and value for the members of its orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALBAN
TIMES-UNI
DEC 10 1939

VORL

O'LINDA

h season of the Albany held in Chancellors hall, 13, at 8:30 p. m. In the club will be directed by assisted in the final group y choristers of St. Paul's

OSCAR LEVANT, the witty pundit of the airwaves, who will bring his piano-playing genius to the Ford Sunday Evening Hour tonight.

choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the Festival performances.

---

to much to relieve the new county commander of worries in this respect. They are offering a special inducement for veterans to join the Legion by Christmas. They are notifying the families of veterans in their section that they can give the veteran in their family a most suitable Christmas gift by simply paying his dues in the American Legion. The gift is a paid-up card in the Legion together with a lapel Legion button.

To help the drive along I glady offer this letter. If there is a veteran in the family who reads this letter I suggest that you give him this most appropriate Christmas gift. If he has not joined the Legion to date he will, in time, appreciate your thoughtfulness. Time is flying for us now, and as we grow older we realize more and more the value of Legion membership. If you want to take advantage of our Christmas offer to new members you can call me at 8-9030, or stop around to my place at 661 Second street, and I will have a member of our Membership committee take care of your wishes. Or if you are downtown stop into City hall and see Bill Lasch in the City Treasurer's office, or call him there, and he will help you.

LEGION ADVANTAGES

In a short time the veteran member of your family will have a new interest in life and will join our best workers for the American Legion. Some of these are besides those already named: Art McNally, Cas Clemons, George Rockenstyre, Angelo DeRusso, Bob Kemp, Berney Mocker, Jim Tammaney, Charlie McAllister, Frank Crist, Dave Shaw, Phil Wickert, Henry Creed, Louis Gilbert, John Klien, Pat O'Dea, George Keyes, Art Kirker, Ed Dennis, Dave Logan, Joe Brady, Fred Sherman, Charlie Murtha, John Logan, Hank Magurn, Frank Kress, Joe Joswin, John Nausbaum, John Allen, Paul Broady, Joe Gietl, Gus Rohrmiller, George Gorman, Fred Parker, George Deveboise, Connie Weisbrodt, Dick Devine, Jim Wylde, Ed Tydings, Francis Ruff, Herman Wilde, Norman Trendle, Carl Brickley, Eddie Murray, Tony Distell, Harry Gatha, Archie Williams, Sam DiDio, Earl Longshore, Marty Ford, Walt Rapp, Marty Farrell, and many others whom space will not permit me to name but whom I hope to name in another letter soon.

The Monday night parties at the Scully Post are becoming more popular each week.

Drug Spies

PARIS, Dec. 9 (INS)—Feminine agents of the Nazi Gestapo are now roaming foreign countries seeking to introduce the drug habit in places, according to a French medical journal. These agents, offer beautiful women, attempt to make the wives, daughters and secretaries of prominent persons likely to possess valuable knowledge their victim, the report states.

6

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

DEC 10 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA DETAILS PLANS FOR MUSIC CENTER IN THE BERKSHIRES

The Berkshire Music Center is to be inaugurated for the benefit of musicians and music lovers by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orches'-tra's summer home. Details concerning faculty, subjects and activities will be set forth in the catalogue of the Music Center which is published forthwith, and which is obtainable by application to Symphony hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood", the orchestra's historic 200 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitsky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music", in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitsky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

Center Designed for Both Skilled and Unskilled

The Music Center will be in two sections—the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing.

The Faculty

Serge Koussevitsky, renowed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra.

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is the chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard university. He is the conductor of the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is the music editor of the New York Times.

A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Academy orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell will have a class in the methods of teaching music in schools. Mr. Abell is the head of the music department of Milton academy.

Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Randall Thompson, the director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York public library; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation Association. Further lecturers will be announced at a later date.

The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 16 in all, and 14 additional members—making an orchestra of 30 who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance.

The general tuition for the Center (Institute and Academy) will be $100, this fee to include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, Festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An additional charge of $20 will be made for each special course taken. The privilege of auditing special classes, although restricted, will be without extra fee. A limited number of scholarships will be available. The Music Center will give no diploma or academic credit.

Living accomodations, with board and lodging in the near vicinity, will be arranged on a cost basis.

BERKSHIRE CENTER CHOOSES FACULTY

Dec. 10. '39 N. Y. Times

New Music School to Open on July 8 With Large List of Notables as Teachers

A faculty of distinguished musicians and pedagogues was announced yesterday for the first season of the Berkshire Music Center, to begin next July 8, at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will be the director of the center, which will be divided in two sections: the Institute, limited to those with thorough preliminary training, and the Academy, which will have no formal entrance requirements. The Academy will comprise the school chorus and amateur orchestra, and its main work will be done in general sessions devoted to lectures, concerts, singing and playing.

The Various Courses

Dr. Koussevitzky will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute orchestra. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will hold courses in advanced musical composition. Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will have a class in operatic interpretation.

G. Wallace Woodworth, the assistant director, will conduct the chorus. He is chairman of the music department at Harvard and conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. A course in folk dancing, open to the entire student body without extra charge, will be given by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony. Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the school orchestra of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley, will conduct the Acad emy Orchestra and hold classes in chamber music. The orchestral faculty will also include sixteen principals of the Boston Symphony and fourteen regular members. Howard Abell, head of the Music Department of Milton Academy, will have a class in teaching methods in schools. Boris Goldovsky will assist in the opera classes.

Special Lecturers

Special lectlrers for the first season will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, Professor of Choral Music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the music division of the New York Public Library; Augustus D. Danzig, director of music of the National Recreation Association, and Olin Downes, who will give historical lectures.

Members of the music center will be trained in a chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next season in a performance of Bach's B minor Mass. The festival has been extended from two to three weeks, and will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term of six weeks.

General tuition will include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, rehearsals and festival performances. An additional charge will be made for each special course taken. Auditions in special classes, though restricted, will be given without extra fee. A limited number of scholarships will be given, principally to advanced students. The music center will give no diploma or academic credit.

Rooms for the Students

Through the cooperation of the Lenox School for Boys, dormitory accommodations and meals will be available to center students. The lake front at "Tanglewood" will be open for student campers.

Further information may be obtained at Symphony Hall, Boston, or at the Music Center headquarters in Steinway Hall, this city.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
DEC 11 1939

Koussevitzky To Head Music Center Faculty

Members of Boston Symphony, Noted Educators And Musicians to Teach and Lecture At Summer School in the Berkshires

BOSTON—Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music center which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchesra's summer home.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor.

There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the music center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire symphonic festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire symphonic festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the music center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

THE music center will be in two sections—the institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing.

Serge Koussevitzky, renowned conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the institute orchestra.

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan opera house in New York.

G. WALLACE WOODWORTH, assistant director of the Berkshire music center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is the chairman of the department of music at Harvard university. He is the conductor of the Harvard Glee club, and the Radcliffe Choral society.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is the music editor of the New York Times.

A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance society.

The Institute orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Academy orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell will have a class in the methods of teaching music in school. Mr. Abell is the head of the music department of Milton academy.

Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Randall Thompson, the director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York public library; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation association. Further lectures will be announced at a later date.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1939

THE MUSIC BOX

Berkshire Music Center Program

Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home. These details will be set forth in the catalogue of the music center which is obtainable by application to Symphony hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood", the orchestra's historic 200 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music", in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the music center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire symphonic festival in a peformance of Bach's mass in B minor.

• • •

Mrs. Caldwell's Song To Be Heard by Club

BOOTH STUDIO PHOTO

MRS. PHILIP CALDWELL

Boston Globe

Harmonious Songsmiths

If the Americas are, indeed, to carry forward the culture of the Western world independently of a war-torn Europe, the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood" is assuredly one of the instruments for so doing. Dec. 11, 1939.

The sessions, concurrent with the Symphonic Festival, though overlapping on the hither side, run from July 8 to August 18. This coming Summer will be the first convocation of an extraordinarily distinguished faculty: composers, conductors, performers, professors and critics—to name them in the order of their importance. The Institute is for advanced study, for those making music their career; the Academy is for amateurs who, as that word denotes, love the art for its own sake. There are no formal entrance requirements: if you can do the work, come along; and no degrees, diplomas or academic credits are awarded: if you can practice the art, practice it, and don't lean on a sheepskin.

Musicians, music lovers and public, this is it: idyllic landscape at the summit of Summer, living quarters comfortable, companionship with men and women in a shared enthusiasm, association with the finest artists, daily communion with a great art. Where, if not here, is antidote to the poisons of an age of hate? And where, better than here, is an American assertion of its cultural coming-of-age? A space of harmony in a world of discord.

7

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

DEC 10 1939

BERKSHIRE PLANS

A THIRD week end has been added to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's schedule for the seventh annual [redacted] Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next summer, making a total of nine concerts, as compared with six in the last three festivals. According to the new schedule, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18. Applications for subscriptions, which may be either for the concerts or for a single week's series of three (Series A, B and C) should reach the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass., not later than June 30, 1940.

The festival will coincide with the last three weeks of the first term of the Berkshire Music Center to be opened at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony with Dr. Koussevitzky as director on July 8. This will have two sections, the Institute for Advanced Study for students who have had a thorough preliminary training and intend to pursue a musical career, and the Academy, for music lovers less specifically qualified who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and take part in a stimulating musical experience.

The principal activities of the Institute for Advanced Study will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky's supervision, with a small number of participants and a larger number as auditors; an orchestra of qualified players who will study and perform a selected list of works under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky and others with the advice of Boston Symphony principals; a class in opera dramatics under Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and coaching assistants, and a class in advanced composition under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith.

The Academy, or general school, will have no formal entrance requirements, and will carry on most of its work in general sessions for singing, playing, lectures and concerts. An Academy Chorus, directed by G. Wallace Woodworth, will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for performance in next summer's festival, and will study several other works. Instrumentalists in the Academy will form an orchestra which will accompany the chorus and give concerts of orchestral and chamber music. Works which it will study include a suite by John Dowland, Rosetti's symphony in G minor, a dance suite by Purcell, a Handel concerto grosso, two Bach Brandenburg concertos, a Scarlatti concerto grosso, a suite from Gluck's "Orphan of China," Johann Christian Bach's overture to "Amadis of Wales," Haydn's symphony in E flat, No. 55, Mozart's symphony in C (K. 338), Schubert's fifth symphony, Holst's "St. Paul's" and "Green Brook" suites and Warlock's "Capriol" suite.

Works to be studied by the Academy Chorus include Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," Byrd's motet "Cantate Domino," Bach's chorales and eighth cantata, choruses from Handel's "L'Allegro," Brahms's "Schicksalslied, Hindemith's oratorio "Das Unaufhörliche"; Malipiero's "La Cena" and Randall Thompson's "The Peaceable Kingdom." The Institute orchestra will study Bach's second Brandenburg concerto and suite in B minor; Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Mozart's Divertimento in B flat (K. 287), Beethoven's fourth symphony and septuor, Schumann's fourth symphony, Mendelssohn's octet, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Schönberg's "Verklärte Nacht," Taylor's "Through the Looking Glass," Copland's "Music for the Theater," Hindemith's concerto, Op. 38, and wind quintet; Roussel's third symphony and Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite, wind octet and "L'Histoire du Soldat." Richard Burgin will conduct the Institute orchestra and Malcolm Holmes that of the Academy.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the historical background of music studied by the orchestras and the chorus, and Douglas Kennedy will conduct a course in folk dancing open to all the Center's students without extra charge. Howard Abell will hold a class in methods of school music teaching. Boris Goldovsky will be one of the assistants in the faculty. Archibald T. Davison, Randall Thompson, Carleton Sprague Smith and Augustus D. Zanzig will be special lecturers.

The faculty will include sixteen principal musicians of the Boston Symphony, and fourteen other members of the orchestra. All students at the Center will be entitled to attend the festival concerts and certain rehearsals. The general tuition fee will be $100, with an extra charge for special courses.

Further information is obtainable by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

WHILE Soviet Russia has leaped into activity on battle fronts and in the chancellories of Europe in recent months, Russian expatriates have been making news here in the United States where many of them are alligned with the arts and professions.

Besides Countess Tolstoy, for instance, there is Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is about to see a dream come true. On his estate in Russia many years ago, Koussevitzky dreamed of a unique school of music.

The school would supplement the training of established schools of music, give no credit for attendance, offer no diploma and care nothing about profit.

Next July 8 his dream will come true with the opening of a six weeks session at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home near Stockbridge, Mass.

KOUSSEVITZKY

There are other odd features in the Berkshire music center. One is that half the student body will be composed of practical musicians of long training, and the other half of persons who want what Dr. Koussevitzky calls "a summer of creative rest" in musical surroundings.

The advanced musicians will study any branch they choose, the cream being the small group which Dr. Koussevitzky will instruct in conducting. For the benefit of these there will be a unique training orchestra, composed of 30 Boston symphony men.

There also will be two other orchestras, one advanced, and the other amateur. Dr. Koussevitzky will have as well a chorus to be trained in Bach's B-Minor Mass, which will be performed the third and last week of the annual Berkshire symphonic festival.

Stage work will be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, composition by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth, and so on through a complete faculty.

"But," says Dr. Koussevitzky, "the school will supplement, not duplicate, the training available in established schools of music, where attention is usually centered chiefly on developing the technical equipment of the individual."

The plan also supplements the Boston symphony's plan for providing year-round work of dignity and value for the members of its orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, O.
STATE JOURNAL

DEC 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 9 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

FEB 18 1940

Boston Symphony Announces Particulars of Music Center To Be Held in the Berkshires

Boston, Dec. 9—Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music center to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home. These details will be further set forth in the catalog of the Music center, obtainable by application to Symphony hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, will be between July 9 and August 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort.

Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

Koussevitzky Defines Aims

Koussevitzky makes a statement at the beginnnig of the catalog in which he outlines its character and purposes: "The Berkshire Music center will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer." Pointing out that the center will be concerned primarily with collective performance, Dr Koussevitzky adds that "it will thus supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered upon developing the technical equipment of the individual. . . . We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

For Both Skilled and Unskilled

The Music center will be in two sections—the institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing.

The Faculty

Koussevitzky is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the institute orchestra.

Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith, who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education.

Dr Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera house in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music center, will conduct the chorus. Mr Woodworth is the chairman of the department of music at Harvard university. He is the conductor of the Harvard glee club, and the Radcliffe Choral society.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr Downes is the music editor of the New York Times.

A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance society.

The Institute orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Academy orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell will have a class in the methods of teaching music in schools. Mr Abell is the head of the music department of Milton academy.

Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Randall Thompson, the director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public library; and Augustus [redacted] of music, National Recreation association. Further lecturers will be announced at a later date.

The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 16 in all, and 14 additional members—making an orchestra of 30 who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance.

The general tuition for the Center (Institute and Academy) will be $100, this fee to include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

An additional charge of $20 will be made for each special course taken. The privilege of auditing special classes, although restricted, will be without extra fee. A limited number of scholarships will be available. The Music center will give no diploma or academic credit.

Living accommodations, with board and lodging in the near vicinity will be arranged on a cost basis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

DEC 14 1939

COPIES of The Blade were photographed on micro-film and the negative was inserted in the "Crystal Case of Tomorrow" which KDKA recently sealed and placed in the walls of its new transmitter. The case will be opened Nov. 4, 1959...CBS put Lang Thompson on the network from Philadelphia last night at 11:15...Eugene Germany, campaign manager of the Garner-for-President Committee, will be on Red network stations tonight at 6:30.

The Boston Symphony orchestra announces inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, splendid Massachusetts summer home of the orchestra, for a term from July 8 to Aug. 18. Skilled and semi-skilled students of music will be enrolled. Koussevitzky himself will conduct a class for advanced students, and others on the faculty will be Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, composers; Olin Downes of the New York Times, and the 30 best of the Boston orchestra.

1-2

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

DEC 14 1939

Goldovsky Gets Summer Post

Boris Goldovsky today received word of his appointment as associate head of the opera department of the Institute for Advanced Study at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., July 8 to August 18, next summer. Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Goldovsky will have charge of the singing. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, who is head of the institute, handles the classes in scenic design and stage craft. Goldovsky will confer with Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony, which arrives tomorrow for its concert at Music Hall.

Goldovsky is in charge of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and directs the Singers Club and the Cleveland Orchestra's Philharmonic Opera Chorus.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

DEC 17 1939

-- MU

By ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS

Of interest to music lovers is the recent announcement of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next ~~July 8th~~ at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra. During the six weeks between July 8th and August 18, 1940, there will be a busy musical life on the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Serge Koussevitsky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of living and working in music.

Dr. Koussevitsky, as director, has outlined as the character and purpose of the center: "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer."

With the nucleus of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra and a faculty composed of such authorities as Dr. Koussevitsky, Aaron Copland, composer and author, Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Paul Hindemith, composer, Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society, and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music of Harvard University, the Berkshire Festival and the Music Center will be the outstanding gathering of artistic merit in the United States.

Since its activities will be of inestimable benefit to professionals, amateurs and students alike, Buffalonians are fortunate in the fact the Tanglewood is so accessibly located.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

DEC 14 1939

Name Goldovsky to Institute Post

Mr. Goldovsky

Boris Goldovsky, pianist and member of the Cleveland Institute of Music staff, today was named associate head of the opera department of the new Institute for the Advancement of Study, Berkshire Festivals, Tanglewood, Mass.

Mr. Goldovsky's associate in the department will be Herbert Graf, one of the outstanding stage managers of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is musical head of the festivals which are held every summer.

The Cleveland operatic director, who also is director of the Singers' Club, will go to Tanglewood next summer from July 8 to Aug. 18th to assume his duties. While Mr. Koussevitsky is in Cleveland tomorrow the two will meet to discuss plans for the festival's opera season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PLAINSFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

DEC 30 1939

IN BERKSHIRES IN 1940

"Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Society's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be, in the six weeks between next July 8 and August 18, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of his Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers, will inaugurate "The Berkshire Music Center" which will present a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working with music in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Mr. Koussevitzky; student orchestra of skilled players; an amateur orchestra; a chorus; courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's B minor Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

DEC 18 1939

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will inaugurate a Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Summer home, July 8 of next year. Between July 8 and August 18, 1940, Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Symphony, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Koussevitzky, Director of the School; a student orchestra of skilled players; an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a Festival Chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic festival in a performance of Bach's "Mass in B minor." The Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals and to all of the Festival performances.

Pointing out that the Center will be concerned primarily with collective performance, Dr. Koussevitzky states that it will "supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered upon developing the technical equipment of the individual."

The Music Center will be in two sections, the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training and the Academy, with no formal entrance requirements. The Academy will comprise the school chorus and amateur orchestra, devoted to general sessions of lectures and concerts and to participation in music through singing and playing.

Koussevitzky will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the Institute Orchestra. Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer and by Paul Hindemith who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. He is chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, President of the English Folk Dance Society.

The Institute Orchestra will be under Richard Burgen, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; the Academy Orchestra under Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley.

Howard Abell, who will be remembered here for his musical activities while he was a student at Union College, his Summer organ recitals at Union College Memorial Chapel and his work in connection with the musical background for the Drama Festivals, will have a class in the methods of teaching music in schools. Mr. Abell is head of the music department of Milton Academy.

Special lecturers for 1940 will include Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard; Randall Thompson, Director of the Curtis Institute of Music; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library and Augustus D. Zanzig, Director of Music, National Recreation Association. The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILLERTON, N.Y.
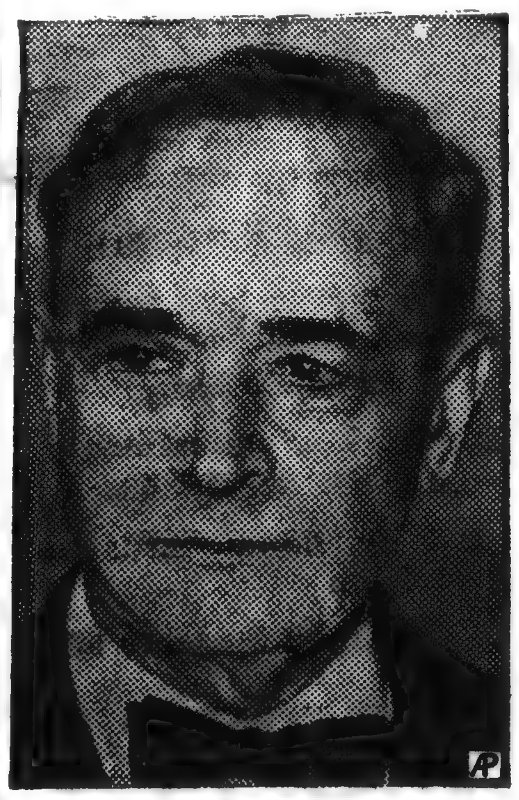
NEWS
12/14/39

PLANS SCHOOL



AP

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY

Koussevitsky To Open School At Tanglewood

A long-felt dream of Serge Koussevitsky, eminent director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be realized this summer with the opening of a six-weeks' school of music training at Tanglewood.

Designed for both the musician of long experience and those who, as Dr. Koussevitsky describes, desire "a summer of creative rest in musical surroundings" the student body will be equally divided between these two classes, offer no credit for attendance, decry the usual diploma and, in purpose, supplement the training of established schools of music.

Advanced musicians will study whatever they desire, a very limited group to be instructed by Dr. Koussevitsky, himself, in the art of conducting. For the benefit of the latter, there will be a training orchestra composed of thiry members of the Boston Symphony.

Two other orchestras are also planned, an advanced group and an amateur class. Also included will be a chorus to be trained for the presentation of Bach's B-Minor to be given the third and last week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The faculty wil include Dr. Herbert Graf, who will teach stage work; Aaron Copland, and Paul Hindemith, instructors in composition, and choral conducting by G. Wallace Woodworth.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

DEC 17 1939

Music Center Details Set

PARTICULARS are announced of the Berkshire Music Center to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~next~~ July 8 at Tanglewood, Mass., the orchestra's summer home.

Tanglewood, the historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort in the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18.

Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those attending will "live and work in music." There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting and other subjects.

Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
DEC 24 1939

Koussevitzky Plans Notable Music Center

Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music center which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home. These details will be set forth in the catalogue of the Music Center which is published forthwith, and which is obtainable by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and August 18, 1940, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort.

Serge Qoussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the Center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

DEC 29 1939

A New Music Center In the Berkshires

Announcement was made today of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center, which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony orchestra next July ~~8 at Tanglewood~~, the orchestra's summer home.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between next July 8 and August 18, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music", in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the Festival performances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 17 1939

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic festival next summer which is held on the Boston Symphony estate, Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, will extend its season from two to three weeks. In connection with the series of concerts under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. In connection with the festival, a music center will be established which will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established school of music in America.

The music center will be in two sections—the institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the academy, with "no formal entrance requirements." The academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing.

Serge Koussevitzky, reknowned conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the institute orchestra.

Courses in advaneced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education.

Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is the music editor of the New York Times.

Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Randall Thompson, the director of the Curtis institute of music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York public library, and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation association. Further lecturers will be announced at a later date.

The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, sixteen in all, and fourteen additional members—making an orchestra of thirty who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance.

The general tuition for the Center (institute and academy) will be $100, this fee to include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An additional charge of $20 will be made for each special course taken.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
DEC 13 1939

Berkshire Music Centre.

The dream of the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of the establishment at Tanglewood in connection with the Berkshire Festival of a music centre for the development of creative talent as well as the appreciation of music is taking shape. Comes to the desk a well printed and illustrated prospectus of the courses that will be given there next summer, together with the announcement of the faculty. With Dr. Koussevitzky at the head, the faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other distinguished musicians and lecturers. Students will have the opportunity in beautiful surroundings of "living and working in music."

Serge Koussevitzky, as Director, makes a statement at the beginning of the catalogue in which he outlines its character and purposes:

"The Berkshire Music Centre will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer." Pointing out that the Centre will be concerned primarily with collective performance, Dr. Koussevitzky adds that "it will thus supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centred upon developing the technical equipment of the individual. . . . We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

The Music Centre will be in two sections—the Institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the Academy, with "no formal entrance reqiurements." The Academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing.

Boston Programs.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is away from home this week making its annual tour to Rochester, Buffalo, Chicago, Ann Arbor, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. At the concerts of next week Rudolf Serkin will be the soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto. At Cambridge on Thursday next week the program will be in recognition of the 300th anniversary of the birth of Racine, featuring music inspired by his plays.

Next Sunday evening at 8.15 the Handel and Hayden Society, under Thompson Stone's direction, will give its customary presentation of "The Messiah," with the soloists already announced in this column.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
DEC 22 1939

Koussevitzky Defines the Aims of the Berkshire Music Center.

Regarding the Berkshire Music Center, that will be inaugurated next summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's celebrated conductor, makes the following statement regarding the character and purposes of the project: "The Berkshire Music Center will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for a creative rest in the summer." Pointing out that the Center will be concerned primarily with collective performance, Dr. Koussevitzky adds that "it will thus supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered upon developing the technical equipment of the individual. . . . We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

The music center will be in two sections—the institute, limited to those with a thorough preliminary musical training, and the academy, wth "no formal entrance requirements." The academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra. The main part of its work will be carried on in general sessions, devoted about equally on the one hand to lectures and concerts, and on the other to participation in music through singing and playing

The general tuition for the center (institute and academy) will be $100, this fee to include all privileges of choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An additional charge of $20 will be made for each special course taken. The privilege of auditing special classes, although restricted, will be without extra fee. A limited number of scholarships will be available. The music center will give no diploma or academic credit. Living accommodations, with board and lodging in the near vicinity, will be arranged on a cost basis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
DEC 24 1939

* * *

Real Christmas Gift

The announcement of the Berkshire Music Center seems like the real Christmas gift to the American public which has for years tried to find some substitute for Salzburg; somewhere to go summers to mingle with musical scholars and enthusiasts, somewhere to hear new music and old masterpieces played while one is relaxed and unafraid of winter colds and badly ventilated concert halls.

There is to be a school with Serge Koussevitsky at the head and many of his players on the faculty. Aaron Copland, one of America's leading composers, and Paul Hindemith, certainly the cleverest of young Germany who has forsaken the tenets of that regime and come to us to remain, will teach composition.

Supplements Teaching

There will be classes in stage directing for opera, classes for folk dancing, which, I hope, will emphasize America, too; choral classes. It aims to supplement rather than to replace the teaching of various institutes about our country. It is for speciaists as well as for those seeking general musical information. There will be practice for great orchestral works, and at the end of the season there will be concerts, as heretofore, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The locale is at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires, closely associated with Hawthorne. It has literary interest to give it glamor and America shall have to make her traditions musically, for alas, we have as yet had no Mozart or Wagner to give us the same prestige as Salzburg and Bayreuth. That is not so far away as we sometimes prophesy.

As a playground for musicians there could have been no wiser choice. It lies within easy distance of great highways for motorists in the land of American legendry.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
DEC 28 1939

Symphonic Festival Home Fund Taxable

PITTSFIELD, Dec. 28 (AP)—Citing a supreme court ruling against the Boston Symphony orchestra, State Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long ruled that "Tanglewood," Stockbridge home of the Berkshire symphonic festival, was taxable.

Trustees of the annual festival had asked that "Tanglewood" be declared tax-free, but Long, speaking yesterday before a meeting of the Berkshire County Assessors association, announced his denial of the request.

At the same time, Long said he felt he had authority, if necessary, to take over the entire job of tax assessment in North Adams. He made the statement in reply to a query as to whether the North Adams city council could refuse to appropriate funds for assistant assessors, asserting:

"I think on this assessing matter I have enough authority to take over the whole works myself, have the assessing done and charge the city for it."

The North Adams mayor and council have held the assessment work could be done by joint forces of assessors and registrars of voters, thus avoiding the need of assistant assessors.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JAN 2 - 1940

Tanglewood Tax

Commissioner Henry F. Long's opinion, that Tanglewood, owned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is taxable, was given to Stockbridge Assessors last week. The opinion came in response to a query made by Atty. John F. Noxon of this city, who was acting in behalf of the orchestra. Mr. Noxon is a trustee of the Festival.

No issue has been made yet by the orchestra. Taxes have been paid since the property was presented in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen. A lease in perpetuity has been given by the orchestra to the Festival for land between Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge and West Street in Lenox and the shed, owned by the Festival corporation is on this property. This is the first year that the shed figures in the tax question.

If the question comes to an issue it will be an interesting case. Mr. Long in stating his opinion referred to the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra against the City of Boston in which the Supreme Court found for the city. Symphony Hall is taxed. There are many lawyers who figure that this case is a strong argument in favor of Tanglewood exemption because the shed and Tanglewood itself are not rented to outside organizations as Symphony Hall is.

The whole question of tax exemption may be aired, there being a substantial opinion that the laws as now constituted provide for many loopholes and that the most sensible solution would be to abolish tax exemption for all so-called charitable, educational and religious institutions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
DEC 29 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
DEC 29 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
DEC 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
DEC 28 1939

(10)

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
1/25/40

Koussevitsky To Open Music School July 8 At Tanglewood Shed

Eight Courses To Be Included In Curriculum

Special Lectures Also To Be Given During Summer

CLOSES AUGUST 18

Masters In Both Music, Art Assembled For Faculty

Official announcement of the opening of The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass., under the personal direction of Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was made this week.

Opening July 8 and running to August 18, the school will include eight courses exclusive of special classes and a series of special lectures. The Institute of Advanced Study incorporates a course in orchestral conducting as well as the institute orchestra, both supervised by Mr. Koussevitsky, including study of 21 symphonic compositions. Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the Opera Department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, will conduct the course in Opera Dramatics while Aaron Copland, composer and author, and Paul Hindemith, composer, will direct the course in composition, as well as seminars in Harmony and in counterpoint.

The Academy division of the school, incorporating less severe entrance requirements will include the academy orchestra, the academy chorus, chamber music, and folk dancing. Special classes will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth and Howard Abell in Choral Conducting and Music in the Schools, respectively. Mr. Woodworth is chairman of the Department of Music of Harvard University while Mr. Abell is head of the Music Department of Milton Academy.

Others on the faculty of the school will include Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times; Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley college orchestras; Archibald C. Davison, professor of Choral music in Harvard University; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music of the New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music of the National Recreational Association.

The faculty will also include masters of the numerous instruments in the Boston Symphony and others to be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 28 1939

Rules Festival Property In Berkshires Taxable

Long Gives Views on Tanglewood; Implies He May Take North Adams Tax Problem

PITTSFIELD, Dec. 27 — Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long today ruled that the property of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, known as Tanglewood, is taxable. The opinion was given while Mr. Long was attending the annual meeting of the Berkshire County Assessors' Association at Hotel Wendell.

Mr. Long also entered a North Adams controversey by threatening, by implication at least, that he would take over the tax assessment of the city if the mayor and council refused to appropriate money for assistant assessors. The North Adams mayor and council, backed by the city solicitor, have insisted that the canvass could be made by the joint forces of the assessors and registrars of voters.

Dabrowski President

The Assessors' Association elected Fred Dabrowski of Adams president, succeeding C. Edgar Searing of Stockbridge. Other new officers are William McManus of Monterey, vice-president; Charles A. Dee of Lenox, secretary-treasurer.

Mr. Long's opinion regarding the Festival shed in Stockbridge followed a letter from the trustees asking that the property be ruled tax free. It spoke of the concerts as "of the highest order," but Long insisted that the concerts "could be of the lowest order and it would make no difference." He based his opinion on the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra against the Boston assessors when the Supreme Court held that not enough persons attended the concerts in Symphony Hall to make the venture "charitable and therefore exempt."

When P. J. Malone of North Adams asked if the City Council could refuse to appropriate money for the assistant assessors, Long replied:

"The appropriating body can stop any or all government if they want to. Officials can be compelled to appropriate for schools by the state, but otherwise they can abandon fire, police or any other services, or the assessment of taxes, if they want to go back to the jungle. However, I think on this assessing matter I have enough authority to take the whole works overmyself have the assessment done and charge the city for it.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JAN 17 1940

Berkshire Festival Clubs Open Programs Next Week

First Meeting Scheduled Monday At Library in Adams—Lenox Group Meets Tuesday

Organized by Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, a trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Festival Club activities will begin next week.

The first club meeting will be held in Adams Monday evening at the Library. Beethoven's Third Symphony and Debussy's "La Mer" will be played, and explanatory notes will be read. Mrs. Edward Martin is president of the Adams club and Mrs. Walter Donovan is treasurer. Memberships for adults and children may be obtained at a nominal fee from either the librarian or the officers.

Lenox will hear the same program Tuesday evening at the Library. Mrs. George Mole will give the explanatory talk. President of the Lenox club is Mrs. Lenges H. Bull; treasurer, Mrs. Boyer Davis Jr.

Stockbridge Club

Stockbridge club starts Jan. 24 with Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun." Mrs. Paul Ruesch is president; James Breed, treasurer. The meetings will be held in the new reading room of the Library.

The Great Barrington Festival Club will meet at the Thursday Morning Club Jan. 25. The program will consist of Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite. Hans Vigeland is president and will lead the meeting.

The Lee club meets at the Library Jan. 25 to hear Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun." Mrs. Philip Bosworth is president and will lead the meeting. Miss Elizabeth Gangell is treasurer.

Pittsfield, Jan. 25

The Pittsfield Festival Club with Miss Jeannette Bastion as president meets Jan. 25 at the Berkshire Athenaeum. The program will consist of Beethoven's Third Symphony and Debussy's "La Mer." Further information may be obtained from Francis H. Henshaw at the Athenaeum, Miss Grace L. Wheeler at the First Church parish house, the Women's Club, Willard M. Sistare, Richard B. Stevenson, Miss Mary A. Bristol, Miss Anne A. Cimini and Kevin McLoughlin. The concert will start at 8.

The Dalton club starts it's meetings Jan. 31, at the Library. Members will hear the same program as given in Pittsfield. Mrs. Henry Handy is acting president and Mrs. William Stearns is treasurer.

In North Adams

The North Adams Festival Club will meet Feb. 2 at the Library to hear Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe" suite. Mrs. Tracy Adams is acting president with Miss Abby Metcalf treasurer.

"The intent of these clubs," says Mrs. Crane, "is to familiarize those interested with the 1940 Festival programs. The concerts are recorded and the meetings will be informal. The meetings will be held twice monthly and, as there is to be a phonograph in each library, requests for records will be taken and the use of the machine will be available under the supervision of the librarian. Scores and books on music may be obtained by request. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has shown great interest in this undertaking and memberships in these clubs will greatly enhance the enjoyment of next year's Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 14 1940

Works Listed For Berkshire Music Festival

3 Tchaikovsky Programs Under Koussevitsky Are on Schedule for August

Three programs of music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky, as an observance of the centenary of the composer's birth, will be included in the repertoire to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

According to yesterday's announcement from the festival office at Stockbridge, there will be nine concerts this summer, three more than in the last few years, to be held Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will direct one of the Tchaikovsky programs. Soloists already engaged are Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, who was first heard at a party given by Dr. Koussevitzky for the Boston Symphony during the 1939 festival; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

The festival will be divided into three series. Works to be heard in Series A, Aug. 1, 3 and 4, are the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; Schubert's C major symphony, Brahms's second symphony and Roy Harris's third symphony; Respighi's arrangement of Bach's C minor passacaglia, Faure's music for "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Cholé" suite.

The Tchaikovsky works to be heard in Series B, Aug. 8, 10 and 11, are all the symphonies, except the third, the violin concerto with Mr. Spalding as soloist; "Romeo and Juliet," the serenade for strings and second suite.

One of the programs of Series C, Aug. 15, 17 and 18, will be devoted to Bach's mass in B minor. Other works scheduled for that week are Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Brahm's first symphony, a Haydn symphony, Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony and arias to be sung by Miss Maynor. The chorus for the mass will be from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, which, with Dr. Koussevitzky as director and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department, as assistant director, will open its first six weeks' session July 8.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
DEC 17 1939

Catching the Beat in Music World Today

By INA WICKHAM.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire music center to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony next July at Tanglewood, Mass., the orchestra's summer home, were made last week. Koussevitsky, 30 members of the orchestra and other prominent musicians and lecturers will fill the six weeks between July 8 and August 18 with a busy musical life. The aim of the music center at Tanglewood is to "serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality thru contact with the elite in art and culture." The music center will be in two sections, the institute, limited to those with a thoro preliminary musical training and the academy, with no formal entrance requirements. The academy will comprise the school chorus and the amateur orchestra and the main part of its work will be carried on in the general session, devoted equally to lectures and concerts.

MANY PROMINENT

. . . persons will be on the faculty at the Berkshire music center. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the school, will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the center. Aaron Copland will give courses in advanced composition, as will Paul Hindemith. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music at Harvard, will direct the chorus. Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerning the historical background of the music being studied and there will be a course in folk dancing conducted by Douglas Kennedy of the English Folk Dance society.

SPECIAL LECTURERS

. . . for the 1940 season at Tanglewood will be Dr. Archibald Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard, Randall Thompson of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York library, and A. Ganzig, director of music, National Recreation bureau. The faculty will also include the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 16 in all and 14 additional members making an orchestra of 30 who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance. The cost of the course will be small, the general tuition is $100 and the fee includes all privileges of the choral, orchestral and chamber groups, lectures, folk dancing, school concerts, festival rehearsals and performances of the Boston symphony. There will be a limited number of scholarships available and living accomodations will be arranged on a cost basis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
FEB 13 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces Ambitious Season

Koussevitzky Plans Nine Concerts With Spalding, Maynor, Sanroma as Soloists, Rodzinski as Guest Conductor

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

ALBERT SPALDING

Stockbridge, Feb. 13—An ambitious program, supplemented by European conditions, promises world leadership for the Berkshire Symphonic festival of 1940, to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its famed conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The festival, now in its seventh year, remains essentially symphonic. By extending its length from two weeks to three weeks and by the inauguration of a new school, the membership of which is already assured, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky, in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Another will include Bach's B Minor Mass with the full orchestra and the chorus and soloists. The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tchaikovsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Berkshire Flavor

Arthur Rodzinski has been invited as guest conductor while Dorothy Maynor, introduced to the world at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood last summer, will have an anniversary appearance at one of the festival programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

There is a distinct Berkshire flavor to the programs as announced by Dr Koussevitzky. The guest conductor, Dr Rodzinski, owns a farm in Stockbridge where he spends all of his spare moments. Miss Maynor won her first public acclaim at Tanglewood. Mr Spalding is a resident of nearby Great Barrington.

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood which will open for a six weeks' season July 8. Dr Koussevitzky will be the director of the school and Prof G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department of Harvard, will be the assistant director.

Information pertaining to the festival may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway hall. Inquiries concerning living accommodations in the Berkshires may be addressed to the Berkshire Hills conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield.

The Programs

The works for the three series of concerts divide as follows:—

Series A: August 1, 3, 4:—

The First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

The C major Symphony of Schubert, the Second Symphony of Brahms, and the Third Symphony of Roy Harris.

Other works include Bach's Passacaglia (orchestrated by Respighi), Faure's Suite "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's "Capriccio" (Soloist J. M. Sanroma, piano), Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite).

Series B: August 8, 10, 11:—

A Tchaikovsky Festival

The First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth ("Pathetique") Symphonies.

The Violin Concerto (Albert Spalding, soloist).

The Overture "Romeo and Juliet," Serenade for Strings, Second Suite and other works to be announced.

Arthur Rodzinski will conduct one of the three programs.

Series C: August 15, 17, 18:—

The Third ("Eroica") Symphony of Beethoven, the First of Brahms, and a Symphony of Haydn.

Other works include Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," arias by Dorothy Maynor, and Bach's Mass in B minor.

Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Center (soloists to be announced).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
Observer Dispatch
FEB 13 1940

REVEALS PLANS FOR FESTIVAL

Boston—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced today his plans for the 1940 Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, which its sponsors hope, will reach world leadership this year because of conditions abroad.

For its seventh season, the festival has been extended from two weeks to three, beginning Aug. 1.

In observance of the centenary of Tschaikovsky's birth, one week's programs will be devoted to the music of that Russian composer. Artur Rodzinsky, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, has been invited to be guest conductor for one of three Tschaikovsky programs.

Dorothy Maynor, fine young Negro soprano discovered by Koussevitzky at last year's festival, will be presented as soloist in a group of arias.

d Albert Spaulding, distinguished violinist and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky concerto.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
FEB 13 1940

To Observe Birthday Of Noted Composer At Berkshire Event

Boston, Feb. 13—The centenary of the birth of Tchaikovsky will be celebrated this year by the Boston symphony orchestra at the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky announced today.

He said Artur Rodzinsky, conductor of the Cleveland symphony and summer resident of Stockbridge, will be guest conductor at one of three Tchaikovsky programs.

The rest of the festival will remain essentially symphonic, but the repertory will be enlarged with the season extended to three weeks. The inauguration of a music school assures a large choral group of the summer programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER - GAZETTE
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
PRESS
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
FEB 18 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
FEB 14 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
FEB 17 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
FEB 13 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
FEB 25 1940

Performances Scheduled For Berkshire Festival

By Samuel T. Wilson

AN AMBITIOUS program, supplemented by European conditions, promises world leadership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940, to be given by the Boston symphony orchestra under its famed conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The festival, now in its seventh year, remains essentially symphonic. By extending its length from two weeks to three weeks and by the inauguration of a new school, the membership of which is already assured, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

Arthur Rodzinski has been invited as guest conductor while Dorothy Maynor, introduced to the world at a Boston Symphonic picnic at Tanglewood last summer, will have an anniversary appearance at one of the festival programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire music center at Tanglewood, which will open for a six weeks' season July 8. Dr. Koussevitzky will be the director of the school and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department at Havard, will be the assistant director.

Information pertaining to the festival may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway hall. Inquiries concerning living condition in the Berkshires may be addressed to the Berkshire hills conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield.

The works for the three series of concerts divide as follows:

SERIES A—AUGUST 1, 3, 4

The First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

The C Major Symphony of Schubert, the Second Symphony of Brahms and the Third Symphony of Roy Harris.

Other works include Bach's Passacaglia (orchestrated by Respighi), Faure's Suite "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's "Capriccio" (Soloist J. M. Sanroma, piano), Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" (second suite).

SERIES B—AUGUST 8, 10,11

A Tchaikovsky Festival

(Celebrating the one-hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth)

The First, Second, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth ("Pathetique") Symphonies.

The Violin Concerto (Albert Spalding, soloist).

The Overture "Romeo and Juliet," Serenade for Strings, Second Suite and other works to be announced.

SERIES C—AUGUST 15, 17, 18

The Third ("Eroica") Symphony of Beethoven, the First of Brahms, and a Symphony of Haydn.

Other work sinclude Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," arias by Dorothy Maynor, and Bach's Mass in B Minor.

Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Center
(Soloists to be announced)

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
FEB 17 1940

Tschaikowsky in August: The Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., from the 1st through the 18th of August next, will consist of three series of three concerts each, the second series to be devoted to Tschaikowsky, the 100th anniversary of whose birth occurs May 7 of this year. In this series Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will play the first, second, fourth, fifth and "Pathetique" symphonies, "Romeo and Juliet" and the violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist.

The first series will include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, the C major of Schubert, the second of Brahms and the third of Roy Harris, also other shorter works, classical and modern.

The third series will include the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, the first of Brahms, one of Haydn's, Hindemith's "Mathis der Mahler," arias by Dorothy Maynor and Bach's Mass.

Artur Rodzinski has been named guest conductor.

12

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 13 1940

New Features Are Added To 1940 Festival Program

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Selections for Three Series of Concerts for Coming Season at Tanglewood—Albert Spalding, Violinist, Dorothy Maynor, Soprano, and J. M. Sanroma, Pianist, to Assist Orchestra—Chorus of Singers to Aid in Bach Mass—Three Tchaikovsky Programs Will Celebrate Anniversary of Composer's Birth.

While the extended Berkshire Symphonic Festival program planned by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for next summer will remain essentially symphonic, several special features were announced yesterday by Dr. Koussevitzky. In addition to the orchestral part of the Festival, such well known musicians as Albert Spalding, violinist, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will also make appearances at Tanglewood, the Festival's permanent home in Stockbridge.

A feature of the three-week Festival will be a series of programs devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, in celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the great Russian composer, Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, will wield the baton over the Boston Symphony orchestra as guest conductor during one of the Tchaikovsky programs.

Highlights of the Festival program as announced yesterday include Bach's B Minor Mass with the full orchestra and a chorus and soloists from the new Berkshire Music Center which will be inaugurated this year under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tchaikovsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Miss Maynor, who was introduced to the musical world last summer at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood, will make an anniversary appearance at one of the programs. Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky, and Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

The works to be included in the three series of concerts this year are as follows:

Series A, August 1, 3 and 4, the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; the C major symphony of Schubert; the second symphony of Brahms and the third symphony of Roy Harris; Bach's Passacaglia; Faure's suite, "Pelleas et Melisande;" Stravinsky's "Capriccio;" Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" (second suite).

Series B, August 8, 10 and 11, the first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth Tchaikovsky symphonies; the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist; Tchaikovsky's overture to "Romeo and Juliet," his Serenade for strings, his second suite and other works to be announced.

Series C, August 15, 17 and 18, the third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven; Brahms' first symphony and a symphony by Haydn; Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," arias by Dorothy Maynor and the Bach Mass in B minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 18 1940

Koussevitzky Names Works In Berkshires

Tchaikovsky Centennial Will Be Celebrated in Second Week's Series

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the principal works to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival during the first three weeks of August in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, Lenox, Mass. The dates are Thursday nights, Aug. 1, 8, 15; Saturday nights, Aug. 3, 10, 17, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 4, 11 and 18.

Works to be played in the three programs of the first week (Series A) include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; Schubert's symphony in C major, Brahms's second symphony, Roy Harris's third symphony, Respighi's orchestration of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Faure's incidental music for "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's capriccio for piano and orchestra, with J. M. Sanroma as soloist, Prokofieff's [redacted] Symphony and Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis et Chloe."

As an observance of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth, the programs of the second week (Series B) will be devoted to music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky, including his violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist; the first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth (Pathetic) symphonies, "Romeo and Juliet," Serenade for strings, second suite and other works. One of these three programs will be directed by Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra.

[redacted] B minor, the first major choral work to be performed in this festival, will be heard in one of the concerts of the third week (Series C) with the assistance of the Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Center, which, with Dr. Koussevitzky as director, and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of Harvard University's music department, as assistant director, will open its first six weeks' session July 8. Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, whose vocal [redacted] first became well known when she sang at a party given by Dr. Koussevitzky for the Boston Symphony's musicians last summer at Tanglewood, will sing arias. Instrumental works announced for this series include Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Brahms's first symphony, a Haydn symphony and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony.

Further information about the festival may be obtained by writing to its office in Stockbridge, Mass., or its New York office in Steinway Hall. Inquiries about living accommodations in the Berkshires may be addressed to the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Court House in Pittsfield, Mass.

Dr. Rodzinski, who is the first guest conductor to appear in these concerts, has a farm near Stockbridge, and Mr. Spalding is a resident of Great Barrington.

The first two Berkshire festivals, in 1934 and 1935, were conducted by Henry Hadley. The association of the Boston Symphony with this series began in 1936. The site was moved to Tanglewood in 1937, and the Music Shed was first used in 1938.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
FEB 14 1940

Noted Conductor To Head Festival At Stockbridge

Ambitious Program Will Be Given Three August Week-Ends Under ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~

The most ambitious program yet attempted by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the Boston Symphony orchestra under its world - famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be presented this summer at the Tanglewood Music Shed, Stockbridge, Mass., according to information received last night. This year the festival will be given during the three week-ends of August instead of during two as in the previous six years and there will be many new features designed to make this the most memorable of a long succession of successful summer seasons.

The festival will remain essentially symphonic and by the inauguration of a new school the repertory will be greatly broadened. One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Arthur Rodzinski, whose summer goat-farm home in Stockbridge has been the home of Koussevitzky during the festival season, will be a guest conductor in one of this series. Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer who was introduced at a picnic at Tanglewood last summer by Dr. Koussevitzky with such success that she was invited to sing at Carnegie hall where she was acclaimed, will appear on one of the festival programs.

Chorus And Soloists

Bach's "B Minor Mass" with a full orchestra and the chorus and soloists will be one of the programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work of Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

The symphonic field will be represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tshaikovsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith; and Prokofieff

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood which will open for a six weeks' season July 8.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be the director of the school and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department at Harvard, will be the assistant director.

The works for the three series of concerts group as follows:

Series A: Aug. 1, 3, 4: The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; the "C major" symphony of Schubert, the "Second" symphony of Brahms, and the "Third" symphony of Roy Harris. Other works in this series include Bach's "Passacaglia," Stravinsky's "Capriccio" (soloist J. M. Sanroma, piano), Prokofieff's ~~"Classical"~~ symphony, and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Tchaikovsky Festival

Series B: Aug. 8, 10, 11: Tchaikovsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth; the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth ("Pathetique") symphonies; the violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist; the "Overture "Romeo and Juliet," "Serenade for Strings," and other works. Arthur Rodzinski will conduct one of this series.

Series C: Aug. 15, 16, 17: The Third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven, the First of Brahms, and a symphony of Haydn. Other works will include Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," with arias to be sung by Dorothy Maynor, and Bach's "Mass in B Minor."

Music lovers in great numbers have attended these festival concerts from the Waterbury area in past years with their number growing each year. The list of local subscribers who have already sent in their reservations is large, it was reported. Judging by previous experiences at these concerts one may expect to see thousands from Western Connecticut cities and towns there this year.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
FEB 14 1940

WORDS About Music —And Musicians—

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will ~~give~~ concerts in Springfield, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York this week. The next concerts in the Friday and Saturday series at Symphony Hall in Boston will take place Feb. 23 and 24.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1940

Berkshire Center Dra Mainly Male Musicia

Boston Symphony Project E 275 Bids Already

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., March (P).—Serge Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music center, at th Tanglewood home of the Bosto Symphony Summer Festival, probably will be a predominantly male affair.

The music center is a unique nonprofit school at which Dr. Koussevitzky and a large staff will help professional and advanced musicians.

A little less than four months ahead of the July 8 opening 275 applications have been received from twenty-three states.

Of the first 200 received men were found predominating, 111 to 89. Sixty-five were from Massachusetts and fifty-five from New York. About half were from professional musicians.

Lawyers, doctors and engineers were numerous among the amateur group, the survey showed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
MAR 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAR 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
FEB 17 1940

LISTS of the works which will be played at the Berkshire Music Festival are already published. Among the unusual programs will be three with music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky as an observance of the centenary of the great composer's birth.

Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., is becoming the center of America's summer concerts. The Boston symphony, under Serge Konssevitsky, is the chief feature of these concerts, but famous soloists, who appear as guest artists, attract interest, too. The festival officially opens in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
MAR 1 0 1940
MAR

TSCHAIKOWSKY TO BE HONORED

By United Press.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston, Mass., Symphony orchestra, will include a celebration of the centenary of the birth of Tschaikowsky.

Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, will be a guest conductor in one of the three all-Tschaikowsky programs at the festival in Stockbridge, Mass.

The season will be extended this year to three weeks. A music school will be conducted in conjunction with the symphonic programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN
Feb 24, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAR 3 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
FEB 25 1940

KELSO, WASH
KELSONIAN
2/27/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
FEB 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE
FEB 27 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
FEB 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
FEB 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
FEB 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WAUKESHA, WIS.
FREEMAN
Feb. 24, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
FEB 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
STAR
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
FEB 26 1940

INFORMATION OBSCURED

12

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 13 1940

New Features Are Added To 1940 Festival Program

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Selections for Three Series of Concerts for Coming Season at Tanglewood—Albert Spalding, Violinist, Dorothy Maynor, Soprano, and J. M. Sanroma, Pianist, to Assist Orchestra—Chorus of Singers to Aid in Bach Mass—Three Tchaikovsky Programs Will Celebrate Anniversary of Composer's Birth.

While the extended Berkshire Symphonic Festival program planned by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for next summer will remain essentially symphonic, several special features were announced yesterday by Dr. Koussevitzky. In addition to the orchestral part of the Festival, such well known musicians as Albert Spalding, violinist, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will also make appearances at Tanglewood, the Festival's permanent home in Stockbridge.

A feature of the three-week Festival will be a series of programs devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, in celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the great Russian composer, Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, will wield the baton over the Boston Symphony orchestra as guest conductor during one of the Tchaikovsky programs.

Highlights of the Festival program as announced yesterday include Bach's B Minor Mass with the full orchestra and a chorus and soloists from the new Berkshire Music Center which will be inaugurated this year under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tchaikovsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Miss Maynor, who was introduced to the musical world last summer at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood, will make an anniversary appearance at one of the programs. Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky, and Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

The works to be included in the three series of concerts this year are as follows:

Series A, August 1. 3 and 4, the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; the C major symphony of Schubert; the second symphony of Brahms and the third symphony of Roy Harris; Bach's Passacaglia; Faure's suite, "Pelleas et Melisande;" Stravinsky's "Capriccio;" Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" (second suite).

Series B, August 8, 10 and 11, the first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth Tchaikovsky symphonies; the Tchaikovsky violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist; Tchaikovsky's overture to "Romeo and Juliet," his Serenade for strings, his second suite and other works to be announced.

Series C, August 15, 17 and 18, the third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven; Brahms' first symphony and a symphony by Haydn; Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," arias by Dorothy Maynor and the Bach Mass in B minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
FEB 14 1940

WORDS About Music —And Musicians—

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will ~~give~~ concerts in Springfield, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York this week. The next concerts in the Friday and Saturday series at Symphony Hall in Boston will take place Feb. 23 and 24.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1940

Berkshire Center Dra
Mainly Male Musicia

Boston Symphony Project I
275 Bids Already

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., March
(AP).—Serge Koussevitzky's now f mous Berkshire music center, at th
Tanglewood home of the Bosto
Symphony Summer Festival, prob ably will be a predominantly male affair.

The music center is a unique nonprofit school at which Dr. Koussevitzky and a large staff will help professional and advanced musicians.

A little less than four months ahead of the July 8 opening 275 applications have been received from twenty-three states.

Of the first 200 received men were found predominating, 111 to 89. Sixty-five were from Massachusetts and fifty-five from New York. About half were from professional musicians.

Lawyers, doctors and engineers were numerous among the amateur group, the survey showed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
MAR 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAR 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 18 1940

Koussevitzky Names Works In Berkshires

Tchaikovsky Centennial Will Be Celebrated in Second Week's Series

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the principal works to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival during the first three weeks of August in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, Lenox, Mass. The dates are Thursday nights, Aug. 1, 8, 15; Saturday nights, Aug. 3, 10, 17, and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 4, 11 and 18.

Works to be played in the three programs of the first week (Series A) include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; Schubert's symphony in C major, Brahms's second symphony, Roy Harris's third symphony, Respighi's orchestration of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Faure's incidental music for "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's capriccio for piano and orchestra, with J. M. Sanroma as soloist, Prokofieff's [redacted] Symphony and Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis et Chloe."

As an observance of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth, the programs of the second week (Series B) will be devoted to music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky, including his violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist; the first, second, fourth, fifth and sixth (Pathetic) symphonies, "Romeo and Juliet," Serenade for strings, second suite and other works. One of these three programs will be directed by Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra.

[redacted] B minor, the first major choral work to be performed in this festival, will be heard in one of the concerts of the third week (Series C) with the assistance of the Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Center, which, with Dr. Koussevitzky as director, and Woodworth, chairman University's music depa assistant director, will o six weeks' session July
Maynor, Negro soprano, [redacted] first became well she sang at a party g Koussevitzky for the B phony's musicians last Tanglewood, will sing strumental works announced for this series include Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Brahms's first symphony, a Haydn symphony and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony.

Further information about the festival may be obtained by writing to its office in Stockbridge, Mass., or its New York office in Steinway Hall. Inquiries about living accommodations in the Berkshires may be addressed to the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Court House in Pittsfield, Mass.

Dr. Rodzinski, who is the first guest conductor to appear in these concerts, has a farm near Stockbridge, and Mr. Spalding is a resident of Great Barrington.

The first two Berkshire festivals, in 1934 and 1935, were conducted by Henry Hadley. The association of the Boston Symphony with this series began in 1936. The site was moved to Tanglewood in 1937, and the Music Shed was first used in 1938.

THIS NIAGA
GA
FEB 17 1940

LISTS of the works which will be played at the Berkshire Music Festival are already published. Among the unusual programs will be three with music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky as an observance of the centenary of the great composer's birth.

Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., is becoming the center of America's summer concerts. The Boston symphony, under Serge Konssevitsky, is the chief feature of these concerts, but famous soloists, who appear as guest artists, attract interest, too. The festival officially opens in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
FEB 14 1940

Noted Conductor To Head Festival At Stockbridge

Ambitious Program Will Be Given Three August Week-Ends Under ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~

The most ambitious program yet attempted by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the Boston Symphony orchestra under its world - famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be presented this summer at the Tanglewood Music Shed, Stockbridge, Mass., according to information received last night. This year the festival will be given during the three week-ends of August instead of during two as in the previous six years and there will be many new features designed to make this the most memorable of a long succession of successful summer seasons.

The festival will remain essentially symphonic and by the inauguration of a new school the repertory will be greatly broadened. One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Arthur Rodzinski, whose summer goat-farm home in Stockbridge has been the home of Koussevitzky during the festival season, will be a guest conductor in one of this series. Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer who was introduced at a picnic at Tanglewood last summer by Dr. Koussevitzky with such success that she was invited to sing at Carnegie hall where she was acclaimed, will appear on one of the festival programs.

Chorus And Soloists

Bach's "B Minor Mass" with a full orchestra and the chorus and soloists will be one of the programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work of Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

The symphonic field will be represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tshaikovsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith; and Prokofieff.

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood which will open for a six weeks' season July 8.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be the director of the school and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department at Harvard, will be the assistant director.

The works for the three series of concerts group as follows:

Series A: Aug. 1, 3, 4: The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; the "C major" symphony of Schubert, the "Second" symphony of Brahms, and the "Third" symphony of Roy Harris. Other works in this series include Bach's "Passacaglia," Stravinsky's "Capriccio" (soloist J. M. Sanroma, piano), Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony, and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Tchaikovsky Festival

Series B: Aug. 8, 10, 11: Tchaikovsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth; the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth ("Pathetique") symphonies; the violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist; the "Overture "Romeo and Juliet," "Serenade for Strings," and other works. Arthur Rodzinski will conduct one of this series.

Series C: Aug. 15, 16, 17: The Third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven, the First of Brahms, and a symphony of Haydn. Other works will include Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," with arias to be sung by Dorothy Maynor, and Bach's "Mass in B Minor."

Music lovers in great numbers have attended these festival concerts from the Waterbury area in past years with their number growing each year. The list of local subscribers who have already sent in their reservations is large, it was reported. Judging by previous experiences at these concerts one may expect to see thousands from Western Connecticut cities and towns there this year.

S. M.

LIPPING FROM
H BEND, IND.
RIBUNE
MAR - 1940

TSCHAIKOWSKY TO BE HONORED

By United Press.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston, Mass., Symphony orchestra, will include a celebration of the centenary of the birth of Tschaikowsky.

Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, will be a guest conductor in one of the three all-Tschaikowsky programs at the festival in Stockbridge, Mass.

The season will be extended this year to three weeks. A music school will be conducted in conjunction with the symphonic programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
FEB 25 1940

KELSO, WASH
KELSONIAN
2/27/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
FEB 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE
FEB 27 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
FEB 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
FEB 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
FEB 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WAUKESHA, WIS.
FREEMAN
Feb. 24, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN
Feb 24, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
FEB 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
STAR
FEB 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
FEB 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
FEB 25 1940

Berkshire Festival Plans For 1940

THE 100TH anniversary of Composer Tschaikowsky's birth will be celebrated at the Berkshire Symphonic festival this Fall, with Arthur Rodzinski as guest conductor, Dorothy Maynor and Albert Spaulding soloists. An ambitious program which promises world leadership for the festival will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor as in the past three series of concerts ranging from Aug. 1 to 18 will bring thousands to the great shell at Tanglewood in Lenox on week-ends.

The festival, now in its seventh year, remains essentially symphonic. By extending its length from two weeks to three weeks and by the inauguration of a new school, the membership of which is already assured, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tschaikowsky, in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Another will include Bach's B Minor mass with the full orchestra and the chorus and soloists. The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn, Tschaikowsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Arthur Rodzinski has been invited as guest conductor while Dorothy Maynor, introduced to the world at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood last Summer, will have an anniversary appearance at one of the Festival programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

There is a distinct Berkshire flavor to the programs as announced by Dr. Koussevitsky. The guest conductor, Dr. Rodzinski, owns a farm in Stockbridge where he spends all of his spare moments. Miss Maynor won her first public acclaim at Tanglewood. Mr. Spalding is a resident of nearby Great Barrington.

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood which will open for a six weeks' season July 8. Dr. Koussevitsky will be the director of the school and Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department at Harvard, will be the assistant director.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN
MAR 3 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center Will Have Extended Summer Schedule

Announcement is made of the faculty, subjects and detailed activities of the Berkshire Music Center which is to be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next July 8 at Tanglewood, Mass., the orchestra's summer home. These details will be set forth in the catalogue of the Music Center which is published forthwith, and which is obtainable by application to Symphony Hall, Boston.

"Tanglewood," the orchestra's historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be in the six weeks between July 8 and Aug. 18, a place of busy musical life of an unprecedented sort. Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, other prominent musicians, and distinguished lecturers will provide the faculty for the center where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor. There will be a class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitzky, director of the school, a student orchestra of skilled players, an amateur orchestra, a chorus, courses in composition, operatic interpretation, choral conducting, and other subjects. Members of the Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus which will appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks next year, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term. All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to be the director of the school, and will take a few pupils in orchestral conducting, give lectures and supervise the institute orchestra. Courses in advanced composition will be given by Aaron Copland, the brilliant American composer, and by Paul Hindemith, who is considered one of the most significant composers of today. Each of these celebrities has done significant work in musical education. Dr. Herbert Graf will have charge of a class in operatic interpretation. Dr. Graf has had a brilliant career in the mounting of operas, in Europe and America. He is at present the stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the chorus. Mr. Woodworth is the chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University. He is the conductor of the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society. Olin Downes will give a series of lectures concerned with the historical background of the music being studied by the school orchestras and chorus. Mr. Downes is music editor of the New York Times. A course in folk dancing, open to the entire school without extra charge, will be conducted by Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society.

In institute orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Academy Orchestra by Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the college orchestras of Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley. Howard Abell will have a class in the methods of teaching music in schools. Mr. Abell is the head of the music department of Milton Academy. Special lecturers for 1940 will be Dr. Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University; Randall Thompson, the director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia; Carleton Sprague Smith, head of the music department of the New York Public Library, and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation Association. Further lecturers will be announced at a later date. The faculty will include the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 16 in all, and 14 additional members—making an orchestra of 30 who will be at the service of the student players for consultation, coaching and joint performance.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAR 17 1940

NOTES OF MU

THE three-week series of concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August has aroused a remarkable response, according to a recent report from the trustees. Already advance reservations for the nine concerts show that the Festival Shed has been sold out to a third of its capacity. Lately the festival authorities mailed announcements concerning this Summer's added week of concerts to all of its members. To date more than half of those on the list have replied, and one-third of them have indicated their wish to avail themselves of the membership privilege for the extra week.

Enthusiastic interest in the new Berkshire Music Center, opening at Tanglewood, July 8, and continuing through the first three weeks in August, also is reported. More than 275 applications have been received so far. Furthermore, the academy chorus, which will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for performance with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, promises to be a finely balanced group. The chorus will be limited to 250 voices. So far thirty-seven sopranos, thirty altos, eighteen tenors and twenty-six basses have been accepted for the choral ensemble.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
MAR 16 1940

Berkshire Festival Prepares Program

Already the third week's series of concerts to be given at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, has met with remarkable response according to a report today from the trustees. The season has been extended this year from two to three weeks. Advance reservations for all nine concerts show that the Festival Shed has been sold out at this date to a third of its capacity. The Berkshire Music center will open at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., July 8 and will continue through the period of the concerts, the first three weeks in August.

During the opening week of the Festival the programs will include works of Beethoven, Schumann, Sibelius, Schubert, Brahms, Prokofieff, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Roy Harris. For the second week there will be a Tchaikovsky Festival celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth. Artur Rodzinski will conduct one of the programs. Albert Spaulding will be a soloist at another.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will appear with the orchestra the third week. The program will include works by Brahms, Haydn, Wagner, Hindemith, and Bach's B Minor Mass with the Festival Chorus from the Berkshire Music center.

Margaret Grant is secretary of the Berkshire Music center, Symphony hall, Boston, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAR 16 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
PATHFINDER

DEC 23 1939

School Shorts

¶ Through action of its faculty committee on student activities, the College of the City of New York joined Harvard, Dartmouth and Princeton in refusing to allow Earl Browder, secretary general of the U. S. Communist Party, to address C. C. N. Y. students on the campus.

¶ Next summer, a unique music school, long dreamed of by Sergei Koussevitzky, noted conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be opened for six weeks at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home, near Stockbridge, Mass. The school will supplement the training of established schools of music, grant no credit for attendance and make no profit.

14

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

DEC 17 1939

Music Center Plans Revealed

Catalog of the Berkshire Music Center emphasizes that winter is the time to prepare for summer festivals.

America will more than ever before be the festival land. Fame of the Berkshire music festivals has spread nationally. Activities of the Berkshire Music Center will be started by the Boston Symphony orchestra July 8 at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home.

Tanglewood, the estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks has presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra, holds artistic associations as well as natural beauty. Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne were frequent guests of the Tappan family, former owners.

The estate was so named because it was in the little red house (on the site now marked by a tablet) that Hawthorne first told his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables."

Serge Koussevitzky, 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, other prominent musicians and distinguished lecturers will be the faculty for the center, where those who attend will have the opportunity of "living and working in music," in close association with a great orchestra and its conductor.

Koussevitzky, director, says the center will be concerned primarily with collective performance and will supplement, rather than duplicate, the training available in the schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered upon developing the technical equipment of the individual.

"We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work," Koussevitzky writes.

15

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

JUN 2 - 1940

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

* * *

Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, has just completed a six months' tour of 72 cities, during which she sang more than 90 titmes.

She will rest briefly before sailing on her first visit to Honolulu.

MUSIC FOR DRAMA

The Westminster Choir of Princeton, N. J., will furnish the musical background for Paul Green's historical drama, "The Lost Colony," which opens its fourth season at Manteo, Roanoke Island, N. C., June 29.

* * *

Marjorie Lawrence, who has been engaged as a leading Wagnerian soprano for the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires for the coming season, will sing the title role in Gluck's rarely-heard "Alceste" for the first time in the Americas.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN 2 - 1940

Programs For Berkshire Festival Set

Boston, Mass., June 1.

COMPLETE PROGRAMS for th three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serg Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshi Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. with Beethoven's Symphony No. in C Major and will close Aug. 1 with the Brahms Symphony No. in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will apepar as solois Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

Bach Mass to Be Given.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p.m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Maynor to Appear.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethovens' "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofief, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of the United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS

JUN 2 - 1940

Q. Please give the date of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass. J. E.

A. The festival will open on August 1 and will close August 18. The concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serger Koussevitzky conducting. Among the distinguished artists who will appear are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellest; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, the talented negro soprano.

Q. What is the meaning of Sieg Heil!? K. C. A.

A. The German phrase means hail victory.

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREAT FALLS, MONT.
TRIBUNE

JUN 2 - 1940

Carnegie Hall Audiences Average 2,344

NEW YORK, June 1.—(U.P.)—The New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra reports increased attendance for the season just closed at Carnegie hall, with total audiences of 246,174, or an average of 2,344 a concert.

In his report to the annual meeting of the society, its president, Marshall Field, said:

"The directors have been closely watching the new trends in the development of concert audiences in this city. It has been evident for some time that many more people in the lower income brackets are becoming interested in the better type of music.

"It is evident that an orchestra, to be successful in the future, must reach larger audiences, and at lower prices, and that the tendency is away from the orchestra concert as a social function, toward music for its own sake."

The San Francisco Opera association will hold its 1940 opera season between Oct. 12 and Nov. 2, giving 14 performances.

Operas to be heard include Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra," for the first time in San Francisco; Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier;" Mozart's "Don Giovanni;" Verdi's "Rigoletto" and "Aida;" Puccini's "La Boheme" and "Girl of the Golden West;" Delibes' "Lakme" and Massenet's "Manon."

Singers include the following:

Lily Pons, Elizabeth Rethberg, Lotte Lehmann, Marjorie Lawence, Bidu Sayao, Thelma Votipka, Rise Stevens, Margit Bokor, Suzanne Sten and Elsa Sebranska.

Also Frederick Jagel, Tito Schipa, George Stinson, Alessio de Paolis, Raoul Jobin, Francesco Naya, Jussi Bjoerling, John Brownlee, Robert Weede, Lawrence Tibbett, Perry Askam, Georges Cehanovsky, Ezio Pinza, Alexander Kipnis and Lorenz Alvary.

Conductors will be Gaetano Merola, Erich Leinsdorf and Gennaro Papi.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUN 2 - 1940

Cello Soloist

Gregor Piatigorsky, distinquished cellist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August at Stockbridge Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, U.S.A.
6/1/40

ORGAN IN BERKSHIRES FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

READY FOR AUGUST FESTIVAL

Aeolian-Skinner Company to Build Instrument Made Possible by Carnegie Gift — Biggs Will Play with Orchestra.

An organ has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires. The gift has been made possible, it is announced May 2, by a fund of $12,000 granted by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The organ will be built by the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company from the design of G. Donald Harrison, the company's president, and will be installed in time for use at the first sessions of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given Aug. 1 to 18 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Possessing an organ of its own at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony, which appears with its complete personnel at the Berkshire Festival, will be equipped for whatever instrumentation a symphonic score may demand. E. Power Biggs, announced as the organist for the festival, will play the organ in the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor and in other works to be announced.

The specifications of the organ have been determined in consultation by Dr. Koussevitzky, E. Power Biggs and Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The placement of the instrument has been subjected to the advice of Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustical expert to whom the phenomenal sound properties of the "Tanglewood Shed" are due. The new organ will be semi-concealed and will be placed above the stage in a boxlike replica of the stage itself, designed both to project the sound to the best advantage and to enclose the delicate mechanism adequately against deterioration by weather conditions.

The new organ is designed to resemble in tonal scheme the Baroque period instrument which the same company bui for the Germanic Museum of Harvar University. Variations in the design o the "Tanglewood" organ will be mad principally to adapt it for combinatio with a full symphony orchestra. An enclosed section, not existing in the Germanic Museum organ, will be added fo the purpose of obtaining greater flexibility of tone and to provide a real pianissimo required under certain conditions Other stops in this section likewise wil make possible a fullness and brilliance o sonority suitable to the larger auditorium The organ is intended to be suitable no only in orchestral combination, but fo solo use and for the purposes of the new music center.

The specifications are to be given ou later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

JUN 2 - 1940

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

* * *

Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, has just completed a six months' tour of 72 cities, during which she sang more than 90 titmes.

She will rest briefly before sailing on her first visit to Honolulu.

MUSIC FOR DRAMA

The Westminster Choir of Princeton, N. J., will furnish the musical background for Paul Green's historical drama, "The Lost Colony," which opens its fourth season at Manteo, Roanoke Island, N. C., June 29.

* * *

Marjorie Lawrence, who has been engaged as a leading Wagnerian soprano for the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires for the coming season, will sing the title role in Gluck's rarely-heard "Alceste" for the first time in the Americas.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS

JUN 2 - 1940

Q. Please give the date of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass. J. E.

A. The festival will open on August 1 and will close August 18. The concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Among the distinguished artists who will appear are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellest; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, the talented negro soprano.

Q. What is the meaning of Sieg Heil!? K. C. A.

A. The German phrase means hail victory.

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREAT FALLS, MONT.
TRIBUNE

JUN 2 - 1940

Carnegie Hall Audiences Average 2,344

NEW YORK, June 1.—(U.P.)—The New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra reports increased attendance for the season just closed at Carnegie hall, with total audiences of 246,174, or an average of 2,344 a concert.

In his report to the annual meeting of the society, its president, Marshall Field, said:

"The directors have been closely watching the new trends in the development of concert audiences in this city. It has been evident for some time that many more people in the lower income brackets are becoming interested in the better type of music.

"It is evident that an orchestra, to be successful in the future, must reach larger audiences, and at lower prices, and that the tendency is away from the orchestra concert as a social function, toward music for its own sake."

The San Francisco Opera association will hold its 1940 opera season between Oct. 12 and Nov. 2, giving 14 performances.

Operas to be heard include Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra," for the first time in San Francisco; Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier;" Mozart's "Don Giovanni;" Verdi's "Rigoletto" and "Aida;" Puccini's "La Boheme" and "Girl of the Golden West;" Delibes' "Lakme" and Massenet's "Manon."

Singers include the following:

Lily Pons, Elizabeth Rethberg, Lotte Lehmann, Marjorie Lawence, Bidu Sayao, Thelma Votipka, Rise Stevens, Margit Bokor, Suzanne Sten and Elsa Sebranska.

Also Frederick Jagel, Tito Schipa, George Stinson, Alessio de Paolis, Raoul Jobin, Francesco Naya, Jussi Bjoerling, John Brownlee, Robert Weede, Lawrence Tibbett, Perry Askam, Georges Cehanovsky, Ezio Pinza, Alexander Kipnis and Lorenz Alvary.

Conductors will be Gaetano Merola, Erich Leinsdorf and Gennaro Papi.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUN 2 - 1940

Cello Soloist

Gregor Piatigorsky, distinquished cellist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August at Stockbridge Mass.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN 2 - 1940

Programs For Berkshire Festival Set

Boston, Mass., June 1.

COMPLETE PROGRAMS for th three weeks of concerts at Tangle wood to be presented by the Bos ton Symphony Orchestra, Serg Koussevitzky, conductor, were an nounced today by the Berkshir Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. with Beethoven's Symphony No. in C Major and will close Aug. 1 with the Brahms Symphony No. in G Minor.

In the first series of concert Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cel list, will apepar as solois Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

Bach Mass to Be Given.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p.m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Maynor to Appear.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethovens' "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofief, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of the United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, U.S.A.
6/1/40

ORGAN IN BERKSHIRES FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

READY FOR AUGUST FESTIVAL

Aeolian-Skinner Company to Build Instrument Made Possible by Carnegie Gift — Biggs Will Play with Orchestra.

An organ has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires. The gift has been made possible, it is announced May 2, by a fund of $12,000 granted by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The organ will be built by the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company from the design of G. Donald Harrison, the company's president, and will be installed in time for use at the first sessions of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given Aug. 1 to 18 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Possessing an organ of its own at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony, which appears with its complete personnel at the Berkshire Festival, will be equipped for whatever instrumentation a symphonic score may demand. E. Power Biggs, announced as the organist for the festival, will play the organ in the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor and in other works to be announced.

The specifications of the organ have been determined in consultation by Dr. Koussevitzky, E. Power Biggs and Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The placement of the instrument has been subjected to the advice of Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustical expert to whom the phenomenal sound properties of the "Tanglewood Shed" are due. The new organ will be semi-concealed and will be placed above the stage in a boxlike replica of the stage itself, designed both to project the sound to the best advantage and to enclose the delicate mechanism adequately against deterioration by weather conditions.

The new organ is designed to resemble in tonal scheme the Baroque period instrument which the same company bui for the Germanic Museum of Harvar University. Variations in the design c the "Tanglewood" organ will be mad principally to adapt it for combinatio with a full symphony orchestra. An en closed section, not existing in the Ger manic Museum organ, will be added fo the purpose of obtaining greater flexibil ity of tone and to provide a real pianis simo required under certain conditions Other stops in this section likewise wi make possible a fullness and brilliance o sonority suitable to the larger auditorium The organ is intended to be suitable no only in orchestral combination, but fo solo use and for the purposes of the new music center.

The specifications are to be given ou later.

16

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

JUN 2 - 1940

Concerts Listed For Festival

By J. FRED LISSFELT
Sun-Telegraph Music Critic

WHAT I HAD in mind for Chautauqua and the glorifying of music in the summertime has now happened in Massachusetts at the Tanglewood Colony, a plan so complete and high-minded that its program speaks for itself.

Mr. Lissfelt

Travelers from the eastern part of America who used to find recreation and instruction in European art centers now throng this new festival. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as the leader of the festival and its school, is not overshadowed by the Salzburg and Bayreuth gods, and so we can with all confidence predict a new era for summer music in America.

The concerts in the shed, now reinforced against weather conditions, are to be in three series, beginning on the evening of August 1.

Three Symphonies

Three symphonies, Beethoven No. 1, Schumann No. 1 and Sibelius No. 1 compose that program. On August 3, Saturday evening, Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture opens the concert. Strauss' symphonic tone poem, "Don Quixote," will disclose the virtuoso cellist, Piatigorsky, as soloist.

Koussevitsky then repeats Roy Harris' Third Symphony, a big compliment to the American composer. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the stunt piece of the Boston players, excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" complete the program.

The third concert of that first series comes Sunday afternoon, August 4, with two symphonies, Mozart's E Flat and Brahms' No. 2, with Stravinsky's "Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo," and Jesus Maria Sanroma, official pianist of Boston Symphony, and a brilliant modernist, as soloist.

Works of Masters

The second series is dedicated to works of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the latter's birth. Thursday evening, August 8, Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and the violin concerto in the capable hands of Albert Spalding, with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony are scheduled.

For Saturday evening, August 10, there will be no soloist, Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and the fourth symphony, with Tchaikovsky's No. 4, occupying the entire program. The sixth concert will bring Beethoven's "Pastorale" and Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 5 for Sunday afternoon, August 11.

Bach's B Minor Mass opens the third series Thursday evening, August 15. Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hein and Alexander Kipniss are soloists.

Dorothy Maynor Soloist

For Saturday, August 17, a symphony from Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," a work which was by no means congenial to present-day Germany, and Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" will contrast with Faare's suite from "Pelleas and Melisande." Dorothy Maynor is soloist in a Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide." Respighi's "Pines of Rome" close that concert.

The final performance, Sunday afternoon, August 18, includes three symphonies, Haydn's G Major, Sibelius' No. 7, and Brahms No. 1.

The great school project for consultation, audition and actual instruction which accompanies this concert program of the Berkshire Festival makes these events the most constructive plan for festival music yet brought before the American public.

* * *

Piano History Told

Longmans, Green & Co. has just issued a long-needed tome for students and music lovers, "The Piano, Its History, Makers, Players and Music," by Albert E. Wier.

Purely as a record, which its title suggests, it is the most complete work of its kind, showing the influence of recent activity in musicology, an up-to-date dictionary of important biographies of players, teachers and theorists, a catalogue of important solo works, orchestral works, and music for two-piano teams, the mose recently favored combination for ensemble playing in the concert halls. The piano in records is also an important chapter of the book, a concentrated listing of phonograph playing by leading European and American players.

There are omissions which are bound to occur in such a volume, the most serious ignoring the name of the famous pedagogue, Robert Teichmueller, teacher of piano at the Leipzig Conservatory, who had pupils from all over the world and who on several occasions had been invited to London to become competitor to Matthay, whose methods were identical with Teichmueller's, but whose students seemed better able to use the loud pedal in his praise.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 4 - 1940

Q. Please give the date of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass. J. E.

A. The festival will open on August 1 and will close August 18. The concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky conducting. Among the distinguished artists who will appear are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, the talented Negro soprano.

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUN 2 - 1940

Boston Orchestra Completes Rich Programs for Berkshire Season

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass, June 1.—(Sp)—Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahm's Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikowsky in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Berkshire festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared, as was the chorus in Boston, by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

JUN 4 - 1940

Ask The Miami Herald

A reader can get the answer to any question of fact by writing The Miami Herald Information Bureau, Frederic J. Haskin, director, Washington, D. C. Please enclose 3 cents for reply.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

Q.—Please give the date of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.—J. E.

A.—The festival will open on August 1 and will close August 18. The concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky conducting. Among the distinguished artists who will appear are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, the talented negro soprano.

Q.—Where is the deepest underground restaurant in the world?—E. T. P.

A.—It is said to be the one in Carlsbad Caverns, New Mexico, which is located 700 feet below ground. Because of the chilly temperature of 56 degrees throughout the year, the coffee cups have to be preheated. As many as 1,000 persons have been served in the cafeteria at one time.

Q.—What library has the most complete collection of Hardyana?—R. H. J.

A.—The collection of the Colby College Library at Waterville, Me., is conceded by many authorities to be the finest in existence. It includes the only known complete set of both English and American first editions and appearances of all Thomas Hard's novels and poems. There are also many original letters, manuscript facsimiles, portraits and dramatizations.

Q.—Of what material was Noah's Ark?—R. H.

A.—According to Genesis 6:14, Noah's Ark was built of gopher wood. It is not definitely known what kind of a tree this was, probably a species of the pine variety. The reference in Genesis is the only one to gopher wood in the Bible.

Q.—Did Mickey Rooney's father play in "Judge Hardy and Son?"—V. L.

A.—Joe Yule, Mickey Rooney's father, played the part of the tire dealer in that picture.

Q.—Is there any estimate of the total number of stamps that have been issued in all countries?—W. B.

A.—During the hundred-year period of philately, a total of 99,324 varieties of stamps has been issued.

Q.—Where is Bellini's famous sixteenth century painting of Christ carrying the Cross?—H. L. M.

A.—The art masterpiece has been acquired by the Toledo (Ohio) Museum of Art.

Q.—Who is director of Hull House in Chicago?—W. R. T.

A.—Miss Charlotte Carr has been director of the famous social settlement since 1937.

Q.—Please give President Coolidge's quotation on persistence.—H. N.

A.—It is as follows: "Nothing in the world can take the place of persistence. Talent will not—nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not—unrewarded genius is almost a

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUN 6 - 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO BEGIN AUG. 1

Berkshire Symphonic Program, With Serge Koussevitzky Conducting Is Announced

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 P. M. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUN 4 - 1940

County Opera Group's Aide Wins Scholarship

Maurice Goldman, youthful assistant director of the Cuyahoga County Opera Association, has been awarded a scholarship in conducting at the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts, it was announced today.

Goldman, who won the Cleveland Jewish Singing Society's contest for the writing of the best Jewish choral work, plans to do both choral and orchestral conducting at the Berkshire summer home of the Boston Symphony, where Boris Goldovsky, director of the Cleveland Philharmonic Chorus, is one of the summer faculty members.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUN 7 - 1940

Announce Programs For Berkshire Symphonic Festivals.

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, have been announced by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor. In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent 'cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin, the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9;30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano, who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide." Other composers represented on the program include, Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofief, Hindemith and Faure.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

JUN 9 - 1940

Berkshire Festival

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, are as follows:

SERIES A.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1.

Symphony No. 1 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 .... Schumann
Symphony No. 1 .... Sibelius

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3.

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" ..... Berlioz
Don Quixote .... Strauss
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky.
Symphony No. 3 .... Harris
Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune. . Debussy
Daphnis et Chloe (Suite No. 2) ...... Ravel

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4.

Symphony in E Flat .... Mozart
Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra
Stravinsky
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma.
Symphony No. 2 .... Brahms

SERIES B.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8.

Overture, "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Violin Concerto .... Beethoven
Soloist, Albert Spalding.
Symphony No. 6 .... Tchaikovsky

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10.

Overture, "Coriolanus" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 .... Tchaikovsky

SUNDAY, AUGUST 11.

Symphony No. 6 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

SERIES C.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15.

Mass in B Minor .... Bach
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Soloists: Elizabeth Schumann, William Hain, Viola Silva, and Alexander Kipnis.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.

Classical Symphony .... Prokofief
Mathis der Maler .... Hindemith
Concert Aria .... Mozart
Adelaide .... Beethoven
Soloist, Dorothy Maynor.
Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande" . . . Faure
Pines of Rome .... Respighi

SUNDAY, AUGUST 18.

Symphony in G Major, No. 88 .... Haydn
Symphony No. 7 .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 1 .... Brahms

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 4 - 1940

Given Scholarship

Morris Levine, above, of Washington Avenue, West Haven has been awarded a scholarship by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockbridge, Mass. He will be a member of the orchestra of the institute for advanced study and will play under Serge Koussevitzky and Richard Burgin. Mr. Levine, a violinist. will be a soloist tomorrow night with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra at the Commencement Concert of Yale School of Music at Woolsey Hall, at 8:15 o'clock.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUN 12 1940

PLAY AND LEARN IN NEW ENGLAND

Cape and Koussevitzky

Cape Cod's out-reaching arm abounds with historic interest. The Mayflower first anchored in Provincetown Bay and the Pilgrim Fathers trod where tourists will walk this Summer. The cape is dotted with old-fashioned villages, quiet inns, golf courses, airports, rolling sand dunes and beaches.

Marthas Vineyard and Nantucket, with their old towns, quaint cottages, high cliffs and wild fowl, annually are attracting more visitors.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens Aug. 1 at Stockbridge, Mass.

Tercentenary celebrations will be held this Summer at Haverhill and Braintree, Mass., and Greenwich, Conn.

Drums of Freedom

The Greenwich ceremonies will be held June 23-30. Capt. Daniel Patrick of New Haven is said to have purchased the original site of Greenwich from the Senawaye Indians for 24 red soldiers' coats.

Haverhill's tercentenary will be celebrated June 23-29. "Drums of Freedom," an outdoor spectacle, will be presented by a cast of 1000. Haverhill was the birthplace of John Greenleaf Whittier. !!

Hannah Dustin, Haverhill's renowned daughter, has grown into a legand and now is regarded as something of a feminine Paul Bunyan. Tradition has it that she was captured by the Indians and escaped from captivity after scalping an entire tribe! Hannah was kidnaped but history records that when she did return home, there were exactly 12 scalps dangling from her waist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUN 10 1940

Berkshire Festival Makes Known Programs for August Concerts

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, are announced by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's concerto for violin the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 P.M. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

SERIES A

Thursday, Aug. 1

Symphony No. 1 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 .... Schumann
Symphony No. 1 .... Sibelius

Saturday, Aug. 3

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" .... Berlioz
"Don Quixote" .... Strauss..
Soloist, Gregor Piotigorsky
Symphony No. 3 .... Harris
"Prelude a l' Apres-midi d'un Faune"
Debussy
"Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No. 2) ..... Ravel

Sunday, Aug. 4

Symphony in E flat .... Mozart
Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra
Stravinsky
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 2 .... Brahms

SERIES B

(Programs of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky commemorating the hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth.)

Thursday, Aug. 8

Overture—"Egmont" .... Beethoven
Violin Concerto .... Beethoven
Soloist, Albert Spalding
Symphony No. 6 .... Tchaikovsky

Saturday, Aug. 10

Overture—"Coriolanus" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 .... Tchaikovsky

Sunday, Aug. 11

Symphony No. 6 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .... Tchaikovsky

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 15

Mass in B Minor .... Bach
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Soloists, Elisabeth Schumann, William Hain, Viola Silva, Alexander Kipnis

Saturday, Aug. 17

"Classical" Symphony .... Prokofieff
"Mathis der Maler" .... Hindemith
(a) Concert Aria .... Mozart
(b) "Adelaide" .... Beethoven
Soloist, Dorothy Maynor
Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande" .... Faure
"Pines of Rome" .... Respighi

Sunday, Aug. 18

Symphony No. 88, in G major .... Haydn
Symphony No. 7 .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 1 .... Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM JAMAICA, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS

JUN 13 1940

Answers To Questions

Q. In what way were insects responsible for the making of paper?

A. The story is told that a Chinese sage watching some wasps building a nest conceived the idea which resulted in the first man-made paper.

Q. Please give the date of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

A. The Festival will open on Aug. 1 and will close Aug. 18. The concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sergei Koussevitsky conducting. Among the distinguished artists who will appear are Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, the talented Negro soprano.

Circ. (D 223,091) (S 388,934)

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
JUN 9 - 1940

WIN BERKSHIRE HONORS

Two Cleveland Institute Students Get Festival Scholarships

Two Cleveland Institute of Music students have received scholarships to the Berkshire Music Festival which will open at Stockbridge, Mass., July 1.

The two musicians, who will have an opportunity to play with the Berkshire Festival Orchestra as well as continue their study of music, are Stanley Harris, 12612 Superior Avenue N. E., viola, and David Wuliger, 2116 Hampstead Road, Cleveland Heights, tympani.

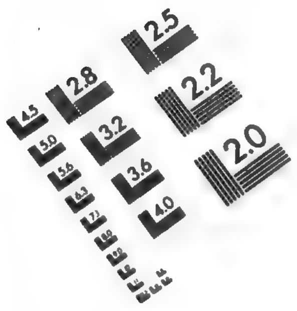
They were selected after being heard in audition by the concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

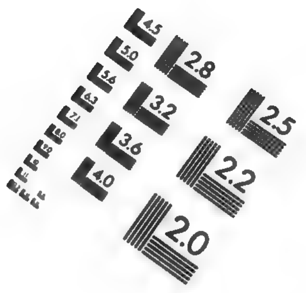
2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

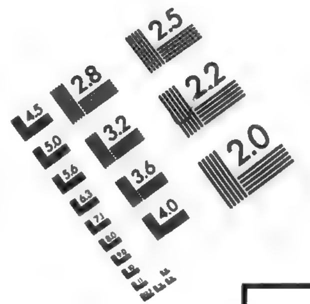


2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0

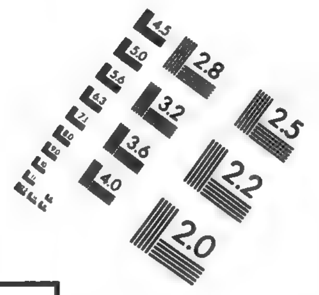


4.5
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

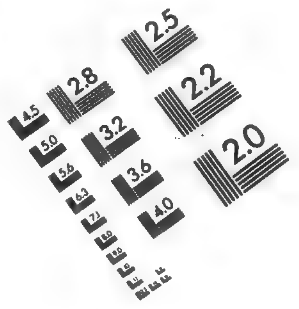
PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



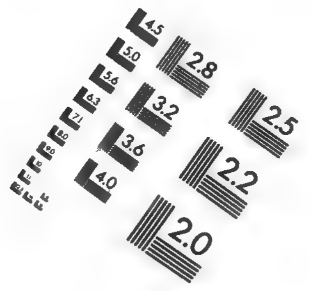
2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0



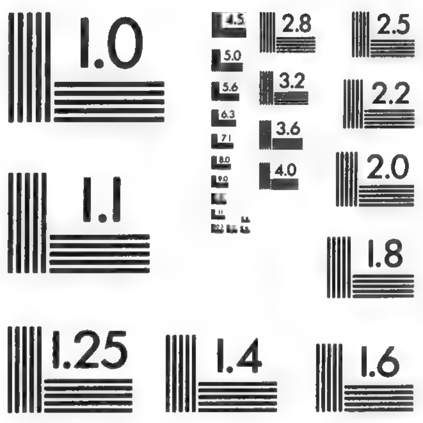
4.5
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0



4.5
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

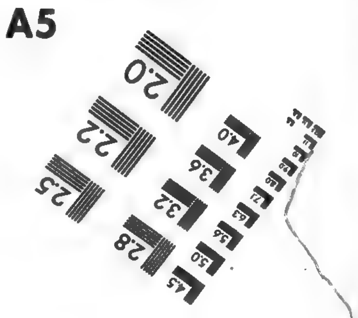
2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

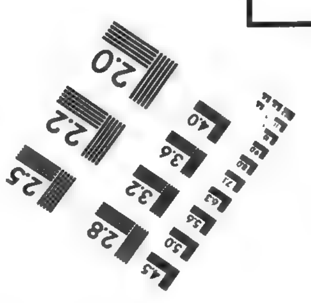


2.0
2.2
2.5
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5

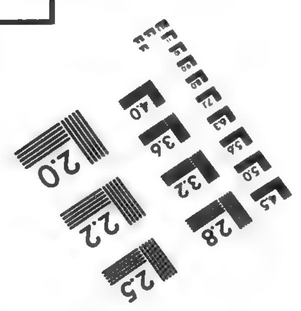
2.0
4.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5
4.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
2.5
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5

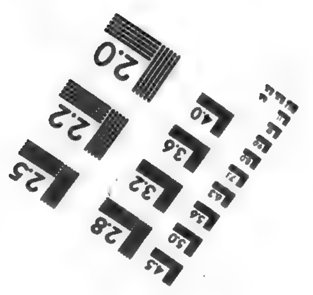


2.0
4.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5
4.5

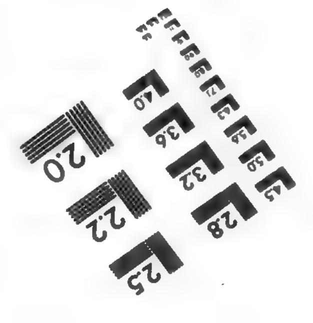
PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
4.5 mm 1234567890



2.0
2.2
2.5
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5



2.0
4.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5
4.5

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.0 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

18

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

Books - Music - Art

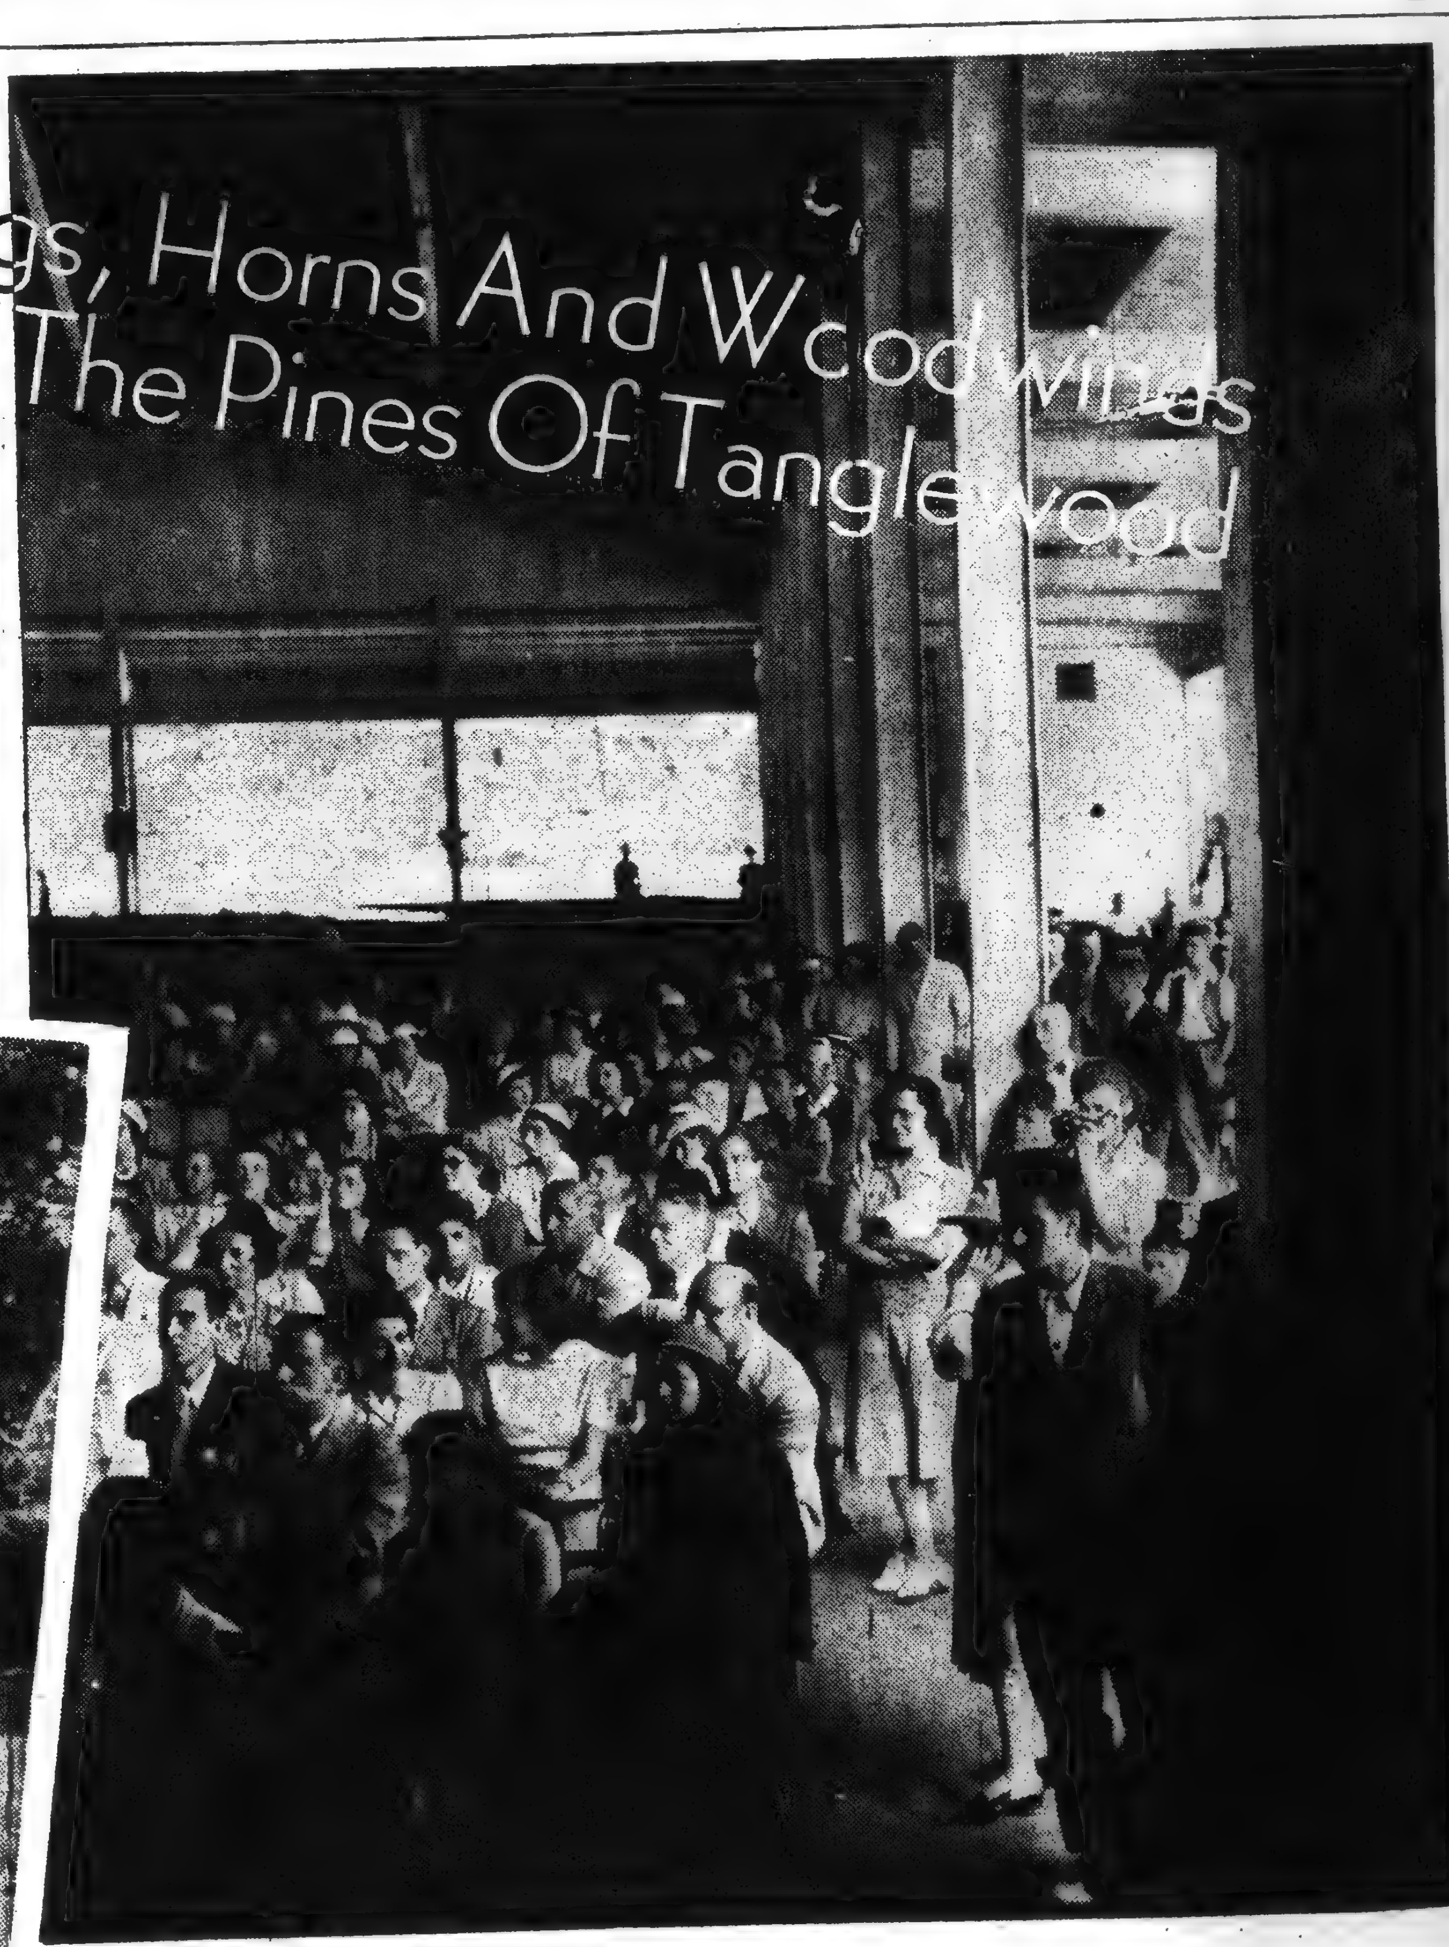
Magazine Section

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

Special Features
RIVER FULL OF SALMON
AFFLECK RETIRES
THIMBLE ISLANDS

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: JULY 14, 1940

Strings, Horns And Woodwinds Amid The Pines Of Tanglewood



Top left, Violinist Albert Spalding, among notables at opening exercises; top center, tea in the garden on the opening afternoon of the summer school; top right, at rehearsal in the Music shed; center left, students stop to visit outside administrative headquarters; center right, Dr Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Berkshire Music center; lower left, music under the trees; lower right, on the way to class.

Berkshire Music Center Opens Doors of Art To Gifted Youth

By WILLIAM HENRY WRIGHT

LENOX—There is nothing quite like it in all the world—and probably never has been—a student symphony orchestra of 65 youths and girls, most of them in their early twenties, with a youngster no older as conductor, playing major symphonic works to the critical ears of a great orchestra leader in the person of Serge Koussevitzky, and before contemporary composers and the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra; all of them ready to analyze and interpret, to counsel and explain with the rare deference of the musically elite striving to impart in an atmosphere of affectionate enthusiasm the inspiration and essence of their art to a new generation.

Such is the picture presented as the Berkshire Music center with an enrolment of 325 pupils gets under way at lovely Tanglewood, the now famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first sessions of a new type of school the influence of which on the music of America is beyond calculation.

Mingled Echoes

Across the cushiony lawns and from beneath the lordly trees where once walked the literary giants of New England—Emerson and Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne, guests of the Tappan family—now comes in the dew of the summer morn the bowing of fiddlers, the piping of flutes, the flourishes of horns. From the spacious rooms of Tanglewood house issue the rippling notes of eloquent pianos. Down by the pools amid the hedges of the formal gardens an ambitious soprano mingles her morning scales with the lyric of the wild wood thrush, while over in the barn, once the haunt of fine horses and stiff-backed grooms, operatic arias are aerated from a half dozen upper rooms, while sturdy quartets resound simultaneously from remodeled stalls. And on this busy hive of music the beautiful blue-misted hills of Berkshire, basking in the July sun, smile down indulgently.

"You can't help but learn," said one enthusiastic pupil, a flute player, who had never before performed with a large orchestra, after the third time the group had played together. "There is the composer to analyze the score for us in a lecture first. And the Boston Symphony principals to coach us in the individual parts and Dr Koussevitzky to bring out all the points of interpretation and ensemble. They just build from the ground up. It's marvelous."

The composer referred to was Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, who composed an "Alleluia" for the inauguration of the center. This was rendered by a chorus at the opening exercises. Mr Thompson sat at the right hand of Dr Koussevitzky as one of the Thompson orchestral pieces was played at the third rehearsal of the institute orchestra in the big shed. But his was not the only work offered—there was Debussy and Brahms as well—the "Academic Overture" that utilizes the song to which have been put the rhythmic Latin "Gaudeamus igitur, juvenes dum sumus," familiar as an old college song. That youth now was partaking of rare joy was obvious. The exuberance and vim with which the strings bowed the vibrant strain brought a smile of approval from Dr Koussevitzky and his assistants.

Trial for Youth

Perhaps you think it is an easy thing for a young man scarcely out of his teens to mount the podium to lead a full orchestra with his audience made up of one of the world's greatest conductors, composers and musicians of the first rank and various interested auditors with trained and discriminating ears.

"I was so nervous the first time," one was overheard to say, "that I could hardly speak. My voice just tightened up so it was mostly a squeak."

But to see him in action now, with the orchestra only three days old, you would think he was born to the podium, such is his ease of manner before the distinguished company looking on. And once you note Dr Koussevitzky's manner toward his ardent disciples you understand how all diffidence is speedily dissipated.

The orchestra occupies the stage of the shed where the festival of Boston symphony is now annually held, while the director sits at a table in the center aisle, assistants and principals grouped around him in the seats of the front rows. Scattered here and there amid the 5000 or more chairs of the giant shelter are various other auditors.

You look at the members of the orchestra. Their extreme youth impresses you. They are all in various states and stages of comfortable dress for a hot July day. Some are in natty sport suits, some in loose slacks, others in limp baggy apparel of a nondescript sort that looks as if it last felt the touch of a hot iron weeks ago. Here and there is a moccasioned foot and a trouser leg pulled high to show a lean bare shank. Nearly all are coatless. Sprinkled among the sleek and city-bred appear the rumpled sorrel-topped heads of youngsters who give the appearance of just having tumbled out of a haymow or left the plow handle to grab a cello or a bull fiddle. But in the eyes of all is an expression of intense seriousness and a desire to let no word of wisdom escape.

Practice and Criticism

The young man—his first name is Leonard and he is one of five applicants of exceptional promise accepted for the orchestral conducting course with 35 others enroled as observers—takes his place before the orchestra, raises his hands and the music begins.

A few bars and Dr Koussevitzy claps his hands and rises from his seat. The music stops as he walks with his slow measured step toward the platform.

"Lennie—Lennie—listen to me."

The young man bends low and there is a quiet consultation. Dr Koussevitzky returns to his seat and the music starts again.

The passage is repeated. Further progress is made. Then another interruption. The director rises. He advances toward the violins.

"The bow on the strings. It must not be lifted," he says. "That is the only way you will get it. Zing—zing—zing," he motions with his arms. "The bow on the strings. The bow in the strings," he emphasizes. "Ask them, Lennie. Ask them."

Dr Koussevitzky returns to his desk. There is a smile on his face.

"The bow in the strings," he grins at his assistants. "How do you like that?"

And So On for Three Hours

And so it goes through nearly three hours of the long rehearsal from 9.30 until after 12, the fixed schedule for the orchestra on four mornings a week. Meantime, among other conductors and principals of the audience there is an instinctive beating of time with feet and hands and a mouthing of phrases as difficult runs are essayed. Now and then Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston symphony, rises and walks up and down before the bank of first violins like a papa bird watching the first flight of his fledglings. He calls one to the edge of the platform and gives a quiet word of advice.

Three young and aspiring conductors get their chance during the morning and at the end there is an encouraging pat on the shoulder from Dr Koussevitzky as each comes to his seat in the center aisle and receives his soft-spoken comment.

Mondays of each week are given over entirely to individual instruction in the performance of parts of the orchestral works being studied. In the afternoon are lectures devoted to analysis, which makes a full program for the six-weeks' course, including, as it does, attendance at all the nine concerts and rehearsals of the August festival.

Unique Opportunity

"The Berkshire Music center presents a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working in music," Dr Koussevitzky has stated. "It will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for creative rest in summer. The music center is designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available to the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual."

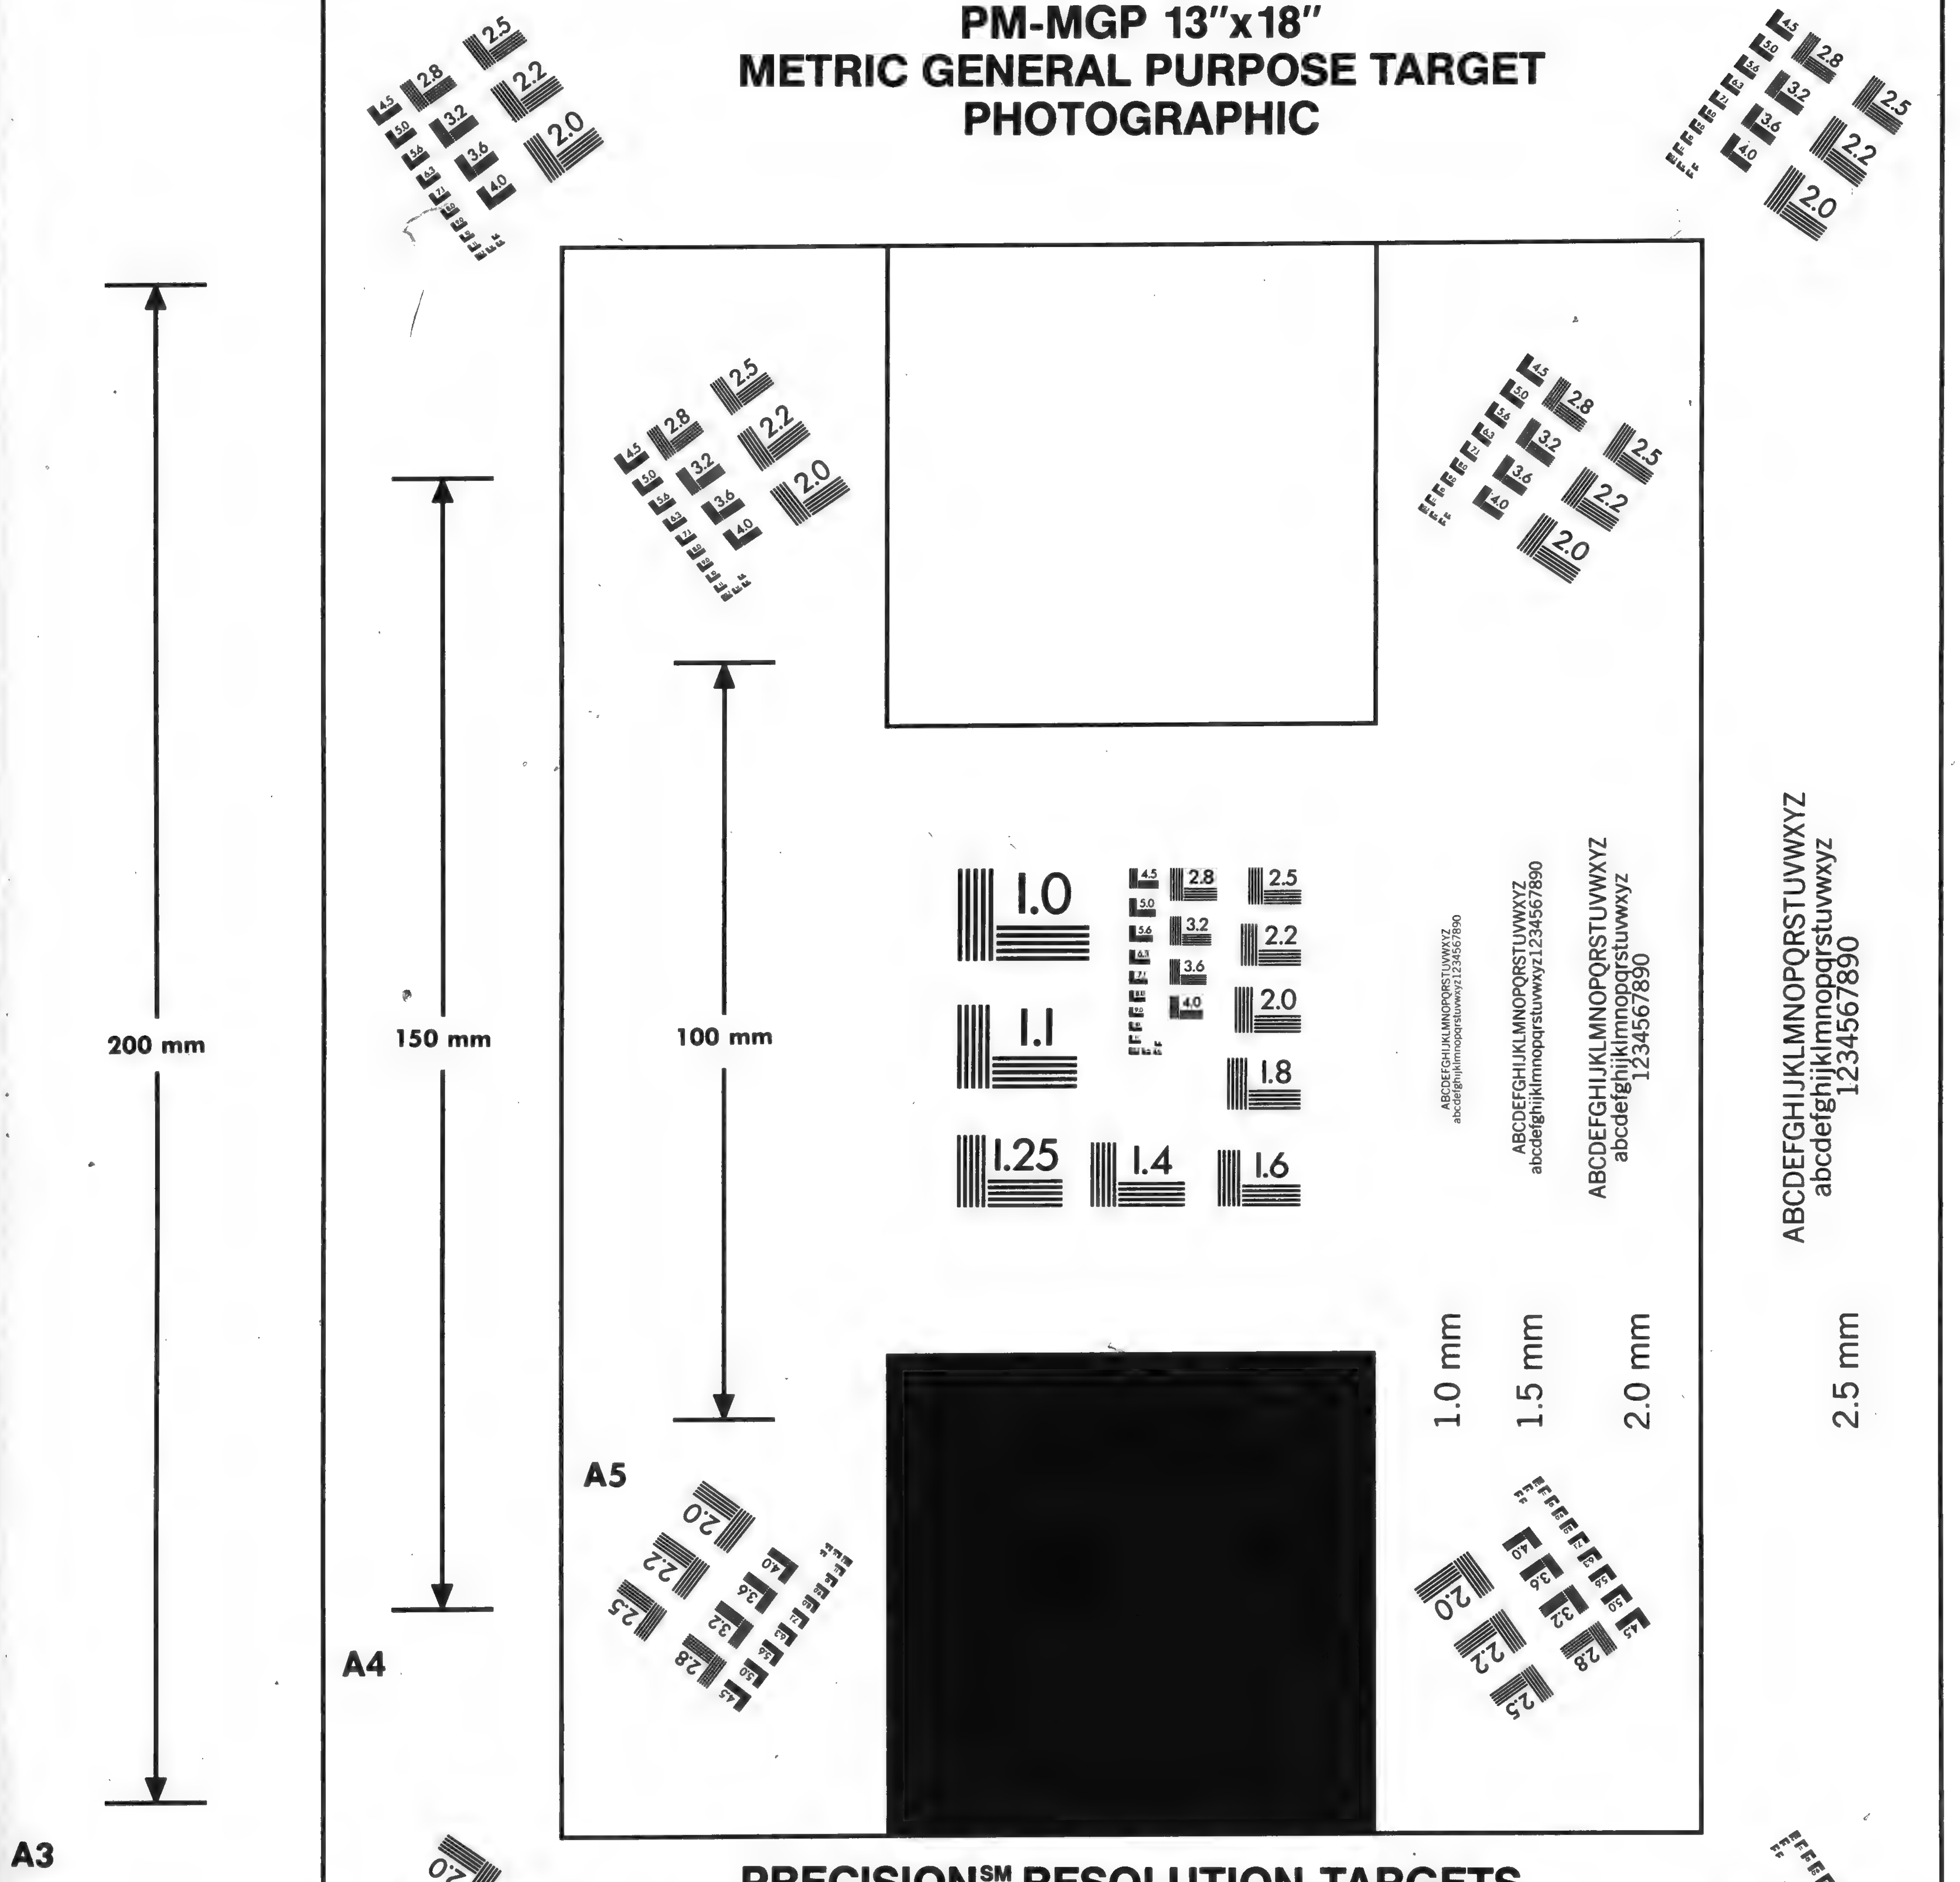
That students may have the advantage of contact with the truly elite of the musical world, a distinguished faculty has been assembled. Headed by Dr Koussevitzky and his assistant conductor, Richard Burgin of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the staff includes the contemporary composers, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music of Harvard university, and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times.

Assistants are Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, Cleveland Institute of Music; Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Howard Abell, head of the music department, Milton academy, and Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley college orchestras, while special lecturers include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music, Harvard

(Continued on Page 8-E)

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

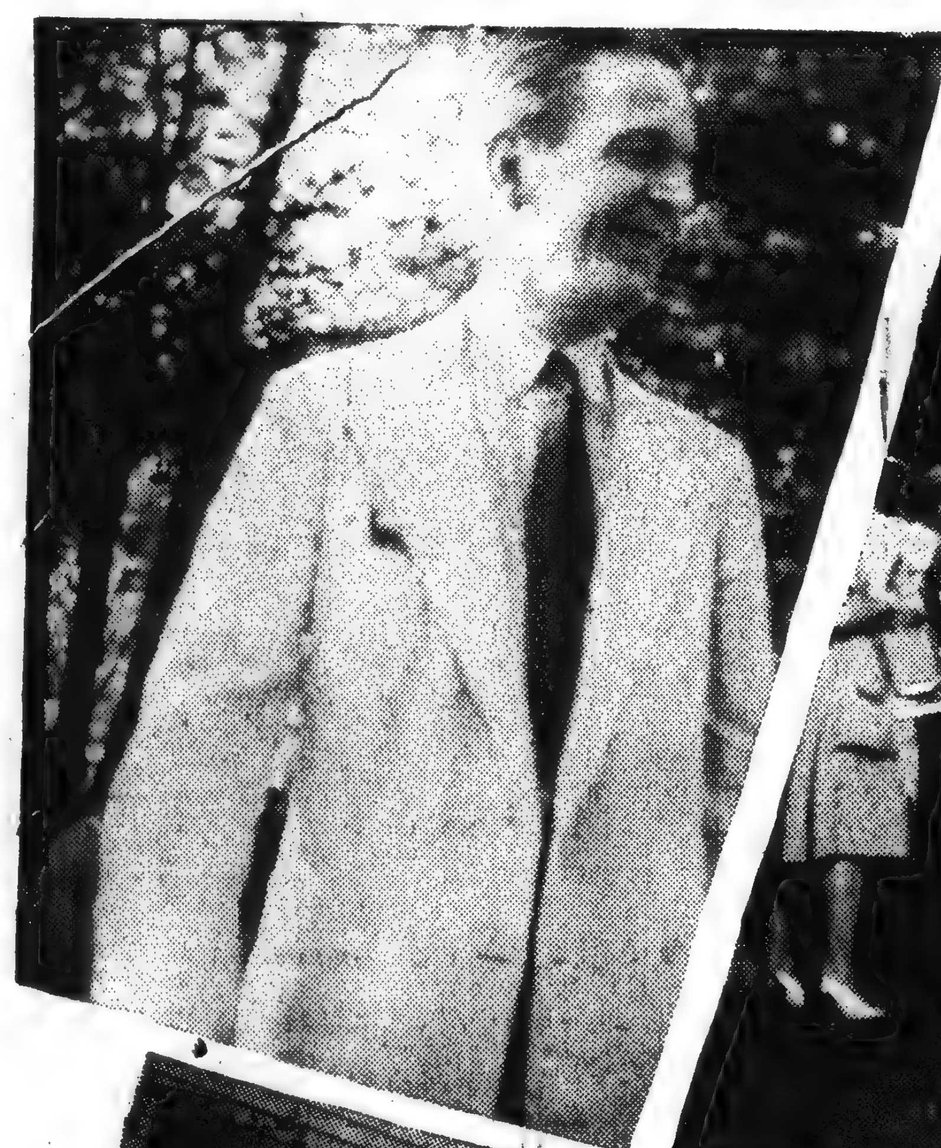
Books - Music - Art

Magazine Section

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

E

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: JULY 14, 1940



Strings, Horns And W
Amid The Pines Of Ta

Top left, Violinist Albert Spalding, among notables at opening exercises; top center, tea in the garden on the opening afternoon of the summer school; top right, at rehearsal in the Music shed; center left, students stop to visit outside administrative headquarters; center right, Dr Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Berkshire Music center; lower left, music under the trees; lower right, on the way to class.

Berkshire Music Center Opens Doors of Art To Gifted Youth

By WILLIAM HENRY WRIGHT

LENOX—There is nothing quite like it in all the world—and probably never has been—a student symphony orchestra of 65 youths and girls, most of them in their early twenties, with a youngster no older as conductor, playing major symphonic works to the critical ears of a great orchestra leader in the person of Serge Koussevitzky, and before contemporary composers and the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra; all of them ready to analyze and interpret, to counsel and explain with the rare deference of the musically elite striving to impart in an atmosphere of affectionate enthusiasm the inspiration and essence of their art to a new generation.

Such is the picture presented as the Berkshire Music center with an enrolment of 325 pupils gets under way at lovely Tanglewood, the now famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first sessions of a new type of school the influence of which on the music of America is beyond calculation.

Mingled Echoes

Across the cushiony lawns and from beneath the lordly trees where once walked the literary giants of notes of eloquent pianos. Down by the pools amid the hedges of the formal gardens an ambitious soprano mingles her morning scales with the lyric of the wild wood thrush, while over in the barn, once the haunt of fine horses and stiff-backed grooms, operatic arias are aerated from a half dozen upper rooms, while sturdy quartets resound simultaneously from remodeled stalls. And on this busy hive of music the beautiful blue-misted hills of Berkshire, basking in the July sun, smile down indulgently.

"You can't help but learn," said one enthusiastic pupil, a flute player, who had never before performed with a large orchestra, after the third time the group had played together. "There is the composer to analyze the score for us in a lecture first. And the Boston Symphony principals to coach us in the individual parts and Dr Koussevitzky to bring out all the points of interpretation and ensemble. They just build from the ground up. It's marvelous."

The composer referred to was Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, who composed an "Alleluia" for the inaugu-

the only work offered—there was Debussy and Brahms as well—the "Academic Overture" that utilizes the song to which have been put the rhythmic Latin "Gaudeamus igitur, juvenes dum sumus," familiar as an old college song. That youth now was partaking of rare joy was obvious. The exuberance and vim with which the strings bowed the vibrant strain brought a smile of approval from Dr Koussevitzky and his assistants.

Trial for Youth

Perhaps you think it is an easy thing for a young man scarcely out of his teens to mount the podium to lead a full orchestra with his audience made up of one of the world's greatest conductors, composers and musicians of the first rank and various interested auditors with trained and discriminating ears.

"I was so nervous the first time," one was overheard to say, "that I could hardly speak. My voice just tightened up so it was mostly a squeak."

derstand how all diffidence is speedily dissipated.

The orchestra occupies the stage of the shed where the festival of Boston symphony is now annually held, while the director sits at a table in the center aisle, assistants and principals grouped around him in the seats of the front rows. Scattered here and there amid the 5000 or more chairs of the giant shelter are various other auditors.

You look at the members of the orchestra. Their extreme youth impresses you. They are all in various states and stages of comfortable dress for a hot July day. Some are in natty sport suits, some in loose slacks, others in limp baggy apparel of a nondescript sort that looks as if it last felt the touch of a hot iron weeks ago. Here and there is a moccasioned foot and a trouser leg pulled high to show a tense seriousness and a desire to let no word of wisdom escape.

Practice and Criticism

The young man—his first name is Leonard and he is one of five applicants of exceptional promise accepted for the orchestral conducting course with 35 others enroled as observers—takes his place before the orchestra, raises his hands and the music begins.

A few bars and Dr Koussevitzy claps his hands and rises from his seat. The music stops as he walks with his slow measured step toward the platform.

"Lennie—Lennie—listen to me."

The young man bends low and there is a quiet consultation. Dr Koussevitzky returns to his seat and the music starts again.

The passage is repeated. Further progress is made. Then an-sizes. "Ask them, Lennie. Ask them."

Dr Koussevitzky returns to his desk. There is a smile on his face.

"The bow in the strings," he grins at his assistants. "How do you like that?"

And So On for Three Hours

And so it goes through nearly three hours of the long rehearsal from 9.30 until after 12, the fixed schedule for the orchestra on four mornings a week. Meantime, among other conductors and principals of the audience there is an instinctive beating of time with feet and hands and a mouthing of phrases as difficult runs are essayed. Now and then Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston symphony, rises and walks up and down before the bank of first violins like a papa bird watching the first flight of his fledglings. He calls one to the edge of the platform quiet word of advice.

Three young and ductors get their chan morning and at the encouraging pat on from Dr Koussevitz comes to his seat in th and receives his soft ment.

Mondays of each w over entirely to indiv
tion in the performanc the orchestral works
In the afternoon are voted to analysis, wh full program for th course, including, as tendance at all the
and rehearsals of the val.

Unique Opport

"The Berkshire Music
sents a unique opportu summer of living and music," Dr Koussev stated. "It will serve seek the best in music arts, who are anxious mind and personality t tact with the elite in a ture, and who long for c in summer. The music designed to lay specia upon those aspects of m cation concerned with col

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

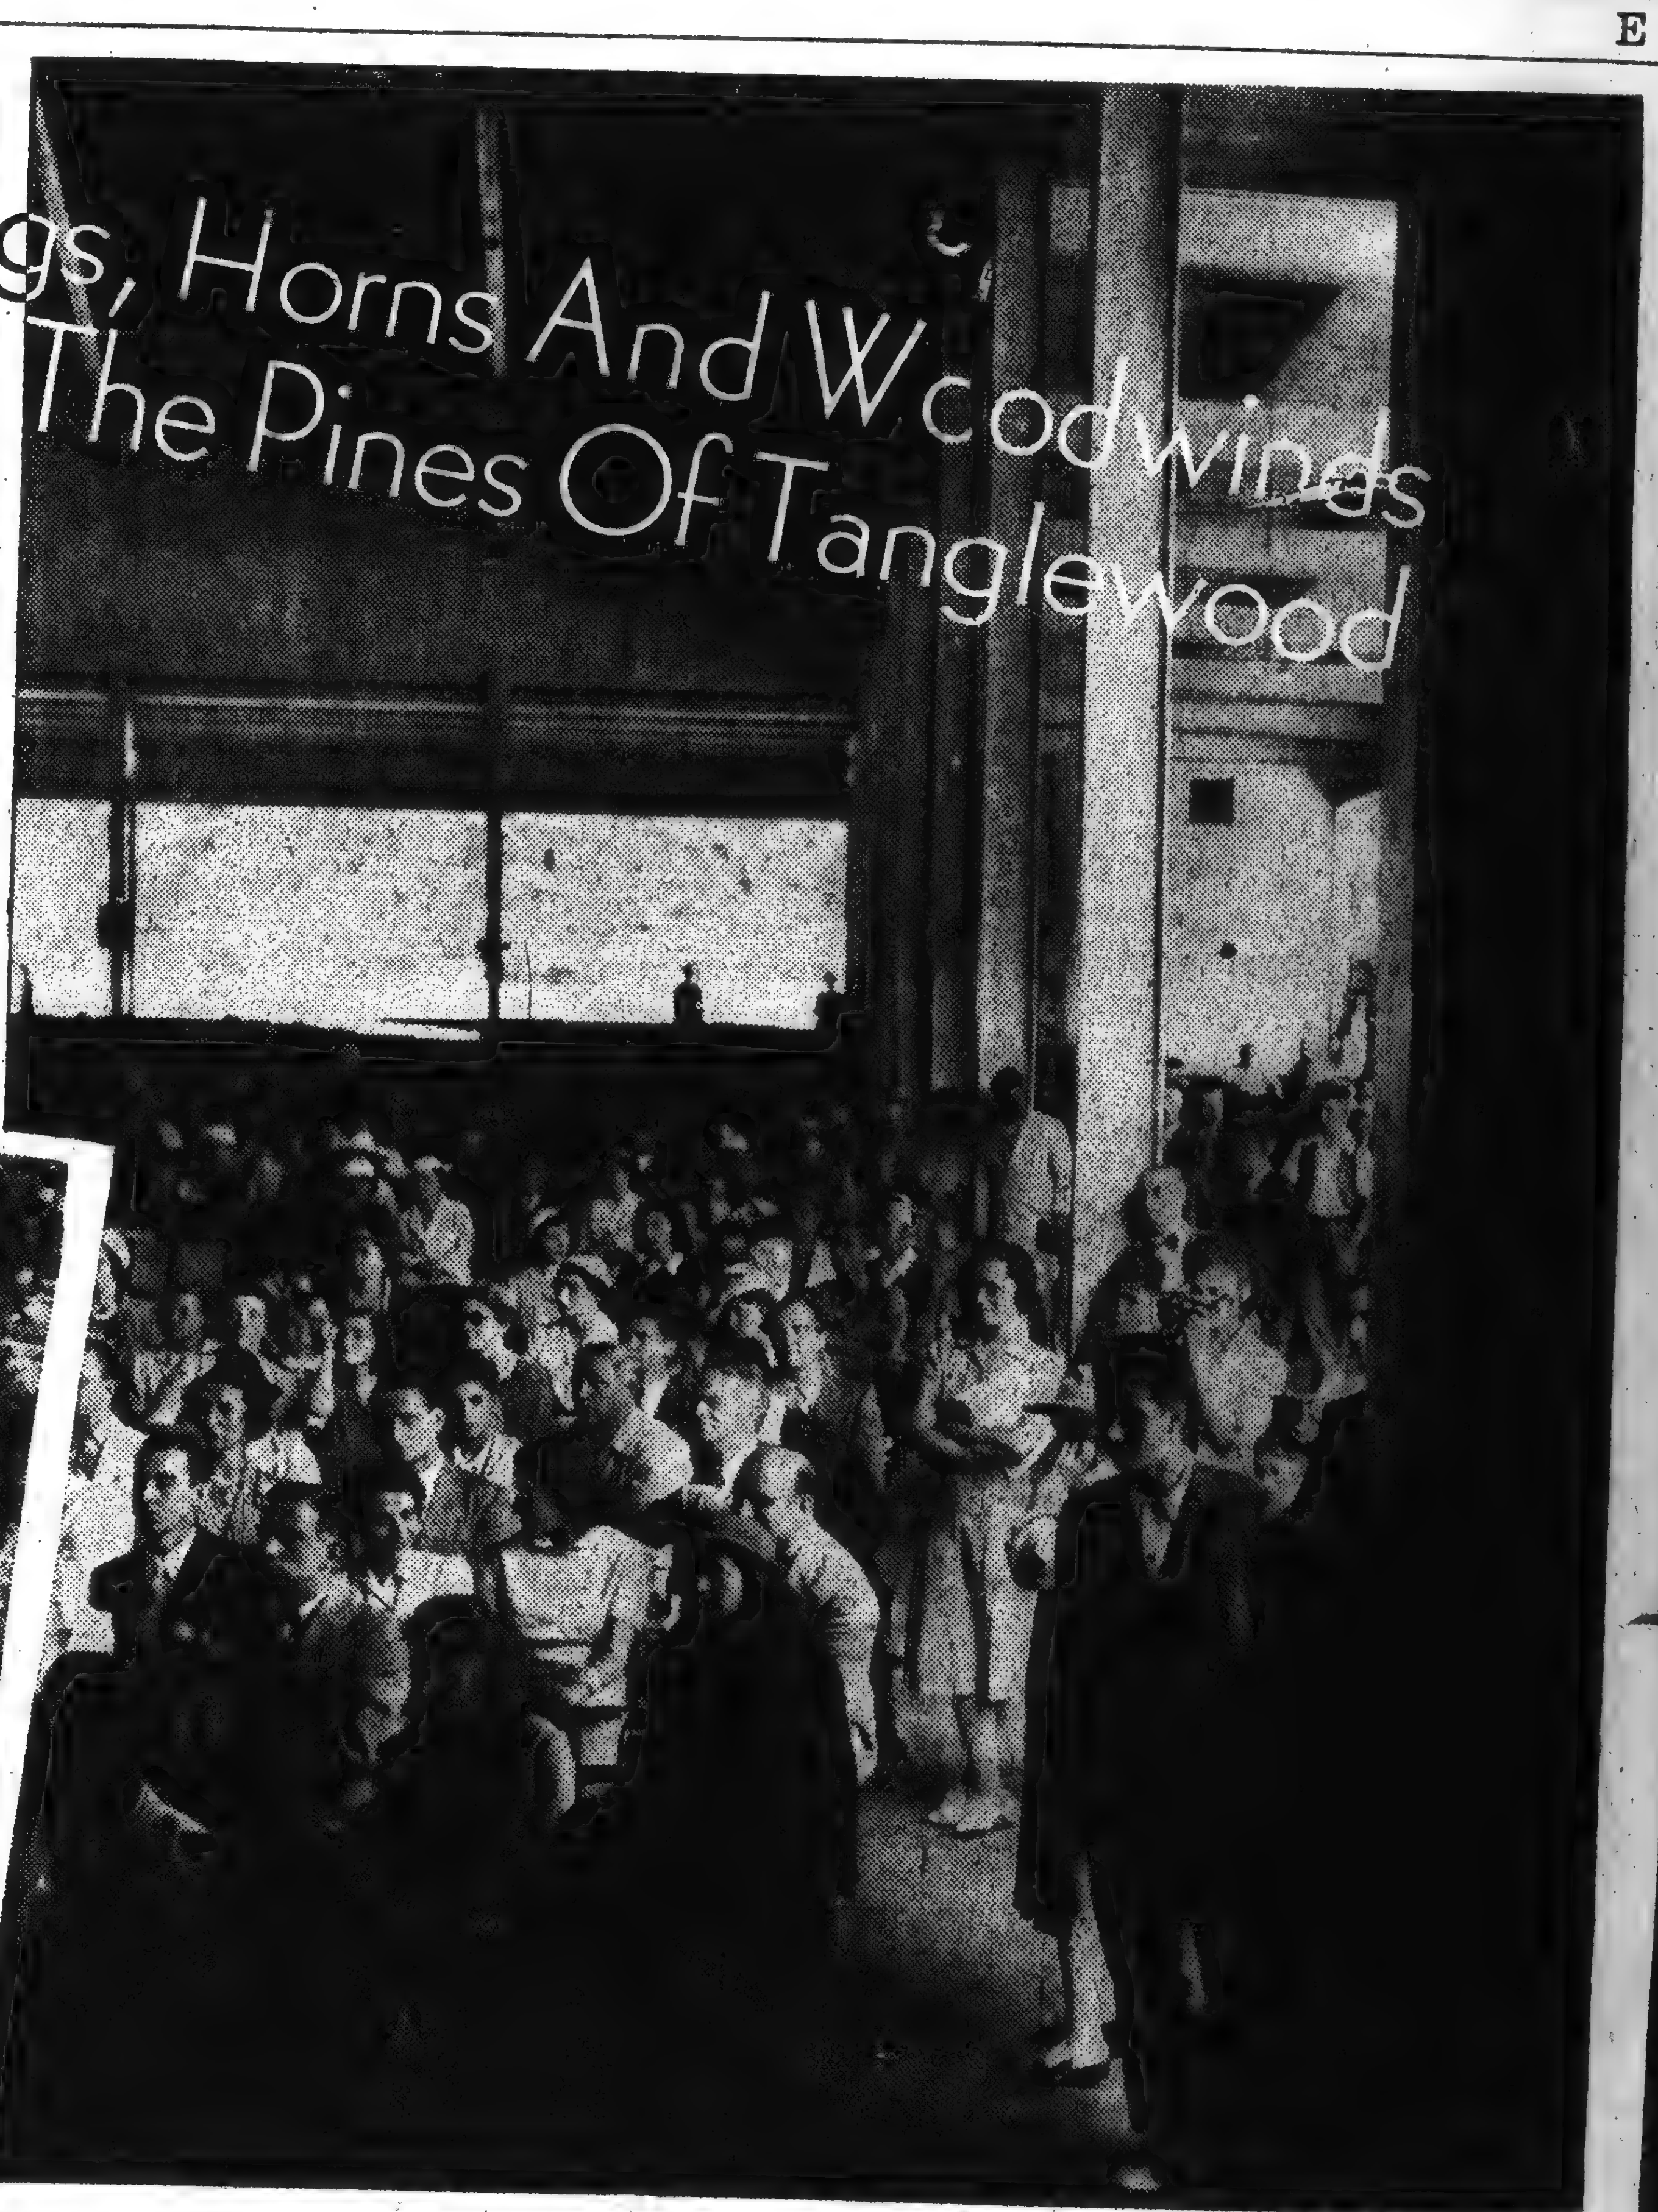
Books - Music - Art
Magazine Section

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

Special Features
RIVER FULL OF SALMON
AFFLECK RETIRES
THIMBLE ISLANDS

E
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: JULY 14, 1940
E

Strings, Horns And Woodwinds Amid The Pines Of Tanglewood



Top left, Violinist Albert Spalding, among notables at opening exercises; top center, tea in the garden on the opening afternoon of the summer school; top right, at rehearsal in the Music shed; center left, students stop to visit outside administrative headquarters; center right, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music center; lower left, music under the trees; lower right, on the way to class.

Berkshire Music Center Opens Doors of Art To Gifted Youth

y WILLIAM HENRY WRIGHT

ENOX—There is nothing quite like it in all the world—and probably never has been—a student symphony orchestra 65 youths and girls, most of n in their early twenties, with oungster no older as conductor, ing major symphonic works to critical ears of a great orches-leader in the person of Serge ssevitzky, and before contem-ry composers and the principals ie Boston Symphony orchestra; f them ready to analyze and in-ret, to counsel and explain with rare deference of the musically striving to impart in an at-here of affectionate enthusiasm nspiration and essence of their o a new generation.

ch is the picture presented as Berkshire Music center with an ment of 325 pupils gets under at lovely Tanglewood, the now us summer home of the Boston phony orchestra in the first ses- of a new type of school the nce of which on the music of ica is beyond calculation.

Mingled Echoes

ross the cushiony lawns and beneath the lordly trees where walked the literary giants of England—Emerson and es, Melville and Hawthorne notes of eloquent pianos. Down by the pools amid the hedges of the formal gardens an ambitious soprano mingles her morning scales with the lyric of the wild wood thrush, while over in the barn, once the haunt of fine horses and stiff-backed grooms, operatic arias are aerated from a half dozen upper rooms, while sturdy quartets resound simultaneously from remodeled stalls. And on this busy hive of music the beautiful blue-misted hills of Berkshire, basking in the July sun, smile down indulgently.

"You can't help but learn," said one enthusiastic pupil, a flute player, who had never before performed with a large orchestra, after the third time the group had played together. "There is the composer to analyze the score for us in a lecture first. And the Boston Symphony principals to coach us in the individual parts and Dr Koussevitzky to bring out all the points of interpretation and ens[illegible]. They just build from [illegible] up. It's marvelou[illegible]."

The compos[illegible] referred to was Randall Th[illegible] [illegible]or of the Curtis Institute of [illegible], who composed an "Alleluia" for the inauguration of [illegible] center. This was ren-

the only work offered—there was Debussy and Brahms as well—the "Academic Overture" that utilizes the song to which have been put the rhythmic Latin "Gaudeamus igitur, juvenes dum sumus," familiar as an old college song. That youth now was partaking of rare joy was obvious. The exuberance and vim with which the strings bowed the vibrant strain brought a smile of approval from Dr Koussevitzky and his assistants.

Trial for Youth

Perhaps you think it is an easy thing for a young man scarcely out of his teens to mount the podium to lead a full orchestra with his audience made up of one of the world's greatest conductors, composers and musicians of the first rank and various interested auditors with trained [illegible] discriminating ears.

"I was so nervous the first time," one was overheard to say, "that I could hardly speak. My voice just tightened up so it was mostly a squeak."

But to see him in action now

derstand how all diffidence is speedily dissipated.

The orchestra occupies the stage of the shed where the festival of Boston symphony is now annually held, while the director sits at a table in the center aisle, assistants and principals grouped around him in the seats of the front rows. Scattered here and there amid the 5000 or more chairs of the giant shelter are various other auditors.

You look at the members of the orchestra. Their extreme youth impresses you. They are all in various states and stages of comfortable dress for a hot July day. Some are in natty sport suits, some in loose slacks, others in limp baggy apparel of a nondescript sort that looks as if it last felt the touch of a hot iron weeks ago. Here and there is a moccasioned foot and a trouser leg pulled high to show a lean bare shank. Nearly all are tense seriousness and a desire to let no word of wisdom escape.

Practice and Criticism

The young man—his first name is Leonard and he is one of five applicants of exceptional promise accepted for the orchestral conducting course with 35 others enroled as observers—takes his place before the orchestra, raises his hands and the music begins.

A few bars and Dr Koussevitzky claps his hands and rises from his seat. The music stops as he walks with his slow measured step toward the platform.

"Lennie—Lennie—listen to me."

The young man bends low and there is a quiet consultation. Dr Koussevitzky returns to his seat and the music starts again.

The passage is repeated. Further progress is made. Then another interruption. The director rises.

sizes. "Ask them, Lennie. Ask them."

Dr Koussevitzky returns to his desk. There is a smile on his face.

"The bow in the strings," he grins at his assistants. "How do you like that?"

And So On for Three Hours

And so it goes through nearly three hours of the long rehearsal from 9.30 until after 12, the fixed schedule for the orchestra on four mornings a week. Meantime, among other conductors and principals of the audience there is an instinctive beating of time with feet and hands and a mouthing of phrases as difficult runs are essayed. Now and then Richard Burgin, concert-master of the Boston symphony, rises and walks up and down before the bank of first violins like a papa bird watching the first flight of his fledglings. He calls one to the edge of the platform and gives a quiet word of advice.

Three young and aspiring conductors get their chance during the morning and at the end there is an encouraging pat on the shoulder from Dr Koussevitzky as each comes to his seat in the center aisle and receives his soft-spoken comment.

Mondays of each week are given over entirely to individual instruction in the performance of parts of the orchestral works being studied. In the afternoon are lectures devoted to analysis, which makes a full program for the six-weeks' course, including, as it does, attendance at all the nine concerts and rehearsals of the August festival.

Unique Opportunity

"The Berkshire Music center presents a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working in music," Dr Koussevitzky has stated. "It will serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture, and who long for creative rest in summer. The music center is designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available to the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual."

That students may have the advantage of contact with the truly elite of the musical world, a distinguished faculty has been assembled. Headed by Dr Koussevitzky and his assistant conductor, Richard Burgin of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the staff includes the contemporary composers, Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music of Harvard university, and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times.

Assistants are Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, Cleveland Institute of Music; Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Howard Abell, head of the music department, Milton academy, and Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley college orchestras, while special lecturers include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music, Harvard

(Continued on Page 8-E)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

Books - Music - Art

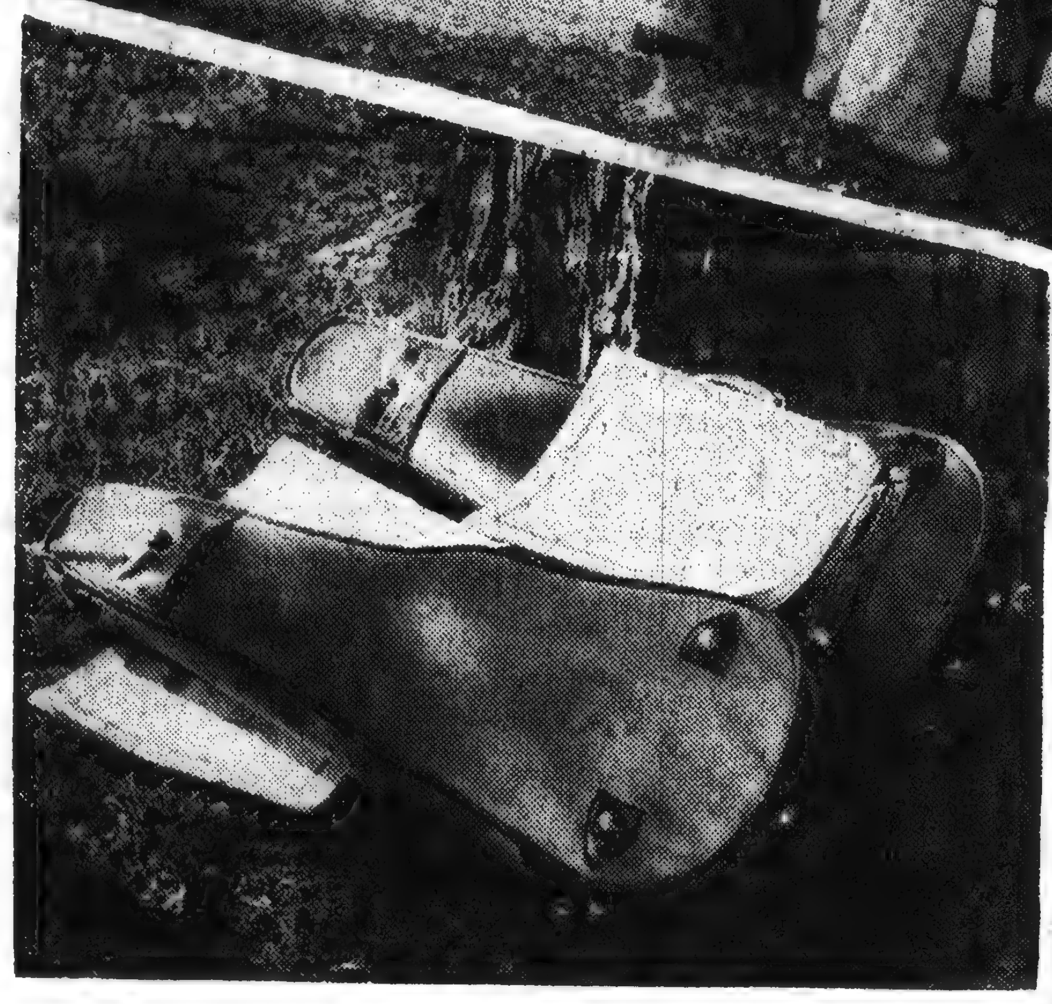
Magazine Section

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

E

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: JULY 14, 1940

Strings, Horns And
Amid The Pines Of T



Top left, Violinist Albert Spalding, among notables at opening exercises; top center, tea in the garden on the opening afternoon of the summer school; top right, ~~at rehearsal in the Music shed;~~ center left, students stop to visit outside administrative headquarters; center right, Dr Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Berkshire Music center; lower left, music under the trees; lower right, on the way to class.

Berkshire Music Center Opens Doors of Art To Gifted Youth

By WILLIAM HENRY WRIGHT

LENOX—There is nothing quite like it in all the world—and probably never has been—a student symphony orchestra of 65 youths and girls, most of them in their early twenties, with a youngster no older as conductor, playing major symphonic works to the critical ears of a great orchestra leader in the person of Serge Koussevitzky, and before contemporary composers and the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra; all of them ready to analyze and interpret, to counsel and explain with the rare deference of the musically elite striving to impart in an atmosphere of affectionate enthusiasm the inspiration and essence of their art to a new generation.

Such is the picture presented as the Berkshire Music center with an enrolment of 325 pupils gets under way at lovely Tanglewood, the now famous summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the first sessions of a new type of school the influence of which on the music of America is beyond calculation.

Mingled Echoes

Across the cushiony lawns and from beneath the lordly trees where once walked the literary giants of New England—Emerson and Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne, guests of the Tappan family now comes in the dew of the summer morn the bowing of fiddlers, the piping of flutes, the flourishes of horns. From the spacious rooms of Tanglewood house issue the rippling notes of eloquent pianos. Down by the pools amid the hedges of the formal gardens an ambitious soprano mingles her morning scales with the lyric of the wild wood thrush, while over in the barn, once the haunt of fine horses and stiff-backed grooms, operatic arias are aerated from a half dozen upper rooms, while sturdy quartets resound simultaneously from remodeled stalls. And on this busy hive of music the beautiful blue-misted hills of Berkshire, basking in the July sun, smile down indulgently.

"You can't help but learn," said one enthusiastic pupil, a flute player, who had never before performed with a large orchestra, after the third time the group had played together. "There is the composer to analyze the score for us in a lecture first. And the Boston Symphony principals to coach us in the individual parts and Dr Koussevitzky to bring out all the points of interpretation and ensemble. They just build from the ground up. It's marvelous."

The composer [illegible] was Randall Thompson, [illegible] of the Curtis Institute of [illegible], who composed an "Alleluia" for the inauguration [illegible]. This was rendered [illegible] at the opening [illegible]. Mr Thompson sat at the [illegible] of Dr Koussevitzky as one of the Thompson orchestral pieces was played at the third rehearsal of the institute orchestra in the big shed. But his was not the only work offered—there was Debussy and Brahms as well—the "Academic Overture" that utilizes the song to which have been put the rhythmic Latin "Gaudeamus igitur, juvenes dum sumus," familiar as an old college song. That youth now was partaking of rare joy was obvious. The exuberance and vim with which the strings bowed the vibrant strain brought a smile of approval from Dr Koussevitzky and his assistants.

Trial for Youth

Perhaps you think it is an easy thing for a young man scarcely out of his teens to mount the podium to lead a full orchestra with his audience made up of one of the world's greatest conductors, composers and musicians of the first rank and various interested auditors with trained and discriminating ears.

"I was so nervous the first time," one was overheard to say, "that I could hardly speak. My voice just tightened up so it was mostly a squeak."

But to see him in action now, with the orchestra only three days old, you would think he was born to the podium, such is his ease of manner before the distinguished company looking on. And once you note Dr Koussevitzky's manner toward his ardent disciples you understand how all diffidence is speedily dissipated.

The orchestra occupies the stage of the shed where the festival of Boston symphony is now annually held, while the director sits at a table in the center aisle, assistants and principals grouped around him in the seats of the front rows. Scattered here and there amid the 5000 or more chairs of the giant shelter are various other auditors.

You look at the members of the orchestra. Their extreme youth impresses you. They are all in various states and stages of comfortable dress for a hot July day. Some are in natty sport suits, some in loose slacks, others in limp baggy apparel of a nondescript sort that looks as if it last felt the touch of a hot iron weeks ago. Here and there is a moccasioned foot and a trouser leg pulled high to show a lean bare shank. Nearly all are coatless. Sprinkled among the sleek and city-bred appear the tumpled sorrel-topped heads of youngsters who give the appearance of just having tumbled out of a haymow or left the plow handle to grab a cello or a bull fiddle. But in the eyes of all is an expression of intense seriousness and a desire to let no word of wisdom escape.

Practice and Criticism

The young man—his first name is Leonard and he is one of five applicants of exceptional promise accepted for the orchestral conducting course with 35 others enroled as observers—takes his place before the orchestra, raises his hands and the music begins.

A few bars and Dr Koussevitzy claps his hands and rises from his seat. The music stops as he walks with his slow measured step toward the platform.

"Lennie—Lennie—listen to me."

The young man bends low and there is a quiet consultation. Dr Koussevitzky returns to his seat and the music starts again.

The passage is repeated. Further progress is made. Then another interruption. The director rises. He advances toward the violins.

"The bow on the strings. It must not be lifted," he says. "That is the only way you will get it. Zing—zing—zing," he motions with his arms. "The bow on the strings. The bow in the strings," he emphasizes. "Ask them, Lennie. Ask them."

Dr Koussevitzky returns to his desk. There is a smile on his face.

"The bow in the strings," he grins at his assistants. "How do you like that?"

And So On for Three Hours

And so it goes through nearly three hours of the long rehearsal from 9.30 until after 12, the fixed schedule for the orchestra on four mornings a week. Meantime, among other conductors and principals of the audience there is an instinctive beating of time with feet and hands and a mouthing of phrases as difficult runs are essayed. Now and then Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston symphony, rises and walks up and down before the bank of first violins like a papa bird watching the first flight of his fledglings. He calls one to the edge of the platf quiet word of advic

Three young an ductors get their c ~~morning and at the~~ encouraging pat on from Dr Koussev comes to his seat in and receives his s
ment.

Mondays of each over entirely to in tion in the perform the orchestral work
In the afternoon a voted to analysis, full program for course, including, a tendance at all the
and rehearsals of th val.

Unique Oppo

"The Berkshire Mu
sents a unique oppo summer of living a music," Dr Kous stated. "It will se seek the best in mus arts, who are anxiou mind and personality tact with the elite i ture, and who long fo in summer. The mu designed to lay spe upon those aspects of cation concerned with 19

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
JUN 7 - 1940

Go to Berkshire

Stanley Harris, viola, 12612 Superior Ave., and Donald Wuliger, tympani, 2116 Hampstead Rd., Cleveland Heights, students of the Cleveland Institute of Music, have been appointed to the Berkshire Summer Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Pittsfield, Mass.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
JUN 30 1940

At Central City

WITH music-lovers' eyes cast sorrowfully away from Salzburg and Malvern this year, festivals in this country are expecting greater patronage than ever before. Among them is Central City in whose famous Opera House Smetana's "The Bartered Bride" will be performed from July 6 to July 27.

For the ninth annual festival, Frank St. Leger is taking over the celebrated old place, built in 1878 in Colorado's famous gold-mining town.

For his production of the Smetana opera, St. Leger has hired these stars of the Metropolitan: Josephine Antoine, who, incidentally, will be returning to her native state to sing the leading role; Louis D'Angelo, Thelma Votipka, Lucielle Browning, Norman Cordon, Helen Olheim and George Rasely.

* * *

Klein Wins Award

A SCHOLARSHIP in advanced composition at "Tangelwood," the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been awarded John M. Klein, local organist. Mr. Klein is one of five pupils who have been accepted for study with Aaron Copeland, Paul Hindemith and Sergei Koussevitzky. The school at "Tanglewood" will be in progress during July and August.

Mr. Klein was awarded the scholarship for the excellence of his "Symphony for the Dance," for large orchestra and chorus. It was performed here last year at one of the Stella Becker dance recitals.

* * *

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER OPENS DOORS TO GIFTED YOUTH

(Continued From Page 1-E)

university; Abram Chasins, composer and pianist; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music, National Recreation association. In addition, besides Concertmaster Burgin, are 13 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma at the piano and E. Power Biggs at the organ. The principals will be assisted by 14 additional members of the orchestra. Thus students will have the benefit of coaching in ensemble playing by experts in all the important instruments of the orchestra.

Scope of the Course

In a short summer program it is obvious that little effort can be made to advance the technical proficiency of the individual, and for the most part acceptance of students has been limited to those having had some previous experience in singing or playing. It is because most music schools focus attention on the mastery of a given instrument by the individual, that the Berkshire Music center, emphasizing interpretation and the acquisition of a penetrating and vivid conception of the music to be played, lays claim to a program supplementary rather than competitive in its nature. And so the students at Tanglewood may be said to be already well along on the high road to artistic excellence and seeking new inspiration and polish from master hands.

But in order to allow for a wide range of talents and capacities, the music center has been divided into two sections, one the institute for advanced study and the other the academy. The institute is naturally limited to students of experience and proven ability and has an enrolment of 140. The curriculum has four phases, a class in orchestral conducting, an orchestra of skilled players, a class in opera dramatics and a class in advanced composition.

For the class in orchestral conducting, Dr Koussevitzky has chosen five students of exceptional promise and thorough musical training to receive his personal attention. Some 35 others have been accepted as auditors in the course. The pupils have individual coaching in the technic of conducting and advice in interpretation, particularly as it applies to the music which is being studied in the school. They have the opportunity to conduct in rehearsals or performances of the institute or academy orchestras, chamber groups and the academy chorus.

Works Chosen for Study

Only the technically competent have been chosen for the institute orchestra of 65 musicians. It is assumed that each pupil is able to occupy the first desk in his section of the orchestra or to play any part in a chamber music ensemble where his instrument is represented. Twenty-one orchestral and chamber works ranging from Bach and Beethoven to Hindemith and Stravinsky have been chosen for study and practice. The orchestra is under the tutelage of Dr Koussevitzky and other conductors. At times, a Boston symphony string player may sit beside the student, or a wind player take the second part. There is a study of parts in conferences with instructors along with group rehearsals while all is supplemented by lectures on the structure, style and period of the various works.

The opera dramatics class under Dr Herbert Graf, assisted by Boris Goldovsky, has a group of selected students admitted by examination while a larger number have qualified for admission as auditors and observers. The course aims to provide advanced young singers with further opportunity for practical experience in the musical and dramatic interpretation of roles and the study consists of individual and ensemble training as well as actual stage performances. A stage has been erected beneath the lordly pines of Tanglewood where rehearsals can take place and at the end of the course certain scenes from operas will be performed.

Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith conduct the six-weeks' course in composition, limited to 12 students of exceptional talent. There is one individual lesson weekly, two classes weekly in orchestration and two classes weekly in form and analysis. Conference with the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra representing each type of instrument will be held from time to time, and compositions of the pupils will be played by various instrumental and choral ensembles of the school. Two formal concerts of student works written at the school will be given at the end of the course. In addition to the course in composition, seminars in harmony and counterpoint are offered to students already grounded in the fundamentals.

Academy Requirements

For the academy requirements are not so exacting and all that is asked is an intelligent interest in music together with some previous experience in singing or playing. Naturally it is the largest section of the center, having 185 enroled. Its central idea is the constant participation in music through singing or playing by every member, and to make this possible a chorus and a second orchestra have been organized, while selected groups are offered an opportunity to work in the chamber music field.

The main occupation of the chorus under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth is the preparation of the B minor Mass of Bach for performance with the Boston Symphony orchestra during the last week of the festival. But eight other choral works have been selected for study. Membership in the academy orchestra is open to all students playing orchestral instruments.

The orchestra meets five times a week and will prepare two formal programs. It will be assisted occasionally by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. There are two general sessions of the academy each day occupying the greater part of the mornings and afternoons, the program being about equally divided between lectures and concerts and singing and playing.

On two afternoons a week there is folk dancing. No formal classes are organized but the dancing is open to all members of the music center. Country, Morris and American square dances are taught. By way of special classes there is one in choral conducting under Mr Woodworth and another in music in the schools under Howard Abell in which there is a study of the basic principles of the teaching of music in the schools and of the materials available for school music. Lectures are given by men prominent in the leadership of school, college and community music.

No diploma or academic credit will be given for work in the institute or academy, but, it is felt, the center will serve as a fountain source from which students will carry to homes scattered about the country the inspiration that will come from six weeks of close association with some of the present day masters of music.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
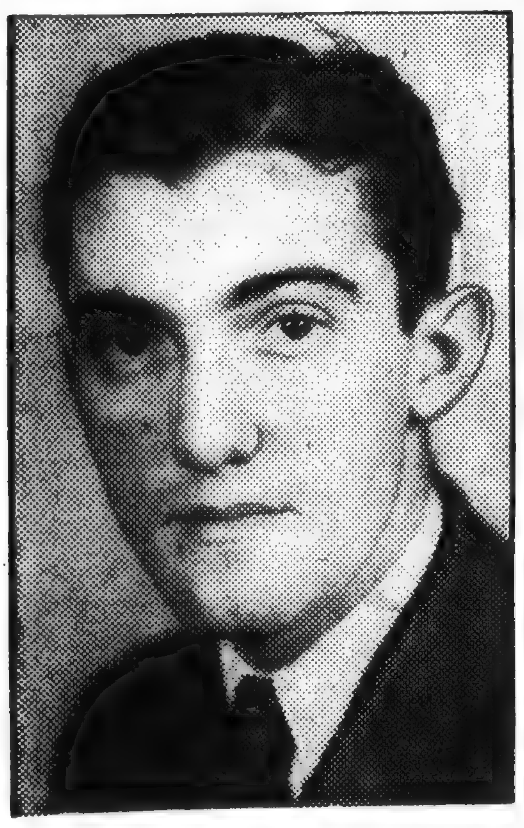
DISPATCH
JUN 30 1940

Scholarship



JOHN M. KLEIN has been awarded a scholarship in Advanced Composition in The Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood," the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Massachusetts. He will study with Aaron Copland, Paul Hindemith, and Sergi Koussevitsky. During the first three weeks in August the Boston Symphony will be rehearsing and playing concerts daily. Aaron Copland is best known for his "Music for the Theater" and "Salon de Mexicana." Mr. Klein was awarded the scholarship on submitting his "Symphony for the Dance" for large orchestra and chorus.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
JUN 30 1940

A scholarship was awarded to Donald Hultgren by the Boston Symphony orchestra to study opera this summer with Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company. Mr. Donald Hultgren is a voice pupil from the studio of Mr. George Hultgren.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUN 30 1940

20

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

JUN 15 1940

Musical Affairs

Music Festivals Are Refugees From Europe

MONTREAL, usually far from lucky in matters of music, can congratulate itself on the fact that it is still possible to hold a musical festival here. Ever since the last war, and still more in the past few years, the number of festivals in Europe has been increasing at a surprising rate This was particularly true of Germany, including Austria, and Italy, where the festivals were officially encouraged as a means of gathering money from tourists, for purposes which we all can now see. The Salzburg Festival, which in its beginnings was a purely musical and dramatic affair, faded badly after the Nazi occupation of Austria, but it still went on and many others were added to it, till it seemed as if there could hardly be a town of more than the smallest importance in Germany which had not its festival and did not invite the foreigner, with money to spend, to visit it. Switzerland and Italy followed suit, and Florence tried hard to take the place of Salzburg, with its list of conductors and performers purged of all who were not Nazis or Fascists.

* * *

EUROPEAN festivals may be considered to be dead, with little likelihood of being born again for many years. In England the annual Three Choirs Festival, which has been going on for about two hundred years, should have begun at the beginning of September, and had to be cancelled at the last moment. It is now only on this continent that musicians and music lovers can still get together, and, by doing so, find something more comforting than war news to think about. The true festival spirit takes some stirring up in times like the present, but this is in itself a healthy exercise, and many people have done it, with a good deal of success, in Montreal this week. This was not made easier by the change of place which had to be made in connection with this year's Montreal Festival. A musical festival should, to be at its best, be something of a holiday, and the fact of going out to St. Laurent and having lawns and village streets to walk on in intervals of the concerts, made the music seem something quite different from what it is in churches or halls in the city. The concerts of this week's festival, however good they are, cannot seem quite as good as those of the first four Montreal Festivals; but that is no reason why these festivals should not continue and we may be thankful that they still can do so.

* * *

THE extinction of the European festivals should give Americans good reasons for encouraging their home products, and they still have plenty of such things to visit. The principal festival for people in the north-east part of the continent, and perhaps for the time being the most important musical festival in the world, is the Berkshire Festival, which will, for its seventh year, be given in August near Stockbridge, Mass., almost next door to Montreal. In three successive weeks, from August 1st to the 15th, three series, of three concerts each, are to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. A surprising collection of the biggest orchestral and choral music is to be given in these nine concerts. The first series is the most conservative, with six symphonies, ranging from Mozart and Beethoven to Sibelius and the American composer, Harris. In the second series Tchaikovsky's centenary is to be celebrated; each concert will contain one of his symphonies, but two of Beethoven's symphonies and his violin concerto are also in the list. The third series begins with Bach's Mass in B minor, which will be followed by more symphonies, including works by Mozart and Haydn as well as Prokofieff and Hindemith. There are many other good things in the program of these concerts, and this is only one, if the biggest, of many such festivals to be given this summer in the United States. Music seems to be following the Monroe Doctrine and "calling in the new world to redress the balance of the old."

H. P. B.

Band Concerts On Sunday

Under the terms of the will of the late C. S. Campbell, K.C., three Free Band Concerts will be given tomorrow, Sunday, night, under arrangements made by the Royal Trust Company, trustee.

At Lafontaine Park the band of the Victoria Rifles of Canada, directed by Lieut. Jos. L. Gariepy, will play the following program:

Marche Triomphale (Lt. Gariepy); Valse, Solitude (Jos. Leurent); Cornet solo, Je me souviens (Lt. Gariepy); South of the Border (Leo Feist); V.R.C. Boys (Jos. Laurent); Soldiers of the King (Hume); Atlantis Suite (Safraner); Colonel Bogey (Alford).

* * *

At Fletcher's Field the Band of The Black Watch (R.H.R.) of Canada, under the direction of Capt. H. G. Jones, Director of Music, will play the following program:

(1) March, "On the Air" (Goldmann); (2) Overture, "Raymond" (Thomas); (3) Waltz, "Wedding of the Winds" (Hall); (4) Scottish selection, "Robert Bruce" (Bonnisseau); (5) Fantasia, "Col. Bogey on Parade" (Alford); (6) Cornet duet, selected soloists, Bds. M. Interlino and Bds. E. Moorhouse; (7) Selection, "M.M.S. Pinafore" (Sullivan); (8) March, "The Monarch' (Smith).

* * *

At Jarry Park, the band of Les Fusiliers Mont Royal, under the direction of Capt. J. J. Goulet, Director of Music, will play the following program:

(1) March, "Prince Beaudoin" (Capt. J. J. Goulet); (2) Valse, "L'Heure Supreme" (Lotter); (3) Overture, "Cavalerie Legere (Suppe); (4) Descriptive, "Anvil Polka" (Parton); (5) Redova, "Charmant Bouquet" (Gavenne); (6) March, "U.S.A." (A. Rosey); (7) Intermezzo. "Moonlight Dance" (L. Friedman); (8) Selection, "Bohemian Girl" (Balfe); (9) Original, "Bi-Bo-Ba" (Hermans); (10) Fantaisie, "La Hongroise" (Michiels).

Concerts Begin On Mountain

The summer season of orchestral concerts at the Lookout on the top of the Mountain will begin next Thursday evening, June 20th, and some important changes are being made in the arrangements of this year's concerts.

A concert will be given every week on Thursday evening, if the weather is favorable. In the event of bad weather on Thursday, the concert will be postponed to Friday evening, when it will be given, in any case, either outside at the Lookout or inside the Mountain Chalet, according to the weather. To prevent people from going to the top of the Mountain for nothing, the decision as to whether the concert will or will not be given on the Thursday evening will be broadcast on that evening at 7 o'clock, over stations C.B.C. and C.B.M.

Wilfred Pelletier will conduct the first concert of this, as of the preceding seasons. The second concert is to be conducted by Fabien Sivitzky, a nephew of the famous Serge Koussevitzky and conductor of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra. A Swiss conductor, Walter Ducloux, will conduct the third concert.

There will be a soloist at every concert in this summer season; a list of the soloists who are engaged will be ready shortly.

,nolfgghid- ?PmHCrl'5Ni h t mm

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUN 15 1940

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, presented annually at Tanglewood, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open August 1 and close August 18.

Three week-end series of concerts will be presented during the 1940 session instead of the customary two of former years. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct, and the following soloists are scheduled to appear; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and John Lefranc, violist, in Strauss' "Don Quixote;" Jesu Maria Sanroma, pianist, in the Stravinsky "Capriccio;" Albert Spalding, in the Beethoven "Concerto in D" for violin; Elizabeth Schumann, William Hain, Viola Silva and Alexander Kipnis, vocalists, in Bach's "Mass in B Minor," and Dorothy Maynor, who is to sing Beethoven's "Adelaide."

This year will see the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center, a six-week school with courses in all branches of music.

* * *

Arturo Toscanini will return to conduct his fourth consecutive series of concerts with the NBC Symphony Orchestra next season. The Italian conductor will direct fourteen concerts, the first in Carnegie Hall on Nov. 23. The concerts of Dec. 28, Feb. 22 and April 19 also will be given in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Toscanini will make six apearances with the NBC Symphony between Nov. 23 and Dec. 28, four between Feb. 1 and Feb. 22 and four between March 29 and April 19.

The conductors who will share the series with Mr. Toscanini next season are Hans Wilhelm Steinberg, former conductor of the Palestine Symphony Orchestra; Alfred Wallenstein, musical director of the Mutual Broadcasting System, and Georg Szell, former conductor of the Berlin Staatsoper.

The first concert of the organization's season will be heard on Oct. 12, starting a series of six which will be presented under Mr. Steinberg's direction and will end on Nov. 16. Mr. Wallenstein will direct the concerts of Jan. 4, 11, 18 and 28, and Mr. Szell those of March 1, 8, 15 and 22.

* * *

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 23 1940

Greater Cleveland Music Notes

Harold E. Matthews and Maldwyn Bell, tenor soloists, will feature the opening concert at Cain Park Theater at 8:15 tonight with the Orpheus Male Chorus under Dr. Charles D. Dawe. Also appearing in the concert, which like the others of the nine-week series to come will be free to the public, will be the boys' choir of St. Ann's Church . . . The Cleveland Children's Symphony Orchestra, with Hyman Goldin as director, has scheduled a junior musicians' contest in composition, with a prize of $25 for the best composition for any solo instrument, vocal solo, group of instruments, orchestra, band or chorus written by a junior musician of 15 or under. The contest closes Aug. 15. Judges will be Arthur Quimby, curator of music of the Cleveland Museum of Art; Melville Smith of W. R. U. and Dr. Albert Riemenschneider and Carl Schluer of the Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory. Manuscripts should be sent to Goldin at 3741 E. 153d Street.

* * *

Robert Weiskopf, 3976 Washington Boulevard, Cleveland Heights, has been selected to study conducting under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer . . . Four Cleveland Institute of Music students who will study opera at the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., for six weeks this summer include Marjorie Phelps, New Amsterdam Hotel; Mary Van Kirk, 3054 Yorkshire Road, Cleveland Heights; Marjorie Martin, 13721 Earlwood Road N. E., and James Meena, 1448 Holmden Avenue S. W. . . . Mrs. Charles S. Schneider is having the last recital of the season today at 7 p. m. at her residence, 3099 Chadbourne Road, Shaker Heights . . . Pupils of Anne Taborsky will present a piano recital Saturday at 3 p. m. at Steinway Hall, the Halle Bros Co. . . . Margaret E. Nyerges will present her piano pupils in a recital Tuesday night at Lakewood Masonic Temple.

* * *

Through the membership of Prof. Arthur Shepherd in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the summer session of Western Reserve University is able to present two lectures free to the public Tuesday and Thursday at 2:10 p. m. in Eldred Hall by S. Stephenson Smith, educational counselor for the society, on "Ballad and Chamber Music" and "Bernard Shaw as a Showman."

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST

JUN 15 1940

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano Elizabeth [redacted] soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

* * *

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUN 15 1940

Berkshire

The famed Boston Orchestra under Director Serge Koussevitzky presents Bach's B Minor Mass, with Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. Eight other programs of symphonic music are scheduled in the festival period, August 1 to 18, with Dorothy Maynor, Albert Spalding, Gregory Piatigorsky and Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloists.

Week in Music:

Sunday, June 16

5:15—Ludwig Lenel, organ recital, Cleveland Museum of Art.

7:30—Operatic Concert, Engineers' Auditorium.

Wednesday, June 19

8:30 Summer Pop Concert, Rudolph Ringwall directing, Samuel Dushkin, violinist, Public Hall.

Friday, June 21

8:30—Summer Pop Concert, Rudolph Ringwall directing, Annamary Dickey, soprano, Public Hall.

Saturday, June 22

8:30—Summer Pop Concert, Rudolph Ringwall directing, Boris Goldovsky, pianist, Public Hall.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUN 16 1940

Akron Opera Guild Looking For Don Jose; Has Chosen Other 'Carmen' Principals

THE AKRON OPERA GUILD, INC., preparing for two performances of Bizet's "Carmen" the coming season, announces that all principals have been selected with the exception of the tenor who will sing the role of Don Jose.

Rehearsals will continue through June, will be discontinued in July and August and will be resumed in September, C. Neil Starr, guild president, announces.

Dates of the "Carmen" performances have not been announced. Principals for the first night will be Jessica Freeman as Carmen; Pearl Irene Crooks as Micaela; Lillian Wilkinson as Frasquita; Clara Ann Stewart as Mercedes; Harold Anderson as Escamillo; Frank Brenneman as Morales and Dancaire; Chris Hansen as Remandado, and Don Allebach as Zuniga.

Those for the second night will be Grace Rankin as Carmen; Lorena Whittemore as Micaela; Phyllis Brenneman as Freasquita; Geraldine Evans as Mercedes; Brenneman as Escamillo; Charles Anderson as Morales; Harold Anderson as Dancaire; Hansen as Remendado, and Allebach as Zuniga.

A large chorus also has been rehearsing for months, to give color and variety to the numbers by the cigaret girls, gypsies, smugglers and soldiers.

Starr announces that auditions will continue for all singers interested in opera. A great deal of exceptional talent has been uncovered, not only among the principals but in the chorus as well.

Boris Goldovsky is director of the forthcoming opera guild performances, and Maurice Goldman is associate conductor and opera coach. Both are of Cleveland. Carabella Johnson, prominent Cleveland soprano, is stage director for the Akron guild.

Goldman, by the way, has just been informed that he has received a conducting scholarship granted by the Boston Symphony orchestra. He will work under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, at the Berkshire music center, Stockbridge, Mass., for seven weeks, beginning July 1.

Four years ago Goldman was awarded third honors for his symphonic work, "Sound Pictures," in the symphonic competition sponsored by Paul Whiteman. Last December Goldman won a $250 prize in an international choral competition for his setting of the psalm, "By the Waters of Babylon," in the original Hebrew.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUN 16 1940

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA.

THE Berkshire Symphonic festival, which will be extended to three weeks during the coming summer, has established local headquarters at the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street, where season subscriptions may be obtained. July 1st, orders will be received for individual tickets to any or all of the concerts.

The complete program for Series A of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky with guest soloists is as follows:

FIRST PROGRAMME

Thursday Evening, August 1, at 8:30 o'clock

Beethoven . . . Symphony No. 1 in C. Major, Op. 21.
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto e vivace

Schumann . . . Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, Op. 38.
I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace. Trio: Molto piu vivace. Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Sibelius . . Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39
I. Andante man non troppo; allegro energico
II. Andante man non troppo; lento
III. Allegro
IV. Finale (Quasi una Fantasia): Andante; Allegro molto

SECOND PROGRAMME

Saturday Evening, August 3, 8:30 O'clock

Berlioz. . . Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Straus. . . "Don Quixote," Fantastic variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35.
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violoncello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc.

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Harris . . . Symphony No. 3 (in one movement.)
Debussy . . . "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eglogue de S. Mallarme)" ("Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun (Ezclogue by S. Mallarme)"
Ravel . . . Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite)
Lever du Jour — Pantomime —Dance Generale

THIRD PROGRAMME

Sunday Afternoon, August 4, at 3:30 O'clock

Mozart. . . . Eymphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K.543).
I. Adagio. Allegro.
II. Andante
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale: Allegro

Stravinsky . . . Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo
I. Presto
II. Andante rapsodico
III. Allegro capriccioso, ma tempo giusto
(Played without pause)
Soloist: JESUS MARIA SANROMA.

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Brahms . . . Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73
I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Adagietto: quasi and antino
IV. Allegro con spirito

* * *

Ambitious Program Outlined for Festival

The membership of the Berkshire Music Center, now virtually completed, and the details of its scheduled activities confirm the supposition that the school which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, will be quite unlike anything which has been attempted in this country. The number of pupils accepted will be approximately 325, these chosen from applications reaching 600 which, since the first announcement of the Center, have been coming from almost every state this side of the Mississippi. Of the 325, about 125 will comprise the Academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be the Festival Chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Bach's Mass in B minor, on Aug. 15 in the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The Institute, more selective than the Academy as to skill, will consist of an orchestra, and groups in conducting, composition, and opera dramatics. Dr. Koussevitzky has accepted a few musicians qualified by exceptional talent for instruction in conducting. Among the few active participants are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis Institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony Orchestra at Ann Arbor; and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard Schools. Others, many of whom have had professional experience, will be given the privileges of observation.

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; and will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school.

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemuth for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal College, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman dello Joio (Julliard). Dr. Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr. Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from leaders of local choral societies, school and college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing. Mr. Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of instruction in Music in the Schools. The academy orchestra will consist of 45 players, and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (August 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUN 23 1940

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 16 1940

MUSIC

◆

Berkshire Music Center Enlists Notable Artists

Botson, June 15—The membership of the Berkshire Music Center, now virtually completed, and the details of its scheduled activities confirm the supposition that the school which the Boston Symphony orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, will be quite unlike anything which has been attempted in this country. The number of pupils accepted will be approximately 325, chosen from applications reaching 600.

About 125 will comprise the institute for students of advanced ability, and about 200 will comprise the Academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be the festival chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Bach's Mass in B minor, on Aug. 15, in the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky Conducts.

The institute, more selective than the academy as to skill, will consist of an orchestra, and groups in conducting, composition, and opera dramatics. Dr. Koussevitzky has accepted a few musicians qualified by exceptional talent for instruction in conducting. Among the active participants are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony orchestra at Ann Arbor; and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard schools. Others, many of whom have had professional experience, will be given the privileges of observation.

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with the 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school. This orchestra will number about 65 student players, distributed approximately as follows: 18 violins, 15 lower strings, 4 flutes, 3 oboes and English horn, 4 clarinets, 4 bassoons, 5 horns, 3 trumpets, 4 trombones, tuba, 2 harps and 3 percussion; 58 have already been accepted.

Instruction in Composition.

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer, (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal College, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman Dello Joio (Juilliard). Of these, each will have the benefit of individual coaching by either Mr. Copland or Mr. Hindemith, and group discussion under both composers.

Dr. Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

Scholarships Offered.

The personnel of the institute will naturally be largely drawn from the music schools of the country, such as the New England Conservatory of Music, the Juilliard school, the Curtis institute, the Eastman school, and various colleges. The president of the New England Conservatory has offered ten scholarships in the Music Center for the benefit of students attending the conservatory in its winter sessions. The personnel of the academy, according to an examination of the application of those who have enrolled, will be about equally divided as to sex. Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age, nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25.

The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr. Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from leaders of local choral societies, school and college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing.

Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of instruction in music in the schools. The academy orchestra will consist of 45 players, and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. Having less rigid requirements for acceptance than the institute orchestra, the personnel will consist largely of college students, music teachers, teachers of instruments who wish orchestral experience, and others in business or professional walks of life who have made music their hobby.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUN 16 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs will open Aug. 1 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Kou[illegible] conducting, playing Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

Aug. 3, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Jean Lefranc, viola player, will be soloists. The program will be Berlioz' Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss' "Don Quixote;" Harris Symphony No. 3; Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune;" and orchestral excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Aug. 4, Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist when the orchestra plays Stravinskys Capriccio for orchestra and piano. Aug. 8, Albert Spaulding, violinist, will be soloist in a Beethoven-Tschaikowsky program. Mr. Spaulding is a summer resident of the Berkshires.

G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University, will prepare the Berkshire Festival Chorus, to make its debut Aug. 15 with Bach's Mass in B Minor. Soloists will be Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUN 16 1940

Berkshire Fest Soloists Named

The Berkshire symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass.

Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatragorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

JUL 2

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 16 1940

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA.

THE Berkshire Symphonic festival, which will be extended to three weeks during the coming summer, has established local headquarters at the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street, where season subscriptions may be obtained. July 1st, orders will be received for individual tickets to any or all of the concerts.

The complete program for Series A of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky with guest soloists is as follows:

FIRST PROGRAMME

Thursday Evening, August 1, at 8:30 o'clock

Beethoven . . . Symphony No. 1 in C. Major, Op. 21.
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto e vivace

Schumann . . . Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, Op. 38.
I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace. Trio: Molto piu vivace. Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Sibelius . . Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39
I. Andante man non troppo; allegro energico
II. Andante man non troppo; lento
III. Allegro
IV. Finale (Quasi una Fantasia): Andante; Allegro molto

SECOND PROGRAMME

Saturday Evening, August 3, 8:30 O'clock

Berlioz. . . Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"

Straus. . . "Don Quixote," Fantastic variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35. (Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)

Violoncello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky

Viola solo: Jean Lefranc.

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Harris . . . Symphony No. 3 (in one movement.)

Debussy . . . "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eglogue de S. Mallarme)" ("Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun (Ezclogue by S. Mallarme)"

Ravel . . . Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite)

Lever du Jour — Pantomime —Dance Generale

THIRD PROGRAMME

Sunday Afternoon, August 4, at 3:30 O'clock

Mozart. . . . Eymphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K.543).
I. Adagio. Allegro.
II. Andante
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale: Allegro

Stravinsky . . . Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo
I. Presto
II. Andante rapsodico
III. Allegro capriccioso, ma tempo giusto
(Played without pause)

Soloist: JESUS MARIA SANROMA.

INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES

Brahms . . . Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73
I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Adagietto: quasi and antino
IV. Allegro con spirito

Ambitious Program Outlined for Festival

Herald June 16

The membership of the Berkshire Music Center, now virtually completed, and the details of its scheduled activities confirm the supposition that the school which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, will be quite unlike anything which has been attempted in this country. The number of pupils accepted will be approximately 325, these chosen from applications reaching 600 which, since the first announcement of the Center, have been coming from almost every state this side of the Mississippi. Of the 325, about 125 will comprise the Academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be the Festival Chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Bach's Mass in B minor, on Aug. 15 in the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The Institute, more selective than the Academy as to skill, will consist of an orchestra, and groups in conducting, composition, and opera dramatics. Dr. Koussevitzky has accepted a few musicians qualified by exceptional talent for instruction in conducting. Among the few active participants are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis Institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony Orchestra at Ann Arbor; and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard Schools. Others, many of whom have had professional experience, will be given the privileges of observation.

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school.

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemuth for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal College, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman dello Joio (Julliard). Dr. Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr. Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from leaders of local choral societies, school and college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing. Mr. Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of instruction in Music in the Schools. The academy orchestra will consist of 45 players, and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extended from two to three weeks, will coincide with the last three weeks of the school term (August 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18). All who attend the Music Center will be admitted to specified Boston Symphony rehearsals, and to all of the festival performances.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 23 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 16 1940

MUSIC

Berkshire Music Center Enlists Notable Artists

Botson, June 15—The membership of the Berkshire Music Center, now virtually completed, and the details of its scheduled activities confirm the supposition that the school which the Boston Symphony orchestra will open at "Tanglewood," its Berkshire estate, on July 8, will be quite unlike anything which has been attempted in this country. The number of pupils accepted will be approximately 325, chosen from applications reaching 600.

About 125 will comprise the institute for students of advanced ability, and about 200 will comprise the Academy, the principal concerted activity of which will be the festival chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Bach's Mass in B minor, on Aug. 15, in the last week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky Conducts.

The institute, more selective than the academy as to skill, will consist of an orchestra, and groups in conducting, composition, and opera dramatics. Dr. Koussevitzky has accepted a few musicians qualified by exceptional talent for instruction in conducting. Among the active participants are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony orchestra at Ann Arbor; and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard schools. Others, many of whom have had professional experience, will be given the privileges of observation.

The orchestra of the institute will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It will have the advantage of coaching and joint performance with the 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, who are part of the faculty of the school. This orchestra will number about 65 student players, distributed approximately as follows: 18 violins, 15 lower strings, 4 flutes, 3 oboes and English horn, 4 clarinets, 4 bassoons, 5 horns, 3 trumpets, 4 trombones, tuba, 2 harps and 3 percussion; 58 have already been accepted.

Instruction in Composition.

Composers accepted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith for instruction in composition and orchestration will include the following: Lukas Foss (Paris Conservatoire and Curtis), Harold Shapero (Harvard), Harold Brown (Ecole Normale), Robert Palmer, (Eastman), Donald Fuller (Yale and Juilliard), John Verrall (Royal College, London), Robert Strassburg (Harvard), Charles Naginski (Juilliard), Charles Jones (Juilliard), Norman Dello Joio (Juilliard). Of these, each will have the benefit of individual coaching by either Mr. Copland or Mr. Hindemith, and group discussion under both composers.

Dr. Herbert Graf has accepted 20 pupils for his class in operatic interpretation. These will have the advantage of a small theater which is being built at "Tanglewood," and which will be useful for performances of intimate opera or chamber music.

Scholarships Offered.

The personnel of the institute will naturally be largely drawn from the music schools of the country, such as the New England Conservatory of Music, the Juilliard school, the Curtis institute, the Eastman school, and various colleges. The president of the New England Conservatory has offered ten scholarships in the Music Center for the benefit of students attending the conservatory in its winter sessions. The personnel of the academy, according to an examination of the application of those who have enrolled, will be about equally divided as to sex. Although a number of teachers have joined the school, most of the members are of student age, nearly half coming under the category between 18 and 25.

The chorus of 200 will be conducted by G. Wallace Woodworth. Mr. Woodworth has also accepted about 20 pupils in a class for choral conducting. The class is largely drawn from leaders of local choral societies, school and college glee clubs, and teachers who wish to form groups in singing.

Howard Abell has accepted 25 for his class of instruction in music in the schools. The academy orchestra will consist of 45 players, and will be under the direction of Malcolm Holmes. Having less rigid requirements for acceptance than the institute orchestra, the personnel will consist largely of college students, music teachers, teachers of instruments who wish orchestral experience, and others in business or professional walks of life who have made music their hobby.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUN 16 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs will open Aug. 1 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Kou[illegible] conducting, playing Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

Aug. 3, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Jean Lefranc, viola player, will be soloists. The program will be Berlioz' Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss' "Don Quixote;" Harris Symphony No. 3; Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune;" and orchestral excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Aug. 4, Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist when the orchestra plays Stravinskys Capriccio for orchestra and piano. Aug. 8, Albert Spaulding, violinist, will be soloist in a Beethoven-Tschaikowsky program. Mr. Spaulding is a summer resident of the Berkshires.

G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University, will prepare the Berkshire Festival Chorus, to make its debut Aug. 15 with Bach's Mass in B Minor. Soloists will be Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUN 16 1940

Berkshire Fest Soloists Named

The Berkshire symphonic festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass.

Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatragorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

22

THIS CLIPPI
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 20 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TICKETS GOING FAST

More Than Half Sold Already; Subscription Deadline On 30th

Stockbridge, June 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half filled now for the nine concerts to be given the first three weekends in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzy. Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation, the festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach of the conference office has opened his headquarters at the festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotels, inns and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening August 1 with the second series opening August 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening August 15.

Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the festival office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUN 20 1940

Festival Shed More Than Half Sold

Subscription Period Expires June 30

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half sold out now for the nine concerts to be given the first three week ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Subscription sales for the concerts close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the Festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach of the Conference office has opened his headquarters at the Festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotels, inns, and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening Aug. 1 with the second series opening Aug. 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening Aug. 15.

Inquiries about tickets may be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHICOPEE, MASS
HERALD
6/20/40

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL SHED MORE THAN HALF SOLD FOR CONCERTS

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half filled now for the nine concerts to be given the first three week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tckets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the Festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings Stephen Thach of the Conference office has opened his headquarters at the Festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotels, inns and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening August 1 with the second series opening August 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening August 15.

Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall. 113 West 57th St.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUN 20 1940

BERKSHIRE CONCERT TICKETS HALF SOLD

STOCKBRIDGE, June 20 — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half sold out now for the nine concerts to be given the first three week ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Subscription sales for the concerts will close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the Festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings near the concerts. Stephen Thach of the conference office has opened headquarters at the Festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening Aug. 1 with the second series opening Aug. 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening Aug. 15.

Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 21 1940

Festival Shed Half Sold Out

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half filled now for the nine concerts to be given the first three weekends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the Festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach of the conference office has opened his headquarters at the festival office in Stockbridge.

Reservations show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening Aug. 1 with the second series opening Aug. 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening Aug. 15.

Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the New York City office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th St.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUN 21 1940

Berkshire Festival to Open August 1st

The Berkshire Symphonic festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half filled now for the nine concerts to be given the first three week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts opening August 1 with the second series opening August 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening Aug. 15.

Inquiries about tickets may be made at the Music House.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUN 21 1940

SALE OF FESTIVAL TICKETS

Subscriptions to Annual Event in Berkshires Closes June 30

Subscription sales will close June 30 for the nine concerts to be given the first three week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass. Already more than half of the available seats for the festival have been sold.

To accommodate those coming to the festival from distant parts of the country the festival authorities have arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. A member of the conference has opened headquarters at the festival office in Stockbridge to handle inquiries. Information concerning tickets may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Symphony Festival office, Stockbridge, or the New York office in Steinway Hall.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 23 1940

Thousands Of Connecticut Residents Will Attend Concerts At Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival To Present Nine Concerts During August

Connecticut residents by the thousands who are music lovers will be found in large numbers this year as in the past seven years attending the Berkshire Festival concerts at Stockbridge, Mass., with Serge Koussevitsky conducting the famous Boston Symphony orchestra in nine concerts during the first three week-ends in August.

Music lovers from all parts of the United States and Canada, and some from other parts of the world as well, make the annual pilgrimage to the Berkshire hills to listen to these excellent concerts played by one of the finest orchestras in the world. In the past few years since the erection of the giant shed at Tanglewood with seats for close to 7,000, the concerts have been given to capacity audiences. Last year seats were at a premium with many unable to get standing room even and hundreds were forced to sit and listen to the music while resting on the grass or on blankets spreads upon the ground.

This year the concert series is being spread over a third week as well so that more music will be played. The programs include Bach, Beethoven, Sibelius, Brahms and many other composers' music. A special series of Tchaikowski music will be presented by Dr. Koussevitsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of that composer.

Ticket Sale Large

Choral programs and music with Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer, discovered last year at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitsky, will be presented. Already the ticket sale for the series has been far in excess of other years and after July 1 none but individual concert tickets will be sold. The subscription lists will be closed by that time. The concert dates are Aug. 1, 3, 4; 8, 10, 11; 15, 17, 18.

Every year thousands of persons visit the music shed at Tanglewood and sign the guest book. Throughout the summer one can see there cars from every state in the Union and Canada. The grounds are beautifully landscaped and afford a wonderful view of the Berkshire hills and the Stockbridge bowl or lake which lies at the foot of the music festival grounds. The estate was once the home of Hawthorne and surrounding country scenes played a large part in some of his writings.

Town Interesting

The town of Stockbridge itself is a most interesting one with its early settlement among the Indians and the first white missionary to the Indians in that part of Massachusetts. The Mission House in the town is a living memorial of that time. It was in this town that the Field family lived. It was Cyrus Field who played so large a part in the laying of the first transatlantic cable and it was here, too, that the people of Rachel Field's famous novel, "All This And Heaven, Too," lived. Those who have read and enjoyed the book will be delighted with the many associations of those characters to be found in this charming New England town with its broad, tree-lined main street.

Residents of Western Connecticut know that this entire beautiful section of the Berkshire hills is but a short automobile drive away, that it is filled with beautiful spots for picnics, outings and places of historical interest. Nearby, too, are Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn., where Jacques Gordon and his string ensemble give concerts throughout the summer, while beyond Stockbridge at Pittsfield is South Mountain where the South Mountain quartet, sponsored by that famous patron of music, Mrs. Sprague Coolidge, presents frequent concerts.

The section has many art centers and art exhibitions. Foremost among them are the annual exhibitions of unusual interest at the Pittsfield museum.

Inquiries about the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts at Tanglewood should be sent to the festival office in Stockbridge, Mass.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUN 22 1940

Piatigorsky, Sanroma, Spalding Soloists for Berkshire Festival

Tanglewood, Mass., June 21. — The Berkshire Symphony Festival's shed at Tanglewood is more than half filled now for the nine concerts to be given the first three week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the festival committee has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach of the conference office has opened his headquarters at the festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotels, inns and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

The festival will open August 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close August 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist August 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

The third series will open August 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p.m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music centre being established this summer at Tanglewood and will be prepared, as was the chorus in Boston, by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano who has world-wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program August 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adeleide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofief, Hindemith and Faure.

The complete program is as follows:

Series A. Thursday, August 1. — Symphony No. 1 (Beethoven); Symphony No. 1 (Schumann); Symphony No. 1 (Sibelius).

Saturday, August 3 — Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" (Berlioz); "Don Quixote" (Strauss); Symphony No. 3 (Harris); "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune" (Debussy); "Daphnis et Chloe" (Ravel).

Sunday, August 4—Symphony in E Flat (Mozart); Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra (Stravinsky); Symphony No. 2 (Brahms).

Series B. Thursday, August 8—"Egmont" Overture; Violin Concerto (Beethoven); Symphony No. 6 (Tchaikovsky).

Saturday, August 10—"Coriolanus" Overture; Symphony No. 4 (Beethoven); Symphony No. 4 (Tchaikovsky).

Sunday, August 11—Symphony No. 6 (Beethoven); Symphony No. 5 (Tchaikovsky).

Series C. Thursday, August 15—Mass in B minor (Bach).

Saturday, August 17—"Classical" Symphony (Prokofieff); "Mathis der Maler" (Hindemith); Concert Aria (Mozart); "Adeleide" (Beethoven); Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande" (Faure); "Pines of Rome" (Respighi).

Sunday, August 18—Symphony in G major, No. 88 (Haydn); Symphony No. 7 (Sibelius); Symphony No. 1 (Brahms).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUN 29 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUN 22 1940

CALENDAR OF TOURIST EVENTS

THROUGH JUNE 25—Pennsylvania: Pocono Laurel Festival at Stroudsburg.

THROUGH JUNE 30—Pennsylvania: Interstate Laurel Festival at Wellsboro.

THROUGH JULY 1—Bermuda: Fifth Annual Open Game fishing tournament.

THROUGH JULY 2—Pennsylvania: 200th Anniversary Celebration at Nazareth.

THROUGH JULY 15—Florida: Tarpon Tournament, Charlotte Harbor, Punta Gorda.

THROUGH JULY 27—Massachusetts: Horse racing at Suffolk Downs, Boston.

THROUGH JULY 31—Florida: Fifth Annual St. Petersburg Tarpon Roundup.

THROUGH AUG. 3—California: Horse racing at Hollywood Park.

THROUGH SEPT. 30—California: Golden Gate International Exposition on Treasure Island in San Francisco Bay.

THROUGH NOV. 15—New Jersey: Atlantic City Tuna Club $2000 prize fishing competition.

JUNE 24-AUG. 17—California: Sixth annual Midsummer Drama Festival at Pasadena.

JUNE 24-Sept. 6—California: Summer Garden Tours through Montecito and Hope Ranch Park Estates, every Friday.

JUNE 27—Bermuda: Pageant of the Bermuda Oleander.

JUNE 28-29—California: National A. A. U. track and field championships at Fresno.

JUNE 28-JULY 5—Montana: Blackfeet Indian Sun Dance at Browning.

JUNE 29—Canada: Dedication of Big Bend Highway between Revelstroke and Golden, British Columbia.

JUNE 29-30—Georgia: Best-Ball twosome Golf Tournament at Sea Island.

JUNE 29-Sept. 2—Washington: Horse racing, Longacres Track, Seattle.

JUNE 30—California: Dog Show at Del Monte.

JULY 1—Canada: Dominion Day. Alberta: Official opening of the Banff-Jasper Highway.

JULY 1-3—New York: Third annual Women's Invitational Golf Tournament, Lake Placid.

JULY 1-7—Wisconsin: Chippewa Indian Ceremonial Dances at Lac du Flambeau.

JULY 2—California: San Francisco Symphony Concert on Treasure Island; Gladys Swarthout, soloist, Pierre Monteux, conductor.

JULY 2-4—Colorado: Rodeo at Steamboat Springs.

Montana: Annual Roundup at Livingston.

Virginia: Thirteenth annual Yacht Regatta at Hampton.

JULY 4—California: Fourth of July parade, carnival and barbecue at Watsonville.

Alabama: Fishing Rodeo at Foley.

Colorado: Annual Roundup at Cheyenne Wells.

Georgia: Blind Bogey, 18 holes medal golf, at Sea Island.

Tennessee: Tennessee Valley Boat Club races on Norris Lake, near Knoxville.

Virginia: Annual Firemen's Celebration, air, water and land events, Cape Charles.

JULY 4-6—Montana: Rodeo at Kalispell.

New York: Fifth annual Men's Invitation Golf Tournament, Lake Placid.

JULY 4-7—California: Eighth annual Semana Nautica, Santa Barbara. Competitions in 50 land and water sports.

JULY 5 — Venezuela: Independence Day.

Vermont: 125-mile sailing race, starts at Burlington, Lake Champlain.

JULY 6-7—New York: Summer Ice Hockey Championships at Lake Placid.

JULY 6-27—Colorado: Annual Play Festival, Metropolitan opera stars, Central City.

JULY 8-13—Canada: Exhibition and Stampede at Calgary, Alberta.

JULY 9-Aug. 30 — California: "Symphonies under the Stars," Hollywood Bowl.

JULY 9-12—California: Golf Tournament, Monterey Park.

JULY 11—Bermuda: Bermuda Anglers' Club Barracuda Cruise.

JULY 15—New York: Annual Invitation Tennis Tournament, Lake Placid Club.

JULY 16-17—Colorado: Rodeo at Montrose.

JULY 16-19—Colorado: Annual free open air opera, Blossom Time, Denver.

JULY 18—New Mexico: Cowboys' Roundup at Clovis.

JULY 18-21—Canada: Stoney Indian Days, annual revival of games, folkways, music, Banff, Alberta.

JULY 19-24—Utah: Covered Wagon Days.

JULY 20 — Colombia: Independence Day.

JULY 21—California: Hope Ranch Park Dog Show, 1000 entries, Santa Barbara.

JULY 23-27—Wyoming: Frontier Days at Cheyenne.

JULY 23-28 — California: National Horse Show at Coronado.

JULY 24—Venezuela: Bolivar Day.

JULY 25-26—New Mexico: Fiesta at Taos.

JULY 25-27—Washington: Trail to Rail Pageant at Eugene.

JULY 26-30—Canada: Official 1940 ride of Trail Riders, Banff Nat'l Park, Banff, Alberta.

JULY 28-30—Peru: Independence Celebrations.

JULY 29—Hawaii: Special 14-day excursion to Tahiti leaves Honolulu.

JULY 31-AUG. 4—Washington: Centennial Celebration at Salem.

AUG. 1-18 — Massachusetts: Seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, nine concerts, Thursday and Saturday evenings, Sunday matinees, Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Stockbridge.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUN 24 1940

Music Lovers' Lodgings

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—To accommodate music lovers attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Berkshire Hills Conference has opened an office here to handle requests for information about lodgings. Hotels, inns and private homes within a short distance of the Tanglewood Shed have been listed.

Festival officers announce that more than half the seats for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been subscribed. Subscription sales will close June 30, thereafter only tickets for single concerts being sold.

24

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

UN 29 1940

Berkshire Symphony To Be Held in August

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three week ends in August. The program covers nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first ~~to be given~~ Aug. 1 and the last Aug. 18. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has become an important annual feature of the summer social life of New England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CAN.
SATURDAY NIGHT

JUN 29 1940

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY, world-famous 'cellist, will break his vacation to appear as soloist for the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra at its Promenade Symphony Concert in Varsity Arena, next Thursday night, under the baton of Reginald Stewart and a few weeks later will appear with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. In Toronto he will play the Concerto in A Minor for 'cello and orchestra, by Saint-Saens, as well as a group of solos.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 37,040) (S 111,144)

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 30 1940

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

BY JOHN TEBBEL

CHALK up an endurance record for Jascha Heifetz. He's back in California after a 35,000-mile tour of South and Central America during which he gave 60 concerts in 35 cities since last March 31. Mr. Heifetz says he will seek peace amid the insanities of the West Coast until September. Then he starts on another tour, this time through the United States and Canada.

◈ ◈ ◈

Today is the end of a subscription campaign for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August. This year, as you know, the affair runs through three weeks of ambitious programs projected by Dr. Koussevitzky. Box office now proclaims that more than half of the seats for the nine concerts are subscribed. The rest sell as single tickets.

◈ ◈ ◈

Another of this summer's busier young men is Edwin McArthur, who may or may not be a great Wagnerian conductor. At any rate, Flagstad's friend from Denver is engaged to conduct the NBC orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, the Chicago Symphony, an outdoor concert in San Antonio—all this before he conducts the concluding Hollywood Bowl concert on Aug. 28.

◈ ◈ ◈

Summer is also the silly season in music. We mean no slap-in-advance-of-publication by that statement, only a mild wonder at the announcement of Ferde Grofe's newest tone poem, entitled "An American Biography—the Life of Henry Ford." It is scored for novachord and organ, with vocal refrain. Premiered at the World's Fair, it will be heard next at a forthcoming Grofe recital in Carnegie Hall. Grofe originally called his piece "An Ode to Henry Ford," but the auto magnate, who is a sincerely modest man (something of a rarity in public figures) preferred that the title be simply "American Biography."

◈ ◈ ◈

Republican ears were still a little red when the quadrennial convention and fun-fest opened in Philadelphia last week. The currently ballyhooed "Ballad for Americans" opened the show—without [illegible]efit of Paul Robeson, who made [illegible] famous. The boys wanted Paul to [illegible]g but discovered, ju[illegible] in time [illegible] the Robeson politics are far from Republican, on the contrary lean just a little left of left.

◈ ◈ ◈

On the night in question (last Monday) Robeson was singing the ballad with the New York Philharmonic at Lewisohn Stadium, where the customers are more interested in music for its own sake than in music which may or may not have social significance. Mr. Robeson also obliged at that occasion with other items of a clearly non-political character: "Old Man River" and a group of spirituals.

◈ ◈ ◈

Change of Address: The Pro Arte String Quartet of Brussels, Belgium, will hereinafter be known as the Pro Arte String Quartet of the University of Wisconsin. This progressive and altogether cheerful accomplishment was made possible by establishment of a foundation with money donated by Wisconsin alumni and friends of the institution. The quartet will give concerts, teach music, and be available for concerts everywhere in the state.

◈ ◈ ◈

For those who like to plan ahead, we pass along the information that Arturo Toscanini intends to conduct four of his 14 NBC Symphony concerts next season in Carnegie Hall, where the acoustics and the seating are far more conducive to good listening than the big studio at Radio City. The dates are Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Feb. 22 and April 19 and it isn't too early to think about getting tickets.

◈ ◈ ◈

Conductors who will spell off Maestro Toscanini during the season include Hans Wilhelm Steinberg, six weeks; Alfred Wallenstein and Georg Szell, four concerts apiece. Again the disaster abroad benefits the American musical scene by providing us with first-rate conductors temporarily out of a regular job.

FERDE GROFE: Ford censored the title of his song.

◈ ◈ ◈

Contrary to the general expectation, only 12 of the 100-odd young musicians in Leopold Stokowski's All-American Youth Symphony come from New York. It had been freely predicted that Manhattan would monopolize the show. The others come from every corner of the country. In case you've forgotten, the orchestra is scheduled for its first concert, with true Stokowski showmanship, on the night of July 4. It sails for South America the following day.

◈ ◈ ◈

Hollywood musicians will begin to get their long-deferred break next year. The National Federation of Music Clubs has at last persuaded the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to award Oscars to composers, arrangers and artists in the film music field. We would like to lay odds that Aaron Copland gets the first Oscar for composers and if he doesn't we're against the whole idea.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUN 30 1940

SOUTH BERKSHIRE HAS A REAL ESTATE BOOM

Great Barrington Gives Credit for Business to Lenox Music Festival

From Our Special Correspondent

Great Barrington, June 29—Real-estate sales and rentals are currently "on the up" in the south Berkshire area, despite any lethargy that might be blamed on war jitters. This week the sale of an estate of 137 acres in Monterey, complete with a 10-room country home and outbuildings, headed the list. Seasonal rentals have been reported as excellent, particularly in the area from which Tanglewood in Lenox may be reached easily.

The real-estate boom is traceable partially to the permanent establishment of the summer music festival at Tanglewood. There is a distinct dearth of rentable summer homes, rooms and hotel space within quick driving distance of Lenox during August. All of which leads one to contemplate the sudden growth of the importance of the idea sponsored by a foresighted Berkshire individual, Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith.

She went to work on a systematic selling plan. She imagined the day when a permanent festival, competing with the Wagner festival in Europe, might properly be established in the delightful hills of Berkshire. Armed only with an idea, if one doesn't include the armament of a secure social and artistic position, she went forth to sell her idea to fellow dwellers in the summer colonies of Stockbridge, Lenox, Great Barrington and way stations.

Inviting small groups to her home, she laid bare the idea. Nearly all were enthusiastic, if only because Miss Robinson-Smith was herself highly enthusiastic and radiated enthusiasm. The group meetings were extended beyond her home, for the convenience of those from whom she wished to secure aid. She realized that the undertaking required considerable support, so the assistance of a large number of summer-colony women who had but little to do was enlisted.

The first concert—a memorable one in view of the succeeding years—was held in a horse-show ring on the Dan Hanna estate. It was literally music under the moon, with the New York Philharmonic orchestra seated on a dais, and with the few thousand local persons seated on benches on the grass. The uncertainties of weather, particularly the New England variety, led to the conclusion that if the concerts were to become an annual affair some form of permanent basis must be established.

The next year a circus tent was hired. A deluge of rain drowned out the orchestra during one concert and made life very uncertain for the listeners. By this time the locale had been moved to Tanglewood, which had been donated in the cause of music. As the years rolled on—through the short space of three or four seasons—the wherewithal to build the present splendid edifice at Tanglewood was realized.

Now the Boston Symphony orchestra has a permanent summer home. Its annual series of concerts is an assured success long before the budding leaves push out on spring boughs. The Berkshire Music festival has become, in a relatively astounding short time, a national institution, and has some international fame. It has become the single affair of annual importance in Berkshire, a fact that must be admitted even by devotees of swing music. It has likewise become big business, particularly for the realtors and hotel keepers.

So many people now claim an important part in the establishment of the festival in Berkshire that one might wonder just who was responsible for this stroke of rare fortune. In a word, it's Gertrude Robinson-Smith, and no one else. Many others had parts, but the idea was sponsored through its lean years, through its discouraging aspects, through the "selling" period, by one woman.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 346,783) (S 527,759)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 30 1940

Changes Made At Tanglewood For Festival

Subscriptions for Boston Symphony Series Available Until June 30 Only

Many changes have been made at Tanglewood for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Symphonic Festival which takes place the first three weeks in August. Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m., with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramaties to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the Center have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new Center. These features [illegible] others, such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, are open to public inspection.

Trustees of the festival today called attention to the deadline on subscriptions. The last date for applying for subscriptions is June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold. Applications may be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the festival's New York office in Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach, of the Berkshire Hills Conference staff, who is now located at the festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

24

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUN 29 1940

Berkshire Symphony To Be Held in August

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three week ends in August. The program covers nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first to be given Aug. 1 and the last Aug. 18. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has become an important annual feature of the summer social life of New England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CAN.
SATURDAY NIGHT

JUN 29 1940

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY, world-famous 'cellist, will break his vacation to appear as soloist for the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra at its Promenade Symphony Concert in Varsity Arena, next Thursday night, under the baton of Reginald Stewart and a few weeks later will appear with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. In Toronto he will play the Concerto in A Minor for 'cello and orchestra, by Saint-Saens, as well as a group of solos.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 37,040) (S 111,144)

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 30 1940

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

BY JOHN TEBBEL

CHALK up an endurance record for Jascha Heifetz. He's back in California after a [illegible]-mile tour of South and Central America during which he gave [illegible] concerts in 35 cities since last March 31. Mr. Heifetz says he will seek peace amid the insanities of the West Coast until September. Then he starts on another tour, this time through the United States and Canada.

◆ ◆ ◆

Today is the end of a subscription campaign for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August. This year, as you know, the affair runs through three weeks of ambitious programs projected by Dr. Koussevitzky. Box office now proclaims that more than half of the seats for the nine concerts are subscribed. The rest sell as single tickets.

◆ ◆ ◆

Another of this summer's busier young men is Edwin McArthur, who may or may not be a great Wagnerian conductor. At any rate, Flagstad's friend from Denver is engaged to conduct the NBC orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, the Chicago Symphony, an outdoor concert in San Antonio—all this before he conducts the concluding Hollywood Bowl concert on Aug. 28.

◆ ◆ ◆

Summer is also the silly season in music. We mean no slap-in-advance-of-publication by that statement, only a mild wonder at the announcement of Ferde Grofe's newest tone poem, entitled "An American Biography—the Life of Henry Ford." It is scored for novachord and organ, with vocal refrain. Premiered at the World's Fair, it will be heard next at a forthcoming Grofe recital in Carnegie Hall. Grofe originally called his piece "An Ode to Henry Ford," but the auto magnate, who is a sincerely modest man (something of a rarity in public figures) preferred that the title be simply "American Biography."

◆ ◆ ◆

Republican ears were still a little red when the quadrennial convention and fun-fest opened in Philadelphia last week. The currently ballyhooed "Ballad for Americans" opened the show—without benefit of Paul Robeson, who made [illegible] famous. The boys wanted Paul to [illegible] but discovered, just in time [illegible] Robeson politics are far from Republican, on the contrary lean just a little left of left.

◆ ◆ ◆

On the night in question (last Monday) Robeson was singing the ballad with the New York Philharmonic at Lewisohn Stadium, where the customers are more interested in music for its own sake than in music which may or may not have social significance. Mr. Robeson also obliged at that occasion with other items of a clearly non-political character: "Old Man River" and a group of spirituals.

◆ ◆ ◆

Change of Address: The Pro Arte String Quartet of Brussels, Belgium, will hereinafter be known as the Pro Arte String Quartet of the University of Wisconsin. This progressive and altogether cheerful accomplishment was made possible by establishment of a foundation with money donated by Wisconsin alumni and friends of the institution. The quartet will give concerts, teach music, and be available for concerts everywhere in the state.

◆ ◆ ◆

For those who like to plan ahead, we pass along the information that Arturo Toscanini intends to conduct four of his 14 NBC Symphony concerts next season in Carnegie Hall, where the acoustics and the seating are far more conducive to good listening than the big studio at Radio City. The dates are Nov. 23, Dec. 28, Feb. 22 and April 19 and it isn't too early to think about getting tickets.

◆ ◆ ◆

Conductors who will spell off Maestro Toscanini during the season include Hans Wilhelm Steinberg, six weeks; Alfred Wallenstein and Georg Szell, four concerts apiece. Again the disaster abroad benefits the American musical scene by providing us with first-rate conductors temporarily out of a regular job.

FERDE GROFE: Ford censored the title of his song.

◆ ◆ ◆

Contrary to the general expectation, only 13 of the 100-odd young musicians in Leopold Stokowski's All-American Youth Symphony come from New York. It had been freely predicted that Manhattan would monopolize the show. The others come from every corner of the country. In case you've forgotten, the orchestra is scheduled for its first concert, with true Stokowski showmanship, on the night of July 4. It sails for South America the following day.

◆ ◆ ◆

Hollywood musicians will begin to get their long-deferred break next year. The National Federation of Music Clubs has at last persuaded the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to award Oscars to composers, arrangers and artists in the film music field. We would like to lay odds that Aaron Copland gets the first Oscar for composers and if he doesn't we're against the whole idea.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUN 30 1940

SOUTH BERKSHIRE HAS A REAL ESTATE BOOM

Great Barrington Gives Credit for Business to Lenox Music Festival

From Our Special Correspondent

Great Barrington, June 29—Real-estate sales and rentals are currently "on the up" in the south Berkshire area, despite any lethargy that might be blamed on war jitters. This week the sale of an estate of 137 acres in Monterey, complete with a 10-room country home and outbuildings, headed the list. Seasonal rentals have been reported as excellent, particularly in the area from which Tanglewood in Lenox may be reached easily.

The real-estate boom is traceable partially to the permanent establishment of the summer music festival at Tanglewood. There is a distinct dearth of rentable summer homes, rooms and hotel space within quick driving distance of Lenox during August. All of which leads one to contemplate the sudden growth of the importance of the idea sponsored by a foresighted Berkshire individual, Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith.

She went to work on a systematic selling plan. She imagined the day when a permanent festival, competing with the Wagner festival in Europe, might properly be established in the delightful hills of Berkshire. Armed only with an idea, if one doesn't include the armament of a secure social and artistic position, she went forth to sell her idea to fellow dwellers in the summer colonies of Stockbridge, Lenox, Great Barrington and way stations.

Inviting small groups to her home, she laid bare the idea. Nearly all were enthusiastic, if only because Miss Robinson-Smith was herself highly enthusiastic and radiated enthusiasm. The group meetings were extended beyond her home, for the convenience of those from whom she wished to secure aid. She realized that the undertaking required considerable support, so the assistance of a large number of summer-colony women who had but little to do was enlisted.

The first concert—a memorable one in view of the succeeding years—was held in a horse-show ring on the Dan Hanna estate. It was literally music under the moon, with the New York Philharmonic orchestra seated on a dais, and with the few thousand local persons seated on benches on the grass. The uncertainties of weather, particularly the New England variety, led to the conclusion that if the concerts were to become an annual affair some form of permanent basis must be established.

The next year a circus tent was hired. A deluge of rain drowned out the orchestra during one concert and made life very uncertain for the listeners. By this time the locale had been moved to Tanglewood, which had been donated in the cause of music. As the years rolled on—through the short space of three or four seasons—the wherewithal to build the present splendid edifice at Tanglewood was realized.

Now the Boston Symphony orchestra has a permanent summer home. Its annual series of concerts is an assured success long before the budding leaves push out on spring boughs. The Berkshire Music festival has become, in a relatively astounding short time, a national institution, and has some international fame. It has become the single affair of annual importance in Berkshire, a fact that must be admitted even by devotees of swing music. It has likewise become big business, particularly for the realtors and hotel keepers.

So many people now claim an important part in the establishment of the festival in Berkshire that one might wonder just who was responsible for this stroke of rare fortune. In a word, it's Gertrude Robinson-Smith, and no one else. Many others had parts, but the idea was sponsored through its lean years, through its discouraging aspects, through the "selling" period, by one woman.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 346,783) (S 527,759)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 30 1940

Changes Made At Tanglewood For Festival

Subscriptions for Boston Symphony Series Available Until June 30 Only

Many changes have been made at Tanglewood for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Symphonic Festival which takes place the first three weeks in August. Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m., with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the Center have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new Center. These features and others, such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, are open to public inspection.

Trustees of the festival today called attention to the deadline on subscriptions. The last date for applying for subscriptions is June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold. Applications may be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the festival's New York office in Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach, of the Berkshire Hills Conference staff, who is now located at the festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

25

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUN 30 1940

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three week-ends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, they [illegible] note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theatre for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the Center, have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood are open to public inspection.

Trustees of the Festival today called attention to the deadline on subscriptions. The last date for applying for subscriptions is June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold. Applications may be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the Festival's New York office in Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach of the Berkshire Hills Conference staff who is now located at the Festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

* * *

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Albany Symphony orchestra Mrs. Herman J. Diekman, Mrs. William H. Van Slyke, E. Bradley Carnell, Elton P. Huyck, Arthur G. Pellman and William L. Thompson, jr, were elected directors to fill existing vacancies. The committee headed by Commissioner Mark Graves to present a method of reorganization for the expanding work of the orchestra, made a complete and detailed report which was unanimously adopted. O. James Hoppner was elected to the position of financial secretary.

A report on the past season indicated a continuous advance in the artistic achievements of the orchestra under the baton of Rudolph Thomas, who returns for the coming season, and in-

---

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 30 1940

Will Study Clarinet Under Koussevitzky

Richard L. Cossaboom to Be in Academy Orchestra at Berkshire

Richard L. Cossaboom of 6 Dodge avenue plays no "hot socks" on his clarinet, but Mozart's Clarinet Concerto—well, that's different.

Seven years of study and practice have brought Mr. Cossaboom the coveted qualification card, which enables him to study under Serge Koussevitzky, noted conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, location of the Berkshire Music Center.

A former member of the Worcester Philharmonic Orchestra, Mr. Cossaboom will be one of 125 young musicians who will form the academy orchestra and participate in the annual music festival late in August.

Mr. Cossaboom has studied under Rosario Mazzeo, base clarinet soloist for the Boston Symphony for the past three years. Week days he has worked in a local department store.

In High School of Commerce, from which Mr. Cossaboom was graduated in 1936, he studied harmony and music fundamentals and theory and was a member of the school band and orchestra. He then was a pupil of Charles Wacker.

In 1937, 1938 and 1939, he played with the Worcester Philharmonic Orchestra. Last Fall he joined the Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra as second clarinetist and was soon made first clarinetist. Next Winter he plans to resume playing with the Boston orchestra.

"I was lucky to get this opportunity to go to the music center," he said. "For I hope to become a professional musician. Up there we can make the most of our time, for we work under highly accomplished teachers and everybody there is interested in good music."

Although strictly a classicist himself, Mr. Cossaboom admires the workmanship of Benny Goodman, Arty Shaw and Sal Franzella, in the vernacular, "purveyors of jive via the licorice stick." For as he says, "Swing is certainly music and requires real musicians to produce, but give me Mozart every time."

MUSICIAN

Richard L. Cossaboom of 6 Dodge avenue, who will leave soon for the Berkshire Music Center to study the clarinet under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets Are Half Sold For Berkshire Festival

Provisions Being Made for Guests Coming Long Distances

More than half of the seats available for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, to be given in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., this summer, have been sold. Subscription sales for the concerts will positively close June 30. After that date only tickets for single concerts will be sold.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances the festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach, of the conference office, has opened his headquarters at the festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotel inns and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

Reservations made to date show the greatest preference for the first series of concerts, opening Aug. 1, with the second series, opening Aug. 8, not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series, opening Aug. 15.

Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall, 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN MATEO, CALIF.
Times & News Leader

JUL 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE

JUN 29 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

JUN 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUN 29 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRADFORD, PA.
STAR RECORD

JUN 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

JUL 1 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM CARLISLE, PA.
SENTINEL

JUL 1 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN

JUN 29 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

JUN 29 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT

JUN 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

JUN 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUN 30 1940

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

JUN 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

JUN 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

JUN 30 1940

Subscriptions for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, to be held in Stockbridge, Mass., during August will close Sunday. More than half of the seats for the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky have ben subscribed. The remainder will be sold as single tickets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC

JUL 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUN 21 1940

OVER 300 PUPILS IN CLASSES AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL INSTITUTE

From applications totalling 600, 325 pupils have been chosen for the Berkshire Music Center, to be carried on this summer at "Tanglewood" estate in conjunction with the Boston Symphony orchestra's Berkshire Festival. Of the 325 students, 125 will study the advanced work of the Institute, and the remaining 200 will comprise the Academy.

The Institute will consist of an orchestra and groups in conducting, composition and opera dramatics. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has accepted a few especially talented musicians for instruction in conducting. Among them are Leonard Bernstein, who has won honors at the Curtis Institute; Thor Johnson, conductor of the University of Michigan Symphony orchestra, and Richard Bales, graduate of the Eastman and Juilliard schools.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUN 23 1940

600 Seek Places In Berkshire Institute

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The Berkshire Music Center, which will open July 8 at Tanglewood, Mass., under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, announces that its membership is virtually completed.

From the 600 applications which have been received approximately 325 pupils will be accepted. Of these about 125 will compose the institute for advanced students and 200 will for the academy for students of a less advanced stage.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 2 - 1940

Open Ticket Sale For Single Concerts Of Boston Symphony

The subscription sale for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed Saturday and the sale of tickets for single concerts of the Boston Symphony concerts has opened. Already over half of the seats in the great music shed at Tanglewood have been sold. Applications for tickets will be received at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ins., main office, Stockbridge, Mass. The first concert will be held Thursday, Aug. 1. Others of the first series are on Saturday, Aug. 3 and Sunday, Aug. 4. The second series will be on Aug. 8, 10 and 11 and the third on Aug. 15, 17 and 18. The Thursday and Saturday concerts are at 8:30 p.m. and the Sunday concerts at 3:30 p.m.

BLANK PAGE

Be

T Syr
the gu cer ch
1 a sev rie
T wh
Le por me

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

FEB 13 1940

MASS. FESTIVAL MAY LEAD WORLD

Koussevitzky Announces Plans for Stockbridge Event

Boston, Feb. 13 AP—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, announced today his plans for the 1940 Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, which, its sponsors hope, will reach world leadership this year because of conditions abroad.

For its seventh season, the festival has been extended from two weeks to three, beginning August 1, and Koussevitzky said the scope of the affair would remain essentially symphonic, with special emphasis on the music of Tchaikovsky, because this is the centenary of his birth.

One week's programs will be devoted to the music of that Russian composer, and Artur Rodzinsky, conductor of the Cleveland symphony, has been invited to be guest conductor for one of the three Tchaikovsky programs.

Dorothy Maynor, fine young Negro soprano discovered by Koussevitzky at last year's festival, will be presented as a soloist in a group of arias and the choral group from Koussevitzky's school will join with the full orchestra and the soloists in presentation of Bach's B Minor Mass.

Albert Spaulding, distinguished violinist and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist in the Tchaikovsky concerto.

To round out the three weeks' programs, Koussevitzky has selected compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Sibelius, Brahms, Haydn and Wagner.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

FEB 18 1940

Catching the Beat in Music World Today

By INA WICKHAM.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, held each year in August at Tanglewood, Mass, is announcing some of his plans for the seventh annual festival to be held for three weeks in August from the 1st to 18th. Many interesting events are promised. One week will be devoted to the music of Tschaikowsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Albert Spalding, American violinist, will be soloist at one of these concerts playing Tschaikowsky's Violin concerto. Another concert will be devoted to Bach's B Minor Mass with distinguished soloists and chorus.

---

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

FEB 15 1940

MORNING GOSSIP

VALENTINE THOUGHT

My heart has just returned to me
That I might pen this valentine—
Expression for my love of thee,
And thus convey it to my mind.

My heart has been released from thine
To spend a slender moment here,
That I might ben this valentine—
And now it's gone another year!
—Sigfrid Hauck.

Three programs of music by Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky, as an observance of the centenary of the composer's birth, will be included in the repertoire to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

According to an announcement from the festival office at Stockbridge, there will be nine concerts this Summer, three more than in the last few years, to be held Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Arthur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will direct one of the Tchaikovsky programs. Soloists already engaged are Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, who was first heard at a party given by Dr. Koussevitsky for the Boston Symphony during the 1939 festival; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

The festival will be divided into three series. Works to be heard in Series A, Aug. 1, 3 and 4, are the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; Schubert's C major symphony, Brahms' second symphony and Roy Harris' third symphony; Respighi's arrangement of Bach's C minor Passacaglia, Faure's music for "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chole" suite.

The Tchaikovsky works to be heard in Series B, Aug. 8, 10 and 11, are all the symphonies, except the third, the violin concerto with Mr. Spalding as soloist; "Romeo and Juliet," the serenade for strings and second suite.

One of the progoms of Eeries C, Aug. 15, 17 and 18, will be devoted to Bach's mass in B minor. Other works scheduled for that week are Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Brahms' first symphony, a Haydn symphony, Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony, and arias to be sung by Miss Maynor. The chorus for the Mass will be from the Bergshire Music Center at Tanglewood, which, with Dr. Koussevitsky as director and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department, as assistant director, will open its first six weeks' session July 8.

Dr. Graf to Speak On Opera at Harvard

Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Association of New York and of the San Francisco Opera Company, will give a free public lecture at Harvard University Friday evening, March 14, on "Opera as a Popular Art in America." The lecture will take place at 8:30 in the Harvard music building.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

FEB 19 1940

Berkshire Festival Broadens Its Scope

An ambitious program promises world leadership for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940, to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its famed conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The Festival, now in its seventh year, remains essentially symphonic. By extending its length from two weeks to three weeks and by the inauguration of a new school the membership of which is already assured, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tchaikovsky, in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Another will include Bach's B Minor Mass with the full orchestra and the chorus and soloists. The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius, Brahms, aydn, Tchaikovsky, Roy Harris. Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Arthur Rodzinski has been invited as guest conductor and Dorothy Maynor, introduced to the world at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood last summer, will have an anniversary appearance at one of the Festival programs.

---

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

FEB 20 1940

Develop Plans For Berkshire Festival

Centenary of Birth Of Tschaikowsky To Be Observed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August at Tanglewood will feature three programs of music by Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky, as an observance of the centenary of the composer's birth. This will be the seventh annual festival played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction.

There will be nine concerts this Summer, three more than in the last few years. Arthur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will direct one of the Tschaikowsky programs. Soloists already engaged are Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, who was first heard at a party given by Dr. Koussevitzky for the Boston Symphony during the 1939 Festival; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

The festival will be divided into three series. Works to be heard in the first—August 1, 3 and 4—are the early symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; Schubert's C Major Symphony, Brahm's Second Symphony and Roy Harris' Third Symphony; Respighi's arrangement of Bach's C Minor Passacaglia; Faure's music for "Pelleas et Melisande," Stravinsky's "Capriccio" for piano and orchestra, with Mr. Sanroma as soloist; Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Ravel's second "Dapnis et Chloe," Suite.

The second series of concerts—August 8, 10 and 11—will be devoted to Tschaikowsky and will feature all the symphonies, except the third, the Violin Concerto with Mr. Spalding as soloist, "Romeo and Juliet," the Serenade for strings and the Second Suite.

One of the programs of the third series—August 15, 17 and 18—will be devoted to Bach's Mass in B minor. Other works scheduled for that week are Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Brahm's First Symphony, a Haydn symphony, Wagner excerpts, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" Symphony and arias to be sung by Miss Maynor. The chorus for the Mass will be formed from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, which, with Dr. Koussevitzky as director and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department, as assistant director will open July 8.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

MAR 24 1940

Tchaikovsky's Centenary Will Be Noted at Festival

The seventh annual Berkshire summer symphonic festival, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony, will include a celebration of the centenary of the birth of Tchaikovsky.

Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland symphony, will be a guest conductor in one of the three all-Tchaikowsky programs at the festival in Stockbridge, Mass.

The season will be extended this year to three weeks. A music school will be conducted in conjunction with the symphonic programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DENVER, COLO.
POST

MAR 31 1940

was commissioned second lieutenant.

Q.—Whose estate in the Berkshires was given to the Boston Symphony orchestra?—D. H.

A.—The Boston Symphony orchestra received from the heirs of Richard C. Dixey the gift of his Tanglewood estate in the Berkshire mountains as a permanent summer home. The 200-acre estate was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at the time he was writing "Tanglewood Tales" and making sketches for "The House of Seven Gables."

THIS CLIPPING FROM AUGUSTA, GA.
HERALD
THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAR 31 1940

Q. Wh[illegible] was Colonel Lindbergh at K[illegible]y Field in Texas? A. B. E.
A. On March 9, 1924, he enlisted as a flying cadet in the air service at Kelly Field and in the spring of 1925 was commissioned second lieutenant.

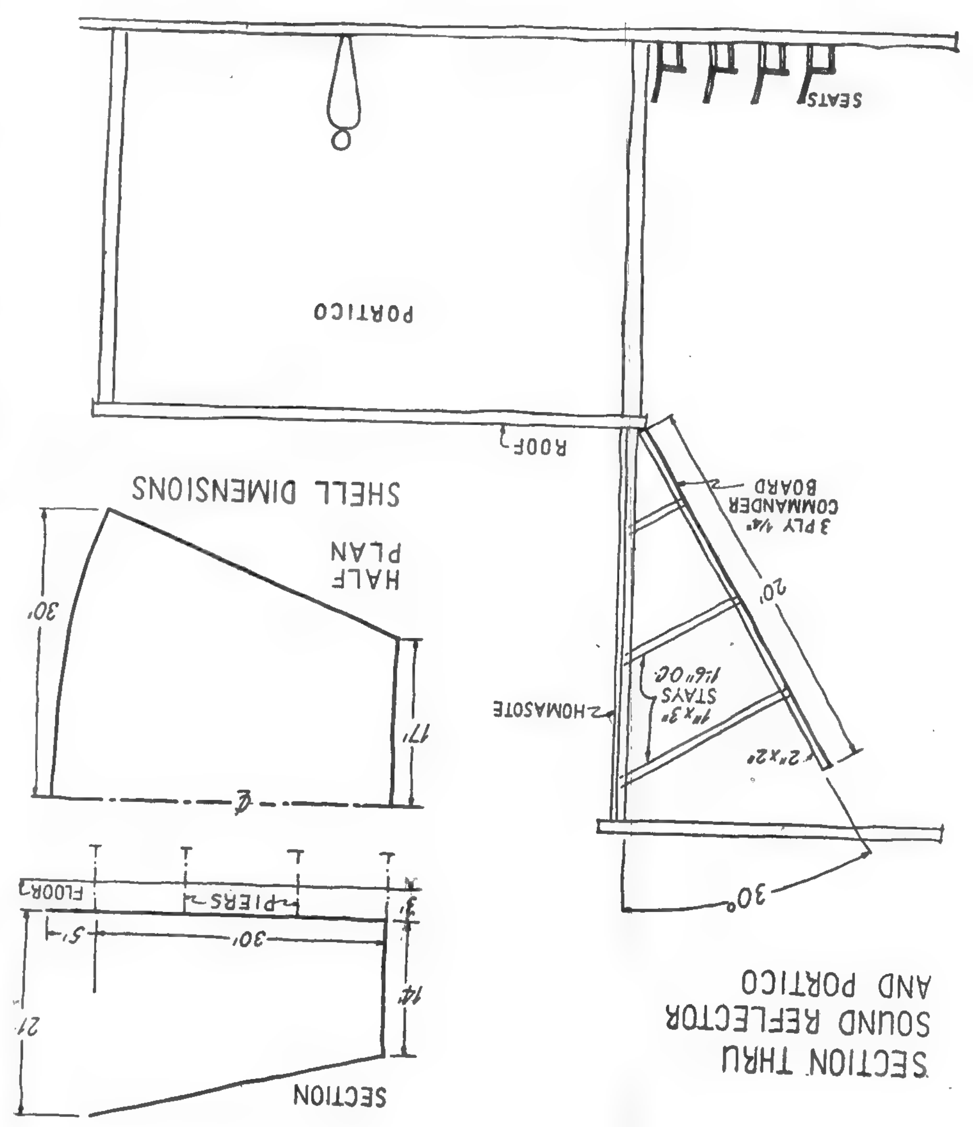
Q. Whose estate in the Berkshires was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra? D. H.
A. The Boston Symphony Orchestra received from the heirs of Richard C. Dixey the gift of his Tanglewood estate in the Berkshire Mountains as a permanent summer home. The two-hundred-acre estate was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at the time he was writing "Tanglewood Tales" and making sketches for "The House of Seven Gables."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

ARCHITECTURAL FORUM
PHILA., PA
MARCH, 1940

27

To meet the needs of the Berkshire summer colonists for symphonic music festivals, Architect Eliel Saarinen was asked to design a proper setting. Working in collaboration with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he produced a design and made a model. The scheme was magnificent, the available money insufficient. Rather than risk a necessary compromise with his vision, Saarinen withdrew. The hunger of the colonists for symphonic music persisted, and Joseph Franz, member of the board of directors and an engineer, undertook to supply the half a loaf warranted by the $80,000 in sight. The Berkshires now have their Music Shed, as they modestly call it, in place of a Symphonic Pavilion. The shed suggests again that esthetics and economy need not be strange bedfellows. The floor is of dirt, oiled; the enclosure of wallboard on studs bolted to a steel frame. When and if funds are available, wood roller doors will be added to enclose the shed. The orchestra shell is built of plywood on a wood frame, and its supports are entirely independent of the main structure.



SECTION THRU SOUND REFLECTOR AND PORTICO SEATS PORTICO ROOF
3 PLY 1/4" COMMANDER BOARD 20'
2"x2"
1⅛"x3" STAYS 1'6" O.C.
2 HOMASOTE
30°
SHELL DIMENSIONS
HALF PLAN
30'
17'
℄
SECTION FLOOR PIERS
30'
5' 14'
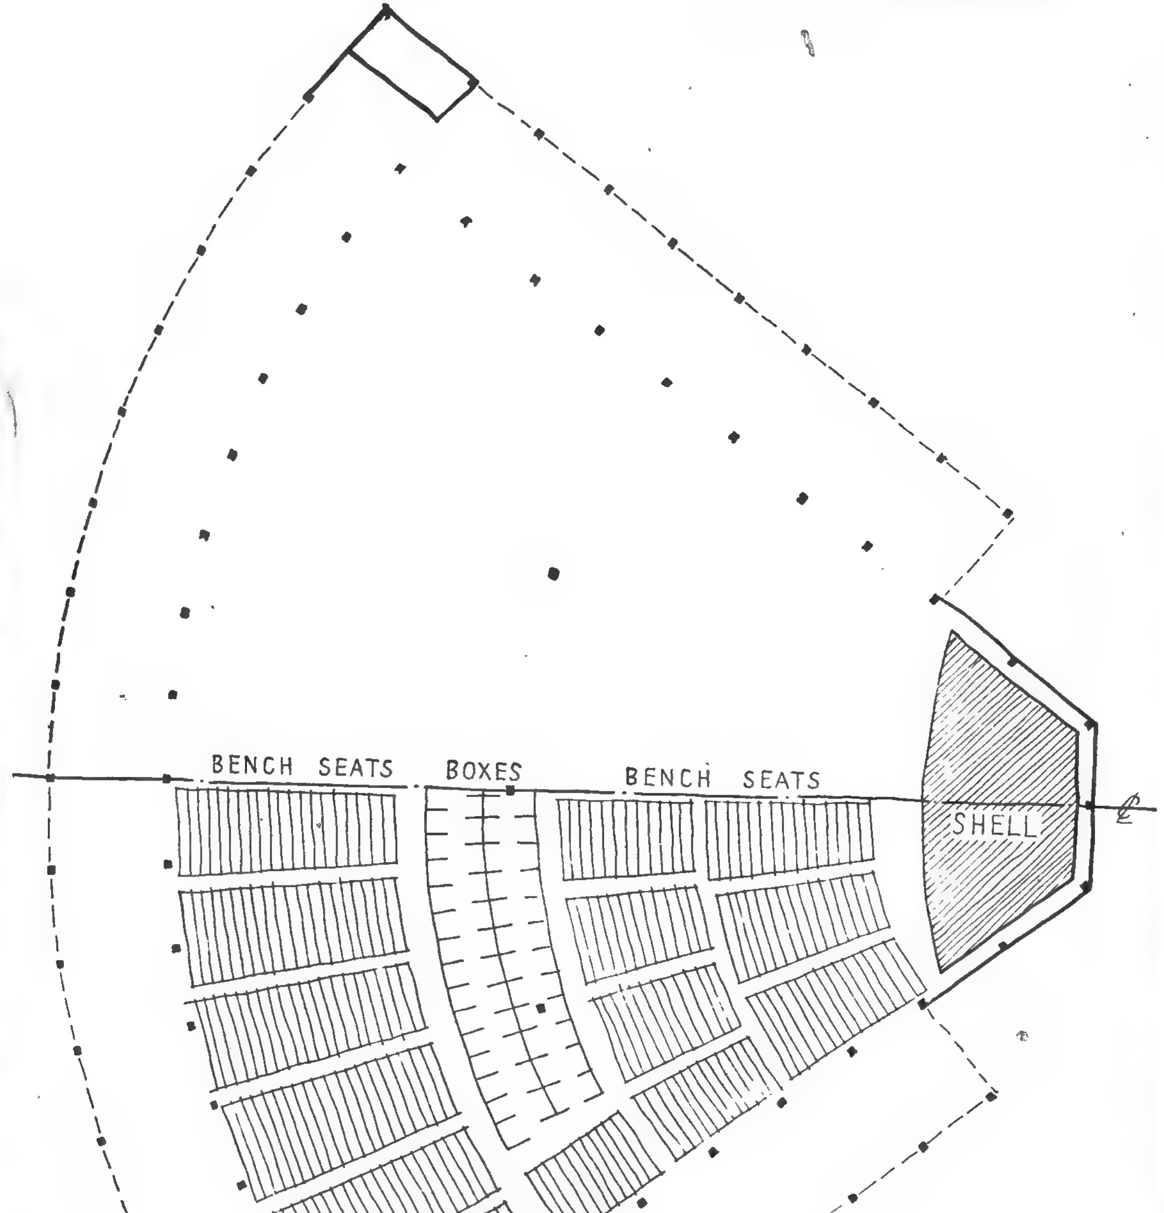
21'

to be directed back to the audience by a sound reflector extending around the outer arc of the plan and above the colonnade. The reflector is 20 feet wide, built of quarter-inch wall board on wood frame.

JOSEPH FRANZ, ENGINEER



BENCH SEATS
BOXES
BENCH SEATS SHELL
℄
PORTICO
Scale
0
10
50

ARCHITECTURAL FORUM
PHILA., PA
MARCH, 1940

27

All photos, Ezra Stoller

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC MUSIC SHED

JOSEPH FRANZ, ENGINEER

TANGLEWOOD, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

10x

ARCHITECTURAL FORUM
PHILA., PA
MARCH, 1940

27

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC MUSIC SHED

JOSEPH FRANZ, ENGINEER

Looking across the arc of the colonnade, from within (above) and without (below).

Present seating capacity—6,025 inside, with the possibility of adding 3,000 more in the colonnade.

CONSTRUCTION OUTLINE

STRUCTURE: Steel frame—Bethlehem Steel Co. Exterior facing—Homasote board, Agasote Co., nailed to 2 x 4 in. studs, bolted to steel frame. All lumber by Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co.

ROOF: Covered with 3-ply felt and asphalt, 10 year guarantee. Flashing and gutters—galvanized iron.

SHELL: Wood structure on separate foundation faced with 3-ply plywood.

SOUND REFLECTOR: Commander board, ¼ in., Upson Co., nailed to studs.

LIGHTING FIXTURES: By General Electric Co.

16x

28

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

MAR 24 1940

The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be held this summer at Tanglewood (between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.) is looking forward to one of its best seasons.

By mid-March, early applications for advance reservations had been sold to one-third of capacity. The season has been extended from two weeks to three, comprising the first three weeks of August.

During the opening week of the festival, the programs will include works by Beethoven, Schumann, Sibelius, Schubert, Brahms, Prokofleff, Ravel, Stravinsky and Roy Harris.

For the second week there will be a Tchaikovsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth. Artur Rodzinski will conduct one of the programs and Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist on another.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will appear with the orchestra the third week. The programs will include works by Brahms, Haydn, Wagner, Hindemith, and Bach's B-minor mass with the festival chorus of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will conduct the festival as usual.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 6 - 1940

Grants to Benefit Two Institution

The Rockefeller Foundation's annual report for 1939 shows a five-year grant of $32,500 to the biology group at Amherst College for the support of genetics as well as experimental embryology and growth studies.

The report also records a grant of $60,000 over a two-year period to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the establishment in 1940 of a musical educational center at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It will provide six weeks instruction under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Festival concerts will be given for three weeks in August. In the final week all productions are to be new symphonies by American composers. For 50 selected advance students there will be an institute offering courses in orchestral conducting, dramatic interpretation, advanced composition. For 400 others there will be an academy giving instruction in choral, orchestral, and chamber music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 13 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ADDS TWO TRUSTEES

Stockbridge, April 13—Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college and Mrs Myron C. Taylor of New York, have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, it was announced today by the trustees. Mrs Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox.

It was also announced by the trustees that there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the festival's home, located between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes available for the three weeks have been sold.

Harold V. Ruback, executive secretary for the festival for two years, has resigned to accept an executive position in Shreveport, La., and his place is being filled by Dale Phalen, secretary to Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. Peter Malevsky of New York has been added to the staff as assistant manager.

Complete information about the festival concerts may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge or to the New York office at Steinway hall, 113 West 57th street.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
MAR 31 1940

Berkshire Society Season Commences as April Nears, Despite Wintry Landscape

Dr Seaver B. Buck, Headmaster of Berkshire School, Sheffield, and Mrs Buck, to Entertain Prof and Mrs Walter Prichard Eaton of Yale and Mr and Mrs Frank J. Pope of Great Barrington at Dinner Today—First Meeting of Year for Berkshire Symphonic Festival Directors Called—Personal Notes of Interest

Special Dispatch to the Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, March 30—True to form, the Berkshire society season is starting in a small way with the approach of April, even though snow was nine feet deep today on the lawn at the Lenox club at Lenox. Tomorrow Dr Seaver B. Buck, headmaster of Berkshire school, Sheffield, and Mrs Buck, are having their initial dinner party of the season. It will be in compliment to their weekend guests, Prof Walter Prichard Eaton of the Yale school of the drama, and Mrs Eaton; also to Mr and Mrs Frank J. Pope of Great Barrington. Prof and Mrs Eaton are just back from Charlottesville and Williamsburg, Va. Prof Eaton has been sworn in as a member of the Mount Everett Reservation commission, to which he was appointed recently by Gov Leverett Saltonstall and of which Mr Pope is chairman.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc, has called the first meeting of the directors this year for next Friday afternoon at her town house, 1 Sutton place, South, New York city. More tickets than ever before have been sold for this summer series of concerts during three weeks in August at Tanglewood. It is said the limit of 300 students for the school of music at Tanglewood to be conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra in July and August already has been reached.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

APR 8 - 1940

Music Center In Berkshires To Get $60,000

RockefellerFoundationWill Aid Training School To Be Led by Koussevitsky

In a report of its 1939 activities which was made public yesterday, the Rockefeller Foundation announced that it made a grant of $60,000 to the Berkshire Music Center, which will open its first session under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass, on July 8. The center, a project which was first announced by Dr. Koussevitzky last summer, has its home at the site of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Berkshire festivals, and its first session will precede the seventh festival in this series next August.

Of, the foundation's allotment, $10,000 will be available for psysical improvements. This will permit remodeling of the three buildings on the estate to provide assembly, rehearsal and class rooms and for the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which can be used for chamber concerts and for stage productions by the center's class in opera dramatics. The remainder of the sum will make it possible to provide instruction of a high standard at low cost in the 1940 and 1941 sessions.

The center will have two divisions, the Institute for Advanced Study for those who have had thorough preliminary musical training and intend to pursue professional careers, and the academy, for students with less specific qualifications. The total enrollment will be limited to about 300 persons. G. Wallace Woodworth, of Harvard University, will be the assistant director, and approximately thirty members of the Boston Symphony will be included in the faculty.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

APR 8 - 1940

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION, in a report issued today of its activities for 1939, makes the first public announcement of a substantial grant to assist in establishing a Summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center. The grant is a recognition of the project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

The music center was chosen because of the unprecedented opportunities it will offer-six weeks of living and working in music in association with Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Rockefeller grant will provide equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches with a student body of 300.

Of the $60,000 allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years, $10,000 will be available for physical improvements. In addition to the music shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodelled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics. The balance will make it possible during the Summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May. The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

The Music Center, which opens July 8 and continues until August 18, including three week-ends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections: an Institute for advanced study and an Academy for music lovers with less specific qualifications. The faculty will include Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as Director; G. Wallace Woodworth, assistant Director; Olin Downes, Dr. Herbert Graf, Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland and 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

MAR 31 1940

Music Festival To Be Widened In Repertory

A comprehensive program has been planned for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, 1940, to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor. The Tchaikovsky centenary will be observed; Arthur Rodzinski has been invited to appear as guest conductor.

The festival, now in its seventh year, will remain essentially symphonic, but by extending its length from two to three weeks, and by beginning a new school, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

Dorothy Maynor, introduced at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood last summer, who has become known sensationally for her coloratura voice will have an anniversary appearance.

Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano in a work by Stravinsky and Albert Spaulding will be heard with the orchestra in a violin concerto.

A chorus will be drawn from the new Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood which will open a six-week season July 8.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be the director of the school and G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the music department at Harvard, assistant director.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
MAR 31 1940

Berkshire Festival

An ambitious program has been arranged for the Berkshire Symphonic festival which is to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The festival, now in its seventh year, remains essentially symphonic. By extending its length from two weeks to three weeks and by the inauguration of a new school, the membership of which is already assured, the repertory will be greatly broadened.

One of the three weeks will be devoted to music by Tschaikowsky in celebration of the hundredth anniversary of his birth. Another will include Bach's B-minor mass with the full orchestra and the chorus and soloists. The symphonic field is to be generously represented with symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Sibelius. Brahms, Haydn, Tschaikowsky, Roy Harris, Hindemith and Prokofieff.

Arthur Rodzinski has been invited as guest conductor while Dorothy Maynor, introduced to the world at a Boston Symphony picnic at Tanglewood last summer, will have an anniversary appearance at one of the festival programs. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in a work by Stravinsky and Albert Spalding will join the orchestra in a violin concerto.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
APR 8 - 1940

The Rockefeller Foundation gave $60,000 to the Berkshire Music Center, which is under Serge Koussevitzky's direction.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
APR 7 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL IN SEVENTH SERIES

Koussevitzky Again to Conduct Tanglewood Concerts —Academy to Open

Stockbridge,—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky has increased its activities from two to three weeks this season which also sees the inauguration of a school at Tanglewood.

The centennial of the birth of Tchaikovsky will be marked by devoting one entire week to the music of this Russian master. Other features include the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor and the offering of symphonic works by Roy Harris, Hindemith, Prokofieff, Sibelius, Schubert, Schumann, Haydn, Brahms and Beethoven.

Artur Rodzinski will be guest conductor and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who made her debut last season at this festival, will be heard again. Albert Spalding is soloist in Tchaikovsky's violin concerto and Jesus Maria Sanroma will play the piano part in Stravinsky's Capriccio.

The chorus will be from the new Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood which opens a six-week season on July 8 with Dr Koussevitzky as director and G. Wallace Woodworth as assistant.

The season will be divided into thred series: the first, with performances on August 1, 3 and 4 will be symphonic; the second, on August 8, 10 and 11 will be devoted to Tchaikovsky; and the third, on August 15, 17 and 18 will present, in addition to the Bach mass, works of Beethoven, Brahms, Haydn, excerpts from Wagnerian scores and Hindemith's Mathis der Maler with Miss Maynor.

Of the first 200 applications received for admission to the new school to be conducted this summer in connection with the Berkshire Festival, 111 are from men and 89 from women. About half of the applicants are under 25 years of age and 24 are over 40.

The applicants include students from leading American schools and conservatories and several have been received from persons enroled at the Salzburg Mozarteum, the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau, and the Royal College of Music in London.

About half of the applicants are already engaged in the musical profession as teachers, directors, supervisors of music, orchestral and choral conductors, composers, arrangers and players of various instruments. Many applications have been received for admission to the class in orchestral conducting which will be in charge of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Only qualified students will be admitted.

Thirty-six have applied for admission to courses in choral conducting at the Berkshire Music center while 57 have expressed interest in chamber music and ensemble playing. Two student orchestras will also be organized. As part of the work the academy chorus will prepare Bach's B minor Mass for presentation with the Boston Symphony under Dr Koussevitzky. Already 37 sopranos, 30 altos, 18 tenors and 26 basses have filed applications.

Students of the new center will be permitted to attend the nine festival concerts and a number of rehearsals. Important scores which they will hear being prepared include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius; the C major symphony of Schubert, the second of Brahms, the third of Roy Harris, Bach's Passacaglia, Faure's Pelleas et Melisande suite, Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, the second Daphnis et Chloe suite of Ravel, Tchaikovsky's second, fourth, fifth and sixth symphonies, the violin concerto of this Russian composer and his Romeo and Juliet overture, the third symphony of Beethoven, a Haydn symphony, the first of Brahms and works of Wagner and Hindemith.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLINTON, IA.
HERALD

APR 11 1940

Q. Whose estate in the Berkshires was given to the Boston Symphony orchestra? D. H.

A. The Boston Symphony orchestra received from the heirs of Richard C. Dixey the gift of his Tanglewood estate in the Berkshire mountains as a permanent summer home. The two-hundred-acre estate was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne at the time he was writing "Tanglewood Tales" and making sketches for "The House of Seven Gables."

THIS CLIPPING FROM FOND DU LAC, WIS.
Commonwealth-Reporter

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 8 - 1940

ROCKEFELLER AID TO MUSIC CENTER

Foundation Grants $60,000 to Berkshire Festival Group for School Project

TO BE USED IN TWO YEARS

Musical Education Available for 300 Students During the Festival Season

The Rockefeller Foundation has made a grant of $60,000 to the Berkshire Music Center for use during the next two years, it was announced yesterday in a report of the foundation's activities for 1939. The center will open a Summer music school on July 8 at Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The sum of $10,000 of the grant is available for physical improvements. The remaining $50,000 will make it possible during the Summer sessions of 1940 and 1941, according to the announcement, "to provide the finest instruction at relatively low cost to the student body."

The report added:

"In 1939 the foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

The foundation grant was made because the center will offer six weeks of "living and working in music" in association with Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It will help provide equipment for the conduct of the school in all its branches with a student body of 300.

There are three buildings on the estate, known as Tanglewood, that can be remodeled for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theatre, which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts and which will permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

The center will continue its work from July 8 to Aug. 18. During the first three weeks in August the annual festival will be held in the music shed at Tanglewood.

GROTON, N.Y
JOURNAL
4/10/40

Hawthorne's Home

Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Mass, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festivals are held.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
APR 8 - 1940

Rockefeller Gift

THE announcement today of a grant of money by the Rockefeller Foundation to establish the Berkshire Music Center means that the Stockbridge-Lenox area will become even more than in the past a summer mecca of music lovers. The news is of importance to the whole New England section, enhancing as it does the significance of what is rapidly becoming one of our great centers of art and culture.

From New England and beyond are annually drawn the audiences for the Berkshire festival with the performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra and musical artists of outstanding reputation. Now, by the terms of this Rockefeller Foundation gift, there will be established at Tanglewood, the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire hills, a summer school that will offer six weeks of "living and working in music" with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and members of the great musical organization which he conducts.

Facilities for a school are already in the orchestra's possession but $10,000 of the Rockefeller grant will be available for physical improvements, to include the building of a small theater, and the remaining $50,000 for the attraction there of an outstanding faculty.

At the outset about 300 pupils will be accepted and the rates they will pay made relatively low. And it is hoped that the project "will have an important influence on the development of music in America." Certainly it is an addition to the educational attractions of this section and the cultural enjoyment of its people for which we should be profoundly thankful.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 11 1940

Dr. Baxter, Mrs. Myron Taylor Elected to Festival Board

Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of New York, have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it was announced today by the trustees.

Whereas last fall there were many misgivings locally as to the wisdom of extending the Festival from two to three weeks, these misgivings have been largely dissipated according to the trustees because of the "most encouraging response" from subscribers and boxholders. The returns from areas outside the Berkshires added to the substantial support from the Berkshires themselves, make the total well ahead of the returns of a corresponding date last year. Already 168 of the 240 available boxes have been sold.

Ruback Resigns

The trustees also announced with regret the resignation of Harold V. Ruback, executive secretary for two years. He has accepted an executive position in Shreveport, La. His place is being filled by Dale Phalen, secretary to Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. Peter Malevsky of New York has been added to the staff as assistant manager.

Widespread interest has been shown in the school to be opened by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in July. About 400 applications have been received by the secretary, Mrs. Margaret Grant. Only 300 can be accommodated.

Information concerning the Festival's nine concerts by the orchestra may be obtained from the main office at Stockbridge or from the New York office at Steinway Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
APR 13 1940

An American Salzburg

THE European war and the Berkshire music festival in the Stockbridge-Lenox region of Massachusetts may serve to make the United States the leading music nation of the world. The festival has already gone far toward this end. The war will accentuate the pace, bringing musicians to the hills of western Massachusetts from all the centers of Europe.

Tanglewood is the attractive name of the spot selected by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his associates in this venture. Great crowds have come to Tanglewood and have gone away enthusiastic, using such phrases as "the American Salzburg."

"We want to be modest in our promises, but not in our aspirations," Dr. Koussevitzky told a recent gathering of club women interested in the project. He went on to describe how not only amateurs were being drawn to the Berkshire school, but musical experts including composers, choral directors, orchestral conductors, music supervisors and of course competent players from all over the world.

Up to now this country has had nothing comparable to the great music centers abroad, but we are on our way.

THIS CLIPP
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 26 1940

Lots of people laughed when there was talk a few years back among a group of far-sighted folks that the Berkshires had the ideal setting for an American Salzburg. Those who were not so skeptical, and those who were, have seen the Berkshire festival thrive at Tanglewood; they have seen the concerts move from a tent to a permanent structure; they have seen a two weeks' season extend to three; they have seen a grant of $60,000 come from the Rockefeller foundation to aid the academy set up in conjunction with the festival. Now that Serge Koussevitzky has purchased the 162 acre summer estate of the late Kate Buckingham on Bald Head mountain at Lenox, the Berkshires gain another notable resident. Rodzinski already has a Lenox estate. Must be that Serge figures Tanglewood is past the worrying stage.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

NEWARK, N.J
EVE. NEWS
4/15/4

Berkshire Flavor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—A distinct Berkshire flavor will be given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's festival here this Summer.

The guest conductor, Dr. Artur Rodzinski, owns a farm in Stockbridge, where he spends all his spare time. Albert Spaulding, who will appear as violin soloist, is a resident of nearby Great Barrington.

The extent of the festival's influence is indicated in inquiries from South America. In response to requests, festival information in Spanish has been forwarded through the Pan-American Union to 26 Latin American nations. Nine concerts will be given under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the festival's home.

Dr. James P. Baxter, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of New York have been elected to the festival board.

THIS CLIPP
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 10 1940

Once there was a husky young man who for years did little but wrestle a big, growling bull-fiddle, winning every decision and becoming the world's greatest virtuoso of the double bass. In a new day, in a new world, he took command of the Valkyries, the only conductor with a wide enough wingspread to shepherd all the daughters of Odin at once. That was Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and of the Berkshire Music Center, which gets $60,000 from the Rockefeller foundation. He will lead its new training center, which these funds will provide.

In his bull-fiddle days, his father-in-law gave him a steamboat and he put on musical showboat tours on the Volga. The Bolsheviks ordered him to keep up with his music. He and his orchestra played with mittens on, but later he said, in effect, "to hell with it," and went to Paris. There he arranged chairs and mirrors to simulate an audience and continued his studies of conducting. He attracted a real audience, built his fame and went to Boston, at $50,000 a year to rebuild the orchestra after Dr Karl Muck went to Fort Oglethorpe.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
APR 13 1940

An American Salzburg

The European war and the Berkshire music festival in the Stockbridge-Lenox region of Massachusetts may serve to make the U. S. the leading music nation of the world. The festival has already contributed toward this end. The war will accentuate the pace, bringing musicians to the hills of western Massachusetts from all the centers of Europe.

Tanglewood is the attractive name of the spot selected by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his associates in this venture. Great crowds have come to Tanglewood and have gone away enthusiastic, using such phrases as "the American Salzburg."

"We want to be modest in our promises, but not in our aspirations," Dr. Koussevitzky told a recent gathering of club women interested in the project. He went on to describe how not only amateurs were being drawn to the Berkshire school, but musical experts including composers, choral directors, orchestral conductors, music supervisors and of course competent players from all over the world.

Up to now this country has had nothing comparable to the great music centers abroad. but we are on our way.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
APR 14 1940

FESTIVAL BOARD PICKS TRUSTEES

Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of New York, have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it was announced today by the trustees. Mrs. Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox.

It was also announced by the trustees that there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Sege Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the festival's home, located between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes available for the three weks have been sold.

The returns on subscription and box sales are substantially ahead of the same date last year in ing an increased interest fr flung areas in the Berksh ture. Even Latin America ing increased interest in val and in response to rec acting through the Pan Union, the festival is literature in Spanish to in-American nations.
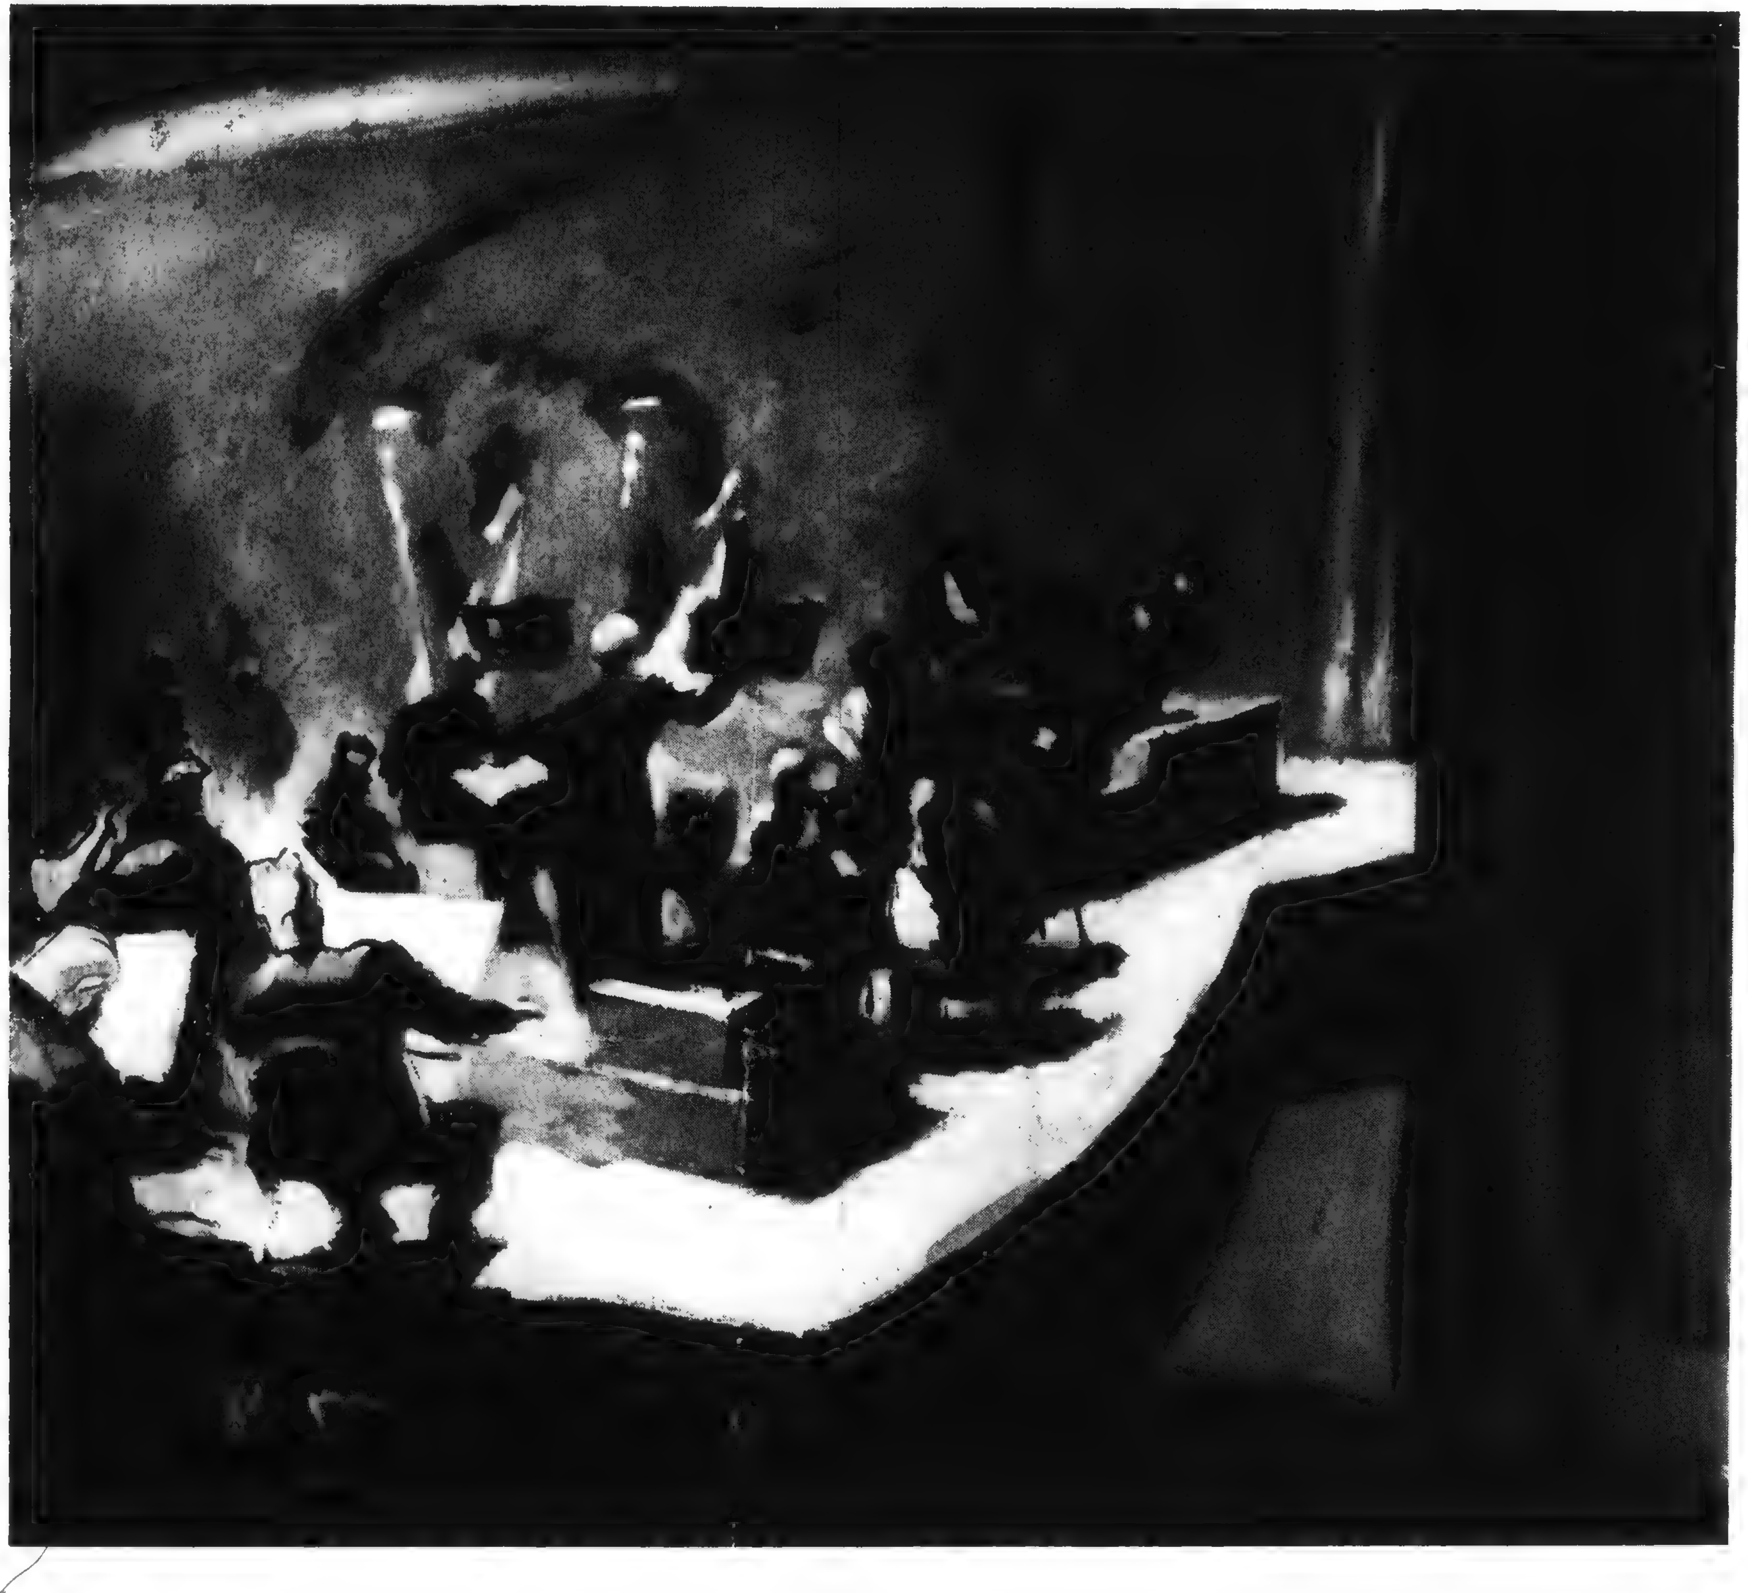
Harold V. Ruback,

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

- - 1940

Hudson Walker Gallery — photo Roy Jacoby



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN REHEARSAL
Gouache by Donald Greason

America's distinguished orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, leaves its Boston home each summer for a festival of music at Stockbridge in the Berkshires. This year the festival time has been lengthened from two to three weeks, and the scope of the program broadened to include The Berkshire Music Center, which will open for six weeks on July 8.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is more than a promise. It has become the focus of music lovers from all over America. Firmly ensconced in its ample Music Shed at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will launch its seventh annual program. This year it takes an important new step forward by sponsoring in addition to its concerts a Music Center. Beside instruction in instrumental music, composition and conducting, a class in opera dramatics will be established. The staff is a guarantee of the high professional standard of teaching. It includes, besides Mr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, Herbert Graf for Opera Dramatics; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, in Composition; Olin Downes, Douglas Kennedy and G. Wallace Woodworth each in charge of his special field. This addition to its schedule suggests enticing possibilities for the future of the Berkshire Music Center. The American Summer festivals as a whole have definitely entered a new phase of experience, influence and leadership.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

APR 24 1940

Dr. Koussevitzky Buys Estate In Lenox

PITTSFIELD, April 24—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and his wife today purchased the 162-acre summer estate of the late Miss Kate Buckingham of Chicago situated on the southern slope of Bald Head Mountain, Lenox.

The property consists of a 20-room house and numerous other buildings overlooking Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Lake Mahkeenac and the southern Berkshire hills.

The estate, the registry of deeds revealed, was bought from the Art Institute of Chicago which had received it from Miss Buckingham.

The purchase price was not disclosed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

APR 15 1940

30

Berkshire Festival Election

DR. JAMES PHINNEY BAXTER 3rd, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor, New York, have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Mrs. Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons, New York and Lenox.

The trustees also announced there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the festival's home, between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes have been sold.

Returns on subscription and box sales are substantially ahead of the same date last year, indicating an increased interest from far flung areas. Even Latin America is showing increased interest in the festival and in response to requests and acting through the Pan-American Union, the festival is forwarding literature in Spanish to the 26 Latin American nations.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 15 1940

Two New Members Join Board of Berkshire Festival

Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of New York have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it was annonced today by the trustees.

Mrs. Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox.

It was also announced that there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual Festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the Festival's home between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes available for the three weeks have been sold.

The returns on subscription and box sales are substantially ahead of the same date last year, indicating an increased interest from far flung areas in the Berkshire venture. Even Latin America is showing increased interest in the Festival and in response to requests and acting through the Pan-American Union, the Festival is forwarding literature in Spanish to the 23 Latin American nations.

Harold V. Ruback, executive secretary for the Festival for two years has resigned to accept an executive position in Shreveport, La., and his place is being filled by Dale Phalen, secretary to Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. Peter Malevsky of New York has been added to the staff as assistant manager.

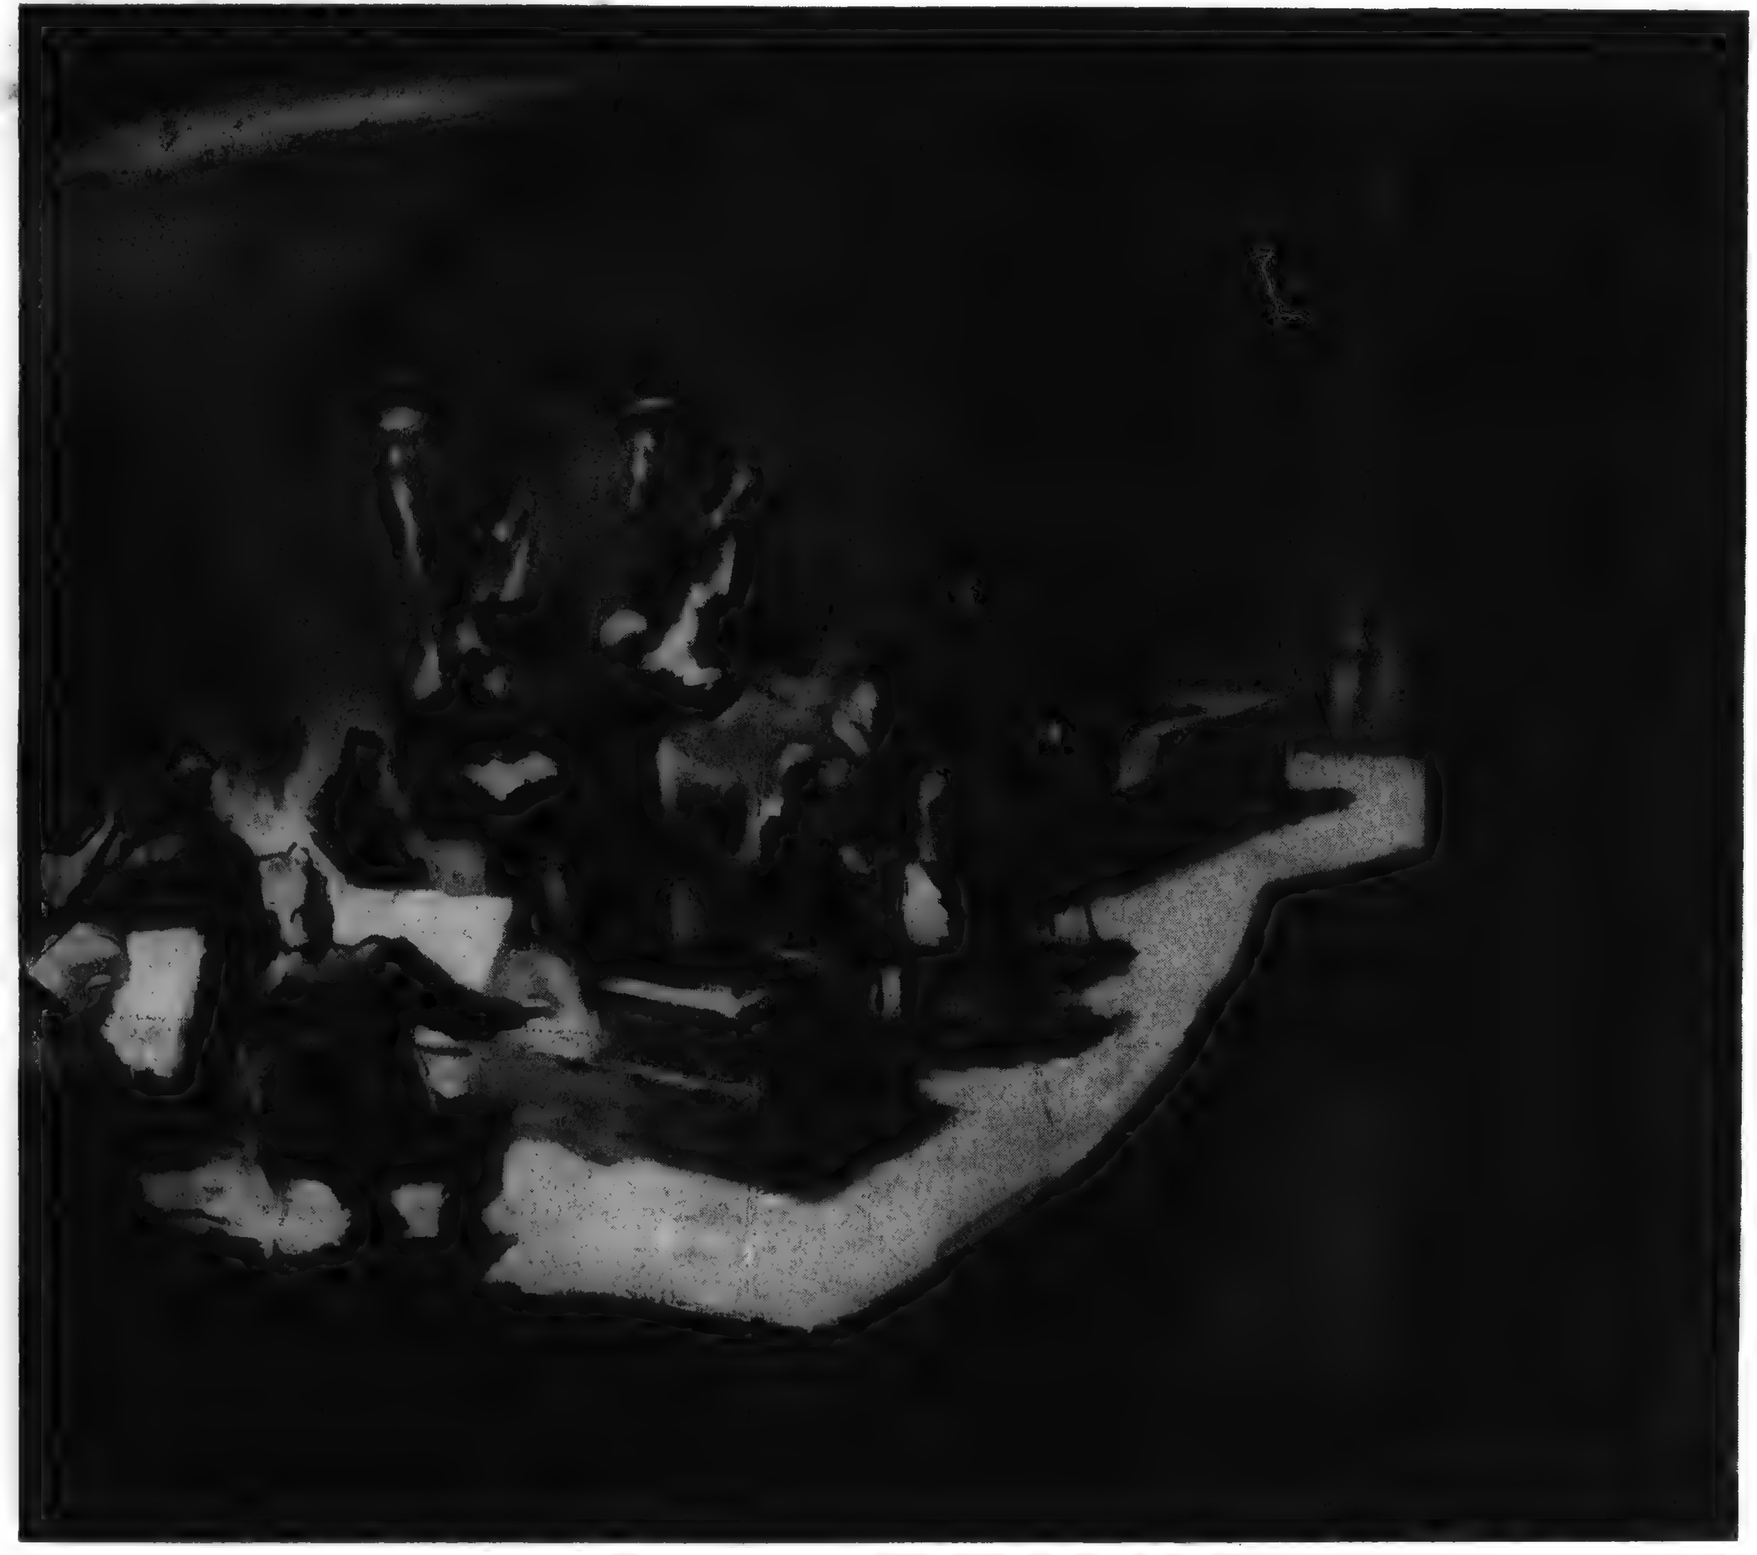
Complete information about the Festival concerts may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge or to the New York office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th St.

30

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

APR - - 1940

Hudson Walker Gallery — photo Roy Jacoby



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN REHEARSAL
Gouache by Donald Greason

America's distinguished orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, leaves its Boston home each summer for a festival of music at Stockbridge in the Berkshires. This year the festival time has been lengthened from two to three weeks, and the scope of the program broadened to include The Berkshire Music Center, which will open for six weeks on July 8.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is more than a promise. It has become the focus of music lovers from all over America. Firmly ensconced in its ample Music Shed at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will launch its seventh annual program. This year it takes an important new step forward by sponsoring in addition to its concerts a Music Center. Beside instruction in instrumental music, composition and conducting, a class in opera dramatics will be established. The staff is a guarantee of the high professional standard of teaching. It includes, besides Mr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, Herbert Graf for Opera Dramatics; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, in Composition; Olin Downes, Douglas Kennedy and G. Wallace Woodworth each in charge of his special field. This addition to its schedule suggests enticing possibilities for the future of the Berkshire Music Center. The American Summer festivals as a whole have definitely entered a new phase of experience, influence and leadership.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

APR 24 1940

Dr. Koussevitzky Buys Estate In Lenox

PITTSFIELD, April 24—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and his wife today purchased the 162-acre summer estate of the late Miss Kate Buckingham of Chicago situated on the southern slope of Bald Head Mountain, Lenox.

The property consists of a 20-room house and numerous other buildings overlooking Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Lake Mahkeenac and the southern Berkshire hills.

The estate, the registry of deeds revealed, was bought from the Art Institute of Chicago which had received it from Miss Buckingham.

The purchase price was not disclosed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

APR 15 1940

Berkshire Festival Election

DR. JAMES PHINNEY BAXTER 3rd, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor, New York, have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Mrs. Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons, New York and Lenox.

The trustees also announced there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the festival's home, between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes have been sold.

Returns on subscription and box sales are substantially ahead of the same date last year, indicating an increased interest from far flung areas. Even Latin America is showing increased interest in the festival and in response to requests and acting through the Pan-American Union, the festival is forwarding literature in Spanish to the 26 Latin American nations.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 15 1940

Two New Members Join Board of Berkshire Festival

Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3rd, president of Williams College, and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of New York have been elected to the board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, it was annonced today by the trustees.

Mrs. Taylor fills the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox.

It was also announced that there has been "a most encouraging" response to announcements concerning subscriptions and boxes for the seventh annual Festival concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The nine concerts will be given the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the Festival's home between Lenox and Stockbridge. Already 168 of the 240 boxes available for the three weeks have been sold.

The returns on subscription and box sales are substantially ahead of the same date last year, indicating an increased interest from far flung areas in the Berkshire venture. Even Latin America is showing increased interest in the Festival and in response to requests and acting through the Pan-American Union, the Festival is forwarding literature in Spanish to the 23 Latin American nations.

Harold V. Ruback, executive secretary for the Festival for two years has resigned to accept an executive position in Shreveport, La., and his place is being filled by Dale Phalen, secretary to Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. Peter Malevsky of New York has been added to the staff as assistant manager.

Complete information about the Festival concerts may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge or to the New York office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th St.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 8 - 1940

3

Berkshire Festival Gets $60,000 Grant for Music

The music center, the Berkshire Festival school, has been granted $60,000 for use during the next two years, by the Rockefeller Foundation. The report says that the grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony orchestra in establishing the school of music.

"In 1939," the report states, "the foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

Of the $60,000 allocated to the music center for use during the next two years, $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the music shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodeled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals, and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is the director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard university, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Harbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all first-stand players. Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert-master of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music. Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davidson, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation association.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 25 1940

Koussevitzkys Buy Berkshires Estate

Acquire Buckingham Place, Plan for Music Season

LENOX, April 24—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Mrs. Koussevitzky have definitely purchased the residence on the south slope of Bald Head Mountain, the summer home of the late Miss Kate Buckingham. The purchase was made from the Art Institute in Chicago which had received the estate as a bequest from Miss Bu ingham. The Institute was represen by Atty. Milton B. Warner of Pi field.

The Koussevitzkys expect to t

Center Gets $60,000 ockefeller Foundation

Music School To Be Beneficiary

Grant Provides $10,000 for Physical Improvements, $50,000 for Instruction

Announcement of a grant of $60,000 to assist in establishing the summer music school at Tanglewood, scene of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, was announced today in the 1939 report of the Rockefeller Foundation.

School Opens July 8

"In 1939," the report states, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program of humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first session will begin July 8, at Tanglewood, the orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, and continue until Aug. 18.

Of the $60,000 allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the Music Shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodelled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theatre which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

$50,000 for Faculty

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 an 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

The Music Center, which will be in session during the three week ends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections: One to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard University, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton Academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe, and Wellesley orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davison, pro- essor of choral music at Harvard University; Carleton Sprague mith, chief of the division of mu- c, New York Public Library; Ran- all Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation Association.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 8 - 1940

$60,000 Given Music Center In Stockbridge

Rockefeller Foundation Makes Grant to Symphony Project

The Rockefeller Foundation, in a report issued today of its activities for the year 1939, makes the first public announcement of a substantial grant to assist in establishing a summer music school, to be known as the Berkshire Music Center.

The grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"In 1939," the report states, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

The first session will begin July 8 at "Tanglewood," the Orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Chosen for Opportunity Offered

The Music Center was chosen on account of the quite unprecedented opportunities it will offer —six weeks of "living and working in music," in association with Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

The sum of $60,000 has been allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years, of which $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the Music Shed, used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the School's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodelled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater for school rehearsals and chamber concerts which can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

$50,000 for Instruction

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

The Music Center, which will open July 8 and continue until Aug. 18, including three weekends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections. One will be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other will be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

The Faculty

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard University, is the assistant director. Other members include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors; and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton Academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley Orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation Association.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 8 - 1940

31

Berkshire Festival Gets $60,000 Grant for Music

The music center, the Berkshire Festival school, has been granted $60,000 for use during the next two years, by the Rockefeller Foundation. The report says that the grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony orchestra in establishing the school of music.

"In 1939," the report states, "the foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

Of the $60,000 allocated to the music center for use during the next two years, $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the music shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities. there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodeled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals, and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is the director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard university, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Harbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all first-stand players. Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert-master of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music. Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davidson, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation association.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 25 1940

Koussevitzkys Buy Berkshires Estate

Acquire Buckingham Place, Plan for Music Season

LENOX, April 24—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Mrs. Koussevitzky have definitely purchased the residence on the south slope of Bald Head Mountain, the summer home of the late Miss Kate Buckingham. The purchase was made from the Art Institute in Chicago which had received the estate as a be ingham. The by Atty. M field.

The Koussevit

Center Gets $60,000 ockefeller Foundation

Musi School To Be Beneficiary

Grant Provides $10,000 for Physical Improvements, $50,000 for Instruction

Announcement of a grant of $60,000 to assist in establishing the summer music school at Tanglewood, scene of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, was announced today in the 1939 report of the Rockefeller Foundation.

School Opens July 8

"In 1939," the report states, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program of humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first session will begin July 8, at Tanglewood, the orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, and continue until Aug. 18.

Of the $60,000 allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the Music Shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodelled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theatre which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

$50,000 for Faculty

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 an 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

The Music Center, which will be in session during the three week ends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections: One to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard University, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton Academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe, and Wellesley orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard University; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation Association.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 8 - 1940

$60,000 Given Music Center In Stockbridge

Rockefeller Foundation Makes Grant to Symphony Project

The Rockefeller Foundation, in a report issued today of its activities for the year 1939, makes the first public announcement of a substantial grant to assist in establishing a summer music school, to be known as the Berkshire Music Center.

The grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"In 1939," the report states, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

The first session will begin July 8 at "Tanglewood," the Orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Chosen for Opportunity Offered

The Music Center was chosen on account of the quite unprecedented opportunities it will offer —six weeks of "living and working in music," in association with Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

The sum of $60,000 has been allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years, of which $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the Music Shed, used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the School's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodelled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater for school rehearsals and chamber concerts which can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

$50,000 for Instruction

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

The Music Center, which will open July 8 and continue until Aug. 18, including three weekends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections. One will be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other will be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

The Faculty

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard University, is the assistant director. Other members include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors; and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton Academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley Orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York Public Library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation Association.

32

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

APR 7 - 1940

GRANT OF $60,000 FOR MUSIC SCHOOL AT TANGLEWOOD

Rockefeller Foundation Gives Funds for Musical Education at Symphonic Festival's Center

Pittsfield, April 6—The annual report of the Rockefeller foundation for 1939 made public today announced a grant of $60,000 to assist in the establishment of a summer music school at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Symphonic festival's musical center.

The report says in part:—

"In 1939, the foundation stepped outside its usual program of humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of Boston Symphony orchestra. The first session will begin July 8, at Tanglewood, the orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, and continue until August 18.

"Of the $60,000 allocated the music center for use during the next two years $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the music shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodeled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

$50,000 for Faculty

"The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and althought the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

"The Lenox school, also located in the Stockbridge bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

"The music center, which will be in session during the three weekends of the Berkshire festival concerts, will have two sections: One to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience."

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is the director of the music center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard university, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all first-stand players.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

APR 8 - 1940

Gift of $60,000 Backs Summer Music Center

Dr. Koussevitsky Will Direct School Aided by Rockefeller Foundation

The Rockefeller Foundation, in a report released today of its activities for the year 1939, makes the first public announcement of a substantial grant to assist in establishing a Summer music school to be known as the Berkshire Music Center. The grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "In 1939," the report states, "the foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America.

In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra." The first session will begin July 8 at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The Music Center was chosen on account of the quite unprecedented opportunities it will offer—six weeks of "living and working in music," in association with Dr. Koussevitzky, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

$60,000 Allocated to Center

Sixty thousand dollars has been allocated to the Music Center for use during the next two years, of which $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the music shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodeled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals, and classes. The grant also will be sufficient to permit the construction of a practical unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

The balance of $50,000 will make it possible during the Summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox School, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

Music Lovers' Academy

The Music Center, which will open July 8 and continue until August 18, including three week-ends of the Berkshire Festival Concerts, will have two sections: One to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

(Continued from Page 1)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the director of the Music Center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Department of Music, Harvard University, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copeland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all first-stand players.

Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton Academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe, and Wellesley Orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

APR 14 1940

Berkshire Music Center

Interest in the Berkshire Symphonic festival this year does not wait for the approach of August, for it is to be part of a more extended musical season. The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Stockbridge, was announced last year, and now it is to be established with the aid of substantial support from the Rockefeller foundation.

This summer school has been a pet project of the orchestra's famous conductor, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, who has held that the Berkshire summer season, and the gift of a beautiful estate, gave a wonderful opportunity to make educational use of the varied skill and knowledge of the assembled musicians. The first conception was to give instruction and training to conductors and students in the art of conducting, together with technical instruction in the playing of orchestral instruments and in scoring.

This in itself should draw to Berkshire, for the school and the festival, many musicians and teachers of music from all parts of the country, but the work of the music center has been expanded by courses in music appreciation and kindred subjects for which nothing is required of entrants except interest in music and willingness to attend the classes and do the work.

From the music lovers thus brought together will be formed a large chorus for the production of an important work, which is an innovation at the festivals. This year it will be Bach's great Mass in B minor, which probably will be the closing event. The rest of the festival will be mainly devoted, as usual, to great symphonies, but a slight deviation will result from dedicating three concerts to a Tschaikowsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth. Altogether the festival, in three series, which may be subscribed for separately, extends from August 1 to August 18, and the work of the new music center will begin on July 8.

With Europe practically barred to the many American teachers and performing musicians who have been accustomed to spend their summers abroad for advanced study, the courses offered at Tanglewood should be a great attraction, and school and concerts taken together will make Berkshire a music center in the fullest sense.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 24 1940

Music Scores for Festival Delayed by Allied Blockade

Tanglewood is not escaping the effects of the Allied blockade. Music scores are either being withheld from shipment or delayed in transit.

The situation came to light yesterday when Charles A. Ward Jr., founder and conductor of the Westchester Bach Society tried to obtain copies of Mozart's adagio and fugue in C minor. After canvassing music shops, Mr. Ward found three copies and the society's concert for the Finnish Relief Fund will go on as scheduled Saturday night in New Rochelle.

Scores Ordered

But to return to Tanglewood, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's problem. An order had been placed for 300 copies of Paul Hindemith's oratorio, "The Perpetual," scheduled for its American premiere by the Berkshire Music Center's chorus at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Unable to import the choral scores from the non-Jewish exile's native land, the publisher is running off 300 copies by the offset process. The orchestral parts are being imported from London

The Associated Music Publishers Inc., says that British sea power stands between the best editions of some of the greatest music and American concert stages. Even yesterday a $3000 shipment of scores, all paid for, was in a warehouse in Rotterdam.

Use Stamps To Fool Censor

A small trickle of the scores passes under the big guns of Gibraltar, but only a trickle. And even these must be fixed up with Italian labels and stamps to fool the British censor. Other small shipments find their way out through Hungary and Switzerland, but not in quantities to meet even the generally light demand for such things in New York City.

After Mr. Ward's efforts came to light, the situation was explained by an official of the Associated Music Publishers, Inc., which has a virtual monopoly here of German-printed music works. It represents eight German publishers and owns their American copywrights for many thousands of compositions and arrangements.

He said that acceptable editions of many works were printed only in Germany and that these have been sold out. Many are in the public domain, but the demand is so small that the cost would be prohibitive to reprint them here. In cases where only one or two copies of a work remain here the corporation is not selling them but rents them to orchestras.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 24 1940

Koussevitzkys Buy Estate Overlooking Tanglewood

LENOX—Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky have definitely purchased the residence on the south slope of Bald Head Mountain, the summer home of the late Miss Kate Buckingham. The purchase was made from the Art Institute in Chicago which had received the estate as a bequest from Miss Buckingham. The Institute was represented by Atty. Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield.

The property commands a striking view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains of Southern Berkshire. It is conveniently located near Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the newly established Berkshire Music Center of which Dr. Koussevitzky is the director. Besides the large residence, there are 162 acres of land and a superintendent's cottage.

The Koussevitzkys expect to take immediate possession. They will probably arrive in Lenox the early part of the summer to have the house in readiness for the opening of the Center July 8.

33

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
APR 8 - 1940

Rockefeller Foundation Gives $60,000 Grant To Berkshire Music Center

Serge Koussevitsky To Direct Six-Week Course At Stockbridge

(Special to The Republican)

The Rockefeller foundation, in a report issued today of its activities for the year 1939, makes the first public announcement of a substantial grant to assist in establishing a summer music school, to be known as the Berkshire Music center. The grant is a notable recognition of the ambitious project of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"In 1939," the report states, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra." The first session will begin July 8 at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Six-Week Program

The Music center was chosen on account of the quite unprecedented opportunities it will offer—six weeks of "living and working in music," in association with Dr. Koussevitzky, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It is significant that no other school of similar proportions has been undertaken with such modest equipment. Nevertheless, the Rockefeller grant will make this equipment adequate for the conduct of the school in all its branches, and for a student body of 300.

$60,000 Grant Given

Sixty thousand dollars has been allocated to the Music center for use during the next two years, of which $10,000 is available for physical improvements. In addition to the Music Shed which is used for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts and which will be an important factor in the school's facilities, there are three buildings on the estate which can be remodeled to provide adequate accommodations for assembly, rehearsals, and classes. The grant will also be sufficient to permit the construction of a practicable unit for a small theater which will be used for school rehearsals and chamber concerts, and can permit stage presentations by the class in opera dramatics.

300 Vacancies Exist

The balance of $50,000 will make its possible during the summer sessions of 1940 and 1941 to provide the finest instruction at a relatively low cost to the student body. About 300 can be accepted, and although the applications to date exceed this number, those received in the present month will be considered when acceptances are decided upon by the first of May.

The Lenox school, also located in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations to the extent of its capacity.

Two Sections Arranged

The Music center, which will open July 8 and continue until Aug. 18, including three week-ends of the Berkshire Festival concerts, will have two sections: One to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

Members Named

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is the director of the Music center. G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music, Harvard university, is the assistant director. Other members of the faculty include Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, composers and authors, and a faculty of 30 instrumental musicians and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all first-stand players. Special assistants on the faculty will be Stanley Chapple, conductor and lecturer; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor and concert-master of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Howard Abell, head of the music department at Milton academy; Malcolm Holmes, conductor of the Harvard, Radcliffe and Wellesley orchestras; and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Special guest lecturers for 1940 include Archibald T. Davison, professor of choral music at Harvard university; Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the division of music, New York public library; Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music; and Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music at the National Recreation association.

MISSION ANNOUNCED

A mission service will be held April 19 at the St. Mary's Russian Orthodox church, it was announced yesterday by Rev. Peter Dzubay, pastor.

Fr. Dzubay will announce soon the clergyman to preach at the special service. Valery Ivanoff will direct the choir.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN
APR 14 1940

Music Notes - - -

HERE COMES

By GEORGE HAGE

OF INESTIMABLE importance on the American musical scene is a development implied in last week's report by the Rockefeller Foundation on its activities for the year 1939. Contained in the report was the first public announcement of a sizeable grant to the Berkshire Music Center, the summer music school whose establishment was announced earlier this spring by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

"In 1939," the report stated, "the Foundation stepped outside its usual program in the humanities to make a contribution toward a project which it is hoped will have an important influence on the development of music in America. In the familiar setting of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Massachusetts, there is to be established in 1940 a center for musical education under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

The Foundation has allocated a sum of $60,000 to the Music Center for use during the next two years. Of this sum, $10,000 will be available for physical improvements. "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate near Stockbridge which will be the home of the school, has the Music Shed in addition to three buildings which can be remodelled to provide accommodations for assembly, rehearsals and classes. Lenox School, also in the Stockbridge Bowl, will provide dormitory accommodations.

The balance of $50,000 will go toward providing the finest instruction at relatively low cost to the student body.

The Music Center, as Dr. Koussevitzky announced earlier, will offer a six weeks' course of study from July 8 to Aug. 18, including the three week-ends of Berkshire Festival Concerts. The school will be divided into two sections: the Institute for Advanced Study, "for those who have had thorough preliminary training and are studying to make music their career"; and the Academy "for music lovers with less specific qualifications who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation.

The faculty, in addition to Director Koussevitzky, includes such distinguished names as Assistant Director G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the department of music at Harvard; Olin Dewnes, New York Times music editor; Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; and Composers Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copeland.

Valuable as will be the opportunities afforded by the school for short-term music study, their promise is almost dwarfed by the significance of the Foundation's action. As the report noted, the grant marks a departure from th usual allocation of funds by the great philanthropical institution. The Foundation, and others of its ilk, has been overlong in recognizing the right of musical art to share in benefactions along with the natural sciences, the medical sciences and the social sciences. Now that the precedent has been established, we hope that it will bear rich fruit.

34

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

MAY 2 - 1940

$12,000 ORGAN BOUGHT FOR MUSIC FESTIVAL

BOSTON, May 2.—(AP) Boston Symphony orchestra officials announced today the Carnegie Corporation of New York had contributed $12,000 for the acquisition of an organ for the Berkshire Symphonic festival this summer.

The organ will, as far as possible, duplicate one used by Johann Sebastian Bach, famed composer, and will be heard for the first time in public at the festival. It will, however, be used privately at the Berkshire Music Center a month before the festival.

One of the advantages of the instrument, known as a Barogue organ, is that it is better adapted to orchestra use than organs of modern construction.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

MAY 4 - 1940

Boston Symphony Has New Organ

A fine organ has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use in the Berkshires. The gift has been made possible, it is announced, by a fund of $12,000 granted by the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

The organ will be built by the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company, from the design of G. Donald Harrison, the company's president, and will be installed in time for use in the first sessions of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given Aug. 1 to 18 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

E. Power Biggs, announced as the organist for the festival next August, will play the new instrument in the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, and likewise in Respighi's orchestral transcription of Bach's Organ ssacaglia.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

MAY 6 - 1940

DUPLICATE BACH ORGAN FOR FESTIVAL

BOSTON, May 5—Boston Symphony Orchestra officials have announced the Carnegie Corporation of New York has contributed $12,000 for an organ for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this summer.

The organ will duplicate one used by Johann Sebastian Bach, famed composer, and will be heard for the first time in public at the Festival. It will, however, be used privately at the Berkshire Music Center a month before the Festival.

One of the advantages of the instrument, known as a barogue organ, is that it is better adapted to orchestra use than organs of modern construction.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

MAY 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

MAY 5 - 1940

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

A FINE ORGAN has been presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra for use in the Berkshires. The gift has been made possible, it is announced, by a fund of $12,000 granted by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The organ will be built by the Aeolian-Skinner Organ company from the design of G. Donald Harrison, the company's president, and will be installed in time for use in the first sessions of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given August 1-18 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Possessing an organ of its own at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony orchestra, which appears with its complete personnel at the Berkshire Festival, will be entirely equipped for whatever instrumentation a symphonic score may demand. E. Power Biggs, announced as the organist for the Festival next August, will play the new instrument in the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor ,and likewise in Respighi's orchestral transcription of Bach's Organ Passacaglia.

The specifications of the organ have been decided upon in consultation by Dr. Koussevitzky, E. Power Biggs and Dr. Archibald Davison. The placement of the instrument has been subjected to the advice of Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the acoustical expert to whom the phenomenal sound properties of the "Tanglewood" Shed are due. The organ will be semiconcealed and will be placed above the stage in a boxlike replica of the stage itself, designed both to project the sound to the best advantage and to enclose the delicate mechanism adequately against deterioration by wheater conditions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAY 6 - 1940

WITH the gift of a fine organ, announced this week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be entirely equipped for whatever instrumentation a symphonic score may demand when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens at Tanglewood August 1st. E. Power Biggs, organist for the Festival, will play the new instrument in the performance of Bach's Mass in B minor and Respighi's orchestral transcription of Bach's Organ Passacaglia.

The new organ wlil be semi-concealed, placed above the stage in a boxlike replica of the stage itself, designed to project the sound to the best advantage and to enclose the delicate mechanism adequately against deterioration by weather conditions. The instrument is designed to resemble in tonal scheme the baroque period instrument of Bach's time. Variations in the design have been made in order to make it suitable for combination with a full symphony orchestra. An enclosed section will be added for greater flexibility of tone and real pianissimo and other stops will make possible a fullness and brilliance of sonority suitable to the large auditorium. Increased dynamic range and range in pitch will be provided by the addition of the deepest pedal notes.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

MAY 5 - 1940

Boston Symphony Presented Organ

A fine organ has been presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra for use in the Berkshires. The gift has been made possible, it is announced, by a fund of $12,000 granted by the Carnegie corporation of New York. The organ will be built by the Aeolian-Skinner Organ company, from the design of G. Donald Harrison, the company's president, and will be installed in time for use in the first sessions of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, to be given August 1-18 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Possessing an organ of its own at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony orchestra, which appears with its complete personnel at the Berkshire festival, will be entirely equipped for whatever instrumentation a symphonic score may demand. E. Power Biggs, announced as the organist for the festival next August, will play the new instrument in the performance of Bach's Mass in B-minor, and likewise in Respighi's orchestral transcription of Bach's organ Passacaglia.

The specifications of the organ have been decided upon in consultation by Dr Koussevitzky, E. Power Biggs, and Dr Archibald T. Davison. The placement of the instrument has been subjected to the advice of Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the acoustical expert to whom the phenomenal sound properties of the "Tanglewood" shed are due. The new organ will be semiconcealed, and will be placed above the stage in a boxlike replica of the stage itself, designed both to project the sound to the best advantage, and to enclose the delicate mechanism adequately against deterioration by weather conditions.

The new organ is designed to resemble in tonal scheme the baroque period instrument which the same company built to restore the type of instrument which Bach used. This organ stands in the Germanic Museum of Harvard university. Variations in the plan of the "Tanglewood" organ will consist principally in suiting it for combination with a full symphony orchestra. An enclosed section, not existing in the Germanic organ, will be added for the purpose of obtaining greater flexibility of tone and to provide a real pianissimo required under certain conditions.

Other stops in this section will likewise make possible a fullness and brilliance of sonority suitable to the larger auditorium. The dynamic range will be notably increased, and the range in pitch as well, by the addition of the deepest pedal notes. The organ will be suitable not only in orchestral combination, but for solo use and for the purposes of the new music center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRADFORD, PA.
STAR RECORD

MAY 21 1940

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will hold its annual season between Aug. 1 and Aug. 18 at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass. Soloists to be heard there with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will include Gregor Piatagorsky. cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor. and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the soloists in a performance of Bach's B minor mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

MAY 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD

MAY 25 1940

THIS CLIPP
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

MAY 18 1940

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC PLANS ARE ANNOUNCED

Complete programs for the 3 weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The Festival will open August 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C major and will close August 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss's "Don Quixote". Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist August 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

The third series will open August 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. This performance starting at 7 P. M. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitsky, will appear on the program August 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide".

* * *

Despite he mechanization of music, piano playing still holds its own as a favorite form of American music expression, according to Mrs. Irl Allison, general chairman of the National Guild of Piano Teachers, who has announced the Guild's eleventh national piano playing auditorium will be held at the Biltmore Hotel, New York City, June 6, 7, and 8.

About 450 entrants, 4 years old to adulthood, will perform for a total of 100 hours before the judges. Guild headquarters is at 640 Riverside Drive, New York City, telephone Audubon 3-1539.

* * *

Three thousand, six hundred musicians (instrumentalists and singers) representing 150 school systems in 10 Eastern States opened competition yesterday with the National Regional Music Festival. Entries include 36 choirs and 32 bands. The festival continues through tonight.

* * *

"One of the oddities of music", observes Dr. Frank Black "is that few people realize Brahms was one of the Marks Brothers". Dr. Black points out that Brahms used the name G. W. Marks when he turned out pot boilers.—Groucho?

* * *

Marion Bauer, author of "Music Through the Ages", "Twentieth Century Music", and other books, will address the Music Educators Association of New Jersey on "The American Composer and his Relation to the Teacher", Wednesday, 6:30 P. M., at the Newark Y. W. C. A. President Gertrude Hale will preside. A program will be given by Miss Hale and Austin Henry as duo-pianists, Eleanor Eberhardt, contralto, and the Newark String Quartet.

* * *

Girls Chorus of Dumont High School will give its annual concert Tuesday night, in the school auditorium, under the direction of Mavis Alpaugh. The program will be "In May", Schumann; "The Call", Paull; "Spin, Spin", Fischer; "The Keeper", English folk song; "Cousin Jebediah", Thompson; "Old King Cole", "Flowing River", Chilean folk song; "On Wings of Song", Mendelssohn, and "Song of the Gypsies", Roeckel. There will be a guest artist. Dorothy Fletcher will accompany.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

MAY 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

THIS CLIPPING FROM ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT

THIS CLIPPING FROM STILLWATER, OKLA.
PRESS

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE

MAY 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM STATE COLLEGE, PA.
CENTRE TIMES

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

MAY 27 1940

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 20 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL PROGRAMS TO OPEN ON AUG. 1

Details Arranged For Series Of Three Concerts At Berkshire

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms symphony No. 1 in G. Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchiakovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin, the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance.

They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
5/23/40

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
MAY 26 1940

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
MAY 26 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

---

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

MAY 20 1940

Berkshire Festival Announces Program And Lists Soloists

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts of Tanglewood, Mrs. Coolidge's music barn in the Berkshires, at Stockbridge, Mass., have just been announced by the directors of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will direct.

The festival will open Aug. 1, with Beethoven's Symphony, No. 1, in C Major and will close Aug. 18, with Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent 'cellist, will appear as soloist in Straus' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4, when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

Spalding a Soloist

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the anniversary of the latter's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be soloist for Beethoven's concerto for violin on the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15, with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. The performance, starting at 7 p. m., will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. Elizabeth Schuman, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano, William Main, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, who performed with the Boston Symphony orchestra this spring, will appear at the festival, the New England Salzburg.

Chorus to Make Debut

The Berkshire Festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. It will be prepared by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department of Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will also be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, De Bussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

MAY 25 1940

Symphonic Festival To Be Held This Summer In the Berkshires

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a Berkshire Music Center and Symphonic Festival this August at Tanglewood, its historic 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Its purpose, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will be to "serve those who seek the best in music and related arts, who are anxious to refresh mind and personality through contact with the elite in art and culture." Both the skilled and unskilled will find much of interest and profit.

Members of this Music Center will be trained as a festival chorus to appear in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass on Aug. 15, with Elizabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain, and Alexander Kipnis as soloists. On Aug. 17 Dorothy Maynor will be soloist in Beethoven's "Adelaide".

The Festival will open on Aug. 1 with a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The second series, beginning Aug. 8, will feature Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, as soloist.

Indications point to a tremendous audience, planning to make a pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of the United States, Canada and Latin America.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

MAY 19 1940

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ANNOUNCES COMPLETE PROGRAMS

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were an[illegible] yesterday by the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent 'cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin the opening night.

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B. Minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of United States, Canada and Latin America.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAY 24 1940

Berkshire Festival Program

By PITTS SANBORN.

Looking over the programs announced for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge in August, one is struck by the prevalence of Buelow's musical trinity in B—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms. Even Bach's B minor Mass is to be performed, helping to improve the increased attention paid to a work that not many years ago was so seldom heard.

It will be given in two sessions—the first at 7 p. m., the second at 9:30 p. m. The quartet of soloists announced comprises Elisabeth Schumenn, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. Prof. G. Wallace Woodforth of Harvard has the task of preparing the Berkshire Festival Chorus for Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the festival.

Beethoven will be represented by the First, Fourth and Sixth symphonies, the overtures to Egmont and Coriolanus, the violin concerto and the song Adelaide. Albert Spalding is to be the soloist in the concerto. Dorothy Maynor will sing Adelaide.

Brahms appears on the programs only twice, but each time solidly, for the Brahms numbers announced are the symphonies Nos. 1 and 2.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

MAY 25 1940

Summer Festival in Berkshire Hills

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will play in all the concerts of the ninth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will be given in the first three weeks of August. Nine concerts are to be given, in three series of three concerts, on the Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of three successive weeks, beginning on August 1st.

In Series A the works to be given are the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, Schubert's C major symphony, Brahms second and Roy Harris' third, as well as Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia and works by Stravinsky, Faure, Prokofieff and Ravel.

Series B will consist entirely of music by Tchaikovsky, including the second, fourth, fifth and sixth symphonies, the violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist, the "Romeo and Juliet" overture, the serenade for strings and other works. Arthur Rodzinski will conduct one of these concerts.

Bethoven's "Eroica" symphony Brahms' symphony and one by Haydn, works by Wagner and Hundemith, arias to be sung by Dorothy Maynor, and Bach's Mass in B minor, with the Festival Chorus of the Berkshire Music Centre, will make up Series C.

The concerts are given in the Festival Barn at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox Massachusetts. Information can be obtained from the local committee headed by Mrs. Graham Drinkwater, PLateau 2069; enquiries about living accommodation must be sent to the Berkshire Hills Conference Pittsfield, Mass. Subscription tickets will be on sale only till June 30th.

36

THIS CLIPPING FROM

GREAT BARRINGTON,
MASS.
BERKSHIRE COURIER
5/23/40

COMPLETE PROGRAMS

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces Numbers for Three Series.

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood, to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced last week by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The Festival will open August 1 with Beethoven's Symphonv No. 1 in C Major and will close August 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist August 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin the opening night.

The third series will open August 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B. Minor. This performance starting at 7:00 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schuman, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston, by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University.

Dorothy Mavnor, talented Negro soprano, who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzkv, will appear on the program August 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Bethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of the United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

The programs are as follows:

Series A

First Programme.

Thursday Evening, August 1, at 8:30 O'clock

Beethoven: Symphony No. 1 in C. major, Op. 21
(1) Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
(2) Andante cantabile con moto
(3) Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
(4) Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto e vivace
Schumann: Symphony No. 1 in D-flat, Op. 38
(1) Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
(2) Larghetto
(3) Scherzo: Molto vivace. Trio: Molto piu vivace. Trio II
(4) Allegro animato e grazioso
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Sibelius: Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39
(1) Andante ma non troppo; allegro energico
(2) Andante ma non troppo lento
(3) Allegro
(4) Finale (Quasi una Fantasia): Andante; Allegro molto

Second Programme

Saturday Evening, August 3, 8:30 O'clock

Berlioz: Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Strauss: "Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35.
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violoncello solo: Georg Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Harris: Symphony No. 3 (in one movement)
Debussy: "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eglogue de S. Mallarme)" ("Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," Eclogue by S. Mallarme)
Ravel: Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite) Lever du Jour—Pantomime—Danse Generale

Third Programme

Sunday Afternoon, August 4, at 3:30 O'clock

Mozart: Symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K. 543)
(1) Adagio. Allegro
(2) Andante
(3) Menuetto: Trio
(4) Finale: Allegro
Stravinsky: Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo
(1) Presto
(2) Andante rapsodico
(3) Allegro capriccioso, ma tempo giusto (Played without pause)
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Brahms: Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73
(1) Allegro non troppo
(2) Adagio non troppo
(3) Adagietto; quasi andantino
(4) Allegro con spirito

Series B

(Programmes of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth)

Fourth Concert

Thursday Evening, August 8, at 8:30 O'clock

Beethoven: Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84
Beethoven: Concerto for Violin in D. Opus 61
(1) Allegro, ma non troppo
(2) Larghetto
(3) Rondo
Soloist: Albert Spalding
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique," Op. 74
(1) Adagio—Allegro non troppo
(2) Allegro con grazio
(3) Allegro molto vivace
(4) Finale: Adagio lamentoso

Fifth Concert

Saturday Evening, August 10, at 8:30 O'clock

Beethoven: Overture, "Coriolanus," Op. 62
Beethoven: Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60
(1) Adagio; Allegro vivace
(2) Adagio
(3) Allegro vivace; Trio; Un poco meno allegro
(4) Finale: Allegro, ma non troppo
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36
(1) Andante sostenuto. Moderato con amina in moviment di Valse
(2) Andantino in modo di canzona
(3) Scherzo Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
(4) Finale: Allegro con fucco.

Sixth Concert

Sunday Afternoon, August 11, at 8:30 O'clock

Beethoven: Symphony No. 6 in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral"
(1) Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
(2) Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
(3) Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
(4) Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64
(1) Andante; Allegro con anima
(2) Andante cantabile, con alcuna Licenza
(3) Valse (Allegro Moderato)
(4) Finale (Andante maestoso): Allegro vivace

Series C

Seventh Concert

Thursdav Evening, August 15, at 7:00 O'clock and 9:30 O'clock

Bach: Mass in B. Minor (in two parts) Berkshire Festival Chorus, Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, Oboi d'Amore; Richard Burgin, violin; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Edwin Bodky, harpsicord.

Eighth Concert

Saturday Evening, August 17, at 8:30 O'clock

Prokofieff: "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25
(1) Allegro
(2) Larghetto
(3) Gavotte
(4) Finale
Hindemith: Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" ("Matthias the Painter")
(1) Angelic Concert
(2) Entombment
(3) Temptation of Saint Anthony
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Mozart: Concerto Aria
Beethoven: "Adelaide"
Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Faure: "Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Stage Music to Maeterlinck's
(1) Prelude: Quasi adagio. Tragedy Op. 80
(2) "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
(3) Molto adagio
Respighi: Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome"
(1) The Pines of the Villa Borghese
(2) The Pines near a Catacomb
(3) The Pines of the Janiculum
(4) The Pines of the Appian Way

Ninth Concert

Sunday Afternoon, August 18, at 3:30 O'clock

Haydn: Svmphony in G-major, No. 88
(1) Adagio; Allegro
(2) Largo
(3) Minuet (Trio)
(4) Finale: Allegro con spirito
Sibelius: Symphony No. 7 (in one movement) Op. 105
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Brahms: Symphony No. 1 in C-minor, Op. 68
(1) Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
(2) Andante sostenuto
(3) Un poco allegretto e grazioso
(4) Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

THIS CLIPPING FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

MAY 26 1940

Festivals will be held throughout the summer, with the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Mass., August 1 to 18, as a magnet for many music lovers. The Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky is annually featured [illegible]stival.

Colleges and communities in the east, and particularly in New England, have alredy begun their festivals. Many have been held this month, and even in April.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 26 1940

Koussevitzky Lists Works For Festival

Boston Symphony Gives Nine Programs; Bach's B Minor Mass Aug. 15

The nine programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have been announced in detail. The dates are Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11. 15, 17 and 18.

The schedule will be as follows:

Series A

Thursday, Aug. 1, 8:30

Symphony No. 1, in C major......Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, in B flat major..Schumann
Symphony No. 1, in E minor 1.......Sibelius

Saturday, Aug. 3, 9:30

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"...Berlioz
Don Quixote...................R. Strauss
Cello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky; viola solo, Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3.....................Harris
Afternoon of a Faun.............Debussy
"Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.....Ravel

Sunday, Aug. 4, 3:30

Symphony in E flat (K. 543).....Mozart
Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo, Stravinsky
Soloist, J. M. Sanroma
Symphony No. 2, in D major......Brahms

Series B

Thursday, Aug. 8, 8:30

Overture to "Egmont"..........Beethoven
Violin concerto in D major.....Beethoven
Soloist, Albert Spalding
Symphony No. 6, in B minor (Pathetic), Tchaikovsky

Saturday, Aug. 10, 8:30

Overture to "Coriolanus".......Beethoven
Symphony No. 4, in B flat........Beethoven
Symphony No. 4, in F minor....Tchaikovsky

Sunday, Aug. 11, 3:30

Symphony No. 6, in F major (Pastoral), Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in E minor....Tchaikovsky

Series C

Thursday, Aug. 15, 7:30

Mass in B minor....................Bach
Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, basso. [illegible]mental soloists: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Erwin Bodky, harpsichord
Berkshire Festival Chorus

Saturday, Aug. 17, 8:30

Classical Symphony, Opus 25....Prokofieff
Symphony, Mathis der Maler...Hindemith
Concert Aria.....................Mozart
Song, Adelaide..................Beethoven
Solist, Dorothy Maynor, soprano
Suite from "[illegible]de"...Faure
Pines of Rome..................Respighi

Sunday, Aug. 18, 3:30

Symphony in C major, No. 88........Haydn
Symphony No. 7....................Sibelius
Symphony No. 1, in C minor........Brahms

The originally announced three all-Tchaikovsky programs in series B, in commemoration of the composer's centenary, have been replaced by three Beethoven-Tchaikovsky programs. Whether or not Artur Rodzinski will appear as guest conductor in one of these concerts, as originally announced, is not stated. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth, will make its public debut in the Bach B minor mass on Aug. 15. The first part (the Kyrie and Gloria) will begin at 7 o'clock, the second at 9:30.

Further information can be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge, Mass. This will be the fifth festival to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the fourth to take place at Tanglewood, and the third to be given in the Music shed.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAY 26 1940

Berkshire Festival Announces Details Of Program Series

COMPLETE PROGRAM for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood (near Lenox, Mass.) to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, have been announced by the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The festival will open August 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major and will close August 18 with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in G Minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's concerto for violin the opening night.

* * *

THE THIRD series will open August 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance, starting at 7 p. m., will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30.

The soloists will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in a Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Festival programs for the three series will be as follows:

SERIES A

FIRST PROGRAM

Thursday Evening, Aug. 1, at 8:30 o'Clock

Beethoven .... Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Op. 21
Schumann .... Symphony No. 1 in B-Flat, Op. 38
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Sibelius .... Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39

SECOND PROGRAM

Saturday Evening, Aug. 3, 8:30 o'Clock

Berlioz .... Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Strauss .... "Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violoncello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Harris .... Symphony No. 3 (in one movement)
Debussy .... "Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune"
Ravel .... Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite)

THIRD PROGRAM

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 4, at 3:30 o'Clock

Mozart .... Symphony in E-Flat, No. 3 (K. 543)
Stravinsky .... Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo
(Played without pause)
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Brahms .... Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73

SERIES B

(Programs of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, commemorating the one-hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth)

FOURTH CONCERT

Thursday Evening, Aug. 8, at 8:30 o'Clock

Beethoven .... Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84
Beethoven .... Concerto for Violin in D, Op. 61
Soloist, Albert Spalding
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Tchaikovsky .... Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, "Pathetique," Op. 74.

FIFTH CONCERT

Saturday Evening, Aug. 10, at 8:30 o'Clock

Beethoven .... Overture, "Coriolanus," Op. 62.
Beethoven .... Symphony No. 4 in B-Flat Major, Op. 60
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Tchaikovsky .... Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Op. 36

SIXTH CONCERT

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 11, at 8:30 o'Clock

Beethoven .... Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral"
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Tchaikovsky .... Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64

SERIES C

SEVENTH CONCERT

Thursday Evening, Aug. 15, at 7 o'Clock and 9:30 o'Clock

Bach .... Mass in B Minor
(in two parts)
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; William Hain, tenor; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Erwin Bodky, harpsichord.

EIGHTH CONCERT

Saturday Evening, Aug. 17, at 8:30 o'Clock

Prokofieff .... "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25
Hindemith .... Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" (Matthias the Painter)
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Mozart .... Concerto Aria
Beethoven .... "Adelaide"
Soloist, Dorothy Maynor
Faure ......"Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Stage Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80
Respighi .... Symphonic Poem "The Pines of Rome"

NINTH CONCERT

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 18, at 3:30 o'Clock

Haydn .... Symphony in G-Major, No. 88
Sibelius .... Symphony No. 7 (in one movement), Op. 105
INTERMISSION OF TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES
Brahms .... Symphony No. 1 in C-Minor, Op. 68

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

37

MAY 26 1940

BERKSHIRE PROGRAMS

Bach's Mass in B minor and three programs celebrating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth will be special features of the concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under [redacted]oussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held Aug. 1-18, at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Eight soloists will appear in the course of the three weekly series of concerts. All of the evening events except the Mass are slated for 8:30 P. M., and the Sunday concerts for 3:30 P. M.

The festival opens Thursday night, Aug. 1, with a program consisting of the First symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Saturday night, Aug. 3, at the second concert the list includes Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"; Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, and Jean Lefranc, viola, as soloists; Roy Harris's Third symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the second "Daphnis et Chloë" suite of Ravel.

The first series closes Sunday afternoon, Aug. 4, with a schedule composed of Mozart's symphony in E flat (K. 543); Stravinsky's "Capriccio," with Jesús María Sanromá as piano soloist, [redacted]ond symphony.

Works by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky will form the programs of the second week, presented in commemoration of the latter composer's birthday centenary. The initial program of this series, on Aug. 8, will be devoted to the "Egmont" overture, the violin concerto of Beethoven, and the Sixth symphony by Tchaikovsky. Albert Spalding will be the soloist in the concerto.

At the Saturday night concert that week works to be performed include Beethoven's "Coriolanus" and Fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony. The second series closes Sunday afternoon, Aug. 11, with Beethoven's Sixth symphony and the Fifth symphony of Tchaikovsky.

The third week's series opens Thursday, Aug. 15, with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, which will be given in two sessions, the first starting at 7 P. M. and the second at 9:30 P. M. In this work the Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its first appearance. The soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. [redacted] will consist of students at the orchestra's music center being established this Summer at Tanglewood, where they will be prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth.

At the Saturday night concert, Aug. 17, Dorothy Maynor, as soloist, will be h[redacted]oncert aria by Mozart and Beethoven's "Adelaide." The rest of the program will comprise Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," Fauré's "Pelléas et Mélisande" and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

The final concert, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18, will be concerned with Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88; Sibelius's Seventh symphony and the First symphony by Brahms.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 20 1940

Among Soloists for Bach Mass At Berkshire Music Festival

ALEXANDER KIPNIS

WILLIAM HAIN

Complete programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, were announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The festival will open August 1 with Beethoven's Symphony No 1 in C major and will close August 18 with the Brahms Symphony No 1 in G minor.

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will appear as soloist in the Strauss "Don Quixote." Jesus Mària Sanroma will be soloist August 4 wh[redacted]orchestra presents Stravinsky's "Capriccio" for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tschaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's "Concerto for Violin" the opening night.

The third series will open August 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. This performance starting at 7 will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9.30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance. They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzosoprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

The Berkshire festival chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston. They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr Koussevitzky, will appear on the program August 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart "Concert aria" and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Belioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of the United States, Canada and Latin America. Advance reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

JUL 2 - 1940

A Vacation Highlight.

What many consider to be this country's premier Summer musical festival is the series of concerts to be presented by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra during the first three weeks in August at Tanglewood, the orchestra's own estate in the Berkshires.

Here is a magnificent background of national scenic beauty and these concerts are considered a New England vacation highlight. Music lovers and enthusiasts from all sections of the country have attended these Berkshire Symphonic Festivals and once again intend to accept New England's cordial invitation to share in the concerts this Summer.

New England takes pardonable pride in this thriving musical center in the majestic hills of Western Massachusetts, if only for the cultural opportunities which help draw the America music loving public to this area.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

WILTON, CONN
BULLETIN
7/2/40

Tickets Available For Music Festival

Although the subscription list for the symphonies to be given near Stockbridge in August has now closed, single tickets for the concerts by the Boston Symphony are still available.

There are this year three series, on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of the weeks ending August 4, August 11 and August 18. The Thursday and Saturday concerts are in the evening, the Sunday concerts in the afternoon. It is therefore quite possible to make the 80 mile drive from Wilton to Stockbridge on Sunday morning and return the same evening. The programs this year for August 8, 10 and 11 each contain a symphony by Tschaikovsky commemorating the 100th annivers[illegible] his birth. The other music on these programs are from Beethoven. The concerts are given indoors.

Prices for the concerts vary from $1.50 to $3 for single seats. Subscription blanks are available at the Bulletin office at the Cen-

---

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 3 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center to Open

Special to The Dallas Journal

Boston, July 3.—The Berkshire Music Center, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will begin its activities Monday at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. From the 600 applications which have been received approximately 325 pupils will be accepted. Of these 125 will comprise the Institute for students of advanced ability, and 200 will form the Academy.

The Boston Symphony's annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held at Tanglewood Aug. 1-18 with prominent soloists appearing in the course of the three weekly series of concerts. Concerts are on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Bach's Mass in B minor and three programs celebrating the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth will be special features of this year's festival. Soloists include Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Jean Lefranc, violist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist; and Dorothy Maynor, soprano. For [redacted] Minor Mass which is scheduled for Aug. 15, the soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. The chorus will consist of students at the newly established music center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

JUL 3 - 1940

Symphony School To Open on Monday

The Boston Symphony orchestra will inaugurate its new project, the large sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, on Monday. More than 300 students will assemble on Monday afternoon at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as the director of the new Berkshire Music center, will address the school at its first meeting.

There will be a number of activities this week at "Tanglewood," the estate which was presented to the orchestra and where it gives its annual Berkshire Symphonic festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work.

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach four pupils in conducting while others will have the privilege of observation. The institute orchestra of 60 musicians, all of high standard ability, will begin to work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance.

Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

The remainder, which comprises more than 200, is called the "Academy," and consists of pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra.

The festival chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's Mass in B Minor. The Mass will be a feature of the Berkshire symphonic festival which the Boston Symphony orchestra will give at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1, through Aug. 18, coinciding with the last three weeks of school.

The orchestra of the academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes. There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell; and a group class in folk dancing.

Lectures by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and will include particular study of music being played by the school orchestra, as well as the repertory of the festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

JUL 5 - 1940

NEW YORK, July 5.—(UP)—The Berkshire Music center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., Sunday for a six-week term.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE

JUL 5 - 1940

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire Festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home in Tanklewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

JUL 5 - 1940

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard university music department, and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire Festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at its summer home [redacted]anglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation af great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILLERTON, N.Y.
NEWS
7/4/40

Many Changes At Home Of Berkshire Symphonic Festival

New Bach Organ To Be Dedicated At Concert To Feature Festival Chorus

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they ~~will note~~ many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the Center, have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant rom the Rockefeller Foundation.

(Continued from page 1)

The house, garage and barn at anglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new Center. These features and others such as the gardens and the lovelv grounds at Tanglewood are open to public inspection.

Trustees of the Festival today called attention to the deadline on ubscriptions. The last date for ap-lying for subscriptions was June 0. After that date only tickets r single concerts will be sold.

The office has reported a large umber of requests for reservations from South America and, in view of this fact, press releases from the Festival headquarters are now being issued in Spanish for use in South American Journals.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FREEPORT, ILL.
JOURNAL STANDARD

JUL 3 - 1940

J. Manley Clark, North Foley avenue, left today for Sister Bay, Wis., to spend the Fourth with Mrs. Clark and her son, Gaylord Browne, at their summer home. Mrs. Clark may return with her husband, as the weather has been too cold to be enjoyable at this northern summer resort. Mr. Browne is going on to Tanglewood, Mass., where Serge Koussevitzky,, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is giving a summer course for a small group of conductors.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 3 - 1940

Greenfield, July 3—Harold A. Leslie of Russell street, violinist and organizer and conductor of both the Young People's and the Pioneer Valley symphony orchestras, has received notice of his acceptance for the Institute of Advanced Study to be conducted under the auspices of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Music center, Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRADFORD, PA.
STAR RECORD

JUL 2 - 1940

The World of Music

NEW YORK — (U.P.) — The Berkshire Music center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study and The Academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under direct supervisions of Dr. Koussevitzy; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the Boston symphony conductor and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, both noted composers.

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire Festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer house in Tanglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 2 - 1940

Boston Symphony Award Won by Providence Man

Hyman Markowitz To Get Six Weeks' Stockbridge Course

HYMAN MARKOWITZ
Scholarship His

Hyman Markowitz, 24, of 197 Orms street, who wouldn't stop playing in the Rhode Island WPA Symphony Orchestra even when he was removed from the payroll, has won a $100 scholarship for a six weeks' course at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Centre, at Stockbridge, Mass.

He tried out for the Stokowski All-American Youth Orchestra and went through the New England auditions successfully, but he missed out in the final tests—came "within one" of making the South America tour. In April he appeared before the Music Centre audition board in Symphony Hall, Boston. Willem Valkenir, first horn of the Boston Symphony, was head of the judges of the brass and wood-wind group. This time, Mr. Markowitz was successful. He will attend the Music Centre academy, beginning next Monday, as a student and as a member of the advanced orchestra.

Mr. Markowitz was born in Denver, Col., but was educated in the Providence public schools. He played in the Central high school orchestra and, later, with the Boston University orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, for a season. He was a member of the Rhode Island WPA Symphony for 3½ years, until one of his family obtained work. That made Hyman ineligible for the orchestra, as far as money goes, but he attended rehearsals and played at concerts regardless.

He has studied French horn for four years with Harry Shapiro, of the Boston Symphony, and plays piano and string bass also.

His brother Harry, a graduate of the New England Conservatory, is a teacher in the public school music department.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

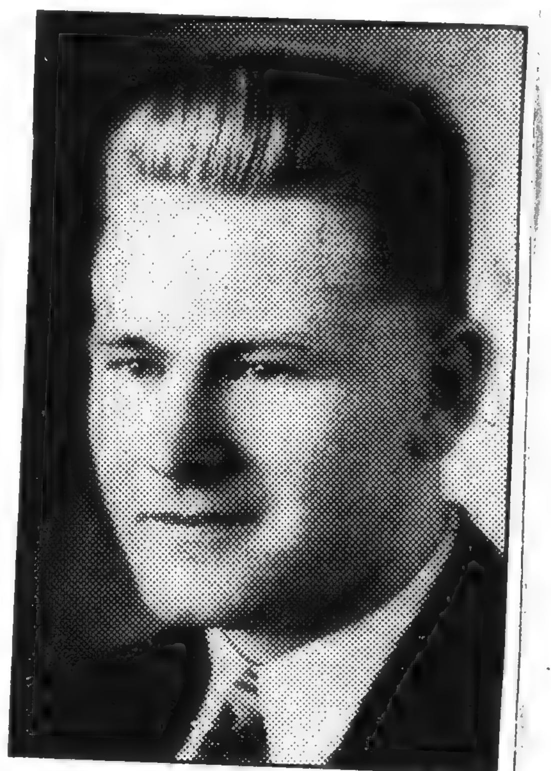
JUL 3 - 1940

ANOTHER R. I. MAN GETS SCHOLARSHIP

Another Rhode Islander has been awarded a $100 scholarship for a six-weeks' course at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Centre.

He is Earl Hedberg, 25, of 10 Dartmouth street, Pawtucket, who, well known here as a violinist, has recently turned to the viola and has won his scholarship with that instrument.

A similar scholarship award to Hyman Markowitz, a French horn player, of 197 Orms street, this city, was announced yesterday.



EARL HEDBERG

Mr. Hedberg was given violin lessons when he was seven by his father, and later studied with teachers in this State and in New York. At 14 he was concert master of the Samuel Slater Junior high school orchestra, in Pawtucket, and he has played with the Providence Symphony Orchestra and with the Musical Art Quartet.

Recently he took up the viola and has made such progress, under the tutelage of George Fourel, of the Boston Symphony, that he succeeded at scholarship auditions conducted last April with all the first-desk men of the orchestra's string section as judges.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 6 - 1940

The Berkshire Music Center, which opens at "Tanglewood," Mass., on Monday, under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will have a considerable part of its personnel from the State of Pennsylvania, and in particular from Philadelphia. More than 600 applied for entrance into the school, and 340 have been accepted.

The members of the school will spend six weeks at "Tanglewood" studying interpretation by singing or playing in association with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals.

* * *

Yesterday Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe celebrates its second month of presenting the reminiscent revue. "Nights Of Gladness," to the customers in the basement bistro in the Hotel Paramount on West 46th street. The old-time favorites who helped make the show a hit include Blanche Ring, Gilda Gray, Eddie Leonard, Pat Rooney, and Harland Dixon. They are complemented by such stars of a more recent vintage as Professor Lamberti, Wini Shaw, Herman Hyde & Co., The Lane Bros., Dave Mallen and Horton Spurr The gay and gaudy hoopla continues to be presented twice nightly at 8 and 12 p. m. with music furnished by Noble Sissle's band with Don McGrane's waltz crew alternating.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

JUL 5 - 1940

'Tanglewood' School For Music Lovers Will Open Monday

A large-sized school for music interpretation through practice and performance will be opened at "Tanglewood" Monday by the Boston Symphony orchestra. More than 300 students, many of them from this vicinity, will assemble at the orchestra's estate n the Berkshire hills for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, as director of the new Berkshire Music center, will address the school at its first meeting.

"Tanglewood" is the estate which was presented to the orchestra for its annual Berkshire Symphonic festival. Next week the building will be transformed for studio and class work.

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach four pupils in conducting while others will have the privilege of observation. The institute orchestra of 60 musicians, all of high standard ability, will begin to work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance.

Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

The remainder, which comprises more than 200, is called the "Academy," and consists of pupils without professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra.

The festival chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's Mass in B Minor. The Mass will be a feature of the Berkshire symphonic festival which the Boston Symphony orchestra will give at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1, through Aug. 18, coinciding with the last three weeks of school.

The orchestra of the academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes. There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell; and a group class in folk dancing.

Lectures by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and will include particular study of music being played by the school orchestra, as well as the repertory of the festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 5 - 1940

To Attend Six Weeks Course At "Tanglewood"

Miss Mary Yoerg of this city and Miss Betsey Hayes of South Hadley Center are members of the Berkshire Music Center which opens at "Tanglewood" on Monday, July 8th, under the auspices of the oBston Symphony orchestra and under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, with a considerable part of its personnel from the Berkshires and the nearby communities. More than 600 have applied for entrance into the school, and of these 40 have been accepted. The membership is representative of almost every state on the eastern seaboard and the near west.

Members of the school will spend six weeks at "Tanglewood" studying interpretation by singing or playing in association with thirty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals. The school will provide a festival chorus which will appear at the Berkshirt Symphonic Festival, in Bach's Mass in B minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

BELLEVILLE, N.J
NEWS
7/4/40 5

MUSICAL SILHOUETTES

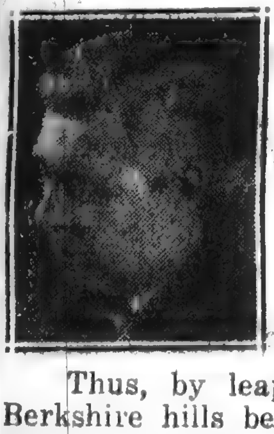
A Musical Commentary by Leon Carson

CCCXXXVI

"Because of its opportunities for soul expansion, music has ever attracted the strong free sons of earth."
—from James Huneker's "Overtones."

Festival Time

America is fast becoming a nation of summer festivals. All over the country musical centers are springing into existence, and the so-called summer-music is now an established feature of our cultural life. Probably in the East the festival attracting the most attention is the Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with its three series of three concerts each, — given during the first two weeks of August, on the Tanglewood Estate located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the celebrated Serge Koussevitzky, dominates the entire situation there. A new School of Music has already been established at Tanglewood, under Koussevitzky's direction, and a new Berkshire Festival Chorus has been organized which will participate in the current summer performances.



Thus, by leaps and bounds, is the new Music Center in the Berkshire hills becoming a vital and imposing feature in America's summer musical life. Not only this, but from coast to coast "warm weather" music is pushing forward, — with operas, Bach and Mozart programs, big and little symphonies, glee club and band concerts, — all setting a new and enthusiastic pace which will ultimately help materially in placing the U. S. A. in a world lead, so far as activity in and quality of good musical projection are concerned.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

JUL 5 - 1940

Boston Symphony To Give Festiva

The seventh annual Berkshir Symphonic Festival, featuring th Boston Symphony orchestra und Serge Koussevitzky in nine co certs at Tanglewood, Mass., agai promises to attract people from al parts of the United States to on of the most important musica events not only of the summer but of the entire year.

This year the festival, which wil be held between August 1 and August 18, will continue the prac tice of presenting significant or chestral music with emphasis on the symphonies and other long forms. The event will be divided into three series of three concerts each.

Series B will be a Tchaikovsky festival in celebration of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth. Arthur Rodzinski will conduct one of the programs on the series, which will include the second, fourth, fifth, and sixth symphonies; the violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist; the overture "Romeo and Juliet" and the "Serenade for Strings"; the second suite; and other works.

Series A will include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius; the C major symphony of Schubert; the second symphony of Brahms; and the third of Roy Harris. Other works will include Bach's "Passacaglia," orchestrated by Respighi; Faure's suite, "Pelleas et Melisande" Stravinsky's "Capriccio", with J M. Sanroma as piano soloist Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (second suite).

Series C will include the thir ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven; first of Brahms; and a symphony of Haydn. Other works w include Wagner excerpts; Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler"; aria by Dorothy Maynor; and Bach "Mass in B Minor", with the fe tival chorus of the Berkshire Mus center and soloists.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUL 6 - 1940

9 From Phila. Will Attend Music Center

Berkshire Classes Open Monday

The Berkshire Music Center, which opens at "Tanglewood," Mass., on Monday, under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will have a considerable part of its personnel from the State of Pennsylvania, and in particular from Philadelphia. More than 600 applied for entrance into the school, and 340 have been accepted.

The members of the school will spend six weeks at "Tanglewood" studying interpretation by singing or playing in association with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals.

Of those listed as members of the school, the following live in Philadelphia: Leonard Bernstein, Frank Cappelli, Betty Hallstrom, Grace Purcell, Mrs. Dorothy Treffinger, Frederick Werle, Eloise Chadwick-Collins (Bryn Mawr), Juliana Day (Bryn Mawr) and Donald Hultgren (Merion).

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DES PLAINES, ILL
JOURNAL
7/5/40

Armand Baker Goes East To Take Up Music Course

Armand R. Baker, director of orchestral work in the Park Ridge public schools, leaves Park Ridge this week to attend the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Kousevitzky and members of the Boston Symphony at "Tanglewood," the summer concert site of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire mountains.

The music center, beginning July 8 and continuing until August 18, is being held this year for the first time in conjunction with the annual series of Berkshire Concerts which the Boston Symphony has played here since the presentation of the estate to the Symphony in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 6 - 1940

Boston Symphony School Opens at Tanglewood Monday

More Than 300 Students To Assemble for Opening Exercises at Shed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate Monday a project such as neither this orchestra in its 59 years nor any other symphony orchestra has ever undertaken—a large sized school for interpretation through practice and performance. More than 300 students will assemble Monday afternoon at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as the director of the new Berkshire Music Center, will address the school in its first assemblage.

Much Activity

There will be plentiful activity next week at Tanglewood, the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge which was presented to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and where it plays at the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work. These, together with the meadows, trees and peaceful vistas which surround them will make an inspiring setting for the pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor.

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach four students in conducting, while others will have the privilege of observation. The Institute orchestra of 60 musicians will begin to work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

The Academy

The remainder, which comprises more than 200, is called the "Academy," and consists of pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra. The Festival Chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's mass in B minor. The mass will be a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Tanglewood from Aug. 1 to 18, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school. The orchestra of the Academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes.

There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell and a group class in folk dancing. Lectures by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davidson, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and include particular study of music being played by the school orchestras, as well as the repertory of the Festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
JUL 6 - 1940

300 Students To Meet at Tanglewood

This Monday the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a project such as no other symphony orchestra has ever undertaken—a large sized school for interpretation through practice and performance.

More than 300 students will assemble on Monday afternoon at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as director of the new Berkshire Music Center, will address the school in its first assemblage.

There will be plentiful activity this week at "Tanglewood." the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge presented to the orchestra and where it gives its annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work.

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach the four pupils in conducting, whom he has accepted, while others will have the privilege of observation. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon their first program, while members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 6 - 1940

Tanglewood School Opens For Season

Koussevitzky Will Coach Four Pupils In Conducting

More than 300 students will assemble Monday afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, for the opening of the school for interpretation through practice and performance to be sponsored by the orchestra this Summer. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as Director of the new Berkshire Music Center, will address the school in its first assembly.

Buildings on the grounds have been transformed for studio and class work. Dr. Koussevitsky will coach the four pupils in conducting whom he has accepted, while others will have the privilege of observation. The institute orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon its first program, under the coaching of members of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

The remainder of the school, which comprises more than 200, includes pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra. The Festival Chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's "Mass in B. Minor." The mass will be a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the orchestra will give from August 1-18. coinciding with the last three weeks of the school.

The orchestra of the Academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes. There will be classes in choral conducting under Mr. Woodworth, lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell and a group class in folk dancing. Lectures by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum and includes particular study of music being played by the school orchestras, as well as the repertory of the festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JUL 1 - 1940

MUSIC CENTER PICKS HAMLINE COMPOSER

John W. Verrall, associate professor of piano and theory at Hamline university, is one of five composers selected to study for six weeks, beginning July 8, at Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood, Massachusetts. He will study with Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, leading contemporary composers. The center is directed by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. Verrall was chosen from a large number of applicants. Performance of his Symphony No. 1 by the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra last January drew Mr. Verrall high praise from music critics. Another of his works, a Sinfonietta, will be played next January by the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra under direction of Dimitri Mitropoulos, guest conductor.

40

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 6 - 1940

Technicians Speed Completion of $12,000 Organ

Koussevitsky Hears Tests At Tanglewood

A corps of technicians is working against time in the huge shed at Tanglewood, to complete the $12,000 organ which will be used for the first time Monday at the opening of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, expressed complete satisfaction with the organ which he heard for the first time yesterday. Dr. Koussevitzky conferred with G. Donald Harrison, president of the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company, builder of the instrument, and with E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra.

Hears Tests

While the conductor was hearing tests of the organ, and inspecting the loft and shell which houses all the pipes, tuners and workmen were completing three weeks' work installing the instrument and getting it ready for use.

The main part of the organ is housed above the shell from which the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays. Here are 1800 pipes, ranging in size from slim pencil-sized pipes to others as huge as the mightiest church organ. The organ pipes are housed in a smaller shell, above the main one. It is constructed in the same shape and of the same materials as the one which the audience sees.

Has Three Sections

Playing is done from the console which can be moved to any part of the stage. The organ has three sections, each representing separate and complete organs, and played respectively from the lower keyboard, the upper keyboard and by the feet. Each unit represents a separate instrument, comprising several stops each.

Each of the units can be coupled together by means of electric couplers from a switchboard resembling a miniature telephone board in the loft, and controlled by tablets in the console. The pipes are divided into three distinct groupings pumped by a three horsepower motor.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, right, discusses with E. Power Biggs, organist, some of the fine points of the $12,000 organ which technicians at Tanglewood are rushing to completion in time for opening of the Berkshire Music Center on Monday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
JUL 6 - 1940

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 5 (U.P.)—The Berkshire Music Centre, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., Monday for a six-week term.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

The National Symphony Orchestra of Washington will open an eight-week season of "sunset symphonies" at the Potomac Water Gate Sunday under the direction of Dr. Hans Kindler.

The season will include a production of "Faust," another grand opera yet to be chosen and the Gilbert and Sullivan "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "Pirates of Penzance."

* * *

The National Orchestral Association of New York, which is a training "laboratory" for young Americans, announces it has acquired the original manuscript of Mozart's Symphony in D major, the "Haffner." It is one of the few Mozart manuscripts in the world outside a national museum, most of the others being in the Prussian State Library in Berlin. The manuscript was described as the first Mozart symphony to enter the market in this generation.

* * *

Bruna Castagna, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, now with the Cincinnati ~~Summer~~ Opera, will sail for Rio de Janeiro on July 26 to sing a South American opera season. She will return to New York in October for a Fall concert tour before rejoining the Metropolitan.

* * *

Richard Crooks, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will give a recital in the Hollywood Bowl next Tuesday. On September 25, Crooks will make a joint appearance with Helen Jepson and Albert Spalding at Carnegie Hall, New York, with an orchestra composed of members of the Philharmonic - Symphony conducted by Wilfred Pelletier.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

JUL 2 - 1940

At Music Center

Mr. Richard Horner Bales has left for Massachusetts where he will spend the summer at the Berkshire Music Center and Symphonic Festival. He is one of several young American conductors selected for special instruction in the art by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival

(By J. Wesley Hughes)

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open August 1 and continue through August 18 with concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Ko[illegible] conductor. These concerts will be held in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in the majestic hills of the Berkshires on Motor Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was established in 1934 to promote the cause of music and to establish a great festival center in America. It has its own home on a 200 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. On this estate, the former Tappan place, Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and other tales. Here in 1938 before a capacity audience, the Berkshire Festival dedicated its music shed with a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The music shed, seating over 6,000 is unique in America. Its utter utilitarian simplicity only emphasizes the beauty of its design.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is something more than half a century old. In 1881, the late Major Henry L. Higginson dramatized the first dream and aspiration of his life by founding in Boston an orchestra of European standards. He engaged the finest musicians to be had, and brought to Boston a succession of the greatest conductors of their time. Under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown in the scope of its activities as well as in artistic significance.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's first Russian conductor, was born in 1874 in the small Russian province of Tver. As a boy he made his way alone and penniless to Moscow where, applying at the Philharmonic school, he was admitted on his abilities by a scholarship which chanced to be open—as a student of the double bass.

The artist Koussevitzky could not long have been satisfield with such a limited medium of expression. He inevitably sought that most expressive of instruments—the full symphony orchestra. With his own orchestra he gave memorable concerts in Moscow and St. Petersburg.

certo, Albert Spalding, soloist. Tschaikowsky: Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique."

August 10. at 8:30 p. m. Beethoven: "Coriolanus" Overture and Fourth Symphony. Tschaikowsky: Fourth Symphony.

August 11, at 3:30 p. m. Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale." Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5.

SERIES C — August 15, at 7:00 p. m. Bach's Mass in B Minor, with the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

August 17, at 8:30 p. m. Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony; Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler;" Faure's Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande;" Respighi's "Pines of Rome;" Dorothy Maynor as soloist in Beethoven's "Adelaide" and a concert aria of Mozart.

August 18, at 3:30 p. m. Hadyn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88; Sibelius' Seventh Symphony; the First Symphony of Brahms.

Granville Sunday, the occasion being the birthday anniversaries of four persons, Wilson Woodell and daughter Elizabeth, Jean Waters and Mrs. F. B. Smith. Covers were laid for 12.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Warren and son Fred and Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Marcy were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Riley Winchell in Greenwich, an evening last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellud Parker of South Granville, were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Brown.

Kyril Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray C. Brown, spent the week-end at his home here. He is employed a Woodstock.

Vernon Brown and daughter of New

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

JUL 2 - 1940

With Koussevitzky

HAROLD A. LESLIE

Leslie to Study Conducting Under Dr. Koussevitzky

Harold A. Leslie, organizer and director of the Pioneer Valley Symphony orchestra, today received word of his acceptance for the Institute of Advanced Study conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Music center at us are an addition this year to e program of the center which s presented fon several years a mphonic concert festival at Tanwood. The announcement of the n last fall brought hundreds re applicants than could be accommodated, especially for the highly selective advanced group.

Friends of Leslie, impressed by the first season of the Pioneer orchestra and the continued success of the Young Peoples Symphony, last winter urged him to apply for the Berkshire institute. Previous commitments at that time made it impossible for him to do so.

Although the center some weeks ago announced its enrollment was complete with students selected on a national basis, the record of the local musician, both as a concert soloist and as a conductor who had brought amateur players into an orchestra already of more than regional fame, was last week brought to the attention of Manager G. E. Judd and Concert Master Richard Burgin of the Boston Symphony orchestra. They consulted with Director Koussevitzky, whose judgment has largely governed selection of those to play with the institute.

The center will conduct classes from July 8 to Aug. 18, with the festival concerts to begin Aug. 1 and conclude Aug. 18. Its purpose is stated as "designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual."

Beside the direction which Dr. Koussevitzky is to give the sections in which Leslie is enrolled, 30 members of the Boston Symphony will act individually as consultants and collectively for purposes of demonstration. Members of the center may attend all rehearsals of the Boston Symphony as well as the festival concerts for which they prepare.

It was understood today that more than 100 applicants for the course in conducting, where each will have individual coaching from Dr. Kousesevitzky and opportunity according to their ability to conduct groups in playing, were considered before less than 15 were accepted for enrollment.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 6 - 1940

Technicians Speed Completion of $12,000 Organ

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, right, discusses with E. Power Biggs, organist, some of the fine points of the $12,000 organ which technicians at Tanglewood are rushing to completion in time for opening of the Berkshire Music Center on Monday.

Koussevitsky Hears Tests At Tanglewood

A corps of technicians is working against time in the huge shed at Tanglewood, to complete the $12,000 organ which will be used for the first time Monday at the opening of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, expressed complete satisfaction with the organ which he heard for the first time yesterday. Dr. Koussevitzky conferred with G. Donald Harrison, president of the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company, builder of the instrument, and with E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra.

Hears Tests

While the conductor was hearing tests of the organ, and inspecting the loft and shell which houses all the pipes, tuners and workmen were completing three weeks' work installing the instrument and getting it ready for use.

The main part of the organ is housed above the shell from which the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays. Here are 1800 pipes, ranging in size from slim pencil-sized pipes to others as huge as the mightiest church organ. The organ pipes are housed in a smaller shell, above the main one. It is constructed in the same shape and of the same materials as the one which the audience sees.

Has Three Sections

Playing is done from the console which can be moved to any part of the stage. The organ has three sections, each representing separate and complete organs, and played respectively from the lower keyboard, the upper keyboard and by the feet. Each unit represents a separate instrument, comprising several stops each.

Each of the units can be coupled together by means of electric couplers from a switchboard resembling a miniature telephone board in the loft, and controlled by tablets in the console. The pipes are divided into three distinct groupings pumped by a three horsepower motor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
JUL 6 - 1940

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 5 (U.P.).—The Berkshire Music Centre, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., Monday for a six-week term.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

*

The National Symphony Orchestra of Washington will open an eight-week season of "sunset symphonies" at the Potomac Water Gate Sunday under the direction of Dr. Hans Kindler.

The season will include a production of "Faust," another grand opera yet to be chosen and the Gilbert and Sullivan "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "Pirates of Penzance."

* * *

The National Orchestral Association of New York, which is a training "laboratory" for young Americans, announces it has acquired the original manuscript of Mozart's Symphony in D major, the "Haffner." It is one of the few Mozart manuscripts in the world outside a national museum, most of the others being in the Prussian State Library in Berlin. The manuscript was described as the first Mozart symphony to enter the market in this generation.

* * *

Bruna Castagna, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, now with the Cincinnati ~~Summer~~ Opera, will sail for Rio de Janeiro on July 26 to sing a South American opera season. She will return to New York in October for a Fall concert tour before rejoining the Metropolitan.

* * *

Richard Crooks, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will give a recital in the Hollywood Bowl next Tuesday. On September 25, Crooks will make a joint appearance with Helen Jepson and Albert Spalding at Carnegie Hall, New York, with an orchestra composed of members of the Philharmonic - Symphony conducted by Wilfred Pelletier.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

JUL 2 - 1940

At Music Center

Mr. Richard Horner Bales has left for Massachusetts where he will spend the summer at the Berkshire Music Center and Symphonic Festival. He is one of several young American conductors selected for special instruction in the art by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Berkshire Symphonic Fest

(By J. Wesley Hughes)

The seventh annual Berkshire phonic Festival will open Aug and continue through August 18 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Ko conductor. These concerts will be held in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in the majestic hills of the Berkshires on Motor Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was established in 1934 to promote the cause of music and to establish a great festival center in America. It has its own home on a 200 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. On this estate, the former Tappan place, Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and other tales. Here in 1938 before a capacity audience, the Berkshire Festival dedicated its music shed with a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The music shed, seating over 6,000 is unique in America. Its utter utilitarian simplicity only emphasizes the beauty of its design.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is something more than half a century old. In 1881, the late Major Henry L. Higginson dramatized the first dream and aspiration of his life by founding in Boston an orchestra of European standards. He engaged the finest musicians to be had, and brought to Boston a succession of the greatest conductors of their time. Under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown in the scope of its activities as well as in artistic significance.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's first Russian conductor, was born in 1874 in the small Russian province of Tver. As a boy he made his way alone and penniless to Moscow where, applying at the Philharmonic school, he was admitted on his abilities by a scholarship which chanced to be open—as a student of the double bass.

The artist Koussevitzky could not long have been satisfield with such a limited medium of expression. He inevitably sought that most expressive of instruments—the full symphony orchestra. With his own orchestra he gave memorable concerts in Moscow and St. Petersburg.

It was in 1924 that Koussevitzky came to America and took his place at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the years which have followed, he has touched new heights of his art and brought the orchestra to a new and surpassing importance. The famed precision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its perfection of ensemble, and its tonal beauty, excel even the most glorious days of its illustrious past—qualities newly touched by Koussevitzky's ranging artistic vision.

The nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees.

SERIES A — August 1, at 8:30 p. m. The First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius.

August 3, at 8:30 p. m. Strauss's "Don Quixote;" Roy Harris's Third Symphony; Debussy's "Prelude a l'apres-midi d'un Faune;" Berlioz' Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

August 4, at 3:30 p. m. Symphony in E Flat, Nos. 3 of Mozart; Stravinsky's "Capriccio;" Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist; Brahams' Second Symphony.

SERIES B — Programmes of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky (Commemorating the Hundredth Anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth).

August 8, at 8:30 p. m. Beethoven: "Egmont" Overture and Violin Con-

Symphony No. 5, kowsky's Symphony No. 5.

SERIES C — August 15, at m. Bach's Mass in B Minor, Berkshire Festival Chorus.

August 17, at 8:30 p. m. "Classical" Symphony; "Mathis der Maler;" Faure

---

Miss One

spec den, —R grounc

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

JUL 2 - 1940

With Koussevitzky

HAROLD A. LESLIE

Leslie to Study Conducting Under Dr. Koussevitzky

Harold A. Leslie, organizer and director of the Pioneer Valley Symphony orchestra, today received word of his acceptance for the Institute of Advanced Study conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. He will enroll both in the class in orchestral conducting under direct supervision of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and in the orchestra for skilled players. He is a violinist.

The institute and its companion academy for less advanced musicians are an addition this year to the program of the center which has presented fon several years a symphonic concert festival at Tanglewood. The announcement of the plan last fall brought hundreds more applicants than could be accommodated, especially for the highly selective advanced group.

Friends of Leslie, impressed by the first season of the Pioneer orchestra and the continued success of the Young Peoples Symphony, last winter urged him to apply for the Berkshire institute. Previous commitments at that time made it impossible for him to do so.

Although the center some weeks ago announced its enrollment was complete with students selected on a national basis, the record of the local musician, both as a concert soloist and as a conductor who had brought amateur players into an orchestra already of more than regional fame, was last week brought to the attention of Manager G. E. Judd and Concert Master Richard Burgin of the Boston Symphony orchestra. They consulted with Director Koussevitzky, whose judgment has largely governed selection of those to play with the institute.

The center will conduct classes from July 8 to Aug. 18, with the festival concerts to begin Aug. 1 and conclude Aug. 18. Its purpose is stated as "designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance. It will thus supplement rather than duplicate the training available in the established schools of music where, although some time is devoted to ensemble playing, attention is centered primarily upon developing the technical equipment of the individual."

Beside the direction which Dr. Koussevitzky is to give the sections in which Leslie is enrolled, 30 members of the Boston Symphony will act individually as consultants and collectively for purposes of demonstration. Members of the center may attend all rehearsals of the Boston Symphony as well as the festival concerts for which they prepare.

It was understood today that more than 100 applicants for the course in conducting, where each will have individual coaching from Dr. Kousesevitzky and opportunity according to their ability to conduct groups in playing, were considered before less than 15 were accepted for enrollment.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 6 - 1940

4 From Hartford To Attend Berkshire Music Center

Four Hartford musicians will be present when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates a project Monday such as has never before been undertaken by an orchestra — a large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance.

Alice Rowley, Elizabeth Northen, Florence Sheehan and Robert Maxwell, all of Hartford, will be among the more than 300 students who will assemble at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as director of the new Berkshire Music Center, will address the school at its first assemblage.

There will be plentiful activity at "Tanglewood," the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge which was presented to the orchestra and where it gives its annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work. These, together with the meadows, trees and peaceful vistas which surround them will make an inspiring setting for the pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor.

Director to Coach

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach the four pupils in conducting, which he has accepted, while others will have the privilege of observation. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians (all of a high standard of ability) will begin to work upon their first program, while members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

200 Academy Pupils

The remainder, which comprises more than 200, is called the "Academy," and consists of pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra. The Festival Chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's Mass in B minor. The Mass will be a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school. The orchestra of the Academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes.

There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth, lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell and a group class in folk dancing. Lectures by Serge Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and include particular study of music being played by the school orchestras, as well as the repertory of the Festival.

MUSICAL TALES FROM "TANGLEWOOD" Eric Schaal-Pix

The Berkshire Music Festival

By George Henry Lovett Smith

When Serge Koussevitzky first raised his baton before the distinguished ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the great circus tent on the Hanna Farm, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts, he knew [illegible] but a novel musical and educational undertaking. That was back in 1936. Mrs. Gorham Brooks' gift of "Tanglewood," one of the most beautiful estates in the Berkshire Hills, to the orchestra the following year only strengthened the conductor's belief. The construction of the great "Shed" on the grounds of "Tanglewood" in 1938 was the final link in the chain.

Decided upon in a thunderstorm, when trustees, orchestra, conductor and public at once realized the inadequacy of the leaking tent, the "Shed" spread its shade and shelter like a giant mushroom over the sloping lawns of the estate, and stirred Dr. Koussevitzky's imagination. Here was the perfect setting not only for a Festival, but for a great school of music. Here in close conjunction with the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a young generation of musicians could work, catching the spark kindled by the example of the great orchestra and solving its own musical problems under the guidance of a master conductor, virtuoso performers, scholars and eager students.

* * *

But such a visionary plan could not take physical shape immediately. True, there was the "Shed." There was also a roomy "estate" house of the middle nineteenth century. There were barns, acres of lawns rolling toward a beautiful lake crowned with the hills of Berkshire country. The conductor realized that a school at "Tanglewood" would be important because of the association of musicians; it would be, for professional musicians and amateurs alike, "an opportunity for living and working in music."

In his statement about the Berkshire Music Center, which is the official title of this new outgrowth of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky said that it presents a unique opportunity for a summer of living and working in music and the related arts.

"The Music Center is designed to lay special emphasis upon those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance," he says.

"The rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will provide a rare opportunity for close observation of the work of a great orchestra. Active participation in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music and operatic groups will offer the means of acquiring a working knowledge of music as it is written, conducted, played, and sung.

"The Music Center will have two sections: one to be known as the Institute for Advanced Study, limited to those who have had a thorough preliminary musical training and who are studying to make music their career; the other to be known as the Academy, for music lovers with less specific qualifications, who have an intelligent interest in music and wish to increase their knowledge of the art of interpretation and to participate in a stimulating musical experience.

"We have chosen a practical method so that the students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

Given such an idea, such a physical setting for its realization, a worker like Dr. Koussevitzky, and the first thing you know the dream becomes a reality.

* * *

The trustees of the Boston Symphony backed the conductor from the beginning, and the orchestra's alert management was quick to gather about it a group of specialists skilled in education. The Rockefeller Foundation soon allocated a fund of $60,000 to the Center for use during its first two years, and especially made available $10,000 of this sum for physical improvements, which include remodelling to provide adequate accommodations for rehearsals, classes, a library, record shop and record playing rooms; and the construction of a little theater for use by the orchestras and chorus, and the department of Opera Dramatics. A further gift of $12,000 was announced early in May by the Carnegie Corporation of New York for an organ to be installed in the "Shed" for use with the orchestra at the Festival as well as for the purposes of the Center.

With these physical assets the Center begins its six weeks term on July 8, the last three weeks being coincident with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant director is G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Division of Music at Harvard, and his faculty includes Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, composers, who will teach harmony, counterpoint and composition; Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, who will be in charge of the department of Opera Dramatics. Olin Downes of the New York Times is also a member of the faculty, as are Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, and Douglas Kennedy, president of the English Folk Dance Society. The first chair men of the Orchestra are all faculty members, and they will sit in the Institute Orchestra—which will number some 65 students in its complete instrumentation—giving first-hand instruction in orchestral playing, as well as private lessons.

Lecturers will include Dr. Davison, Harvard's professor of choral music, Carleton Sprague Smith of the New York Public Library, and Randall Thompson, composer, and director of the Curtis Institute of Music. General lectures for both the upper and lower schools will be given in the late afternoon and will touch on broader cultural issues that the specific musical instruction of the morning classes might leave uncovered.

The greatest attraction of the Center was the announcement that Dr. Koussevitzky would accept a limited number of students of conducting. Out of 125 applicants, five were chosen for active participation and 25 were accepted as auditors. G. Wallace Woodworth's course in choral conducting will have 20 members and a number of auditors. The Academy's practice orchestra, for amateurs who enjoy playing together for fun, will enlist about 45, and the chorus, which will perform Bach's Mass in B minor with the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky during the last week of the Festival, will number about 200. The complete enrollment for the Center will be 325, of which 100 will be in the Institute for Advanced Study and 225 in the Academy. This number represents a capacity group picked from more than 600 applicants.

Emphasis on recreational activities will be strong. Variety will be sought, and there will be an attempt to persuade the students not only to "live and work in music" but to play in an atmosphere of music and the arts. Certainly the location will prove an inspiration. "Tanglewood" takes its name from the "Tanglewood Tales" of Nathaniel Hawthorne written in the little red house he occupied on the estate. Writers and artists from Herman Melville to Ted Shawn, Albert Spalding, and Artur Rodzinski have made the Berkshires their summer as well as their winter homes. Dr. Rodzinski, when not occupied as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, goes to his Stockbridge

(Continued on page 12)

THE BERKSHIRE COUNTRY; DR. KOUSSEVITZKY (Inset) CONDUCTING

REDUCTION

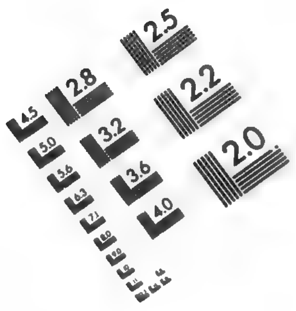
RATIO

16x

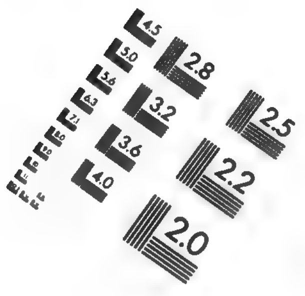
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

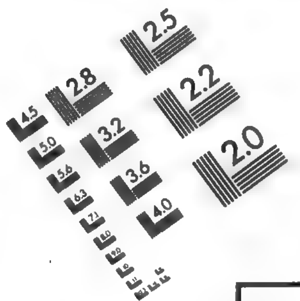


2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0

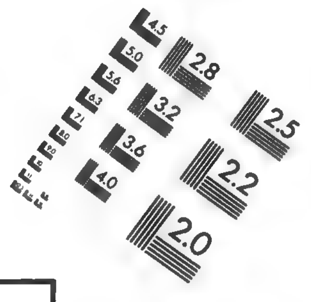


4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

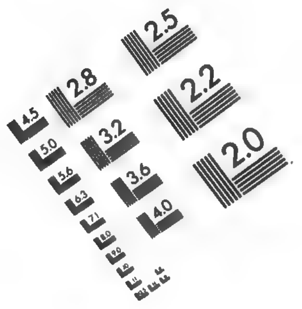
PM-MGP 13″x 18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



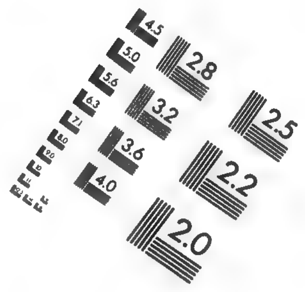
2.5
4.5
2.8
2.2
5.0
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0



4.5
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



2.5
4.5
2.8
2.2
5.0
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0

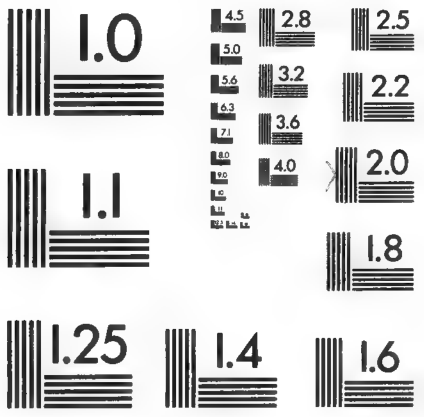


4.5
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

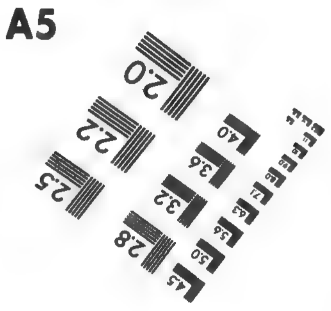
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

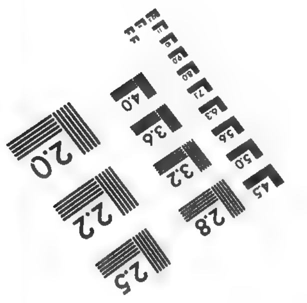
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5



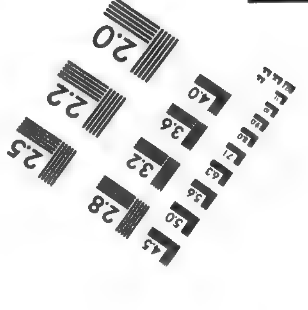
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

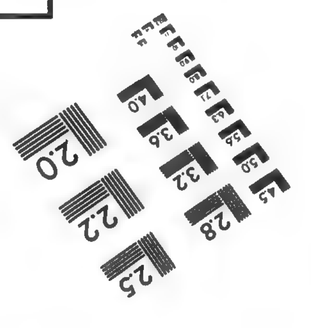
A4

A3



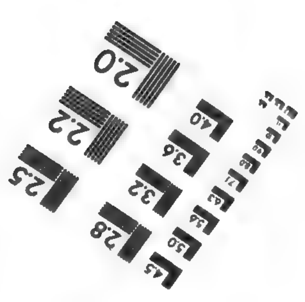
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

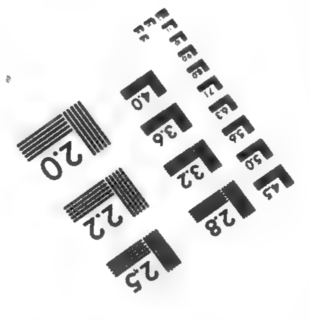


4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
Times & News Leader
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
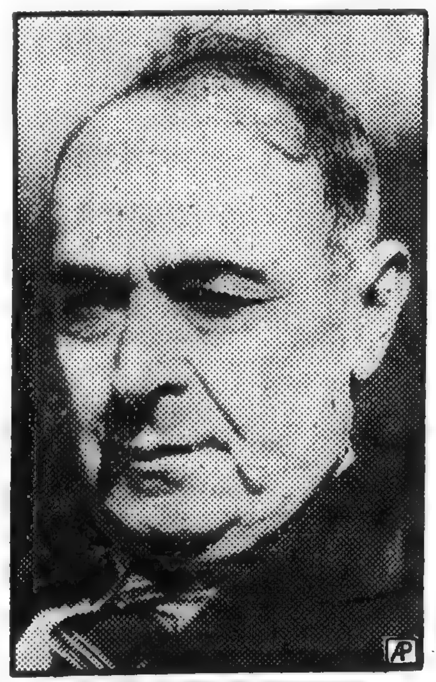
PRESS
JUL 6 - 1940

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 6 (UP).—The Berkshire Music center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.



SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study and The Academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under direct supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the Boston symphony conductor and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Herbert Graff, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, both noted composers.

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard university music department and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home in Tanglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Ceremonial Rostrum of Mahican Indians Found at Tanglewood Near Council Ring; Connecticut Valley Archeologist Investigates

By CLAY PERRY

LENOX, July 6—The discovery of what is believed to be a ceremonial rostrum close by the mysterious Indian Council ring fireplace on the Tanglewood property, on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been reported to the Massachusetts Archeological society by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of the Connecticut Valley group of the society, as a result of his investigations at the site recently. Mr Fowler believes that the site is an actual ancient Indian site and has recommended further official investigation to the chairman of the society's project committee, Benjamin Smith of Concord, as a major project in Western Massachusetts this summer.

In his investigation for which Mr Fowler made a special trip to the Tanglewood site and accompanied by Superintendent Ward Gaston, spent part of a day probing into the forest-closed area, he established the fact that from two to three feet of forest humus soil covers the original ground beneath the hemlocks and pines, and that beneath this surface layer of rotted leaves and droppings from the ancient trees are solid rocks and boulders, some of them just showing at the surface. Among them is a circular outcrop of shale nine feet in diameter with a semi-circular shelf on the south side, three feet wide at its maximum, about a foot lower than the top of the circular stone.

Mr Fowler sees in this a possible natural platform or ceremonial rostrum, which perhaps suggested to the builders of the fireplace west of it a few feet, the ideal spot for erecting such a structure. He took measurements with a steel tape of the rostrum, shelf fireplace and the distances between, and found that the fireplace ring of fire-reddened rocks, itself, is 10 feet in diameter, inside, the walls of it where they are intact, ranging up to five feet thick and rising four to five feet above the gravel subsoil in the center of the ring.

Covered by Growth of Centuries

Further probing with a special iron rod, all around the site, brought to light the fact that there seems to have been a large semi-circle of boulders that possibly were used as seats, situated down the gentle slope from the high rostrum which originally appears to have risen at least three feet above the ground immediately surrounding it. One of the most obvious of these seats stands out of the ground about one third its bulk, directly down the slope of the ground toward the lake, 25 feet from the rostrum and fireplace, seeming to mark the outer limit of the larger rink of rocks. Others, partly or completely buried were discovered by probing in the soft, black humus, built up through the centuries as the Tappan woods grew.

Mr Fowler believes that the Indians selected this spot for ceremonies and councils for several good reasons, discovering the natural rostrum, overlooking the lovely lake, 200 feet from its shore, and not too far from the Indian village of Stockbridge and some Indian camps on the south and west shores of the lake. These villages were the homes of the Mahican Indians, sometimes called the Housatonic or River Indians and, better known historically, as the Stockbridge Indians. But whether the Mahicans erected the Council ring is a matter for conjecture and careful research into their written and tribal records, which Mr Fowler is doing by contacting their historians, notably Rev Samuel Miller (Chief Uhm-pa-tuth), who is the present chief or sachem of the remnants of the tribe, in Gresham, Wis. He is also asking Fred C. Tobey of West Stockbridge, who has made a close study of Indian history in this section to assist in trying to solve the mystery, while William B. Browne of North Adams, an authority on the Mohawk Indian visitations and invasions of the Berkshires, is being asked to help, as well.

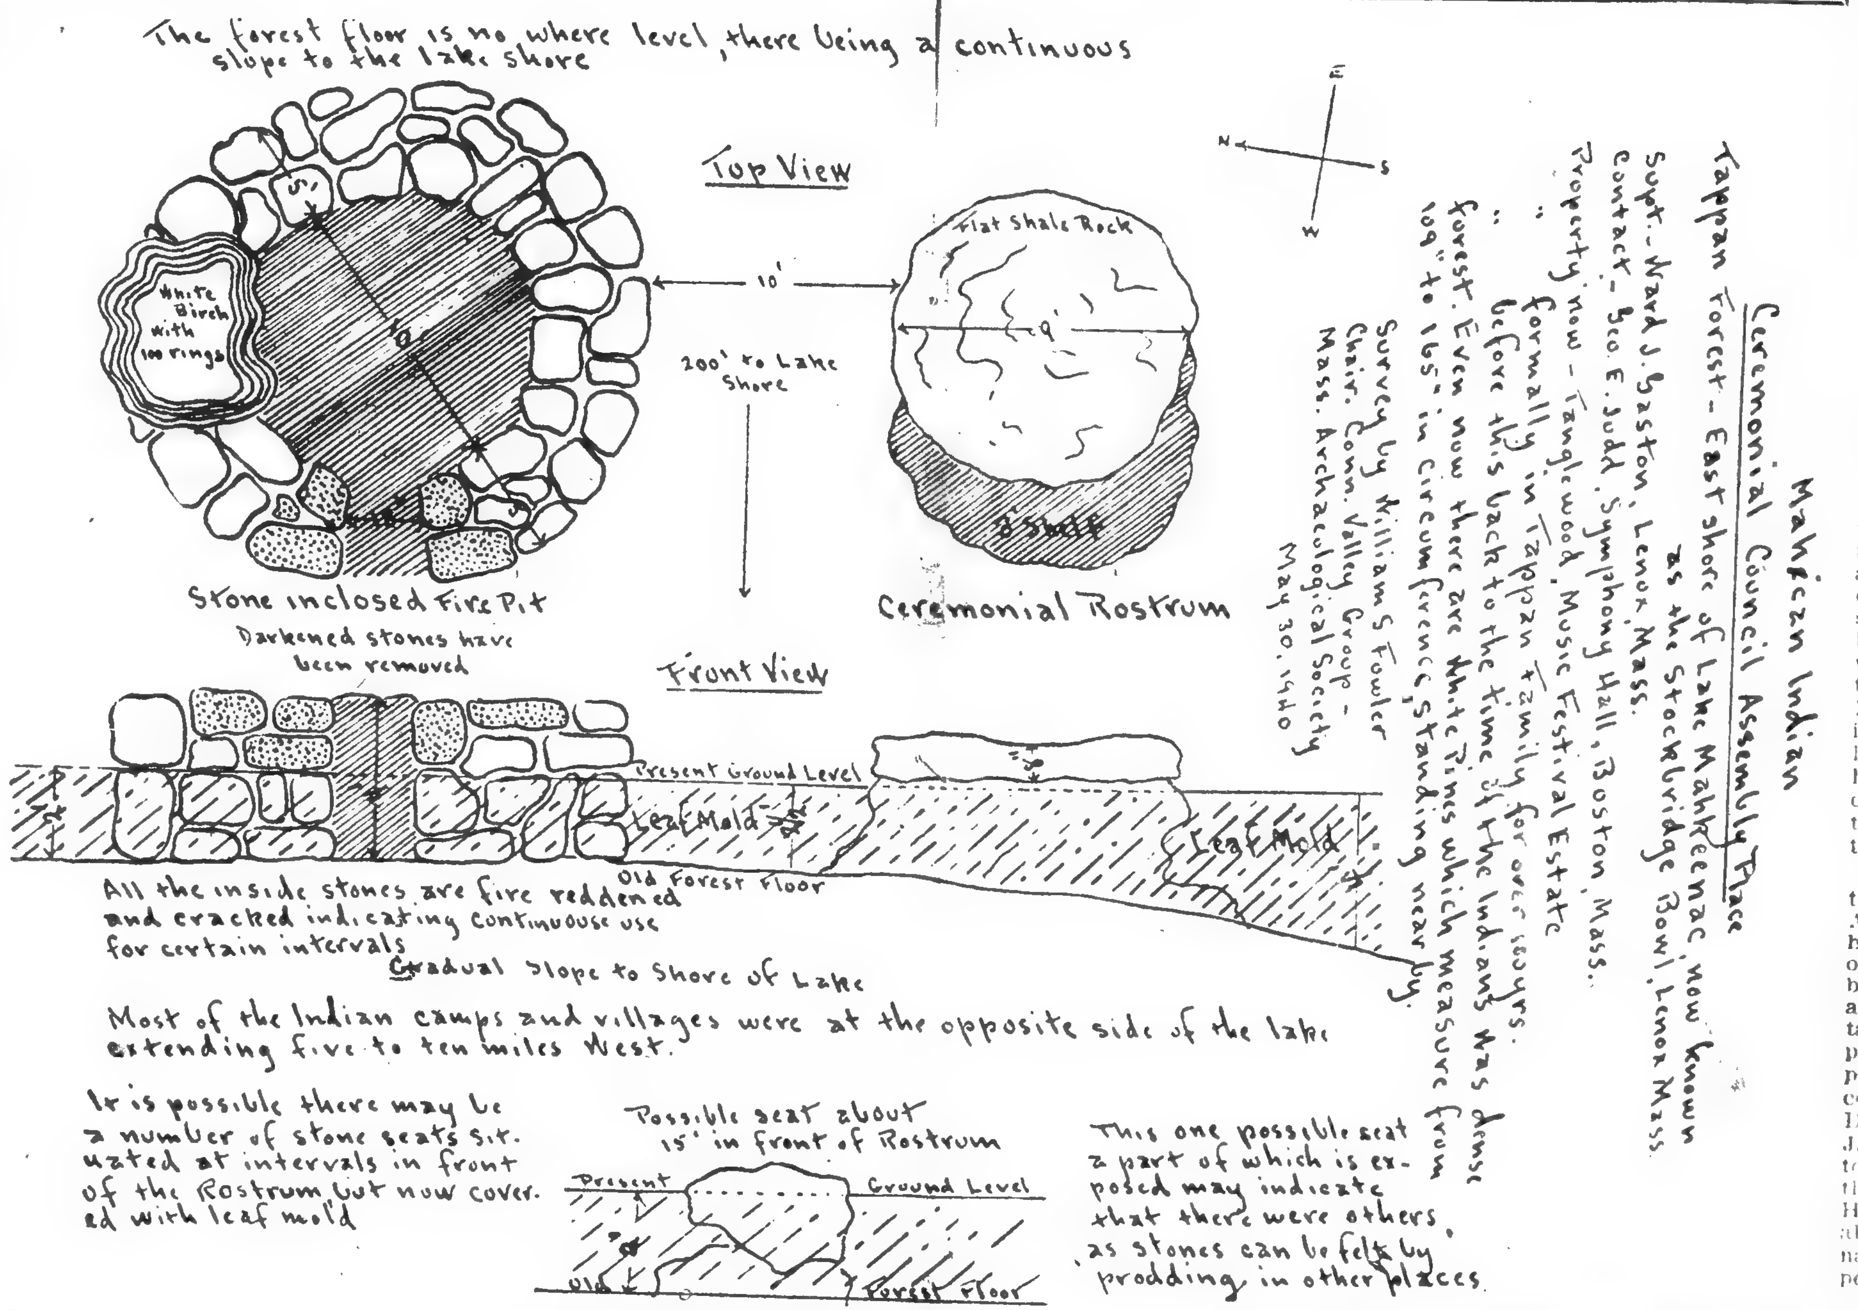
The published history of the Mahican Indians, so far as has been discovered, to date, makes no direct mention of this site although it does describe their councils, in some detail, and relates the custom of building a huge fire to make a barbecue of venison or some other meat, for a feast following the tribal or inter-tribal pow-wow. Wampum belts were exchanged in the case of inter-tribal pow-wows, pipes were smoked and long, eloquent speeches made by the chiefs and leading men.

History of Tanglewood

Superintendent Ward Gaston of the Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony orchestra and home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, told Mr Fowler that the Tappan Woods property had been in the Tappan family for more than a century before it became the property of the Dixey family whose heirs presented it to the Boston Symphony orchestra, and that even before the early white occupancy of the area it was a forest, never cultivated or disturbed.

This fact, and the lack of any suggestion that the stone structure was erected by white men, helps to bolster Mr Fowler's theory, which is shared by local archeologists. The writer made a preliminary survey of the site last fall, at which time an official survey was planned but was postponed due to the coming of frost and snow. Miss Mabel Choate and Bernhard Hoffmann of Stockbridge stimulated interest in the ring, last year, and have followed the investigations with deep interest. Miss Choate is prominent in the Tanglewood group and is also a member of the archeological society.

Sketch of Indian Council Ring and Rostrum



The forest floor is no where level, there being a continuous slope to the lake shore
Top View
White Birch with 100 rings
10'
Flat Shale Rock
9'
3' Shelf
200' to Lake Shore
Stone inclosed Fire Pit
Darkened stones have been removed Ceremonial Rostrum
Front View
Present Ground Level
Leaf Mold
Leaf Mold
Old Forest Floor
All the inside stones are fire reddened and cracked indicating continuouse use for certain intervals
Gradual Slope to Shore of Lake
Most of the Indian camps and villages were at the opposite side of the lake extending five to ten miles West.
It is possible there may be a number of stone seats situated at intervals in front of the Rostrum but now covered with leaf mold
Possible seat about 15' in front of Rostrum
Present Ground Level
Old Forest Floor
This one possible seat a part of which is exposed may indicate that there were others, as stones can be felt by prodding in other places
Mahican Indian
Ceremonial Council Assembly Place
Tappan Forest - East shore of Lake Mahkeenac, now known as the Stockbridge Bowl, Lenox Mass.
Supt. - Ward J. Gaston, Lenox Mass.
Contact - Geo. E. Judd, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.
Property now - Tanglewood, Music Festival Estate
" formally in Tappan family for over 100 yrs.
" before this back to the time of the Indians was dense forest. Even now there are White Pines which measure from 109" to 165" in circumference standing near by.
Survey by William S Fowler
Chair. Conn. Valley Group -
Mass. Archaeological Society
May 30, 1940
N
E
S
W

Report on ancient site at Tanglewood made by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of Connecticut Valley group, Massachusetts Archeological society.

Mr Fowler has long made a hobby of Indian lore and has discovered several interesting sites and many artifacts in Western Massachusetts. Near his summer camp in Becket, but located in the town of Peru, he has found, he says, a secret Indian cornfield, hidden high up in the woods, near which was a stone mill for grinding corn. This cornfield, he says, was hidden away in the forest by the resident Indians, to have a source of food supply that their enemies would be unlikely to discover in their hunting and war-making expeditions in this section. The stone corn-mill is now in the yard of the Ballou residence in Becket, where it was dragged on a stone-boat, after being blasted off the ledge of which it was a part, so as to preserve it in safety.

May Solve Mystery

The mill is simply a hallowed out mortar in the rock but its interior reveals plainly the scored marks made by the pestle that was rubbed up and down and around on the grains of corn to make it into meal. The Springfield museum has taken an interest in the corn-mill and may sometime acquire it, mount it and restore it as a unique Indian relic. Here, again, there remains an unwritten chapter in the Indian history of Massachusetts which may or may never be written. So far, it is not known whether the Peru Indians who made the mill beside their hidden field were Mahicans or of some other tribe. It is hoped that Chief Uhm-pa-tuth, a highly educated Mahican Indian, who has kept in touch with his tribe's ancestral home, Stockbridge, may be able to solve these mysteries to some extent.

The Mahicans had an Indian historian, one Hendrix Aupumunt or Aupamut but he was not a Mahican himself. He was a Mohawk Indian, or some say, a Mohawk-Mahican who became educated by the missionaries and wrote and had published a detailed history of the Mahicans, some portions of which have been incorporated in later or contemporary accounts written by white men, notably Dr Dwight. It is stated by Historian J. E. A. Smith in his general historical accounts of Berkshire county that Aupamut, who was called Capt Hendrick, was "without question, the ablest, truest and best man whose name appears in the history of the people."

Mr Smith writes that "he was probably the son of the great, Mohawk [illegible] chief of [illegible] sachem of the tribe."

(Continued on Page 8-E)

Mr Fowler is attempting to discover, if one exists, a copy of Capt Aupumut's original history to see if it throws any light on these sites and their origin.

The next step to be taken in the archeological study of the Tanglewood site is to request the Boston Symphony orchestra through George E. Judd, its manager, for permission to excavate the ground in and around the ring in a search for artifacts which would almost surely be found if the ring was used by Indians as is supposed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN MATEO, CALIF.
Times & News Leader

JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD

JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC

JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
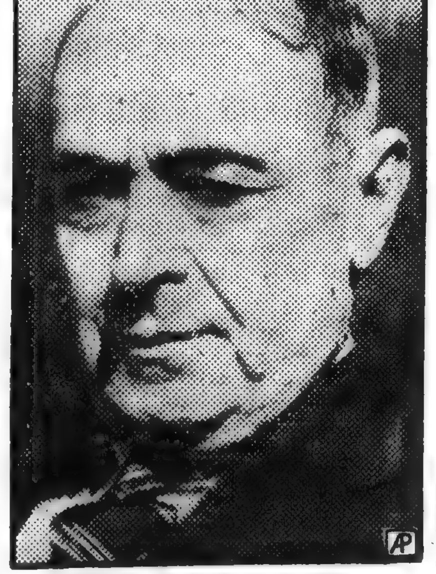
PRESS

JUL 6 - 1940

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 6 (UP).—The Berkshire Music center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study and The Academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under direct supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the Boston symphony conductor and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Herbert Graff, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, both noted composers.

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard university music department and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home in Tanglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Ceremonial Rostrum of Mahican Indians Found at Tanglewood Near Council Ring; Connecticut Valley Archeologist Investigates

By CLAY PERRY

LENOX, July 6—The discovery of what is believed to be a ceremonial rostrum close by the mysterious Indian Council ring fireplace on the Tanglewood property, on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been reported to the Massachusetts Archeological society by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of the Connecticut Valley group of the society, as a result of his investigations at the site recently. Mr Fowler believes that the site is an actual ancient Indian site and has recommended further official investigation to the chairman of the society's project committee, Benjamin Smith of Concord, as a major project in Western Massachusetts this summer.

In his investigation for which Mr Fowler made a special trip to the Tanglewood site and accompanied by Superintendent Ward Gaston, spent part of a day probing into the forest-closed area, he established the fact that from two to three feet of forest humus soil covers the original ground beneath the hemlocks and pines, and that beneath this surface layer of rotted leaves and droppings from the ancient trees are solid rocks and boulders, some of them just showing at the surface. Among them is a circular outcrop of shale nine feet in diameter with a semi-circular shelf on the south side, three feet wide at its maximum, about a foot lower than the top of the circular stone.

Mr Fowler sees in this a possible natural platform or ceremonial rostrum, which perhaps suggested to the builders of the fireplace west of it a few feet, the ideal spot for erecting such a structure. He took measurements with a steel tape of the rostrum, shelf, fireplace and the distances between, and found that the fireplace ring of fire-reddened rocks, itself, is 10 feet in diameter, inside, the walls of it where they are intact, ranging up to five feet thick and rising four to five feet above the gravel subsoil in the center of the ring.

Covered by Growth of Centuries

Further probing with a special iron rod, all around the site, brought to light the fact that there seems to have been a large semi-circle of boulders that possibly were used as seats, situated down the gentle slope from the high rostrum which originally appears to have risen at least three feet above the ground immediately surrounding it. One of the most obvious of these seats stands out of the ground about one third its bulk, directly down the slope of the ground toward the lake, 25 feet from the rostrum and fireplace, seeming to mark the outer limit of the larger rink of rocks. Others, partly or completely buried were discovered by probing in the soft, black humus, built up through the centuries as the Tappan woods grew.

Mr Fowler believes that the Indians selected this spot for ceremonies and councils for several good reasons, discovering the natural rostrum, overlooking the lovely lake, 200 feet from its shore, and not too far from the Indian village of Stockbridge and some Indian camps on the south and west shores of the lake. These villages were the homes of the Mahican Indians, sometimes called the Housatonic or River Indians and, better known historically, as the Stockbridge Indians. But whether the Mahicans erected the Council ring is a matter for conjecture and careful research into their written and tribal records, which Mr Fowler is doing by contacting their historians, notably Rev Samuel Miller (Chief Uhm-pa-tuth), who is the present chief or sachem of the remnants of the tribe, in Gresham, Wis. He is also asking Fred C. Tobey of West Stockbridge, who has made a close study of Indian history in this section to assist in trying to solve the mystery, while William B. Browne of North Adams, an authority on the Mohawk Indian visitations and invasions of the Berkshires, is being asked to help, as well.

The published history of the Mahican Indians, so far as has been discovered, to date, makes no direct mention of this site although it does describe their councils, in some detail, and relates the custom of building a huge fire to make a barbecue of venison or some other meat, for a feast following the tribal or inter-tribal pow-wow. Wampum belts were exchanged in the case of inter-tribal pow-wows, pipes were smoked and long, eloquent speeches made by the chiefs and leading men.

History of Tanglewood

Superintendent Ward Gaston of the Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony orchestra and home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, told Mr Fowler that the Tappan Woods property had been in the Tappan family for more than a century before it became the property of the Dixey family whose heirs presented it to the Boston Symphony orchestra, and that even before the early white occupancy of the area it was a forest, never cultivated or disturbed.

This fact, and the lack of any suggestion that the stone structure was erected by white men, helps to bolster Mr Fowler's theory, which is shared by local archeologists. The writer made a preliminary survey of the site last fall, at which time an official survey was planned but was postponed due to the coming of frost and snow. Miss Mabel Choate and Bernhard Hoffmann of Stockbridge stimulated interest in the ring, last year, and have followed the investigations with deep interest. Miss Choate is prominent in the Tanglewood group and is also a member of the archeological society.

Mr Fowler has long made a hobby of Indian lore and has discovered several interesting sites and many artifacts in Western Massachusetts. Near his summer camp in Becket, but located in the town of Peru, he has found, he says, a secret Indian cornfield, hidden high up in the woods, near which was a stone mill for grinding corn. This cornfield, he says, was hidden away in the forest by the resident Indians, to have a source of food supply that their enemies would be unlikely to discover in their hunting and war-making expeditions in this section. The stone corn-mill is now in the yard of the Ballou residence in Becket, where it was dragged on a stone-boat, after being blasted off the ledge of which it was a part, so as to preserve it in safety.

May Solve Mystery

The mill is simply a hallowed out mortar in the rock but its interior reveals plainly the scored marks made by the pestle that was rubbed up and down and around on the grains of corn to make it into meal. The Springfield museum has taken an interest in the corn-mill and may sometime acquire it, mount it and restore it as a unique Indian relic. Here, again, there remains an unwritten chapter in the Indian history of Massachusetts, which may or may never be written. So far, it is not known whether the Peru Indians who made the mill beside their hidden field were Mahicans or of some other tribe. It is hoped that Chief Uhm-pa-tuth, a highly educated Mahican Indian, who has kept in touch with his tribe's ancestral home, Stockbridge, may be able to solve these mysteries to some extent.

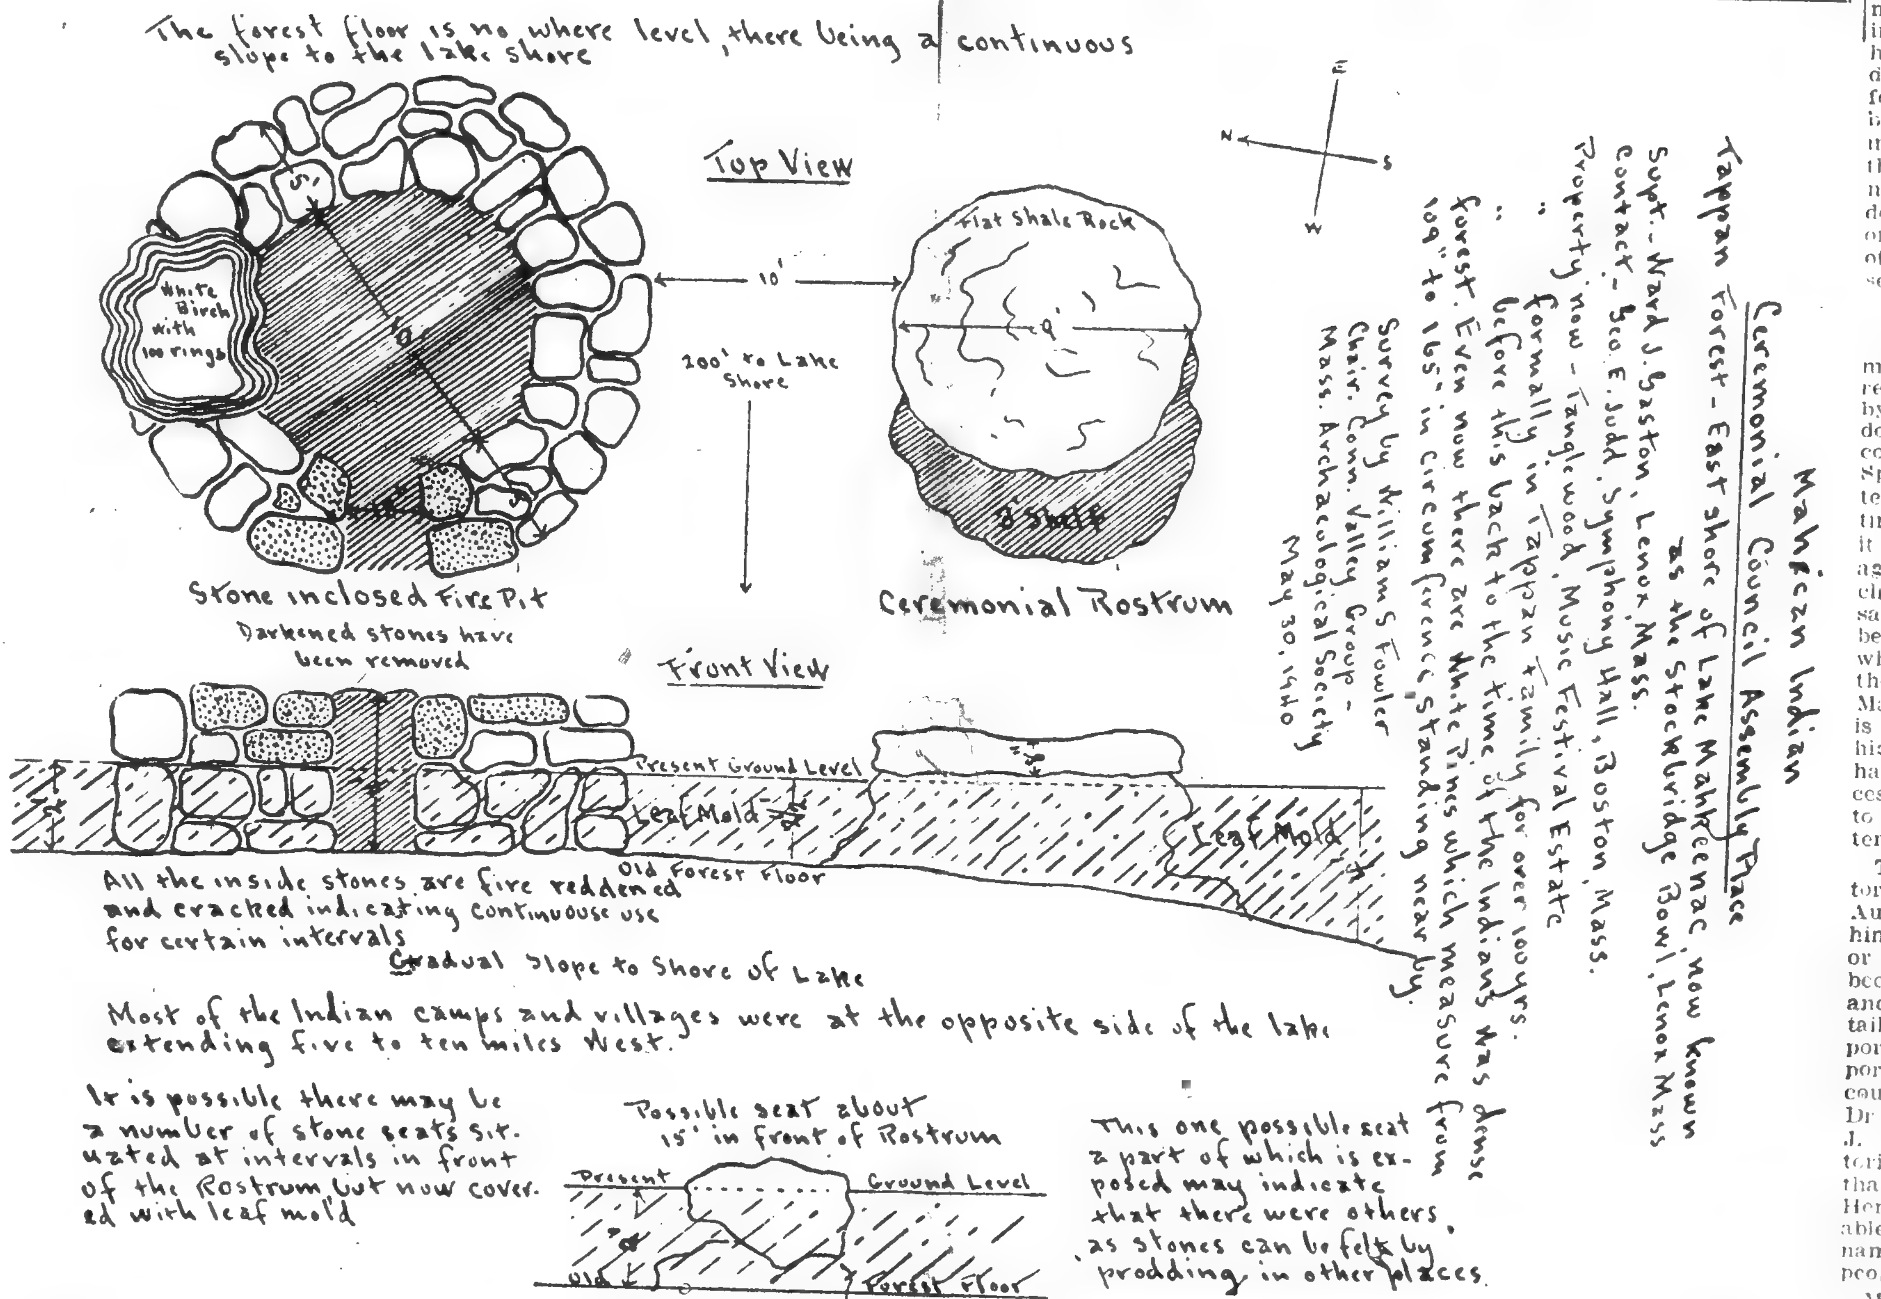
The Mahicans had an Indian historian, one Hendrix Aupumunt or Aupamut but he was not a Mahican himself. He was a Mohawk Indian, or some say, a Mohawk-Mahican who became educated by the missionaries and wrote and had published a detailed history of the Mahicans, some portions of which have been incorporated in later or contemporary accounts written by white men, notably Dr Dwight. It is stated by Historian J. E. A. Smith in his general historical accounts of Berkshire county that Aupamut, who was called Capt Hendrick, was "without question, the ablest, truest and best man whose name appears in the history of the people."

Mr Smith writes that "he was probably the son of the great Mohawk chief of the same name, who was the son of a Mahican, married to a Mohawk princess, through whom by inheritance descending in the female line, his son became grand sachem of the tribe."

Mr Fowler is attempting to discover, if one exists, a copy of Capt Aupumut's original history to see if it throws any light on these sites and their origin.

The next step to be taken in the archeological study of the Tanglewood site is to request the Boston Symphony orchestra through George E. Judd, its manager, for permission to excavate the ground in and around the ring in a search for artifacts which would almost surely be found if the ring was used by Indians as is supposed.

Sketch of Indian Council Ring and Rostrum



The forest floor is no where level, there being a continuous slope to the lake shore
Top View
White Birch with 100 rings
5' 10' 9'
200' to Lake Shore
Flat Shale Rock
3' shelf
Stone inclosed Fire Pit
Darkened stones have been removed Ceremonial Rostrum
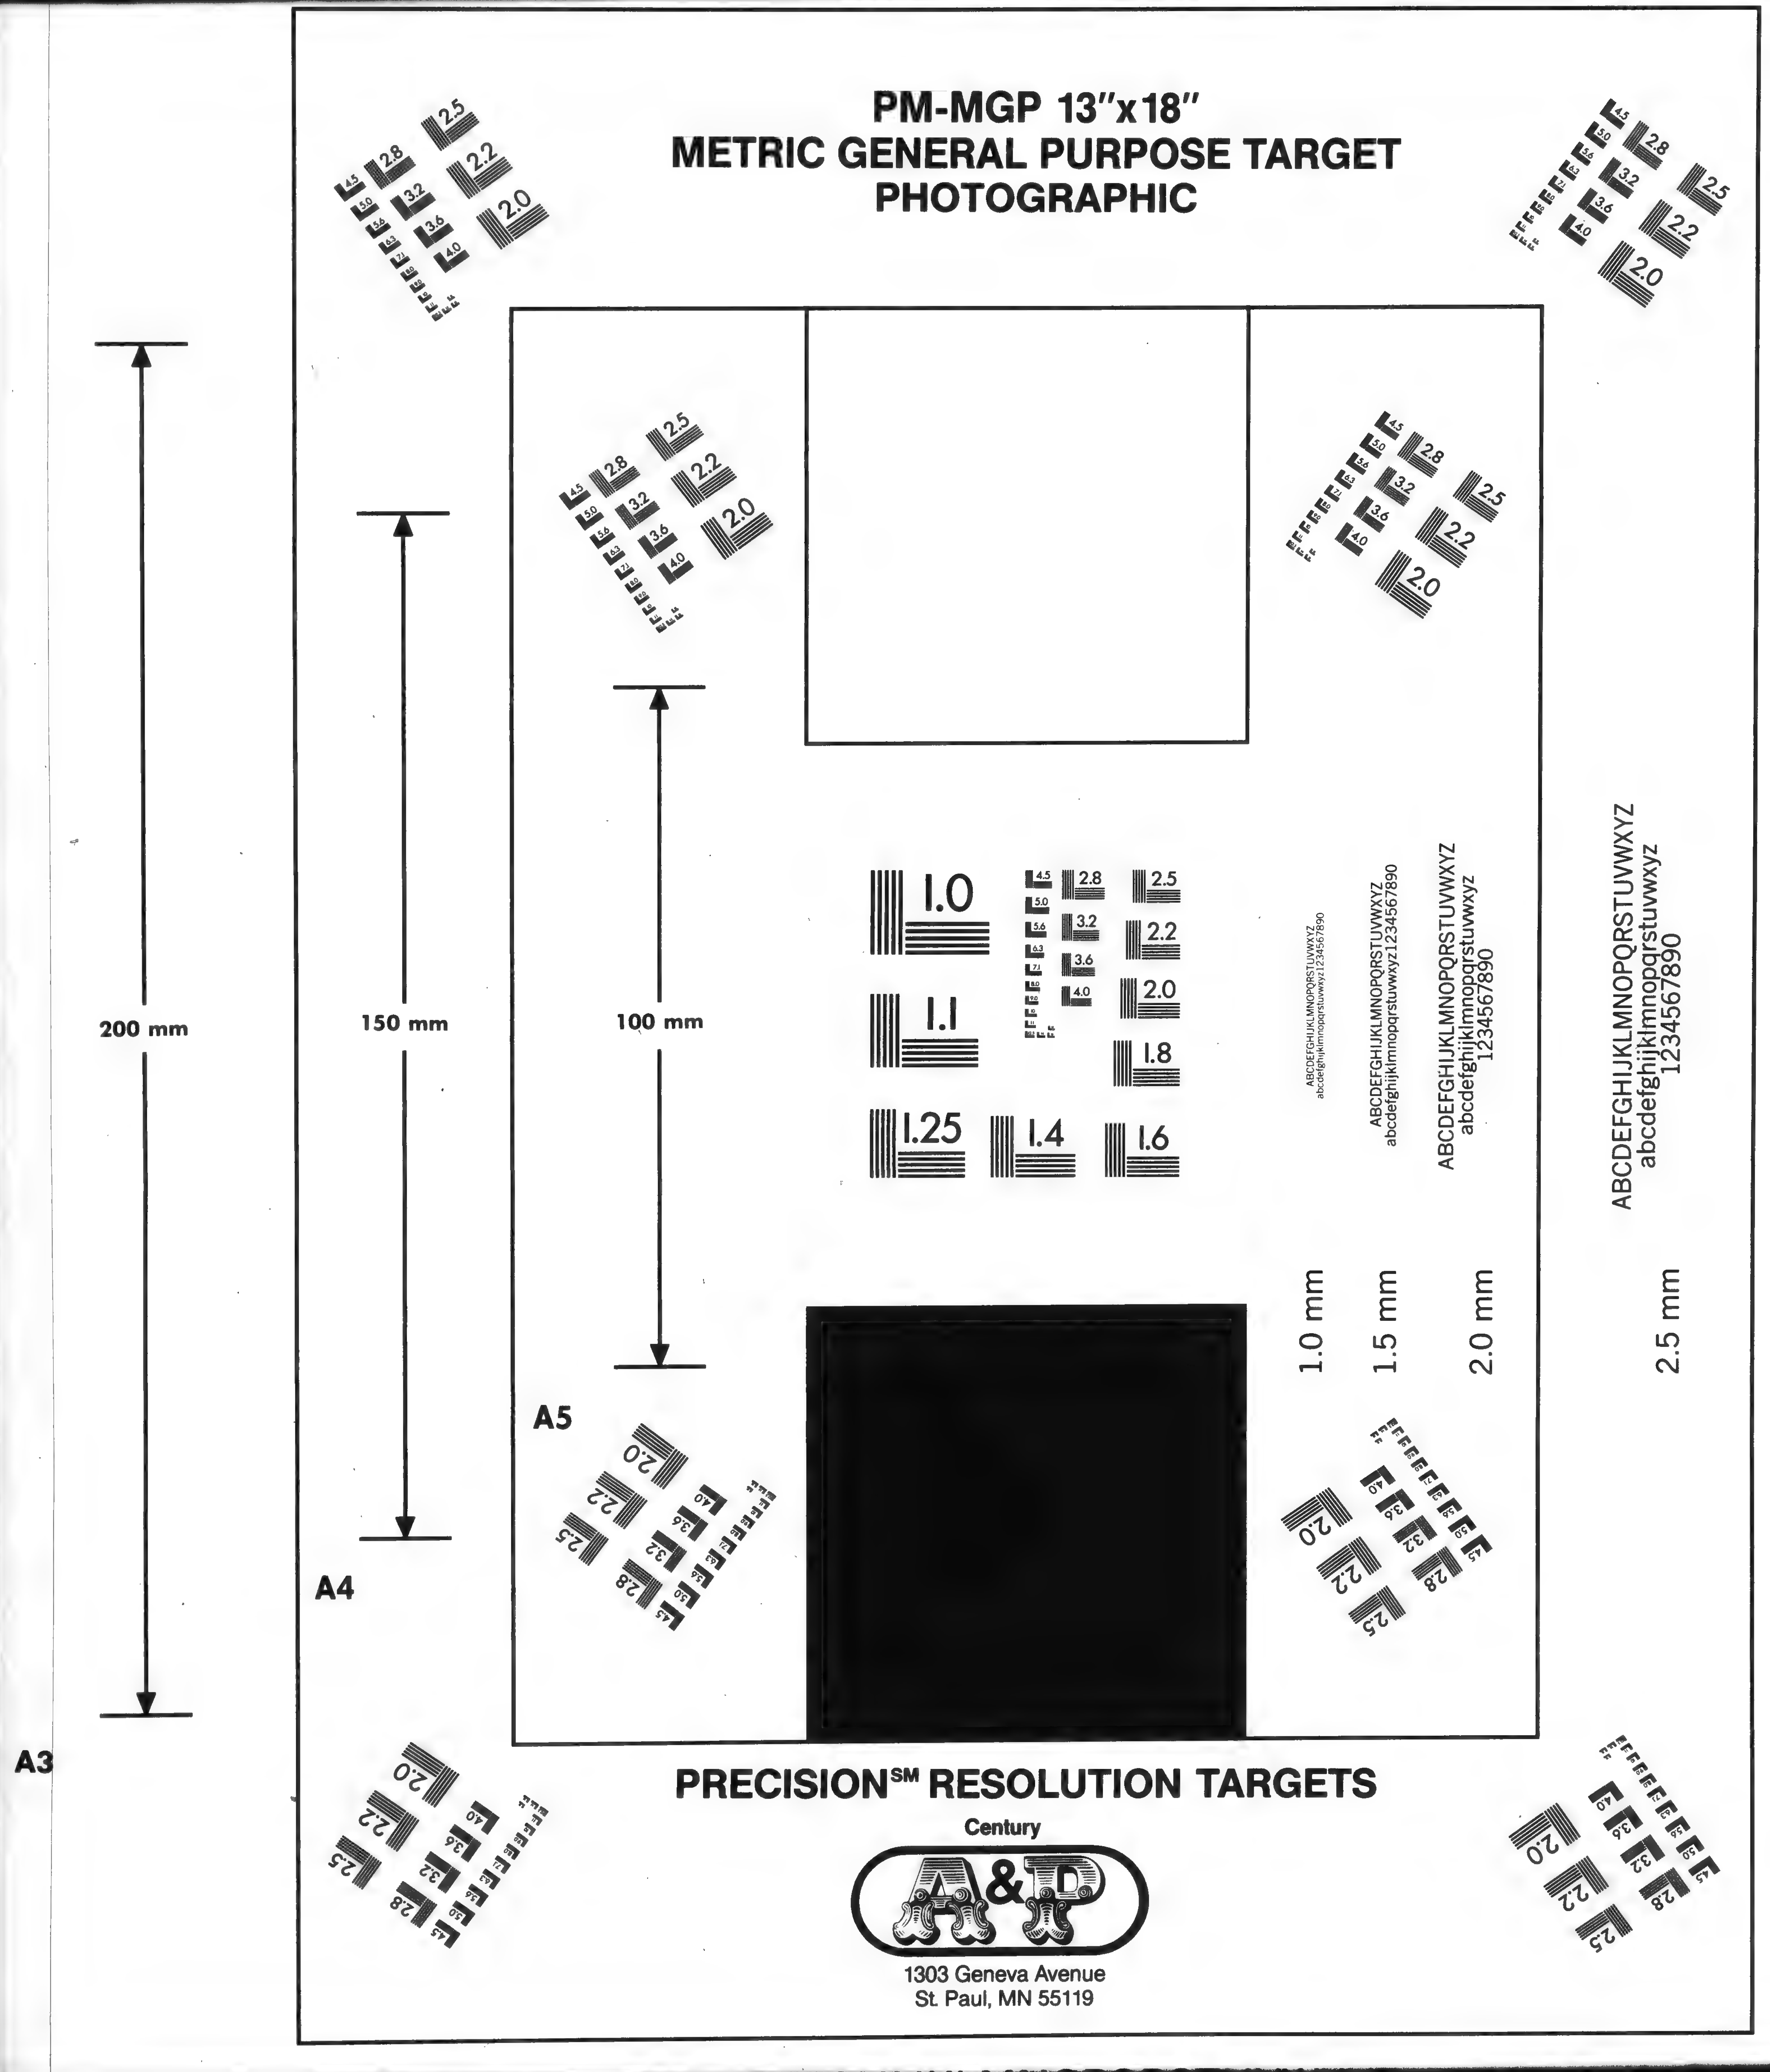
Front View
Present Ground Level
Leaf Mold
Old Forest Floor
All the inside stones are fire reddened and cracked indicating continuouse use for certain intervals
Gradual Slope to Shore of Lake
Most of the Indian camps and villages were at the opposite side of the lake extending five to ten miles West.
It is possible there may be a number of stone seats situated at intervals in front of the Rostrum but now covered with leaf mold
Possible seat about 15' in front of Rostrum
Present Ground Level
Old Forest Floor
This one possible seat a part of which is exposed may indicate that there were others, as stones can be felt by prodding in other places.
N
S
E
W
Mahican Indian
Ceremonial Council Assembly Place
Tappan Forest - East shore of Lake Mahkeenac, now known as the Stockbridge Bowl, Lenox Mass
Supt. Ward J. Gaston, Lenox Mass.
Contact - Geo. E. Judd, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.
Property now - Tanglewood, Music Festival Estate
" formally in Tappan family for over 100 yrs.
" before this back to the time of the Indians was dense forest. Even now there are White Pines which measure from 109" to 165" in circumference standing near by.
Survey by William S. Fowler
Chair. Conn. Valley Group - Mass. Archaeological Society
May 30, 1940

Report on ancient site at Tanglewood made by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of Connecticut Valley group, Massachusetts Archeological society.

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
A5
A4
A3

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
Times & News Leader
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
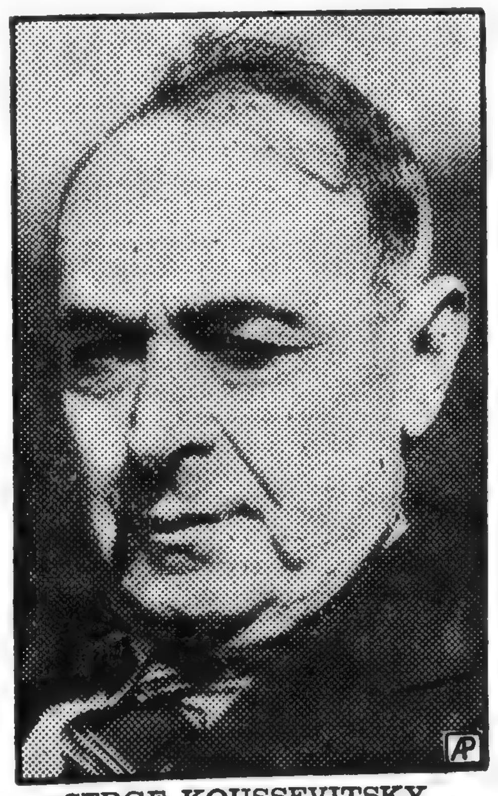
PRESS
JUL 6 - 1940

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, July 6 (UP).—The Berkshire Music center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and about 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study and The Academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under direct supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the Boston symphony conductor and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Herbert Graff, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, both noted composers.

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard university music department and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home in Tanglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these would provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Ceremonial Rostrum of Mahican Indians Found at Tang Near Council Ring; Connecticut Valley Arche

By CLAY PERRY

LENOX, July 6—The discovery of what is believed to be a ceremonial rostrum close by the mysterious Indian Council ring fireplace on the Tanglewood property, on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been reported to the Massachusetts Archeological society by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of the Connecticut Valley group of the society, as a result of his investigations at the site recently. Mr Fowler believes that the site is an actual ancient Indian site and has recommended further official investigation to the chairman of the society's project committee, Benjamin Smith of Concord, as a major project in Western Massachusetts this summer.

In his investigation for which Mr Fowler made a special trip to the Tanglewood site and accompanied by Superintendent Ward Gaston, spent part of a day probing into the forest-closed area, he established the fact that from two to three feet of forest humus soil covers the original ground beneath the hemlocks and pines, and that beneath this surface layer of rotted leaves and droppings from the ancient trees are solid rocks and boulders, some of them just showing at the surface. Among them is a circular outcrop of shale nine feet in diameter with a semi-circular shelf on the south side, three feet wide at its maximum, about a foot lower than the top of the circular stone.

Mr Fowler sees in this a possible natural platform or ceremonial rostrum, which perhaps suggested to the builders of the fireplace west of it a few feet, the ideal spot for erecting such a structure. He took measurements with a steel tape of the rostrum, shelf fireplace and the distances between, and found that the fireplace ring of fire-reddened rocks, itself, is 10 feet in diameter, inside, the walls of it where they are intact, ranging up to five feet thick and rising four to five feet above the gravel subsoil in the center of the ring.

Covered by Growth of Centuries

Further probing with a special iron rod, all around the site, brought to light the fact that there seems to have been a large semi-circle of boulders that possibly were used as seats, situated down the gentle slope from the high rostrum which originally appears to have risen at least three feet above the ground immediately surrounding it. One of the most obvious of these seats stands out of the ground about one third its bulk, directly down the slope of the ground toward the lake, 25 feet from the rostrum and fireplace, seeming to mark the outer limit of the larger rink of rocks. Others, partly or completely buried were discovered by probing in the soft, black humus, built up through the centuries as the Tappan woods grew.

Mr Fowler believes that the Indians selected this spot for ceremonies and councils for several good reasons, discovering the natural rostrum, overlooking the lovely lake, 200 feet from its shore, and not too far from the Indian village of Stockbridge and some Indian camps on the south and west shores of the lake. These villages were the homes of the Mahican Indians, sometimes called the Housatonic or River Indians and, better known historically, as the Stockbridge Indians. But whether the Mahicans erected the Council ring is a matter for conjecture and careful research into their written and tribal records, which Mr Fowler is doing by contacting their historians, notably Rev Samuel Miller (Chief Uhm-pa-tuth), who is the present chief or sachem of the remnants of the tribe, in Gresham, Wis. He is also asking Fred C. Tobey of West Stockbridge, who has made a close study of Indian history in this section to assist in trying to solve the mystery, while William B. Browne of North Adams, an authority on the Mohawk Indian visitations and invasions of the Berkshires, is being asked to help, as well.

The published history of the Mahican Indians, so far as has been discovered, to date, makes no direct mention of this site although it does describe their councils, in some detail, and relates the custom of building a huge fire to make a barbecue of vension or some other meat, for a feast following the tribal or inter-tribal pow-wow. Wampum belts were exchanged in the case of inter-tribal pow-wows, pipes were smoked and long, eloquent speeches made by the chiefs and leading men.

History of Tanglewood

Superintendent Ward Gaston of the Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony orchestra and home of the B festival, told Mr
Tappan Woods pr
the Tappan family century before it of the Dixey family sented it to the Bos chestra, and that early white occupa was a forest, never turbed.

This fact, and th
gestion that the st erected by white m
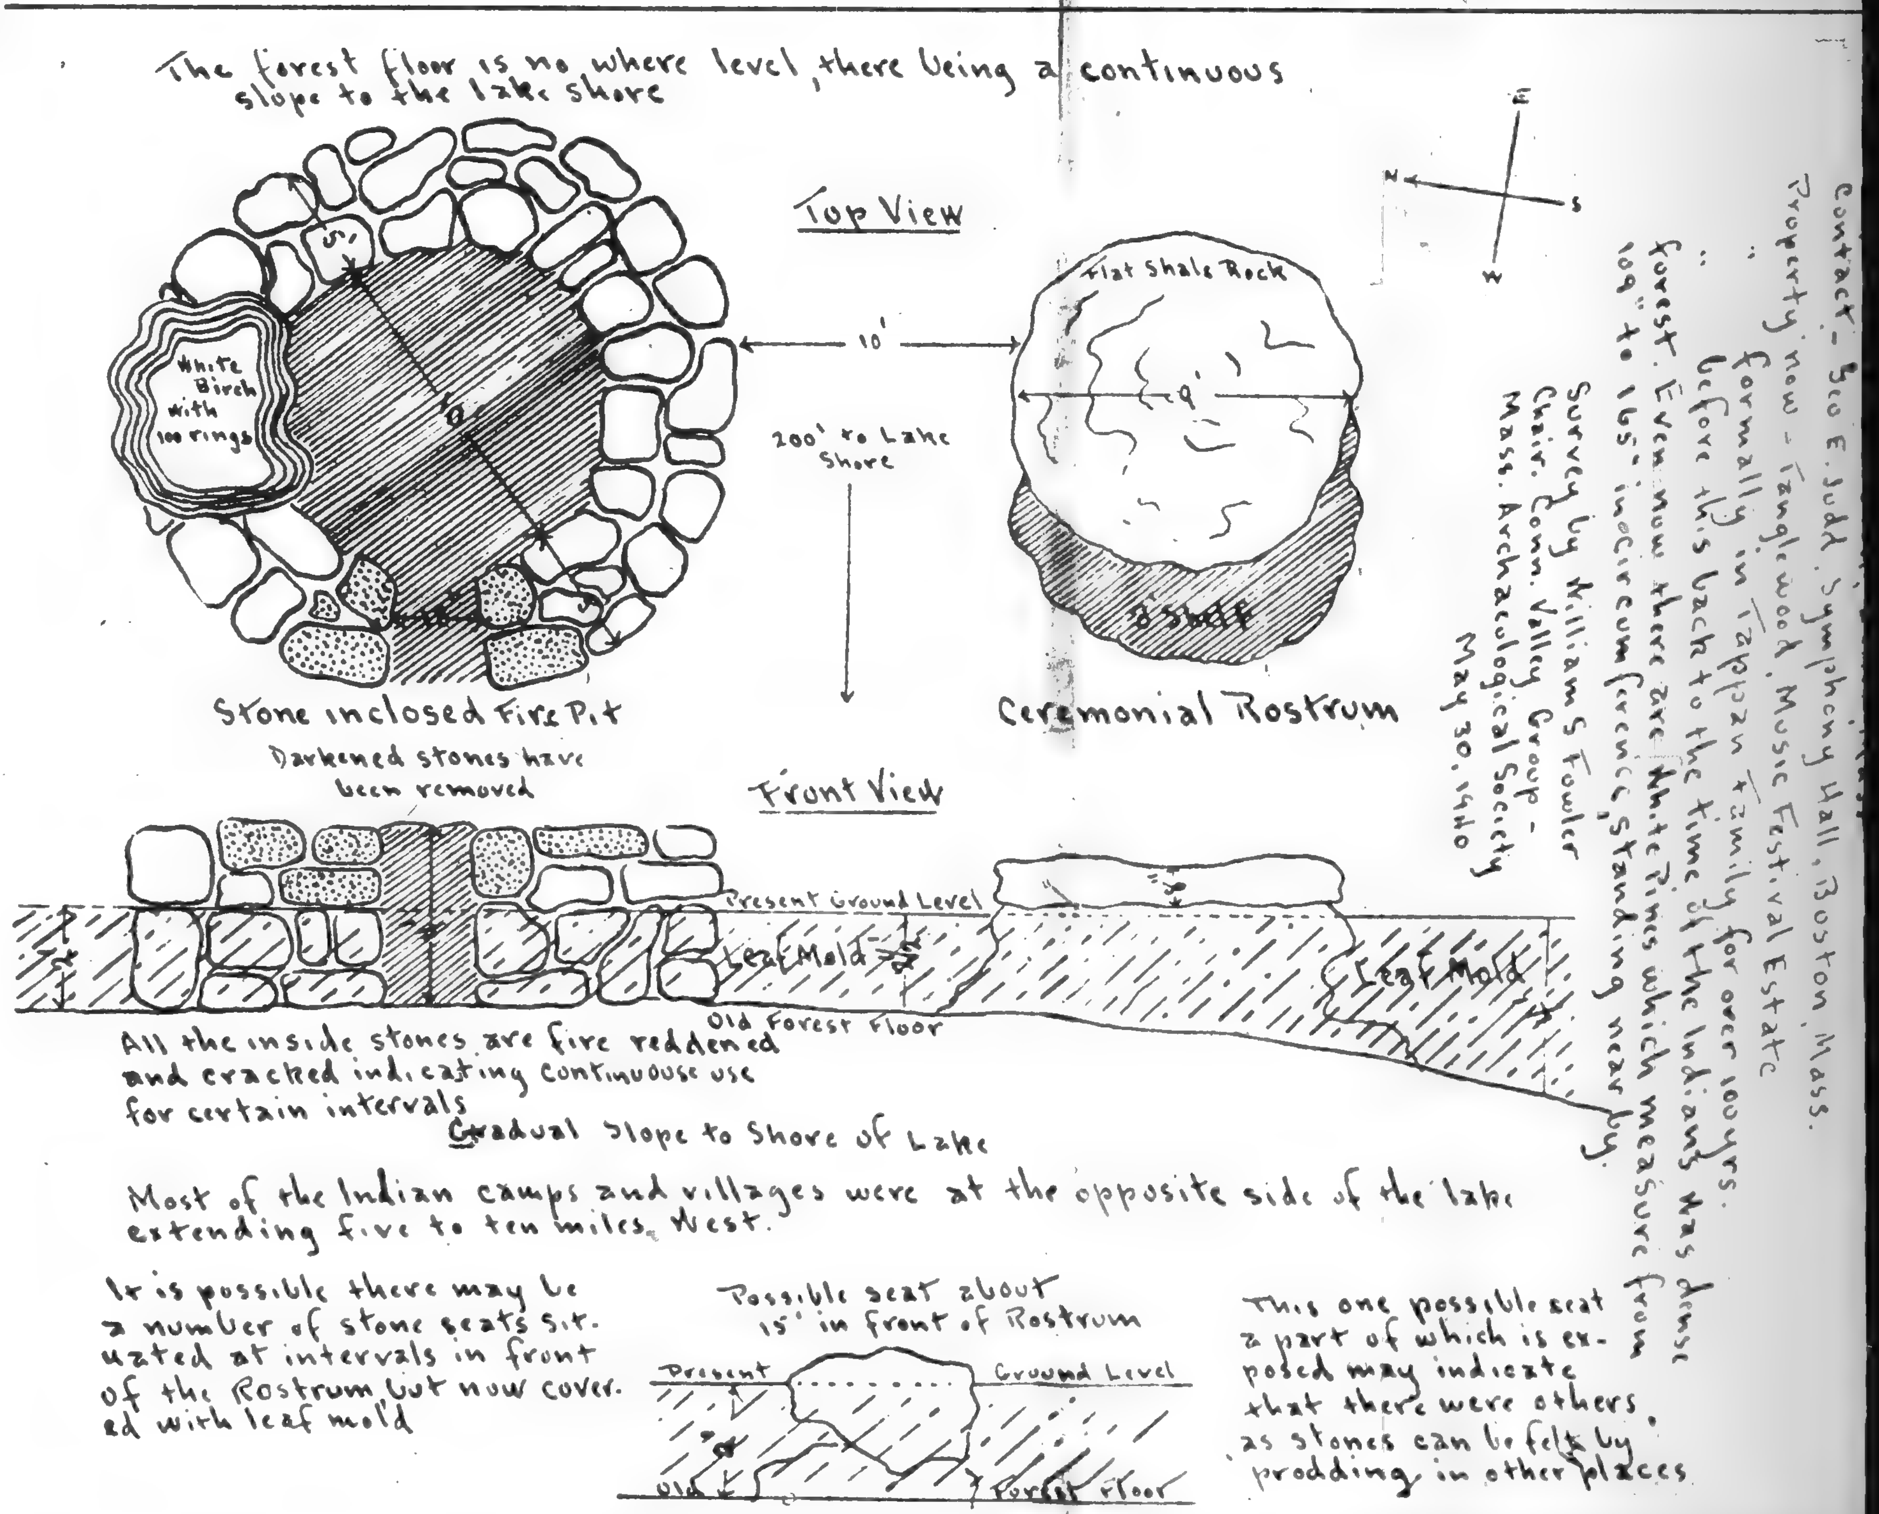
Mr Fowler's theory

Sketch of Indian Council Ring and Rostrum



The forest floor is no where level, there being a continuous slope to the lake shore
Top View
E
N
S
W
White Birch with 100 rings
10' 9'
Flat Shale Rock
3' Shelf
200' to Lake Shore
Stone inclosed Fire Pit
Darkened stones have been removed Ceremonial Rostrum
Front View
Present Ground Level
Leaf Mold
Old Forest Floor
All the inside stones are fire reddened and cracked indicating continuouse use for certain intervals
Gradual Slope to Shore of Lake
Most of the Indian camps and villages were at the opposite side of the lake extending five to ten miles West.
It is possible there may be a number of stone seats situated at intervals in front of the Rostrum but now covered with leaf mold
Possible seat about 15' in front of Rostrum
Present
Ground Level
Old
Forest Floor
This one possible seat a part of which is exposed may indicate that there were others, as stones can be felt by prodding in other places
Contact - Geo E. Judd, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.
Property now - Tanglewood, Music Festival Estate
" formally in Tappan family for over 100 yrs.
" before this back to the time of the Indians was dense forest. Even now there are White Pines which measure from 109" to 165" in circumference, standing near by.
Survey by William S Fowler
Chair. Conn. Valley Group -
Mass. Archaeological Society
May 30, 1940

Report on ancient site at Tanglewood made by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of Connecticut Valley group, Massachu ological society.

CLIPPING FROM MATEO, CALIF.
& News Leader

L 9 - 1940

CLIPPING FROM LETOWN, N. Y.
ES HERALD

JUL 6 - 1940

CLIPPING FROM
ARLESTON, S. C.
WS-COURIER
JUL 7 - 1940

CLIPPING FROM
PEORIA, ILL.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From
EW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

his Clipping From DIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 7 - 1940

S CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
L 7 - 1940

S CLIPPING FROM OANOKE, VA.
TIMES
JUL 7 - 1940

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL - REPUBLIC
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
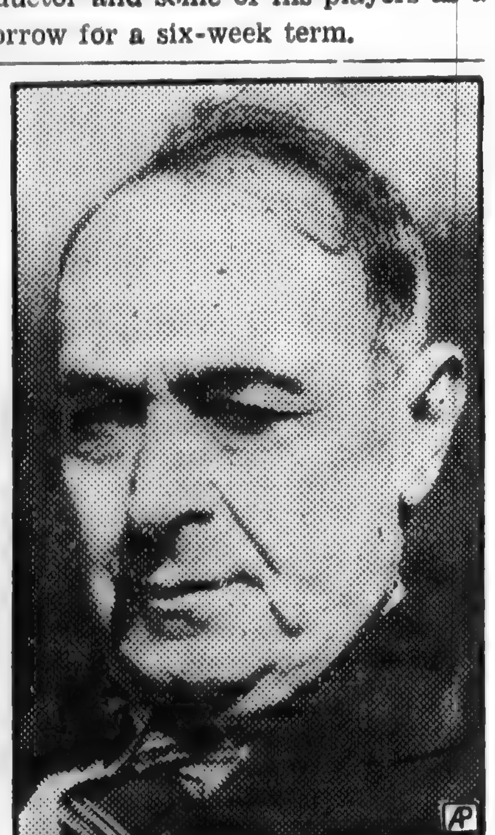
PRESS
JUL 6 - 1940

---

he World Of Music

V YORK, July 6 (UP).—The Berkshire Music center, a unique vith a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

325 pupils, chosen from 600 nts, will attend the school and nder Serge Koussevitzky, con- and about 20 members of the Symphony Orchestra.

enter will be divided into tions—The Institute for Ad- Study and The Academy, or school. The institute includes n orchestral conducting, un- ct supervision of Dr. Kous- ; an orchestra of skilled who will study and perform ne Boston symphony conduc- who will be coached by prin- f the orchestra; a class in ramatics to be taught by Graff, stage director of the litan Opera company of New nd a class in advanced com- . The latter will be conduct- aron Copland and Paul Hin- both noted composers.

cademy will have no formal e requirements and the main its work will include sing- ying, lectures and concerts. ademy chorus will study un- Wallace Woodworth, chair- the Harvard university mu- artment and will assist in ances of the 1940 Berkshire concerts.

ourse, costing each pupil $100, ned to cover collective per- ce and thus will supplement than duplicate the training le in established schools of arsals and concerts of the Symphony Orchestra at 1 r home in Tanglewood a o the students and it is felt ese would provide the pupils rare opportunity for close ob- on of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

~~C~~eremonial Rostrum of Mahican Indians Found at Tanglewood Near Council Ring; Connecticut Valley Archeologist Investigates

By CLAY PERRY

LENOX, July 6—The discovery of what is believed to be a ceremonial rostrum close by the mysterious Indian Council ring fireplace on the Tanglewood property, on the north shore of Lake Mahkeenac has been reported to the Massachusetts Archeological society by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of the Connecticut Valley group of the society, as a result of his investigations at the site recently. Mr Fowler believes that the site is an actual ancient Indian site and has recommended further official investigation to the chairman of the society's project committee, Benjamin Smith of Concord, as a major project in Western Massachusetts this summer.

In his investigation for which Mr Fowler made a special trip to the Tanglewood site and accompanied by Superintendent Ward Gaston, spent part of a day probing into the forest-closed area, he established the fact that from two to three feet of forest humus soil covers the original ground beneath the hemlocks and pines, and that beneath this surface layer of rotted leaves and droppings from the ancient trees are solid rocks and boulders, some of them just showing at the surface. Among them is a circular outcrop of shale nine feet in diameter with a semi-circular shelf on the south side, three feet wide at its maximum, about a foot lower than the top of the circular stone.

Mr Fowler sees in this a possible natural platform or ceremonial rostrum, which perhaps suggested to the builders of the fireplace west of it a few feet, the ideal spot for erecting such a structure. He took measurements with a steel tape of the rostrum, shelf, fireplace and the distances between, and found that the fireplace ring of fire-reddened rocks, itself, is 10 feet in diameter, inside, the walls of it where they are intact, ranging up to five feet thick and rising four to five feet above the gravel subsoil in the center of the ring.

Covered by Growth of Centuries

Further probing with a special iron rod, all around the site, brought to light the fact that there seems to have been a large semi-circle of boulders that possibly were used as seats, situated down the gentle slope from the high rostrum which originally appears to have risen at least three feet above the ground immediately surrounding it. One of the most obvious of these seats stands out of the ground about one third its bulk, directly down the slope of the ground toward the lake, 25 feet from the rostrum and fireplace, seeming to mark the outer limit of the larger rink of rocks. Others, partly or completely buried were discovered by probing in the soft, black humus, built up through the centuries as the Tappan woods grew.

Mr Fowler believes that the Indians selected this spot for ceremonies and councils for several good reasons, discovering the natural rostrum, overlooking the lovely lake, 200 feet from its shore, and not too far from the Indian village of Stockbridge and some Indian camps on the south and west shores of the lake. These villages were the homes of the Mahican Indians, sometimes called the Housatonic or River Indians and, better known historically, as the Stockbridge Indians. But whether the Mahicans erected the Council ring is a matter for conjecture and careful research into their written and tribal records, which Mr Fowler is doing by contacting their historians, notably Rev Samuel Miller (Chief Uhm-pa-tuth), who is the present chief or sachem of the remnants of the tribe, in Gresham, Wis. He is also asking Fred C. Tobey of West Stockbridge, who has made a close study of Indian history in this section to assist in trying to solve the mystery, while William B. Browne of North Adams, an authority on the Mohawk Indian visitations and invasions of the Berkshires, is being asked to help, as well.

The published history of the Mahican Indians, so far as has been discovered, to date, makes no direct mention of this site although it does describe their councils, in some detail, and relates the custom of building a huge fire to make a barbecue of vension or some other meat, for a feast following the tribal or inter-tribal pow-wow. Wampum belts were exchanged in the case of inter-tribal pow-wows, pipes were smoked and long, eloquent speeches made by the chiefs and leading men.

History of Tanglewood

Superintendent Ward Gaston of the Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony orchestra and home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, told Mr Fowler that the Tappan Woods property had been in the Tappan family for more than a century before it became the property of the Dixey family whose heirs presented it to the Boston Symphony orchestra, and that even before the early white occupancy of the area it was a forest, never cultivated or disturbed.

This fact, and the lack of any suggestion that the stone structure was erected by white men, helps to bolster Mr Fowler's theory, which is shared by local archeologists. The writer made a preliminary survey of the site last fall, at which time an official survey was planned but was postponed due to the coming of frost and snow. Miss Mabel Choate and Bernhard Hoffmann of Stockbridge stimulated interest in the ring, last year, and have followed the investigations with deep interest. Miss Choate is prominent in the Tanglewood group and is also a member of the archeological society.

Mr Fowler has long made a hobby of Indian lore and has discovered several interesting sites and many artifacts in Western Massachusetts. Near his summer camp in Becket, but located in the town of Peru, he has found, he says, a secret Indian cornfield, hidden high up in the woods, near which was a stone mill for grinding corn. This cornfield, he says, was hidden away in the forest by the resident Indians, to have a source of food supply that their enemies would be unlikely to discover in their hunting and war-making expeditions in this section. The stone corn-mill is now in the yard of the Ballou residence in Becket, where it was dragged on a stone-boat, after being blasted off the ledge of which it was a part, so as to preserve it in safety.

May Solve Mystery

The mill is simply a hallowed out mortar in the rock but its interior reveals plainly the scored marks made by the pestle that was rubbed up and down and around on the grains of corn to make it into meal. The Springfield museum has taken an interest in the corn-mill and may sometime acquire it, mount it and restore it as a unique Indian relic. Here, again, there remains an unwritten chapter in the Indian history of Massachusetts which may or may never be written. So far, it is not known whether the Peru Indians who made the mill beside their hidden field were Mahicans or of some other tribe. It is hoped that Chief Uhm-pa-tuth, a highly educated Mahican Indian, who has kept in touch with his tribe's ancestral home, Stockbridge, may be able to solve these mysteries to some extent.

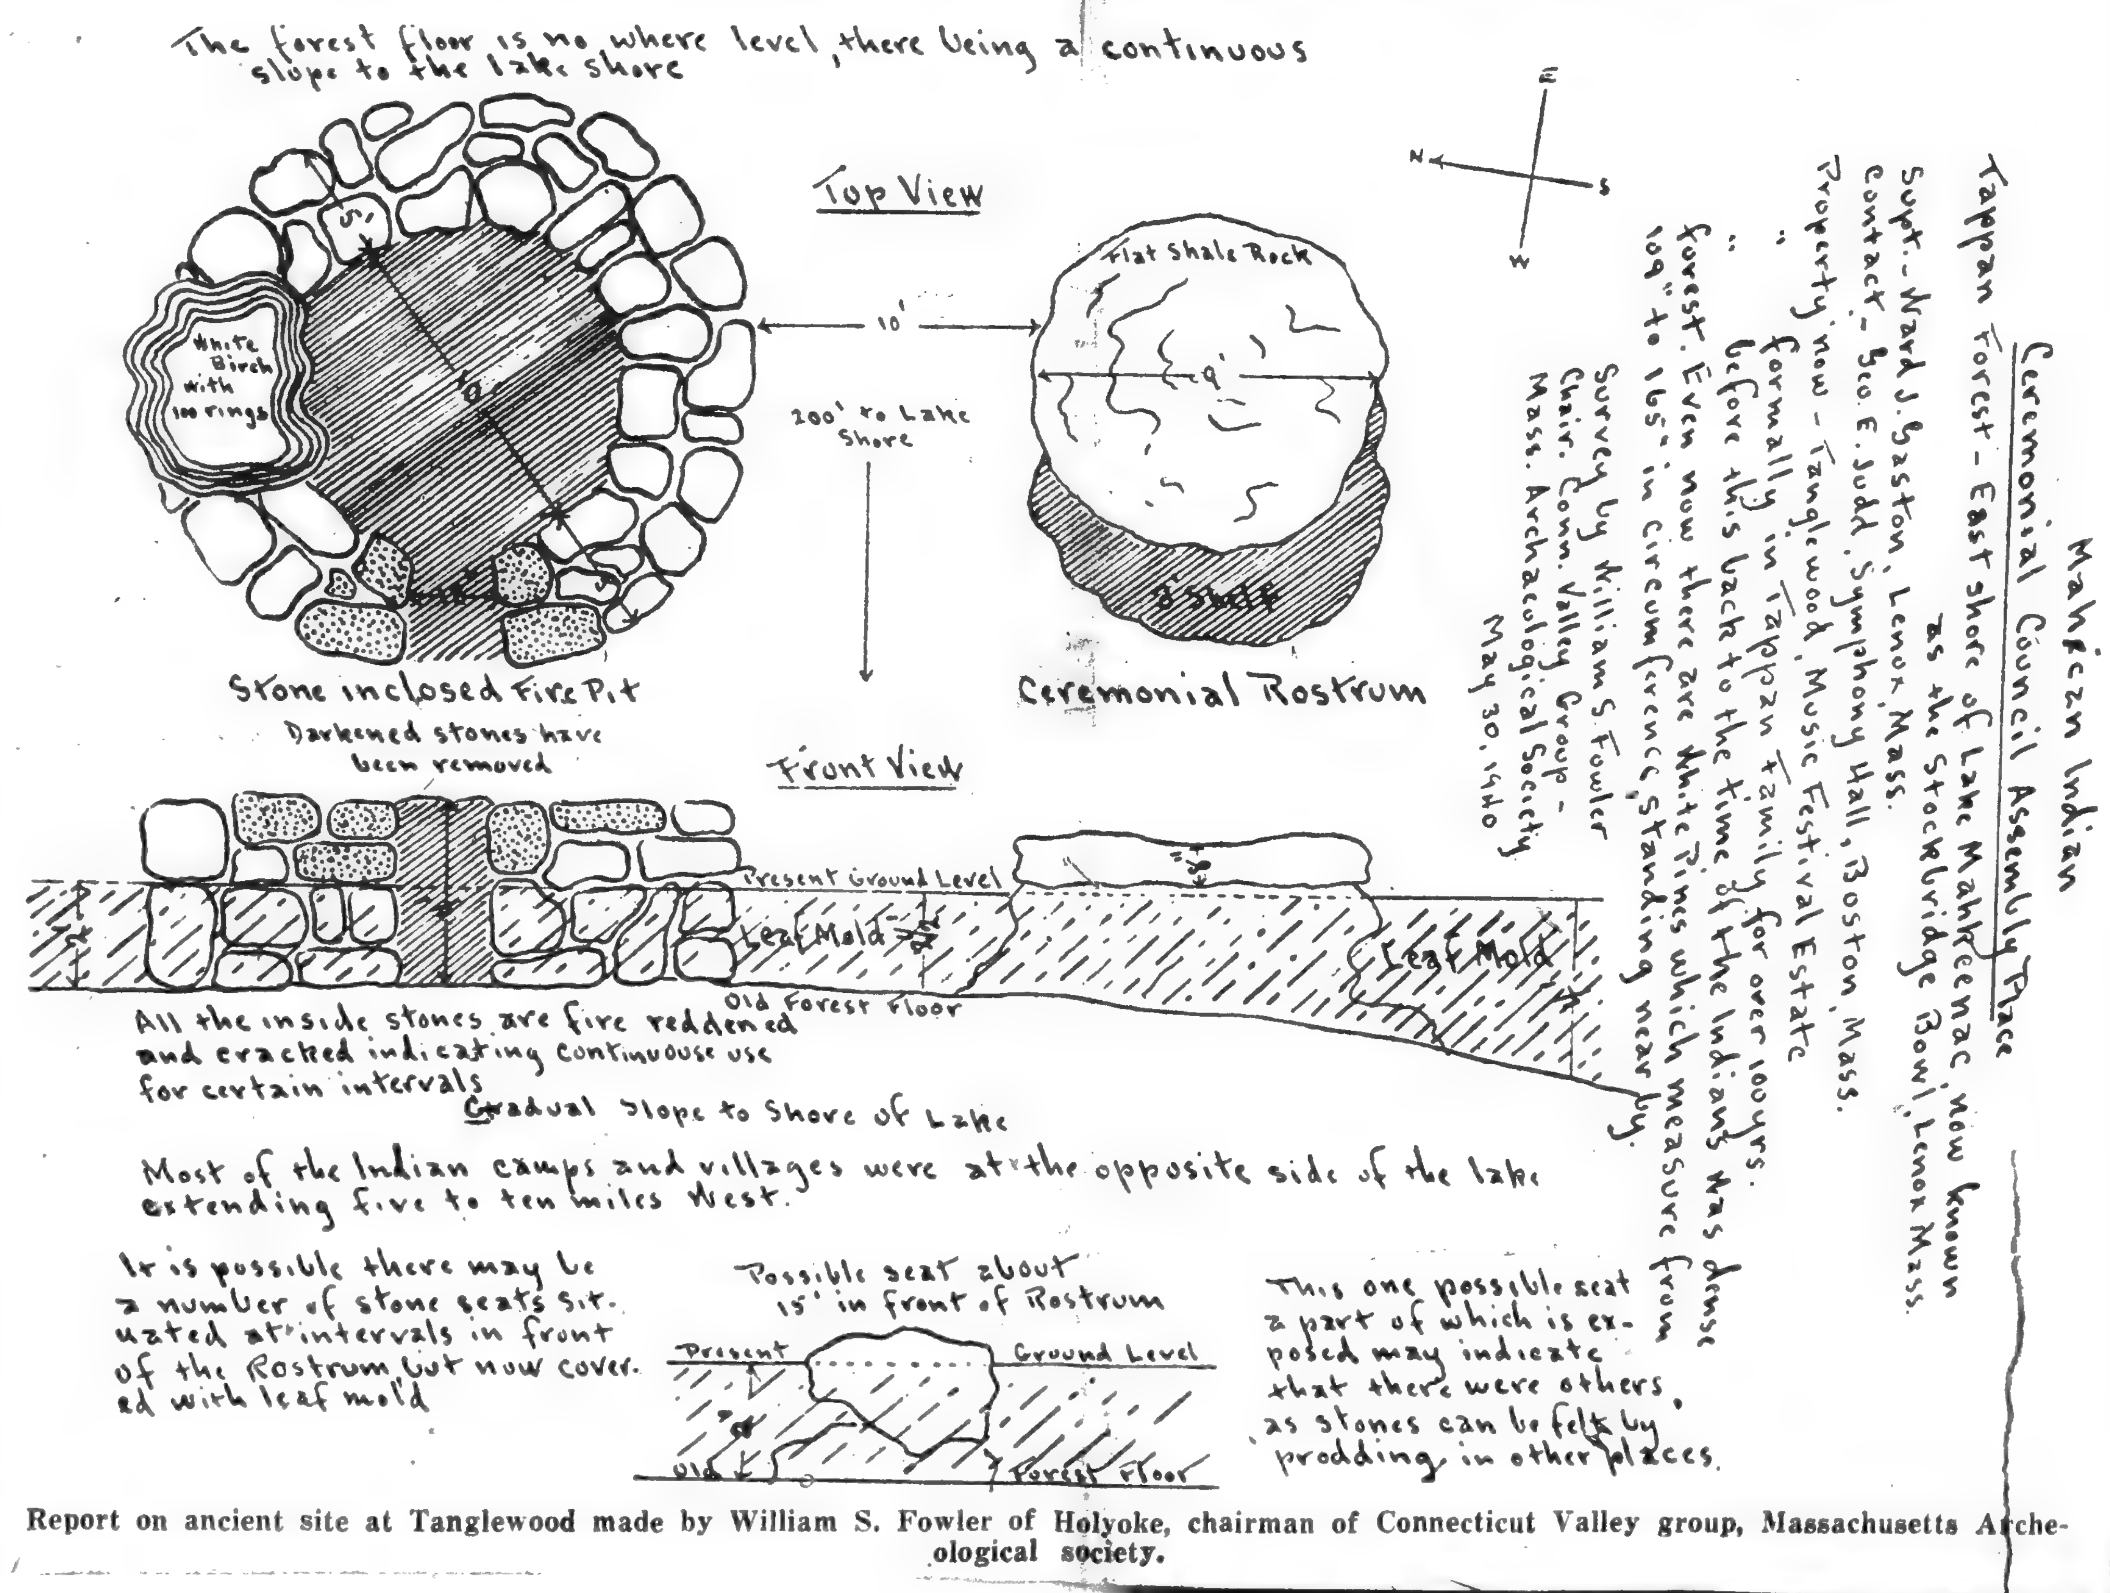
The Mahicans had an Indian historian, one Hendrix Aupumunt or Aupamut but he was not a Mahican himself. He was a Mohawk Indian, or some say, a Mohawk-Mahican who became educated by the missionaries and wrote and had published a detailed history of the Mahicans, some portions of which have been incorporated in later or contemporary accounts written by white men, notably Dr Dwight. It is stated by Historian J. E. A. Smith in his general historical accounts of Berkshire county that Aupamut, who was called Capt Hendrick, was "without question, the ablest, truest and best man whose name appears in the history of the people."

Mr Smith writes that "he was probably the son of the great Mohawk chief of the same name, who was the son of a Mahican, married to a Mohawk princess, through whom by inheritance descending in the female line, his son became grand sachem of the tribe."

Mr Fowler is attempting to discover, if one exists, a copy of Capt Aupumut's original history to see if it throws any light on these sites and their origin.

The next step to be taken in the archeological study of the Tanglewood site is to request the Boston Symphony orchestra through George E. Judd, its manager, for permission to excavate the ground in and around the ring in a search for artifacts which would almost surely be found if the ring was used by Indians as is supposed.

Sketch of Indian Council Ring and Rostrum



The forest floor is no where level, there being a continuous slope to the lake shore
Top View
White Birch with 100 rings
10'
Flat Shale Rock
9'
3' shelf
200' to Lake Shore
N
S
E
W
Stone inclosed Fire Pit
Darkened stones have been removed Ceremonial Rostrum
Front View
Present Ground Level
Leaf Mold
Leaf Mold
Old Forest Floor
All the inside stones are fire reddened and cracked indicating continuouse use for certain intervals
Gradual slope to Shore of Lake
Most of the Indian camps and villages were at the opposite side of the lake extending five to ten miles West.
It is possible there may be a number of stone seats situated at intervals in front of the Rostrum but now covered with leaf mold
Possible seat about 15' in front of Rostrum Present
Ground Level
Old
Forest Floor
This one possible seat a part of which is exposed may indicate that there were others, as stones can be felt by prodding in other places.
Mahican Indian
Ceremonial Council Assembly Place
Tappan Forest - East shore of Lake Mahkeenac now known as the Stockbridge Bowl, Lenox Mass.
Supt. - Ward J. Gaston, Lenox Mass.
contact - Geo. E. Judd, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.
Property now - Tanglewood, Music Festival Estate
" formally in Tappan family for over 100 yrs.
" before this back to the time of the Indians was dense forest. Even now there are White Pines which measure from 109" to 165" in circumference, standing near by.
Survey by William S. Fowler
Chair. Conn. Valley Group -
Mass. Archaeological Society
May 30, 1940

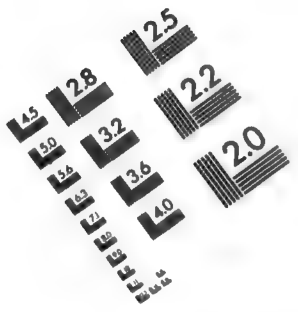
Report on ancient site at Tanglewood made by William S. Fowler of Holyoke, chairman of Connecticut Valley group, Massachusetts Archeological society.

REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

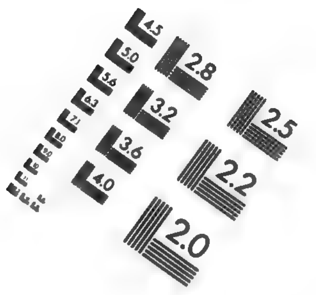
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

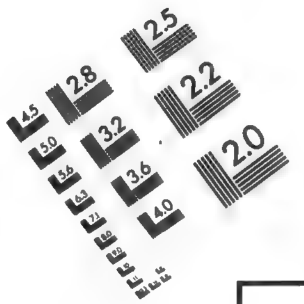


2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0

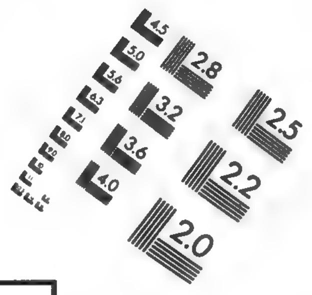


2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0

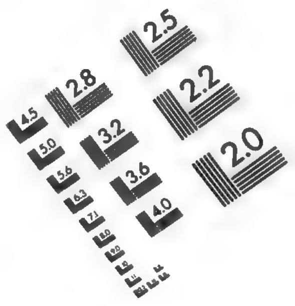
PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



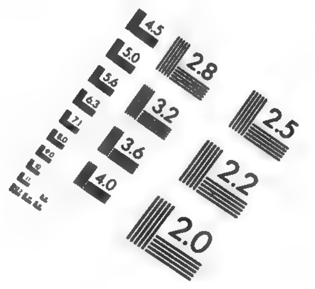
2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0



2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0

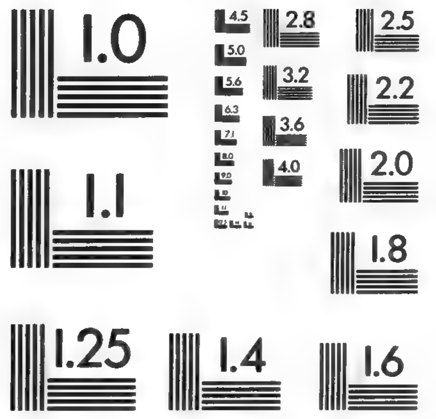


2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0
1.8

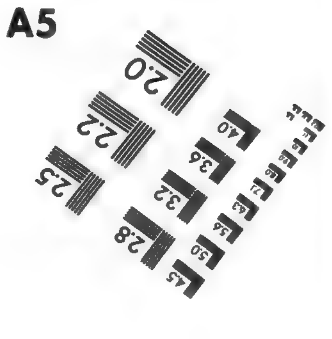
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

A5

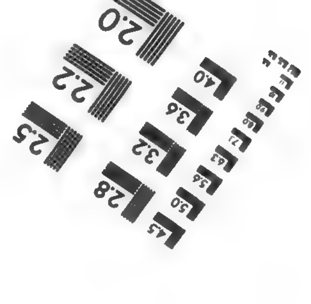


2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.8
2.2
2.5

A4

A3



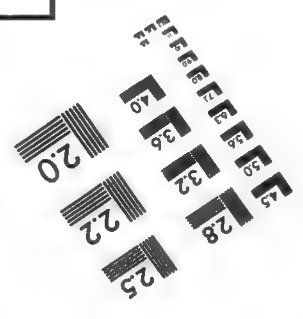
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

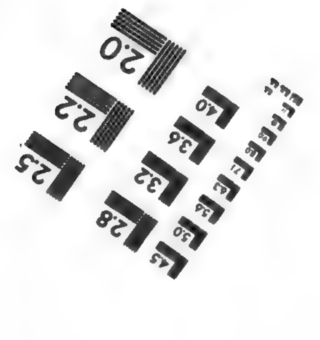
Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.8
2.2
2.5



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8

4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.8
2.2
2.5

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1940

Our Present Festival Scheme

ALTHOUGH important urban summer musical activities, such as the outdoor concerts here and in other cities and the opera season in Cincinnati, can be regarded as indispensable parts of the regular metropolitan schedule rather than as festivals, the United States has a number of established series of festival character, of which several have a long and distinguished history. A probable majority of these are of the type represented by the festivals in Cincinnati, Worcester, Evanston and Ann Arbor, to name some prominent examples, consisting of several concerts with a large local chorus, a prominent resident or visiting orchestra and an array of nationally prominent soloists. The most prominent example of the specialized festival is undoubtedly the Bach Choir's May series in Bethlehem, Pa., which has acquired newer counterparts elsewhere. In the orchestral field, the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has steadily gained in appeal and prestige, while the groups of concerts presented from time to time by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in Washington head the list of festival events specializing in chamber music. Contemporary music has its innings in programs such as those offered at the Yaddo estate in Saratoga, or in the concerts to be presented by the International Society for Contemporary Music here next fall.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUL 7 - 1940

NEW MUSIC CENTER

Impressive Response to Koussevitzky's Realization of Lifelong Purpose

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Berkshire Music Center, which represents a long-cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, has its opening exer- ses tomorrow at Tanglewood, hich is also the home of the three eeks season of the Berkshire Symhonic Festival to be given by Dr. oussevitzky and the Boston Symhony Orchestra in August. The nstitutions are closely related.

A general outline of the principal activities of the Center appears in another column. In recent months the public has been acquainted with the fundamental aims and methods of study to be followed there. It is a singular fact that repeated efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky to establish such a Center in past years were defeated in Europe by the outbreak of war in 1914, and have been confronted here by various difficulties, foreseen and unforeseen, until this year of 1940. At this moment it is clearer than ever before that America must carry forward the banners of culture and idealism which have all but faded from sight in desperate Europe. In this year of catastrophe and menace the Music Center opens its doors, and it is a happy omen. The time may well be approaching when evil will have to be resisted with other weapons than those of art, but it is not illogical to believe that if art had been genuinely a part of the living and thought of modern Europe, if it had been served with the faith and enthusiasm which ennoble humanity and create beauty, we might be witnessing something else than the fatal, senseless and all-devouring folly which is rampant overseas. In the meantime one of the most potent antidotes to the spirit which has poisoned modern civilization is the project at Tanglewood.

* * *

THE need of such an institution conceived in the spirit and with the purposes of the Berkshire Music Center has shown by the astonishing response, which is nation-wide, to the unassuming and occasional announcements of its existence which have appeared in the press. Twice the number of students who could be accommodated have applied for entrance, but 350 are the utmost limit that the director and the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center believe can be properly trained.

This is a picked student body, who come with high records of study and accomplishment as recommendations. There are students from every part and nearly every State of the nation. The objectives they pursue neither rival nor conflict with those entertained by other musical institutions of note.

It is not routine music study or the development of individual virtuosity which the Berkshire Music Center endeavors to develop. The classes are in two great divisions, the highest for the specially gifted post-graduate worker who wishes to attain the highest standards of style and interpretation in performance; the lower class consisting of those of less signal endowments, who wish to become acquainted, under excellent auspices and able teaching, with the literature of music and the broad principles of the art.

* * *

THUS in the upper school Dr. Koussevitzky takes four pupils to whom he gives individual training in conducting, while others in the class listen and observe. Review work in musical theory is available, but not courses of study in a subject which requires for its genuine mastery not only months but years of intensive application. But review work in these fields is provided for, and composition in advanced as well as more elementary forms is taught by Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland. The Center has not only its special classes in conducting: there are rehearsals and performances of an orchestra of selected players, who combine forces with their instructors, first-desk men of the Boston Symphony, in the practice of finished symphonic interpretation. One of the methods followed in the classes will be for the student to play a first part in an ensemble and the musician who instructs him a second. There will be much ensemble performance, under skilled guidance, by small group, and groups of performers of the lower school will be selected and combined according to their capabilities in performance. In the same way the practice of choral singing and conducting will be directed by G. Wallace Woodworth and his associates. This precedes the performance by the best singers of the Center, in combination with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of Bach's B minor Mass as a special program [illegible] Symphonic Festival which begins in August. Those who study music at the Music Center will also play it. Those who play it will study it, which does not always follow.

* * *

FOR the two things are not necessarily synonymous. "What we want to give our students," said Dr. Koussevitzky in a speech he made on the subject some months ago at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, "is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts and carry farther their knowledge gained during years of study with the music schools and conservatories. Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer."

The Center as it develops will expand the scope of its activities. To the choral and instrumental classes this first seasan will be added the classes in dramatic musical interpretation of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Study of classic drama, development of the ballet and related subjects will be added to the curriculum as their necessity and value are made manifest in the light of experience.

* * *

THE Center is not conceived as exclusively devoted to music. It is to be a centre of music and related arts. These arts must be recognized as essential to the culture of today and the ideas of a modern society. For art should be fundamentally related to living. The gulf between the artist and the common life and thought of his community, which did not exist in ancient societies, is a development, or a loss of direction, which has been extremely injurious to civilization. To bridge that gulf is a task to which the musician, master or student, may well dedicate himself. Announcement of any such dedication is of course absent from the catalogue or the press emanations of the Berkshire Music Centre. But the ideal is implicit in its offerings, and in the nature of Koussevitzky's activities since he came to America sixteen years ago as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the moment that he undertook the musical direction of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—and, as we have seen before—he had this grander project in mind. Of the objectives of the Centre he has finely said, "we want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." That sentiment should hold true for every servant of music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1940

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

MORE than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Many Changes Noted At Berkshire Event

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ, made possible through a gift from the Carnegie corporation to the orchestra, has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B-minor Mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire festival chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire music center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr Herbert Graf at the center have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others, such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, are open to public inspection.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach of the Berkshire Hills conference staff who is now located at the festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat-Leader

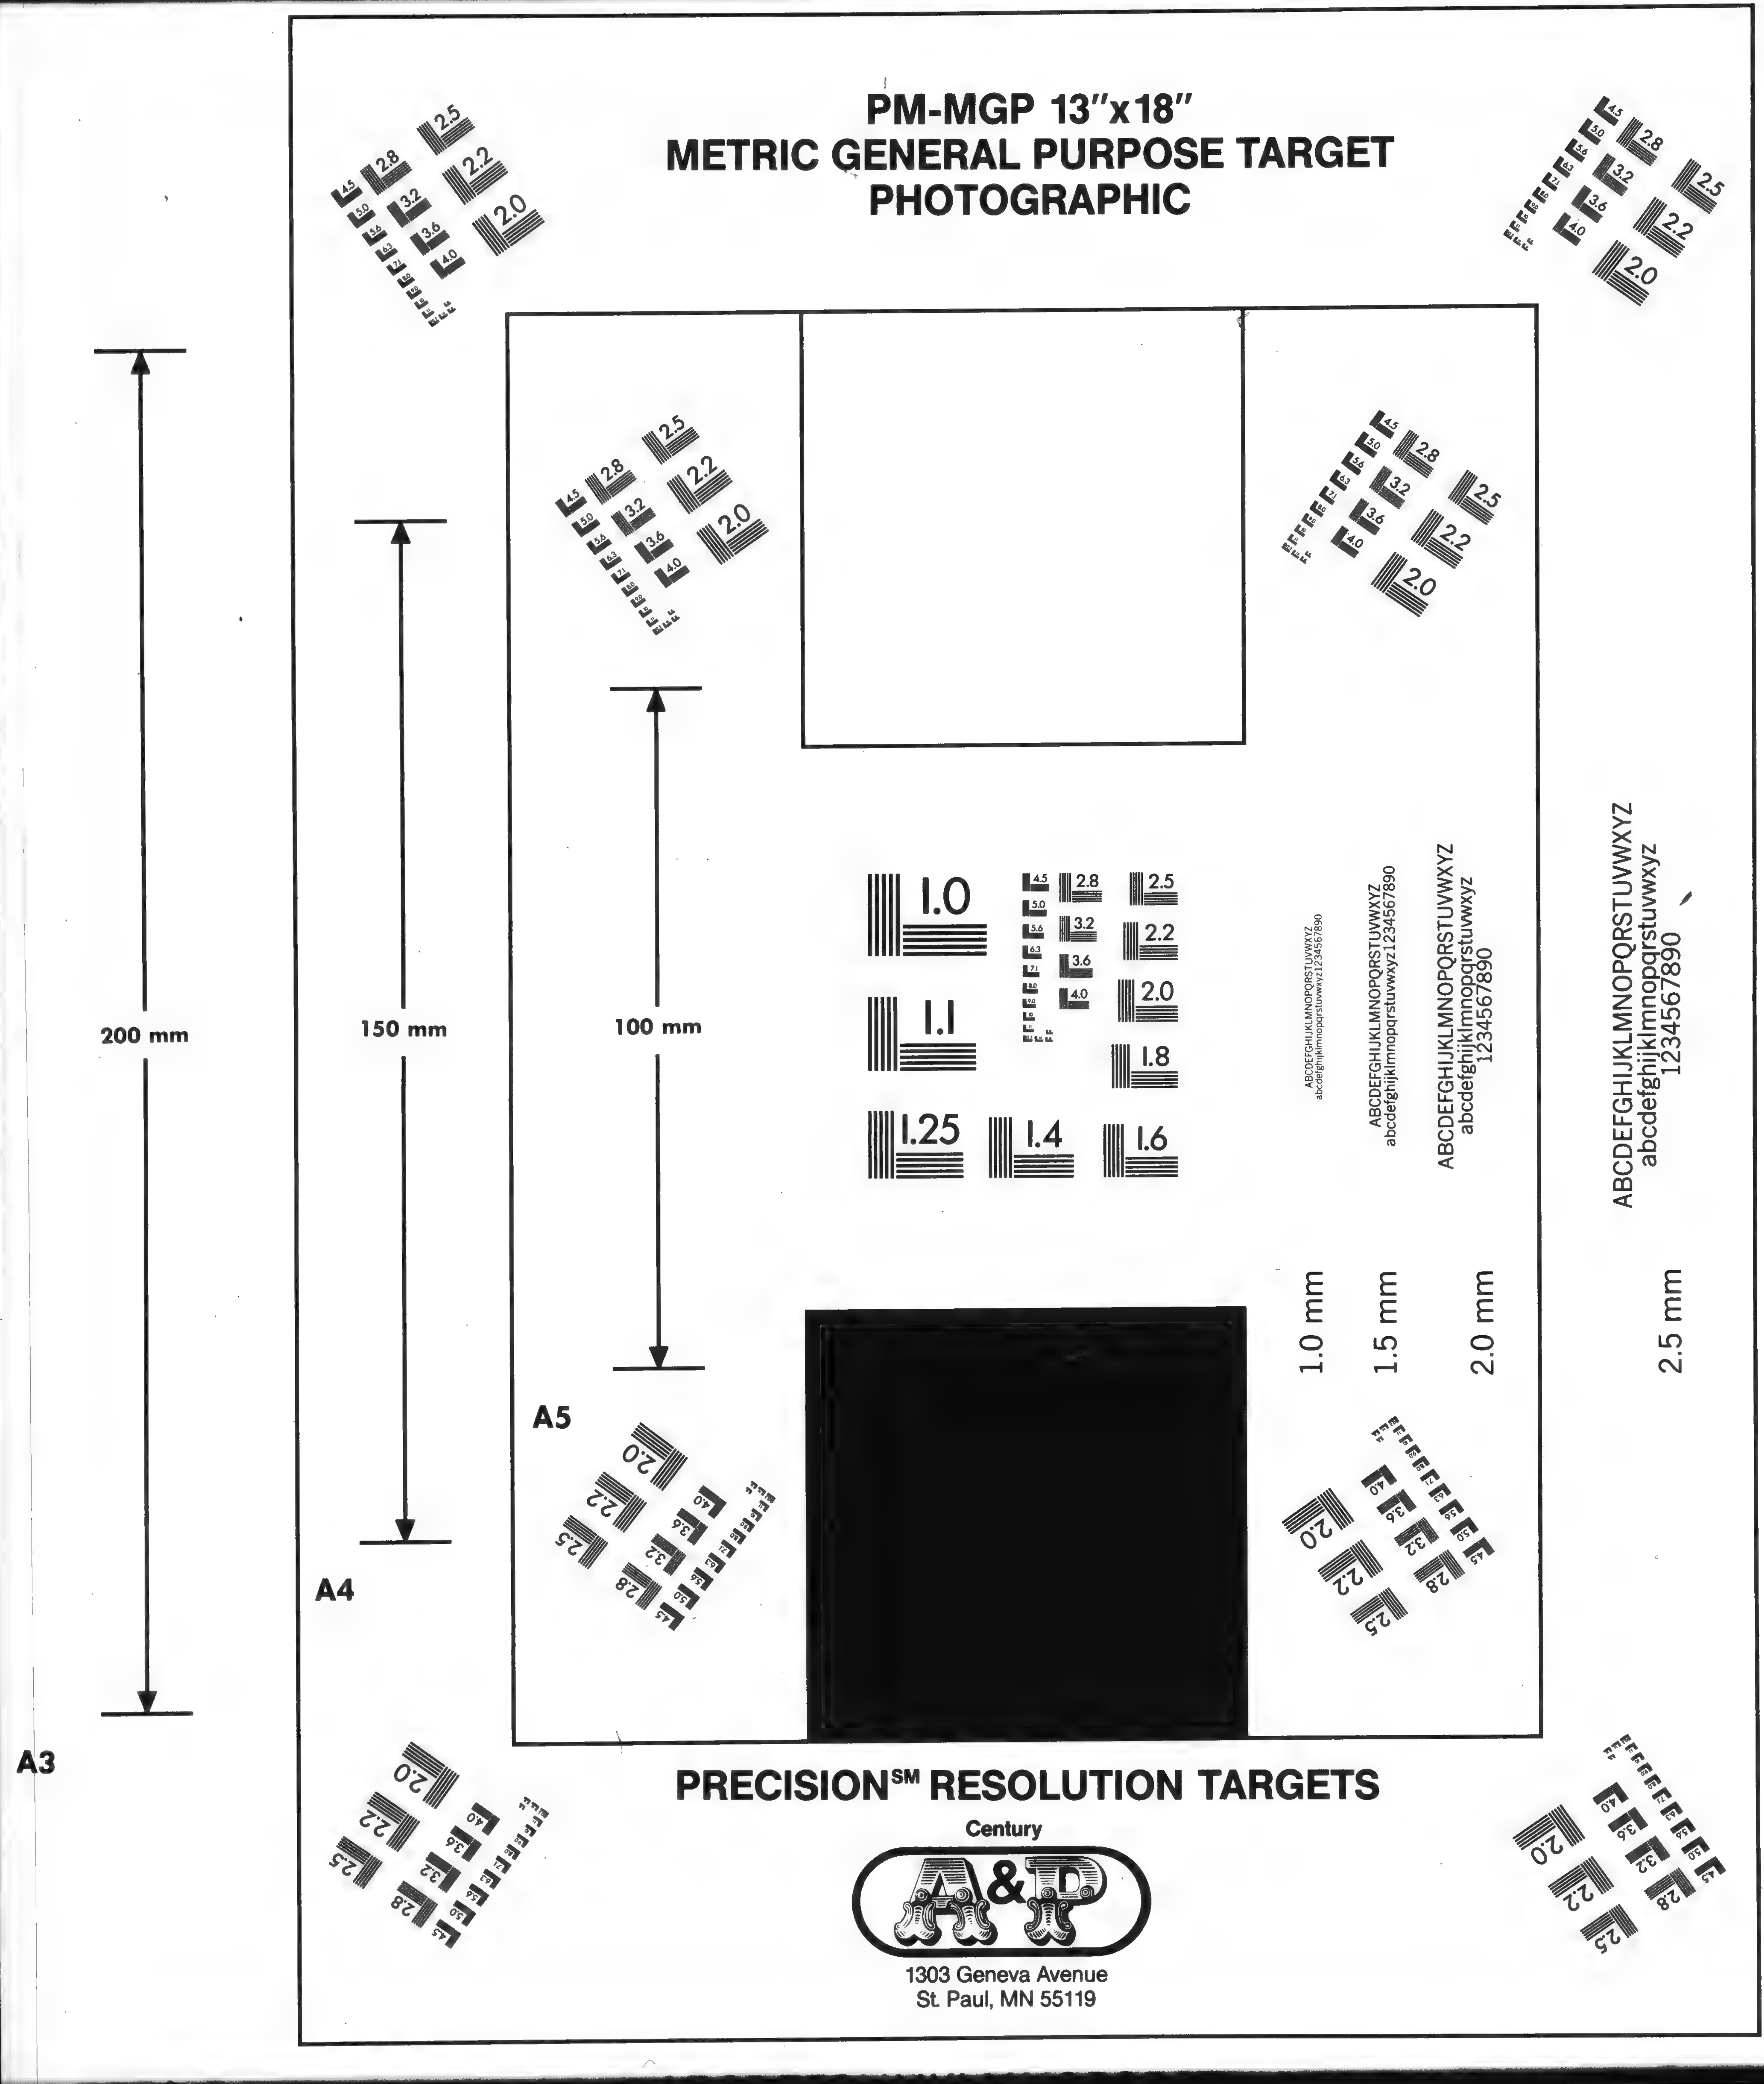
JUL 7 - 1940

THE MUSIC CENTER

. . . at Tanglewood in the Berkshires opens tomorrow and will continue until the close of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to be presented at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony on Aug. 18. There will be about 325 students selected from among the 600 applicants and they are from almost every state east of the Mississippi. The school is divided into two sections, the institute and the academy. In the institute, more selective as to skill than the academy, there will be an orchestra and groups in conducting, composition and opera dramatics. The orchestra will have the advantage of coaching and joint performances with 30 members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals who are part of the faculty of the school. The principal activity of the academy will be the festival chorus.

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

V7

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 - 1940

Our Present Festival Scheme

ALTHOUGH important urban summer musical activities, such as the outdoor concerts here and in other cities and the opera season in Cincinnati, can be regarded as indispensable parts of the regular metropolitan schedule rather than as festivals, the United States has a number of established series of festival character, of which several have a long and distinguished history. A probable majority of these are of the type represented by the festivals in Cincinnati, Worcester, Evanston and Ann Arbor, to name some prominent examples, consisting of several concerts with a large local chorus, a prominent resident or visiting orchestra and an array of nationally prominent soloists. The most prominent example of the specialized festival is undoubtedly the Bach Choir's May series in Bethlehem, Pa., which has acquired newer counterparts elsewhere. In the orchestral field, the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has steadily gained in appeal and prestige, while the groups of concerts presented from time to time by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in Washington head the list of festival events specializing in chamber music. Contemporary music has its innings in programs such as those offered at the Yaddo estate in Saratoga, or in the concerts to be presented by the International Society for Contemporary Music here next fall.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUL 7 - 1940

NEW MUSIC CENTER

Impressive Response to Koussevitzky's Realization of Lifelong Purpose

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Berkshire Music Center, which represents a long-cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, has its opening exercises tomorrow at Tanglewood, which is also the home of the three weeks season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August. The institutions are closely related.

A general outline of the principal activities of the Center appears in another column. In recent months the public has been acquainted with the fundamental aims and methods of study to be followed there. It is a singular fact that repeated efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky to establish such a Center in past years were defeated in Europe by the outbreak of war in 1914, and have been confronted here by various difficulties, foreseen and unforeseen, until this year of 1940. At this moment it is clearer than ever before that America must carry forward the banners of culture and idealism which have all but faded from sight in desperate Europe. In this year of catastrophe and menace the Music Center opens its doors, and it is a happy omen. The time may well be approaching when evil will have to be resisted with other weapons than those of art, but it is not illogical to believe that if art had been genuinely a part of the living and thought of modern Europe, if it had been served with the faith and enthusiasm which ennoble humanity and create beauty, we might be witnessing something else than the fatal, senseless and all-devouring folly which is rampant overseas. In the meantime one of the most potent antidotes to the spirit which has poisoned modern civilization is the project at Tanglewood.

* * *

THE need of such an institution conceived in the spirit and with the purposes of the Berkshire Music Center has shown by the astonishing response, which is nation-wide, to the unassuming and occasional announcements of its existence which have appeared in the press. Twice the number of students who could be accommodated have applied for entrance, but 350 are the utmost limit that the director and the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center believe can be properly trained.

This is a picked student body, who come with high records of study and accomplishment as recommendations. There are students from every part and nearly every State of the nation. The objectives they pursue neither rival nor conflict with those entertained by other musical institutions of note.

It is not routine music study or the development of individual virtuosity which the Berkshire Music Center endeavors to develop. The classes are in two great divisions, the highest for the specially gifted post-graduate worker who wishes to attain the highest standards of style and interpretation in performance; the lower class consisting of those of less signal endowments, who wish to become acquainted, under excellent auspices and able teaching, with the literature of music and the broad principles of the art.

* * *

THUS in the upper school Dr. Koussevitzky takes four pupils to whom he gives individual training in conducting, while others in the class listen and observe. Re-

edge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer."

The Center as it develops will expand the scope of its activities. To the choral and instrumental classes this first seasan will be added the classes in dramatic musical interpretation of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Study of classic drama, development of the ballet and related subjects will be added to the curriculum as their necessity and value are made manifest in the light of experience.

* * *

THE Center is not conceived as exclusively devoted to music. It is to be a centre of music and related arts. These arts must be recognized as essential to the culture of today and the ideas of a modern society. For art should be fundamentally related to living. The gulf between the artist and the common life and thought of his community, which did not exist in ancient societies, is a development, or a loss of direction, which has been extremely injurious to civilization. To bridge that gulf is a task to which the musician, master or student, may well dedicate himself. Announcement of any such dedication is of course absent from the catalogue or the press emanations of the Berkshire Music Centre. But the ideal is implicit in its offerings, and in the nature of Koussevitsky's activities since he came to America sixteen years ago as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the moment that he undertook the musical direction of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—and, as we have seen before—he had this grander project in mind. Of the objectives of the Centre he has finely said, "we want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." That sentiment should hold true for every servant of music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1940

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

MORE than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Many Changes Noted At Berkshire Event

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ, made possible through a gift from the Carnegie corporation to the orchestra, has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B-minor Mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire festival chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire music center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr Herbert Graf at the center have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others, such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, are open to public inspection.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach of the Berkshire Hills conference staff who is now located at the festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat-Leader

JUL 7 - 1940

THE MUSIC CENTER

. . . at Tanglewood in the Berkshires opens tomorrow and will continue until the close of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to be presented at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony on Aug. 18. There will be about 325 students selected from among the 600 applicants and they are from almost every state east of the Mississippi. The school is divided into two sections, the institute and the academy. In the institute, more selective as to skill than the academy, there will be an orchestra and groups in conducting, composition and opera dramatics. The orchestra will have the advantage of coaching and joint performances with 30 members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals who are part of the faculty of the school. The principal activity of the academy will be the festival chorus.

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Berkshire Music Center, which represents a long-cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, has its opening exer- ses tomorrow at Tanglewood, ich is also the home of the three eeks season of the Berkshire Sym- ionic Festival to be given by Dr. oussevitzky and the Boston Sym- hony Orchestra in August. The nstitutions are closely related.

A general outline of the principal activities of the Center appears in another column. In recent months the public has been acquainted with the fundamental aims and methods of study to be followed there. It is a singular fact that repeated efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky to establish such a Center in past years were defeated in Europe by the outbreak of war in 1914, and have been confronted here by various difficulties, foreseen and unforeseen, until this year of 1940. At this moment it is clearer than ever before that America must carry forward the banners of culture and idealism which have all but faded from sight in desperate Europe. In this year of catastrophe and menace the Music Center opens its doors, and it is a happy omen. The time may well be approaching when evil will have to be resisted with other weapons than those of art, but it is not illogical to believe that if art had been genuinely a part of the living and thought of modern Europe, if it had been served with the faith and enthusiasm which ennoble humanity and create beauty, we might be witnessing something else than the fatal, senseless and all-devouring folly which is rampant overseas. In the meantime one of the most potent antidotes to the spirit which has poisoned modern civilization is the project at Tanglewood.

* * *

THE need of such an institution conceived in the spirit and with the purposes of the Berkshire Music Center has shown by the astonishing response, which is nation-wide, to the unassuming and occasional announcements of its existence which have appeared in the press. Twice the number of students who could be accommodated have applied for entrance, but 350 are the utmost limit that the director and the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center believe can be properly trained.

This is a picked student body, who come with high records of study and accomplishment as recommendations. There are students from every part and nearly every State of the nation. The objectives they pursue neither rival nor conflict with those entertained by other musical institutions of note.

It is not routine music study or the development of individual virtuosity which the Berkshire Music Center endeavors to develop. The classes are in two great divisions, the highest for the specially gifted post-graduate worker who wishes to attain the highest standards of style and interpretation in performance; the lower class consisting of those of less signal endowments, who wish to become acquainted, under excellent auspices and able teaching, with the literature of music and the broad principles of the art.

* * *

THUS in the upper school Dr. Koussevitzky takes four pupils to whom he gives individual training in conducting, while others in the class listen and observe. Review work in musical theory is available, but not courses of study in a subject which requires for its genuine mastery not only months but years of intensive application. But review work in these fields is provided for, and composition in advanced as well as more elementary forms is taught by Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland. The Center has not only its special classes in conducting: there are rehearsals and performances of an orchestra of selected players, who combine forces with their instructors, first-desk men of the Boston Symphony, in the practice of finished symphonic interpretation. One of the methods followed in the classes will be for the student to play a first part in an ensemble and the musician who instructs him a second. There will be much ensemble performance, under skilled guidance, by small group, and groups of performers of the lower school will be selected and combined according to their capabilities in performance. In the same way the practice of choral singing and conducting will be directed by G. Wallace Woodworth and his associates. This precedes the performance by the best singers of the Center, in combination with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of Bach's B minor Mass as a special program of the Symphonic Festival which begins in August. Those who study music at the Music Center will also play it. Those who play it will study it, which does not always follow.

* * *

FOR the two things are not necessarily synonymous. "What we want to give our students," said Dr. Koussevitzky in a speech he made on the subject some months ago at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, "is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts and carry farther their knowledge gained during years of study with the music schools and conservatories. Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer."

The Center as it develops will expand the scope of its activities. To the choral and instrumental classes this first seasan will be added the classes in dramatic musical interpretation of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Study of classic drama, development of the ballet and related subjects will be added to the curriculum as their necessity and value are made manifest in the light of experience.

* * *

THE Center is not conceived as exclusively devoted to music. It is to be a centre of music and related arts. These arts must be recognized as essential to the culture of today and the ideas of a modern society. For art should be fundamentally related to living. The gulf between the artist and the common life and thought of his community, which did not exist in ancient societies, is a development, or a loss of direction, which has been extremely injurious to civilization. To bridge that gulf is a task to which the musician, master or student, may well dedicate himself. Announcement of any such dedication is of course absent from the catalogue or the press emanations of the Berkshire Music Centre. But the ideal is implicit in its offerings, and in the nature of Koussevitsky's activities since he came to America sixteen years ago as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the moment that he undertook the musical direction of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—and, as we have seen before—he had this grander project in mind. Of the objectives of the Centre he has finely said, "we want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." That sentiment should hold true for every servant of music.

---

by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat-Leader

JUL 7 - 1940

THE MUSIC CENTER

. . . at Tanglewood in the Berkshires opens tomorrow and will continue until the close of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to be presented at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony on Aug. 18. There will be about 325 students selected from among the 600 applicants and they are from almost every state east of the Mississippi. The school is divided into two sections, the institute and the academy. In the institute, more selective as to skill than the academy, there will be an orchestra and groups in conducting, composition and opera dramatics. The orchestra will have the advantage of coaching and joint performances with 30 members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals who are part of the faculty of the school. The principal activity of the academy will be the festival chorus.

---

phonic festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ, made possible through a gift from the Carnegie corporation to the orchestra, has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B-minor Mass August 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire festival chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire music center which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr Herbert Graf at the center have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others, such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood, are open to public inspection.

Lodgings in the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood are becoming scarcer every day so that music lovers planning to attend any of the concerts are urged to address Stephen Thach of the Berkshire Hills conference staff who is now located at the festival's Stockbridge office. He will be glad to answer inquiries and make reservations for lodgings.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 7 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUL 7 - 1940

Symphony School Opens Tomorrow

Tomorrow the Boston Symphony orchestra will inaugurate a project such as neither this orchestra in its 59 years nor any other symphony orchestra has ever undertaken—a large sized school for interpretation through practice and performance. More than 300 students will assemble tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, for the opening exercises. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, as the director of the new Berkshire music center, will address the school in its first assemblage.

There will be plentiful activity this week at Tanglewood, the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge which was presented to the orchestra and where it gives its annual Berkshire symphonic festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work. These, together with the meadows, trees and peaceful vistas which surround them, will make an inspiring setting for the pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra and its great conductor.

Dr Koussevitzky will coach the four pupils in conducting which he has accepted, while others will have the privilege of observation. The Institute orchestra of 60 musicians (all of a high standard of ability) will begin to work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copeland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "institute."

The remainder, which comprises more than 200, is called the "academy," and consists of pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra. The festival chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's Mass in B minor. The Mass will be a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic festival which the Boston Symphony orchestra will give at Tanglewood from August 1-18, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school. The orchestra of the academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes. There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell; and a group class in folk dancing. Lectures by Serge Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and include particular study of music being played by the school orchestras, as well as the repertory of the festival.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
JUL 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Set For Week Ends In August

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held this year during the first three week ends in August. The program covers nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, beginning August 1 and terminating August 18 Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has become an important feature of the summer social life of New England, according to James R. Wiley, manager of the American Express Travel Service. The attendance has grown from year to year so that now one must make reservations well invance in the resort hotels in the near-by communities.

A list of these hotels may be found in the offices of the American Express.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Sunday Journal & American
JUL 7 - 1940

Music Fete in Berkshires

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three weekends in August. The program covers nine concerts, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning August 1st and terminating on the 18th. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood near Lenox, Massachusetts, has become an important annual feature of the Summer social life of New England, reports Douglas Malcolm of the American Express Travel Service. The attendance has grown from year to year so that now one must make reservations well in advance in the resort hotels in the nearby communities.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
SUNDAY COURIER
JUL 7 - 1940

Local Persons Plan To Attend Music Festival

Boston Symphony orchestra will open it[illegible]for music lovers tomorrow morning on "Tanglewood" estate, presented to the orchestra for its annual Berkshire Symphonic festival. More than 300 students, anxious to learn music interpretation through practice and performance, will be present at the opening exercises at which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, as director of the new Berkshire Music center, will deliver the opening address.

The festival chorus, chosen from this group, will learn Bach's "B minor Mass" under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. The mass will hold a place on the program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival during the first three weeks in August.

Many local people have already placed reservations for this festival. They include: John Kuhn, Mr. and Mrs. Harry V. Welsh, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Schoonmaker, Mr. and Mrs. Eric DeCordova, Earle Foote, Miss Rebecca Rider, Mrs. A. L. Rider, and Miss Marie Tschudin. Further reservations are being received by Mr. DeCordova and Miss Rider.

Works by the composers Beethoven, Schumann, Sibelius, Schubert, Brahms, Prokofieff, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Roy Harris will be heard during the opening week. A Tschaikovsky festival celebrating the 100th anniversary of the composers' birth will occupy the second week with Arthur Rodzinski conducting one program, and Albert Spaulding, violinist, as soloist at another.

Miss Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will appear with the orchestra during its third festival week. The program will include works by Brahms, Haydn, Wagner, Hindemith and Bach's "B minor Mass."

The Berkshire Music festival will coincide with the final weeks of the "Tanglewood" school. Lectures by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum.

Four students will receive special instruction in conducting from Dr. Koussevitsky while others will have the privilege of looking on. The institute orchestra of 60 musicians will work upon their programs while members of the Boston Symphony orchestra coach or play beside them in performance.

Operatic instruction will be given by Dr. Herbert Graf, while Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils in advanced composition on the basis of scores submitted. These activities, exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the "Institute," the remaining 200 comprising what is known as "Academy."

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 7 - 1940

Attend Berkshire Center

THE three Clevelanders directing the Akron opera project are taking an active part this summer in the Berkshire music center, unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

Boris Goldovsky, director of the Akron guild and head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, will be one of the assistants to Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire center's faculty.

Carabella Johnson, stage director for the Akron guild, also is at the center this summer assisting Goldovsky in staging operas. Maurice Goldman, associate conductor and opera coach of the Akron guild, will work under Koussevitzky on a conducting scholarship recently granted him by the Boston orchestra.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, will attend the summer school and study under Koussevitzky and about 20 members of the Boston orchestra.

The Berkshire center will be divided into two sections, an institute for advanced study and an academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under the direct supervision of Koussevitzky; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the famous conductor and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera association, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, both noted composers.

The academy will have no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The academy chorus will study under G. Walter Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard university music department, and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire festival concerts.

The course is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals of the Boston orchestra at its summer home in Tanglewood are open to the students and it is felt that these will provide the pupils with a rare opportunity for close observation of a great orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
JUL 8 - 1940

Concerts at Tanglewood; Williams Music Camp

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., is more than half filled with reservations for the nine concerts to be given the first three week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

As an added accommodation to music lovers coming from great distances, the Festival has arranged with the Berkshire Hills Conference to handle requests for information about lodgings. Stephen Thach of the Conference office has opened his headquarters at the Festival office in Stockbridge now to take care of inquiries. This arrangement was made to list all hotels, inns and private homes open for guests so that music lovers may be taken care of within a reasonable distance of Tanglewood.

Reservations made to date show the great preference for the first series of concerts opening Aug. 1 with the second series opening Aug. 8 not far behind. Third choice by only a slight difference is the third series opening Aug. 15. Inquiries about tickets should be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 7 - 1940

Center in Berkshires Will Open Tomorrow

Koussevitzky Gives Address at First Meeting

The Berkshire Music Center, associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will h[illegible]ning exercises tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky, as director of the center, will address the school in its first meeting.

Dr. Koussevitzky has accepted pupils for his conducting course. Other students may attend his classes as observers. The Institute Orchestra, of sixty qualified musicians, will begin work upon its first program this week under the coaching of Boston Symphony players. Herbert Graf will begin his classes in opera interpretation, and Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will each teach a few advanced pupils.

The larger division of the center, known, as the academy, for students who are not necessarily planning professional careers, will pursue activities including choral rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival performance on Bach's B minor Mass in August, work in an amateur orchestra under Malcolm Holmes, classes in choral conducting and lecture series on a wide variety of subjects. The last three weeks of the school coincide with the Boston Symphony's annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 7 - 1940

Tulsan Awarded Scholarship in Audition Tests

It Is the Third Won by Robert Weatherly in East

Robert Weatherly, young trumpeter, and son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Weatherly, 1731 South Florence place, has been awarded a scholarship for the season at the Berkshire Music center in Massachusetts. On July 4 he left Tulsa where he has been spending a few weeks with his parents.

Weatherly's scholarship includes full tuition and living expenses for the season. He will play in the famous Berkshire Music center orchestra which is under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This orchestra, composed of professional players chosen from the entire United States, is now in its sixth season and has become known as one of the finest orchestras in the country not operated on a strictly professional basis.

Weatherly was given a position in this orchestra as a result of an audition which he took in New York City while attending the Julliard School of Music there this past year.

In addition to the Berkshire award, Weatherly also holds two scholarships for the coming school year, one at the Julliard School of Music and one at Columbia university, both of New York City.

45

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUL 7 - 1940

Stockbridge Festival Offers Nine Concerts By Boston Symphony

Foremost Musical Program of Summer Season Increases Scope This Year

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Unrivalled in artistic standard and foremost of the nation's summer musical activities is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to be held during the first three weeks of August on the orchestra's estate, "Tanglewood," at Stockbridge, Mass.

Ever since their inauguration seven years ago these annual symphonic occasions have won the admiration of the music world and attracted thousands of patrons from all parts of the country.

In attending these significant concerts, held amid scenic surroundings, one may find surcease from world cares by listening to impressive performance by the world's number one orchestra of enduring music.

Mr. Lewando

Due to the tremendous interest that in preceding years had been aroused and continues apace, and in response to insistent demand, the number of concerts to be given this summer now totals nine, an increase of three.

The first series of concerts will be offered Aug. 1, 3 and 4. The initial program comprises the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. The second list embraces Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture; the Richard Strauss tone poem "Don Quixote" with the cello and viola solos taken by Gregor Piatigorsky and Jean Lefranc, respectively; Roy Harris' 3rd symphony; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun"; and excerpts from the 2nd suite of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

The third program consists of Mozart's E-flat symphony; Stravinsky's "Capriccio" for piano and orchestra which enlists the services of Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; and Brahms' 2nd symphony.

* * *

The B series of concerts will take place Aug. 8, 10 and 11.

The first of these will bring to performance Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and the violin concerto with Albert Spalding as soloist; and Tschaikowsky's 6th ("Pathetique") symphony.

The second concert of the B series will feature Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and 4th symphony, and Tschaikowsky's 4th symphony. The third event in this group will program Beethoven's 6th and Tschaikowsky's 5th symphonies.

The final three concerts—the C series—are listed for Aug. 15, 17 and 18. The opening program will comprise Bach's B-minor Mass, to be given in two parts, the first beginning at 7 p. m., the second at 9:30 p. m. on Aug. 15. The Berkshire Festival Choral will assist. The soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann and Viola Silva, sopranos; William Hain, tenor; and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The instrumental solos will be played by Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'Amore; William Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; and Erwin Bodky, harpsichord.

* * *

The 8th concert will program Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony"; Hindemith's symphony "Mathias the Painter"; vocal works of Mozart and Beethoven in which Dorothy Maynor will be soprano soloist, Faure's suite "Pelleas et Melisande"; and Respighi's "The Pines of Rome."

The final program on Aug. 18 will contain three symphonies: Haydn's No. 88 in G-major; the one-movement 7th of Sibelius and the last of Brahms.

Excepting the Bach Mass performance the night concerts will begin promptly at 8:30 and the Sunday events at 3:30 p. m.

Thanks to the Carnegie Corporation's $12,000 grant, a fine organ has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for use in the Berkshires.

Built by the Aeolian-Skinner Co. whose president designed the instrument, the new organ will be semi-concealed with its delicate mechanism adequately guarded against deterioration by weather conditions. The organ is designed to resemble in tonal scheme the baroque period instrument which the same company built to restore the type of organ J. S. Bach used. This organ stands in the Germanic Museum of Harvard University.

* * *

The National Symphony Orchestra of Washington will open an eight-week season of "sunset symphonies" at the Potomac Water Gate tomorrow under the direction of Dr. Hans Kindler.

The season will comprise a production of "Faust," another grand opera yet to be chosen and the Gilbert-Sullivan "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "Pirates of Penzance." In "Faust," to be produced by Fortune Gallo, the role of Marguerite will be sung by Hilda Burke, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Soloists during the season will include Kirsten Flagstad and Jessica Dragonette. In addition to Dr. Kindler, the orchestra will be led at various times by Frank Black, Rudolph Ganz, Edwin McArthur, Charles O'Connell, Antonia Brico, Kurt Hetzel and Alexander Block.

This Clipping From LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUL 8 - 1940

Music Students Gather At Berkshire Center

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS. — The new Berkshire Music Center opens today near Stockbridge where some 300 students will "live and work in music." They will be under the guidance of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The summer musical center will be open for six weeks at the scene of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Berkshire Music Center was made possible by a $60,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The newly founded Berkshire Music Center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players forming part of the faculty, will open in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow for a six-week term.

About 325 students, chosen from 600 applicants, are enrolled at the school of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director.

The Center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study, and the Academy, or general school. The Institute comprises a class in orchesral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal supervision; an orchestra of skilled players, who will study and perform under the Boston Symphony leader and who will be coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics to be taught by Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and a class in advanced composition. The latter will be directed by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, noted composers.

* * *

There are no formal entrance requirements to the Academy and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The Academy Chorus will study with G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of Harvard University music department and will assist in performances in August of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performances and thus will supple- [illegible] rather than duplicate the [illegible]ing available in established [illegible] schools.

[illegible]earsals and concerts of the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra at its [illegible] home in "Tanglewood" near [illegible], Mass., are free to the [illegible] it is felt that these [illegible] the public with a rare [illegible] close observation of

---

MUSIC

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1940.

MUSIC OF THE TIMES:

NEW MUSIC CENTER

Impressive Response to Koussevitzky's Realization of Lifelong Purpose

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Berkshire Music Center, which represents a long-cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, has its opening exercises tomorrow at Tanglewood, which is also the home of the three weeks' season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given by Dr. Kousevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August. The institutions are closely related.

A general outline of the principal activities of the Center appears in another column. In recent months the public has been acquainted with the fundamental aims and methods of study to be followed there. It is a singular fact that repeated efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky to establish such a Center in past years were defeated in Europe by the outbreak of war in 1914, and have been confronted here by various difficulties, foreseen and unforeseen, until this year of 1940. At this moment it is clearer than ever before that America must carry forward the banners of culture and idealism which have all but faded from sight in desperate Europe. In this year of catastrophe and menace the Music Center opens its doors, and it is a happy omen. The time may well be approaching when evil will have to be resisted with other weapons than those of art, but it is not illogical to believe that if art had been genuinely a part of the living and thought of modern Europe, if it had been served with the faith and enthusiasm which ennoble humanity and create beauty, we might be witnessing something else than the fatal, senseless and all-devouring folly which is rampant overseas. In the meantime one of the most potent antidotes to the spirit which has poisoned modern civilization is the project at Tanglewood.

* * *

THE need of such an institution conceived in the spirit and with the purposes of the Berkshire Music Center is shown by the astonishing response, which is nation-wide, to the unassuming and occasional announcements of its existence which have appeared in the press. Twice the number of students who could be accommodated have applied for entrance, but 350 are the utmost limit that the director and the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center believe can be properly trained.

This is a picked student body, who come with high records of study and accomplishment as recommendations. There are students from every part and nearly every State of the nation. The objectives they pursue neither rival nor conflict with those entertained by other musical institutions of note.

It is not routine music study or the development of individual virtuosity which the Berkshire Music Center endeavors to develop. The classes are in two great divisions, the highest for the specially gifted post-graduate worker who wishes to attain the highest standards of style and interpretation in performance; the lower class consisting of those of less signal endowments, who wish to become acquainted, under excellent auspices and able teaching, with the literature of music and the broad principles of the art.

* * *

THUS in the upper school Dr. Koussevitzky takes four pupils to whom he gives individual training in conducting, while others in the class listen and observe. Review work in musical theory is available, but not courses of study in a subject which requires for its genuine mastery not only months but years of intensive application. But review work in these fields is provided for, and composition in advanced as well as more elementary forms is taught by Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland. The Center has not only its special classes in conducting: there are rehearsals and performances of an orchestra of selected players, who combine forces with their instructors, first-desk men of the Boston Symphony, in the practice of finished symphonic interpretation. One of the methods followed in the classes will be for the student to play a first part in an ensemble and the musician who instructs him a second. There will be much ensemble performance, under skilled guidance, by small groups, and groups of performers of the lower school will be selected and combined according to their capabilities in performance. In the same way the practice of choral singing and conducting will be directed by G. Wallace Woodworth and his associates. This precedes the performance by the best singers of the Center, in combination with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of Bach's B minor Mass as a special program of the Symphonic Festival which begins in August. Those who study music at the Music Center will also play it. Those who play it will study it, which does not always follow.

* * *

FOR the two things are not necessarily synonymous. "What we want to give our students," said Dr. Koussevitzky in a speech he made on the subject some months ago at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, "is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts and carry farther their knowledge gained during years of study with the music schools and conservatories. Our problem is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer."

The Center as it develops will expand the scope of its activities. To the choral and instrumental classes this first season will be added the classes in dramatic musical interpretation of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Study of classic drama, development of the ballet and related subjects will be added to the curriculum as their necessity and value are made manifest in the light of experience.

* * *

THE Center is not conceived as exclusively devoted to music. It is to be a focus of music and related arts. These arts must be recognized as essential to the culture of today and the ideas of a modern society. For art should be fundamentally related to living. The gulf between the artist and the common life and thought of his community, which did not exist in ancient societies, is a development, or a loss of direction, which has been extremely injurious to civilization. To bridge that gulf is a task to which the musician, master or student, may well dedicate himself. Announcement of any such dedication is of course absent from the catalogue or the press emanations of the Berkshire Music Center. But the ideal is implicit in its offerings, and in the nature of Koussevitzky's activities since he came to America sixteen years ago as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the moment that he undertook the musical direction of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—and, as we have seen, before—he had this grander project in mind. Of the objectives of the Center he has finely said, "we want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." That sentiment should hold true for every servant of music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FREMONT, O.
News Messenger
JUL 8 - 1940

BOWLUS TO ATTEND BERKSHIRE CENTER

Robert E. Bowlus, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Bowlus, of 939 Napoleon street, who is music master at the Chicago Latin school for boys, has left to spend the summer studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival after spending several days with his parents in Fremont. The Boston Symphony, under its world-famous conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will be there for the summer.

Admission to the school is granted only to those who have met certain requirements and passed a rigid examination. Mr. Bowlus was fortunate enough to be among the first of the few who were accepted from the Chicago area. Besides being an instructor at the Chicago school, he is music director at the Bethel Lutheran church, a large Norwegian church in the northwest section of the city, where he conducts a choir of 60 voices and a male chorus of 25 voices.

145

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUL 7 - 1940

Stockbridge Festival Offers Nine Concerts By Boston Symphony

Foremost Musical Program of Summer Season Increases Scope This Year

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Unrivalled in artistic standard and foremost of the nation's summer musical activities is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevit latter will be directed by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, noted composers.

* * *

There are no formal entrance requirements to the Academy and the main part of its work will include singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The Academy Chorus will study with G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of Harvard University music department and will assist in performances in August of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performances and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the ing available in established schools.

earsals and concerts of the Symphony Orchestra at its home in "Tanglewood" near e, Mass., are free to the is felt that these the public with a rare close observation o be sung by Hilda Burke, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Soloists during the season will include Kirsten Flagstad and Jessica Dragonette. In addition to Dr. Kindler, the orchestra will be led at various times by Frank Black, Rudolph Ganz, Edwin McArthur, Charles O'Connell, Antonia Brico, Kurt Hetzel and Alexander Block.

MUSIC THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1940.

C OF THE TIMES

USIC CENTER

onse to Koussevitzky's of Lifelong Purpose

edge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret; to stir their imagination to new heights and new depths, because imagination evokes in the interpreter the right intuition and emotions to conceive the inner meaning of the score and to reveal the emotion of the composer."

The Center as it develops will expand the scope of its activities. To the choral and instrumental classes this first season will be added the classes in dramatic musical interpretation of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Study of classic drama, development of the ballet and related subjects will be added to the curriculum as their necessity and value are made manifest in the light of experience.

* * *

THE Center is not conceived as exclusively devoted to music. It is to be a focus of music and related arts. These arts must be recognized as essential to the culture of today and the ideas of a modern society. For art should be fundamentally related to living. The gulf between the artist and the common life and thought of his community, which did not exist in ancient societies, is a development, or a loss of direction, which has been extremely injurious to civilization. To bridge that gulf is a task to which the musician, master or student, may well dedicate himself. Announcement of any such dedication is of course absent from the catalogue or the press emanations of the Berkshire Music Center. But the ideal is implicit in its offerings, and in the nature of Koussevitzky's activities since he came to America sixteen years ago as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the moment that he undertook the musical direction of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—and, as we have seen, before—he had this grander project in mind. Of the objectives of the Center he has finely said, "we want to be modest in our promises, but by no means do we want to be modest in our aspirations." That sentiment should hold true for every servant of music.

This Clipping From
LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUL 8 - 1940

Music Students Gather At Berkshire Center

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS. — The new Berkshire Music Center opens today near Stockbridge where some 300 students will "live and work in music." They will be under the guidance of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The summer musical center will be open for six weeks at the scene of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Berkshire Music Center was made possible by a $60,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAVANNAH, GA.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center Opens

Stockbridge, Mass., July 8—New Berkshire Music center opens today near Stockbridge where some 300 students will "live and work in music." They will be under the guidance of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The summer musical center will be open for six weeks at the scene of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 9 - 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER OPENS WITH 425 STUDENTS

Lenox, July 9—Another step in the developments of Tanglewood as a great American center of music was taken yesterday afternoon with the formal opening of the new school of 425 registered students directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Exercises were held in the music shed with Ernest B. Dane, chairman of Boston symphony trustees, presiding.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the new school, read a telegram from President and Mrs. Roosevelt expressing "Hearty wishes for great success."

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts also wired a message.

THIS CLIPPING FROM FREMONT, O.
News Messenger
JUL 8 - 1940

BOWLUS TO ATTEND BERKSHIRE CENTER

Robert E. Bowlus, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Bowlus, of 939 Napoleon street, who is music master at the Chicago Latin school for boys, has left to spend the summer studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival after spending several days with his parents in Fremont. The Boston Symphony, under its world-famous conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will be there for the summer.

Admission to the school is granted only to those who have met certain requirements and passed a rigid examination. Mr. Bowlus was fortunate enough to be among the first of the few who were accepted from the Chicago area. Besides being an instructor at the Chicago school, he is music director at the Bethel Lutheran church, a large Norwegian church in the northwest section of the city, where he conducts a choir of 60 voices and a male chorus of 25 voices.

46

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUL 7 - 1940

From bomb-proof shelters constructed deep in the earth "somewhere in England" official spokesmen of Britain will continue to give nightly short-wave talks to America even if the attempted invasion of Britain should begin Actually the programs—"Britain Speaks"—are to be extended, beginning today.

Anti-aircraft battery crews, supported by men in sand-bagged machine-gun nests, scan the skies close to the microphone locations. Designed to be sound-proof, the war-time "studios," protected by thick layers of reinforced concrete will, it is hoped, withstand the heaviest calibre bombs. The overhead artillery can go into action without disturbing the speaker or engineers beneath.

There are different types of accommodation for speakers according to the conditions prevailing at the time. Sometimes an air-raid warning sounds just as a scheduled broadcast to America is about to begin. Studios are chosen accordingly.

The "Britain Speaks" series, which has been heard in this country at 9:00 o'clock, will be given at 8:30 p. m. EDST. Ministers turning England into an island fortress, will come to the microphone. Their talks will each last fifteen minutes, and be followed by an entertainment period featuring American stage and motion picture stars now in Great Britain. This continues until the beginning of the news summary and commentary at nine o'clock.

The programs are heard on both 9.58 and 11.75 megacycles (31 and 25 metres) from GSC and GSD.

* * *

The Polish American Civic League in a letter to this column referring to the elimination of foreign languages by KQV and WWSW, says: "We have been told by complainants that your column in the Pittsburgh Press is the chief cause for this policy being adopted by the stations. We are at a loss trying to understand your point of view. We shall appreciate information pertaining to your stand."

We are in no way responsible for the stations' action, But:

We believe in One Flag—the American Flag—and one language, the language spoken by Americans.

We believe that foreign-born Americans serve themselves best by speaking the language of the land which they have adopted as their land. No one speaking a language everyone can understand need worry about his neighbor suspecting him of being anything but pro-America.

* * *

U. S. Solicitor General Francis Biddle goes before a Columbia Broadcasting System microphone tonight at 10:30 to tell the nation about the new Alien Registration Law recently signed by President Roosevelt. He will be heard over WJAS.

* * *

The supremacy of spiritual forces and the law of moral retribution will be treated by Rev. George L. Glunt, D. D., pastor of the Oakland Presbyterian Church, on the Religious Message program over KDKA this morning at 9:30. The title of Rev. Glunt's sermon will be "Things Which Cannot Be Shaken."

* * *

"Slapsie" Maxie Rosenbloom, comedian on the Rudy Vallee show, will make a guest appearance on Bill Stern's "Sports Newsreel of the Air" on KDKA at 9:45 tonight.

* * *

Although suffering from a heavy cold which skyrocketed his temperature to 102 degrees and kept it there for three days, Kay Kyser missed not a single sustaining CBS broadcast from Santa Catalina during his illness. He also presented his "College of Musical Knowledge" during the spell, from which he has now completely recovered.

A plaque bearing the inscription, "To the Nation's No. 1 Show Band," was delivered to Kay at Hollywood's NBC. Sent by Fordham University, it bore the school seal and was the result of a popularity poll conducted there.

* * *

MARY MARTHA BRINEY

One of the chosen few, Mary Martha Briney, KDKA and concert soprano star, will be a member of the opera class that will be a part of the Berkshire Music Center that opens tomorrow at Stockbridge, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When she auditioned for entrance to the opera class, Mary Martha won the admiration of Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who heads the Center's opera division.

Dr. Graf commented heartily on the singer's training, ability, poise and stage presence. Miss Briney, who will attend the six-weeks course at the Center, will study several operatic roles and participate in their dramatic expression.

* * *

Networks lost $25,000 in commercial pay checks while the GOP convention was on the air. Many studio shows went on in spite of the convention. Horace Heidt's sponsors even put in the usual phone call and found no one at home.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JUL 9 - 1940

MUSIC CENTER IS OPENED

27-Year-Old Dream of Koussevitzky Becomes a Reality

Stockbridge, Mass., July 9.—With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire symphonic festival, which will be staged again next month on the same grounds.

As a benediction there was the first performance of an Alleluia written especially for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 8 - 1940

Music:

Today Marks New Chapter In Boston Symphony History

By Carl E. Lindstrom

Today is the day. Up to Tanglewood they are opening the Berkshire Music Center. I had hoped to be able to give you a first hand account of the exercises but decided to save my truancy from the office until the actual concerts begin, this year occupying three weekends in August. Suffice that this is likely to be an historical date for Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, since all signs point to a successful establishment of as ambitious and widely horizoned a music project as the country has seen in a generation.

More than 300 students, carefully chosen from twice as many applicants, are being schooled in composition, orchestral playing, conducting and operatic interpretation by masters in all these fields. This academy will proceed with intensive training for the duration of July and then the concerts themselves will culminate the proceedings with a public participation which bids fair to exceed that of any previous year.

However, we'll go into all that later. This is just to say that now is the time to be thinking about Tanglewood. All reports indicate an active ticket sale and it would be well to get your reservations in early.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
JUL 9 - 1940

NEW BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER OPENED IN MASS.

Celebrities at Dedication of School for Talented Musicians

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 8-AP-The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Berkshire music center—a Summer school for promising young conductors, composers and players—was opened today at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire symphonic festivals.

The dedicatory program, highlighted by a welcoming address by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, included a number for chorus written for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia.

The new Tanglewood organ, a gift of the Carnegie Foundation, was given its first performance b E. Power Biggs, the Symphony o

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
JUL 8 - 1940

Opens School For Symphony

Boston Orchestra Will Launch Classes Today for 300 in Berkshires.

Today the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a project such as neither this orchestra in its 59 years of existence nor any other symphony orchestra has ever undertaken—a large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance. More than 300 students will assemble this afternoon at "Tanglewood," the orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, for the opening exercises. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as the director of the new Berkshire Music Center, will address the school in its first assemblage.

There will be plentiful activity this week at "Tanglewood," the estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, which was presented to the orchestra and where it gives its annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The buildings have been transformed for studio and class work. These, together with the meadows, trees and peaceful vistas which surround them, will make an inspiring setting for the pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its great conductor.

Dr. Koussevitzky will coach the four pupils in conducting which he has accepted, while others will have the privilege of observation. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians (all of a high standard of ability) will begin to work upon their first program, while members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all of the principals, coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will coach a class in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few advanced pupils in composition on the merits of scores submitted. These activities, all exacting a high degree of skill and training, constitute the department of the school known as the "Institute."

The remainder, which comprises more than 200 is called the "Academy," and consists of pupils without necessarily professional intentions who wish to deepen their experience of music by performance of it in conjunction with the musicians of a great orchestra. The Festival Chorus will prepare, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, Bach's Mass in B minor.

The Mass will be a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at "Tanglewood" from August 1 to 18, coinciding with the last three weeks of the school.

The orchestra of the Academy, an amateur group, will be led by Malcolm Holmes. There will be classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; lectures on music in the schools by Howard Abell; and a group class in folk dancing. Lectures by Serge Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others will be a regular part of the school curriculum, and include particular study of music being played by the school orchestra, as well as the repertory of the festival.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
JUL 9 - 1940

Off the Dial . . .

Lieutenant Commander Henry L. Bixby, Sr., United States navy (retired)—who was WCAE's chief engineer until three years ago—has been appointed head of the defense commission at Marblehead, Mass.

He is the father of "Gif" Bixby, who is following in his dad's footsteps by working as an operator at WCAE.

A Southern gal without an accent is Betty Cook, coloratura soprano, who pinch-hits for Mary Martha Briney on Maurice Spitalny's Tap Time program this summer.

Miss Briney is studying under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, at the Berkshire Music Center, Stockbridge, Mass.

Hm! That makes two items about Massachusetts. Must have been the beans we et for lunch.

James Petrillo, music's No. 1 muscle man, is finding the going pretty tough in his battle with the networks over the dance band ban.

For one thing, the name bands in the night spots don't like giving up their remote control shots at the networks. For another thing, a poll in New York reveals that audiences there aren't missing the bands as much as could have been expected.

As a matter of fact, they're beginning to like the change from the old grind of tune and croon.

Just to change the tempo, we'd like to harp once again on our current obsession—which is to persuade Kenneth L. Watt and Raymond Paige to list "The Ballad of Americans" on the Americana program.

And the advantages of having Paul Robeson for narrator would be more than merely musical.

Johnny Long leaves Pittsburgh for Wildwood, N. J., and a Saturday opening—and you'll probably hear him over the Mutual network on WCAE, unless the AFM ban should tighten up on Mutual to a greater extent than it has.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 9 - 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTRE

The Berkshire Music Centre began its six week program yesterday. It sounds like a grand and glorious program of hard work and fun—or, if you prefer, pure enjoyment—as all good musical programs should be.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's great leader, will be the presiding genius. Some of the outstanding musicians in this country will instruct students in the advanced school, and what appears to be an equally able staff will guide the amateurs.

Those who intend to make music their life work will receive intensive instruction; those who just play or sing or listen for their own, or the family's, entertainment will be taught fuller appreciation.

In the ideal setting of "Tanglewood" they will associate with the men and women who are helping to make the United States the music centre of the world, and their summer's experience will directly and indirectly enrich the entire country.

For they will return from "Tanglewood" to hundreds of different communities to share their knowledge and delight. Great music is already coming out of this and similar enterprises, and inevitably a greater and more united America.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 9 - 1940

John W. Stevens, son of Dr. and Mrs. H. W. Stevens of Chestnut avenue, is attending the Berkshire Music Center, a summer music school conducted by the Boston Symphony orchestra, at "Tanglewood" in Lenox, Mass.

417

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 8- 1940

Koussevitzky Opens School At Tanglewood

Noted Conductor Stresses Meaning Of Music Center

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country at the opening of the school this afternoon, emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity; all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a music center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. He again returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, President of the Board of Trustees of the orchestra, who acted as chairman. Albert Spalding, noted violinist, welcomed the new school as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community.

There was an address by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty at the Music Center. Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the orchestra, spoke in acknowledgement of the generous grant of the Rockefeller Foundation, the fine organ given by the Carnegie Foundation and the scholarships donated by the Juilliard Foundation, the President of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

The Festival Chorus sang a dedicatory piece which was composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. The chorus of 200 voices was led by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will begin rehearsals tomorrow on Bach's B Minor Mass, scheduled for performance August 17.

The exercises opened as E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony, played the new organ for the first time. A reception followed the exercises in the gardens of Tanglewood, where the student body and invited guests met the faculty.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM YORK, PA.
DISPATCH
JUL 9 - 1940

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

"Dream" of Music Center Has Become A Reality

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 9—(AP)—With the formal opening of the Berkshire music center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire symphonic festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

The dream began in 1913-1914, Dr. Koussevitzky explained late yesterday to an audience of a thousand in the flat-iron-shaped music shed, when he organized what he felt would become one of the great schools of music in a residential district of Moscow.

But the war, and then the Russian revolution came, and after that he came to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony. So it was not until 1929 that he tried again; this time in White Plains, N. Y.

The depression checked off that attempt. Now, in another war year, the center is an actuality due to efforts of the board of trustees and the Boston Symphony, the Berkshire symphonic festival, and a faculty of Americans and Europeans which includes such names as Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes, Herbert Gray, Abram Chasins and others—not to mention all the principals of the Boston Symphony.

The school accepted half the applicants, George E. Judd, manager of the symphony, said. Of the 340 chosen, a third are professionals studying definitely for musical careers, and the remainder is made up of amateurs who want to spend six weeks in contact with great music.

The last three weeks of the school overlap the three weeks of the Berkshire symphonic festival, the first program of which is set for Aug. 1. Opening exercises included talks by Ernest D. Dane, Dr. Koussevitzky, Reginald C. Foster and Downes.

As a benediction there was the first performance of an "Alleluiia" written especially for the occasion by Randall Thompson.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 9 - 1940

This Clipping From LONG BEACH, CAL.
PRESS TELEGRAM
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPI
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECOR
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 8 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center Is Opened At Tanglewood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Conductor, ~~Sees Dream~~ of 27 Years Ago Realized as 350 Students Begin Study of Music in Institute and Academy at Stockbridge Home of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Today—Hope for Humanity While Culture and Art Exist, He Says.

Opens School

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor who opened new Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood today.

About 350 students of music, some with professional aspirations, others amateurs, gathered this afternoon in the music shed at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's estate in Stockbridge, for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center.

The new school, which will continue through the Berkshire Symphonic festival from Aug. 1 through 18 offers an opportunity, unique in this country, for music lovers to study and perform with members of one of the country's leading symphony orchestras and to hear lectures by leading authorities on music.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the music center, opened his address to the students today by emphasizing the significance of such a music center in America at this time, stating that "so long as culture and art exist, there is hope for humanity." He told his students, "if there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the new world."

The idea of such a center has been in his mind, Dr. Koussevitzky said, since 1913, when he was in Moscow. The opportunity for its establishment finally arrived with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky's plan was enthusiastically received by the trustees of the Boston orchestra, whose president, Ernest B. Dane, was chairman of the opening exercises.

Other speakers were Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and a member of the faculty, Albert Spalding, noted violinist and trustee of the Festival, and Reginald C. Foster, a trustee of the orchestra, who expressed appreciation of a grant by the Rockefeller foundation, the organ presented by the Carnegie foundation, and scholarships donated by the Juillard foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

A dedicatory piece composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, who will be a guest lecturer at the school, was sung by the Festival chorus, led by G. Wallace Woodworth. The new organ was played for the first time by E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra.

The school will be organized in two divisions, an "institute" for advanced pupils, and an "academy" for others, who wish simply to deepen their own appreciation and experience of music through the opportunities afforded by the school.

Four of the institute pupils will study conducting with Dr. Koussevitzky, while others will be allowed to observe. Coached by members of the Boston orchestra, the 60-piece institute orchestra will begin work on its first program. Dr. Herbert Graf will conduct a class in operatic interpretation, while a few advanced pupils in composition will study with Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith.

Students of the academy will also have their orchestra, directed by Malcolm Holmes, while members of the Festival chorus will immediately begin rehearsals on Bach's B minor mass, which will be performed at the Festival concert Aug. 17. Mr. Woodworth will conduct classes in choral conducting, and Howard Abell will lecture on music in schools. A class in folk dancing will be organized. Lecturers will include Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Downes, Archibald T. Davidson, Carlton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus B. Danzig and others.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEBANON, PA.
NEWS
JUL 10 1940

HIS CLIPPING FROM EW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
JUL 10 1940

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 9 - 1940

HIS CLIPPING FROM ORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
JUL 10 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 10 1940

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
OURNAL EVERY EVENIN
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
JUL 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
JUL 11 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ERIE, PA.
SPATCH-HERALD
JUL 21 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 9 - 1940

Music in the New World

"If there ever was a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

These were the words of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he ~~unfolded his~~ dream of a music center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Addressing the 350 students assembled for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Koussevitzky, moved by the tragedy of Europe, explained his idea of "working and living with music," an idea which was on the verge of fulfillment in Moscow when the World War broke out in 1914. He brought his dream to America and now it is about to come true.

"So long as culture and art exist," he declared, "there is hope for humanity; and all those who believe in the values of inheritance of culture and art, should stand in the front rank. If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the New World. Today the ground is set and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Appropriately, the exercises closed with the first verse of America and there was a glow on the face of every participant when he sang:

From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

There have been thrilling moments in the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It was an achievement to launch the Festival at the Hanna farm in 1934 in face of apathy if not outright antagonism. It was a great moment when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in three concerts at Holmwood in 1936. Their coming set the stage for the magnificent gift of Tanglewood from Mrs. Gorham Brooks and this gift in turn provided for the setting of the dedication of the Berkshire Music Center yesterday.

To be sure the Center is not the Festival; it is a project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But the Festival and the orchestra have become so closely associated in this tremendous Berkshire enterprise, that when we think of one, we think of both. Consequently, everyone who has had anything to do with the promotion, and encouragement of either organization, must have experienced tremendous pride and satisfaction yesterday afternoon.

The Berkshire Music Center, an inseparable part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is launched. Students who have come to Tanglewood with a serious purpose to study under a faculty of eminent musicians, are bound to enrich American culture. Through the Center the Festival will be digging itself into the soil of the community and if the roots are sound they will spread and grow and so will the Center and the Festival.

The second important step in musical development at Tanglewood has been taken. If the weather was prophetic; if the remarkable performance by the Festival Chorus of 200 voices of "Allelulia," composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson was prophetic; if the words of wisdom from Olin Downes, Albert Spalding and Reginald Foster were prophetic, then the Berkshires and America will have reason to feel proud.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HILLSDALE, MICH.
NEWS
JUL 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM LONG BRANCH, N. J.
RECORD
JUL 11 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
Observer Dispatch
JUL 9 - 1940

HIS CLIPPING FROM WACO, TEX.
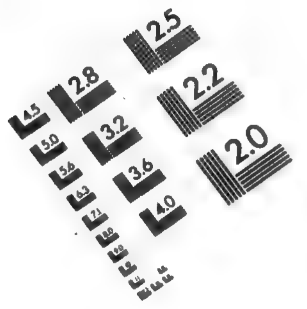
IMES-HERALD
JUL 9 - 1940

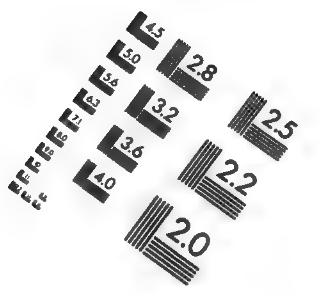
REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

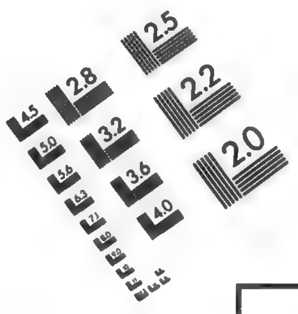
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

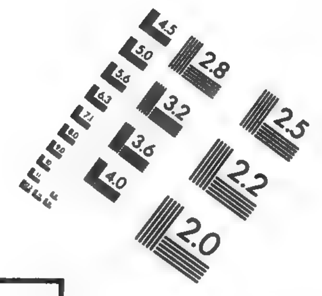
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

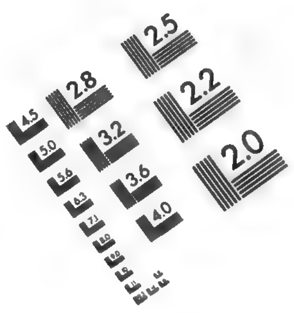


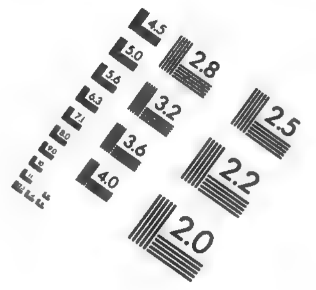


PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





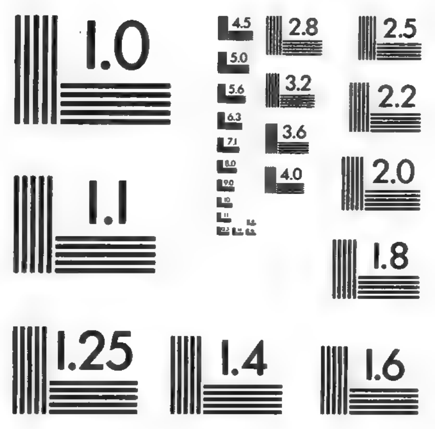




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



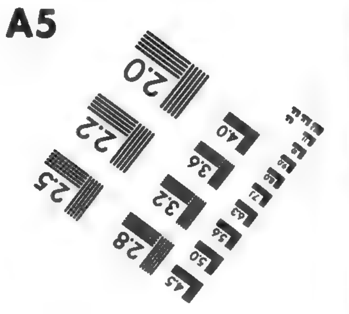
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

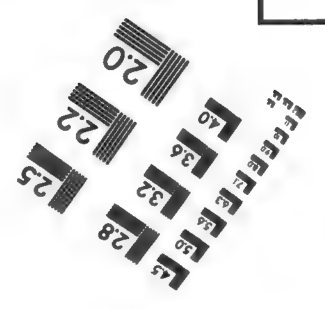
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

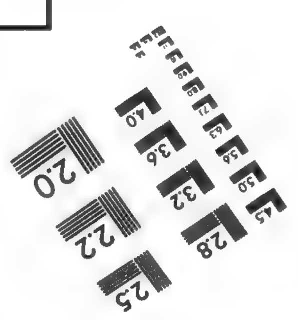
A5



A4

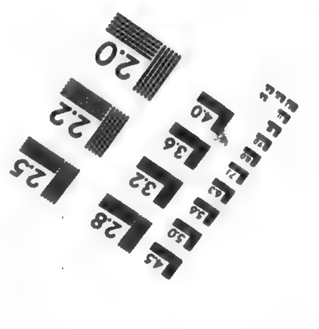
A3

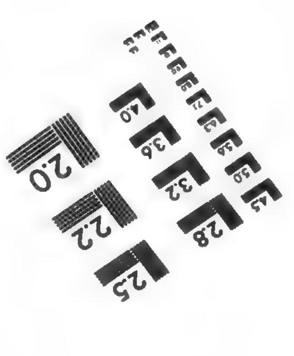




PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119





4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
JUL 8 - 1940

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP AWARDED VIOLIST HAROLD SORIN

Studies With Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony.

HAROLD SORIN.
Given Scholarship.

Harold Sorin, son of Mr. and Mrs Isadore Sorin of 20 Homer street, talented violinist, has been notified that he is the winner of a scholarship from the Berkshire Music Centre in Stockbridge, Mass. He will study under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The privilege of studying under the renowned Koussevitsky is limited to the most advanced players. For the past two years the Brockton young man has been playing with the Juilliard Graduate orchestra under Albert Stoessel and the national orchestra, under Leon Barzin, and with other musical organizations in New York.

Mr. Sorin has received an offer to tour the western States with a quartette, the leader of which is Orlando Borera, concert master of the Havana Symphony and soloist with the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic. However, he has chosen to study with Mr. Koussevitsky.

A graduate of Brockton High school in 1933, where he was first violinist in the school orchestra, he joined the Junior Symphony Orchestra in Boston under Fabien Sevitsky. He was accepted into the first violin section and gave concerts with the orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston.

He demonstrated such marked ability that from the 34 violinists he was awarded the prize of a violin for excellence in playing. He was made a member of the Sevitsky Ensemble, one of Boston's well-known musical organizations.

The scholarship from the Berkshire Centre will cover his tuition and expenses for the summer.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Music Center

Conductor, Boston Orchestra Men, to Teach at School Augmenting Berkshire Festival

BY T. H. PARKER.

Lenox, Mass., July 8.—Another chapter was added to the burgeoning annals of American musical history here today, when for the first time in this country, a noted conductor and orchestra received a large student body.

The scene was Tanglewood, already laureated site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals. The participants were Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra who annually laureate it, the 350 wide-eyed, score-toting students from all over the country who have come to learn from the nation's most illustrious assembly of musicians, a gallery of celebrated virtuosi upon every instrument from the celesta to the harp, and several hundred specially invited guests looking very pleased but somewhat dwarfed under the great roof of Eliel Saarinen's huge, prim shed.

When the speeches had been made, the telegrams read, the Festival Chorus had touched off Randall Thompson's "Allelluia" particularly contrived for the occasion, and libations of tea and cakes had been offered to the melodious and wellbred muses presumably infesting the local air, the Berkshire Music Center was declared officially open and in session.

350 Listen, Learn.

Here each summer promising students may learn the theory, technic and consumption of music from the imperial Dr. Koussevitzky, his chiefest bandsmen and occasionally from a well-thought-of outsider or two. This year 600 had high hopes, but only 350 were accepted for instruction, among them four especially blessed lads whom Dr. Koussevitzky himself will coach in the art of conducting. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals, will coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will unreel the mysteries of operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will instruct in composition.

The remainder, more than 200 (called "the Academy") consisting of pupils without necessarily professional intentions, will have a go at music from various quarters. Many will sing in the Festival Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth. Others will fiddle away in the Academy orchestra, an amateur group. Some will listen to lectures on how to listen to music, and still others will folkdance.

From Hartford this season are Robert Maxwell, Florence Sheehan, Alice Rowley and Elizabeth Northen.

The Doctor's Vision.

The metronomic side of the Berkshire Music Center all seemed very remote except by implication today, however, as the opening formalities went forward. Seated on the lily-flanked stage, in flannels and tub-silks, were members of the faculty and the women-of-Berkshire, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, first president of the Festival and still its chief practical Muse. Dr. Koussevitzky, in summer white, sat in the center of the semi-circle, a little more stooped and a great deal more bronzed than in former seasons. Roundabout were leading spirits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board.

Compared to the resounding orchestral occasions, the event was almost hushed. The summer air was incredibly bright and still, the speakers automatically lowered their voices. Only a chorus of sparrows up under the steel beams chirped brazenly out of time and tune.

Dr. Koussevitzky told the audience that a Music Center had been his dream since 1913 Moscow days, but that until the recent swimming successes of the Festivals, it had not been realizable. "So long as culture and arts exist, there is hope for humanity," he said, looking out at what is now the world's only Salzburg.

Albert Spalding, noted violinist, told of the Florentine philosopher who worked 20 years making one door, and then 20 years more, to make the second, in order to close himself off from the world. Here at the Music Center, the doors of music and its inherent philosophy are open, not shut, to the world.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, stressed the humane purposes of music, it place among the other arts, its mission to add to the spiritual binding of mankind.

BROOKLYN, N.Y
CONEY ISLAND
TIMES
7/20/40

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUL 10 1940

Queens Musicians To Attend Festival

Many Queens residents will attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 1 to 18.

Lyra Nicholas, director of the Douglaston Music Guild, is on the board of advisers of the festival. Douglaston plans to send many visitors to the affair.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a repertory of Tchaikovsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Other music to be heard will include compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert and Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLUSHING, N.Y
BROADWAY-FLUSHING
TIMES
7/18/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLUSHING, N.Y
BAYSIDE TIMES
7/18/40

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

More than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

---

assachusetts. Monday, July 8, 1940.

His Vision Comes True

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Greet Students

Berkshire Music Center Opens at Tanglewood—Koussevitzky, Dane, Downes, Foster, Spalding, Speak

For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke works of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Inception of Idea

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity; and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a music center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the corner-stone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who acted as chairman.

Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school, speaking as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Sym-

Music Center
Continued on Second Page

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky
At Berksh

LENOX, July 8—For the fi time in this country, a famous co ductor and orchestra received large student body as their pup
This afternoon at Tanglewood, t
Boston Symphony Orchestra's
tate in the Berkshire Hills, Ser
Koussevitzky spoke words of w come at the inauguration of t
Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director
the new school, in which he is ta
ing pupils in conducting, address
the 350 students who had co
from many parts of the country, leading music schools and colleg
and were assembled for the fi
time, in the Shed where the Ber
shire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described t inception of the idea, which he h cherished for many years, its pr ent realization, and its hopes f further expansion. He opened address by emphasizing the signi cance of a music center in Ameri
at the present time. "So long culture and art exist," he sa
"there is hope for humanity: a
all those who believe in the valu and inheritance of culture and should stand in the front rank.
there was ever a time to speak
music, it is now, in the New Worl

The conductor told how he fi

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
JUL 8 - 1940

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP AWARDED VIOLIST HAROLD SORIN

Studies With Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony.

HAROLD SORIN.
Given Scholarship.

Harold Sorin, son of Mr. and Mrs Isadore Sorin of 20 Homer street, talented violinist, has been notified that he is the winner of a scholarship from the Berkshire Music Centre in Stockbridge, Mass. He will study under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The privilege of studying under the renowned Koussevitsky is limited to the most advanced players. For the past two years the Brockton young man has been playing with the Juilliard Graduate orchestra under Albert Stoessel and the national orchestra, under Leon Barzin, and with other musical organizations in New York.

Mr. Sorin has received an offer to tour the western States with a quartette, the leader of which is Orlando Borera, concert master of the Havana Symphony and soloist with the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic. However, he has chosen to study with Mr. Koussevitsky.

A graduate of Brockton High school in 1933, where he was first violinist in the school orchestra, he joined the Junior Symphony Orchestra in Boston under Fabien Sevitsky. He was accepted into the first violin section and gave concerts with the orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston.

He demonstrated such marked ability that from the 34 violinists he was awarded the prize of a violin for excellence in playing. He was made a member of the Sevitsky Ensemble, one of Boston's well-known musical organizations.

The scholarship from the Berkshire Centre will cover his tuition and expenses for the summer.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Music Center

Conductor, Boston Orchestra Men, to Teach at School Augmenting Berkshire Festival

BY T. H. PARKER.

Lenox, Mass., July 8.—Another chapter was added to the burgeoning annals of American musical history here today, when for the first time in this country, a noted conductor and orchestra received a large student body.

The scene was Tanglewood, already laureated site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals. The participants were Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra who annually laureate it, the 350 wide-eyed, score-toting students from all over the country who have come to learn from the nation's most illustrious assembly of musicians, a gallery of celebrated virtuosi upon every instrument from the celesta to the harp, and several hundred specially invited guests looking very pleased but somewhat dwarfed under the great roof of Eliel Saarinen's huge, prim shed.

When the speeches had been made, the telegrams read, the Festival Chorus had touched off Randall Thompson's "Allelluia" particularly contrived for the occasion, and libations of tea and cakes had been offered to the melodious and wellbred muses presumably infesting the local air, the Berkshire Music Center was declared officially open and in session.

350 Listen, Learn.

Here each summer promising students may learn the theory, technic and consumption of music from the imperial Dr. Koussevitzky, his chiefest bandsmen and occasionally from a well-thought-of outsider or two. This year 600 had high hopes, but only 350 were accepted for instruction, among them four especially blessed lads whom Dr. Koussevitzky himself will coach in the art of conducting. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals, will coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will unreel the mysteries of operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will instruct in composition.

The remainder, more than 200 (called "the Academy") consisting of pupils without necessarily professional intentions, will have a go at music from various quarters. Many will sing in the Festival Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth. Others will fiddle away in the Academy orchestra, an amateur group. Some will listen to lectures on how to listen to music, and still others will folkdance.

From Hartford this season are Robert Maxwell, Florence Sheehan, Alice Rowley and Elizabeth Northen.

The Doctor's Vision.

The metronomic side of the Berkshire Music Center all seemed very remote except by implication today, however, as the opening formalities went forward. Seated on the lily-flanked stage, in flannels and tub-silks, were members of the faculty and the women-of-Berkshire, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, first president of the Festival and still its chief practical Muse. Dr. Koussevitzky, in summer white, sat in the center of the semi-circle, a little more stooped and a great deal more bronzed than in former seasons. Roundabout were leading spirits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board.

Compared to the resounding orchestral occasions, the event was almost hushed. The summer air was incredibly bright and still, the speakers automatically lowered their voices. Only a chorus of sparrows up under the steel beams chirped brazenly out of time and tune.

Dr. Koussevitzky told the audience that a Music Center had been his dream since 1913 Moscow days, but that until the recent swimming successes of the Festivals, it had not been realizable. "So long as culture and arts exist, there is hope for humanity," he said, looking out at what is now the world's only Salzburg.

Albert Spalding, noted violinist, told of the Florentine philosopher who worked 20 years making one door, and then 20 years more, to make the second, in order to close himself off from the world. Here at the Music Center, the doors of music and its inherent philosophy are open, not shut, to the world.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, stressed the humane purposes of music, its place among the other arts, its mission to add to the spiritual binding of mankind.

BROOKLYN, N.Y
CONEY ISLAND
TIMES
7/20/40

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUL 10 1940

Queens Musicians To Attend Festival

Many Queens residents will attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 1 to 18.

Lyra Nicholas, director of the Douglaston Music Guild, is on the board of advisers of the festival. Douglaston plans to send many visitors to the affair.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a repertory of Tchaikovsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Other music to be heard will include compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert and Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLUSHING, N.Y
BROADWAY-FLUSHING
TIMES
7/18/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLUSHING, N.Y
BAYSIDE TIMES
7/18/40

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

MORE than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

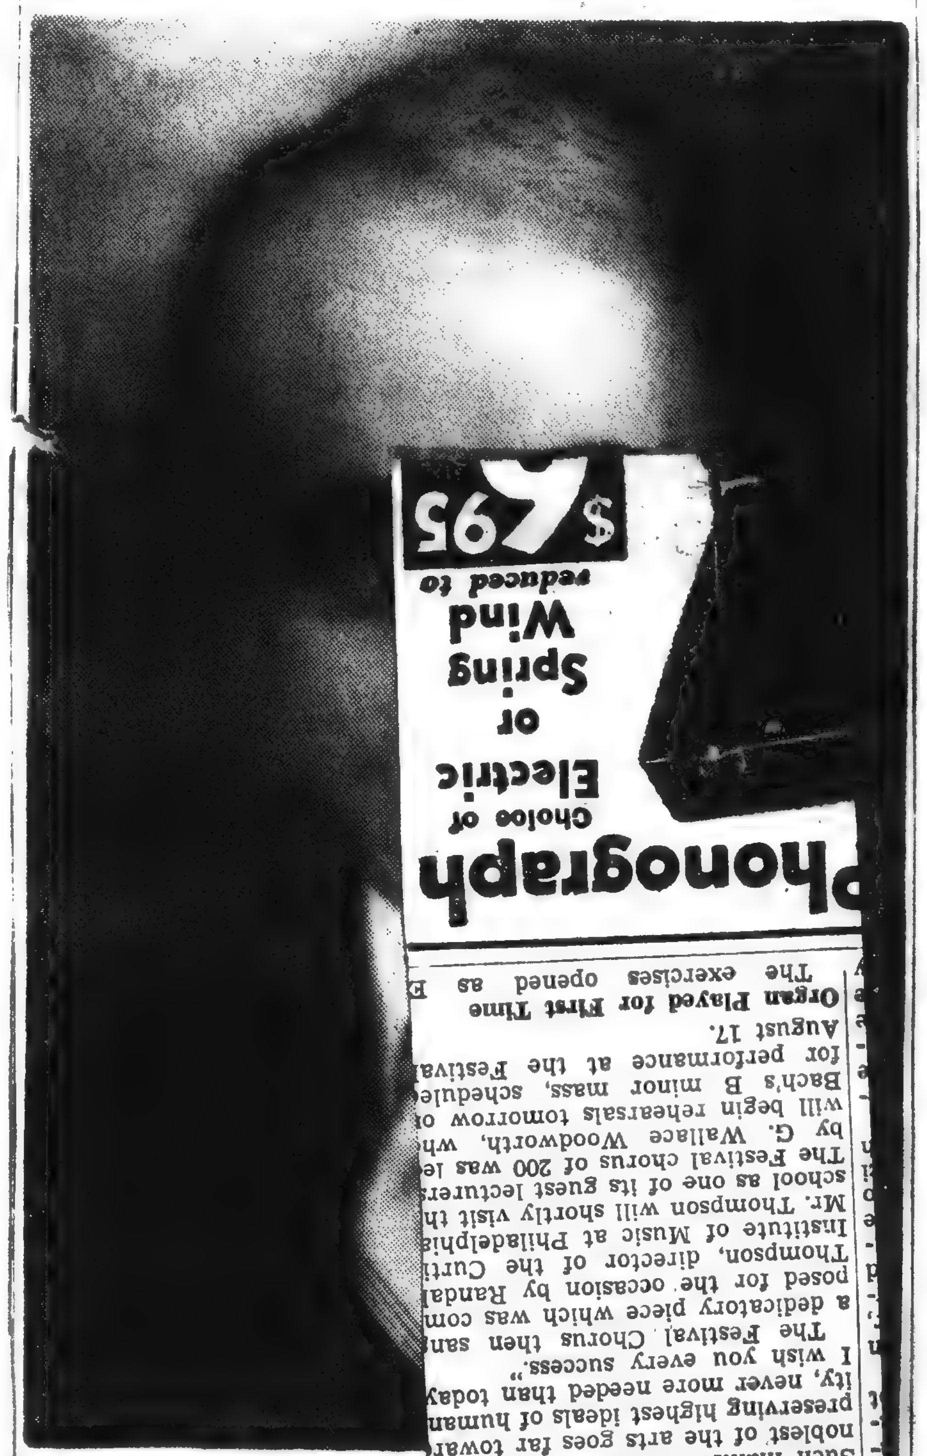
Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

---

assachusetts. Monday, July 8, 1940. Berkshire Eagle

His Vision Comes True



SERGE K
Director of the Berkshir

Koussevitzk Symphony G

Berkshire Music
Tanglewood—Kou
Downes, Foster, S

For the first time in thi and orchestra received a larg
This afternoon at Tanglewood tra's estate in the Berkshire I works of welcome at the inaug Center.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Greets Students At Berkshire Music Center

LENOX, July 8—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

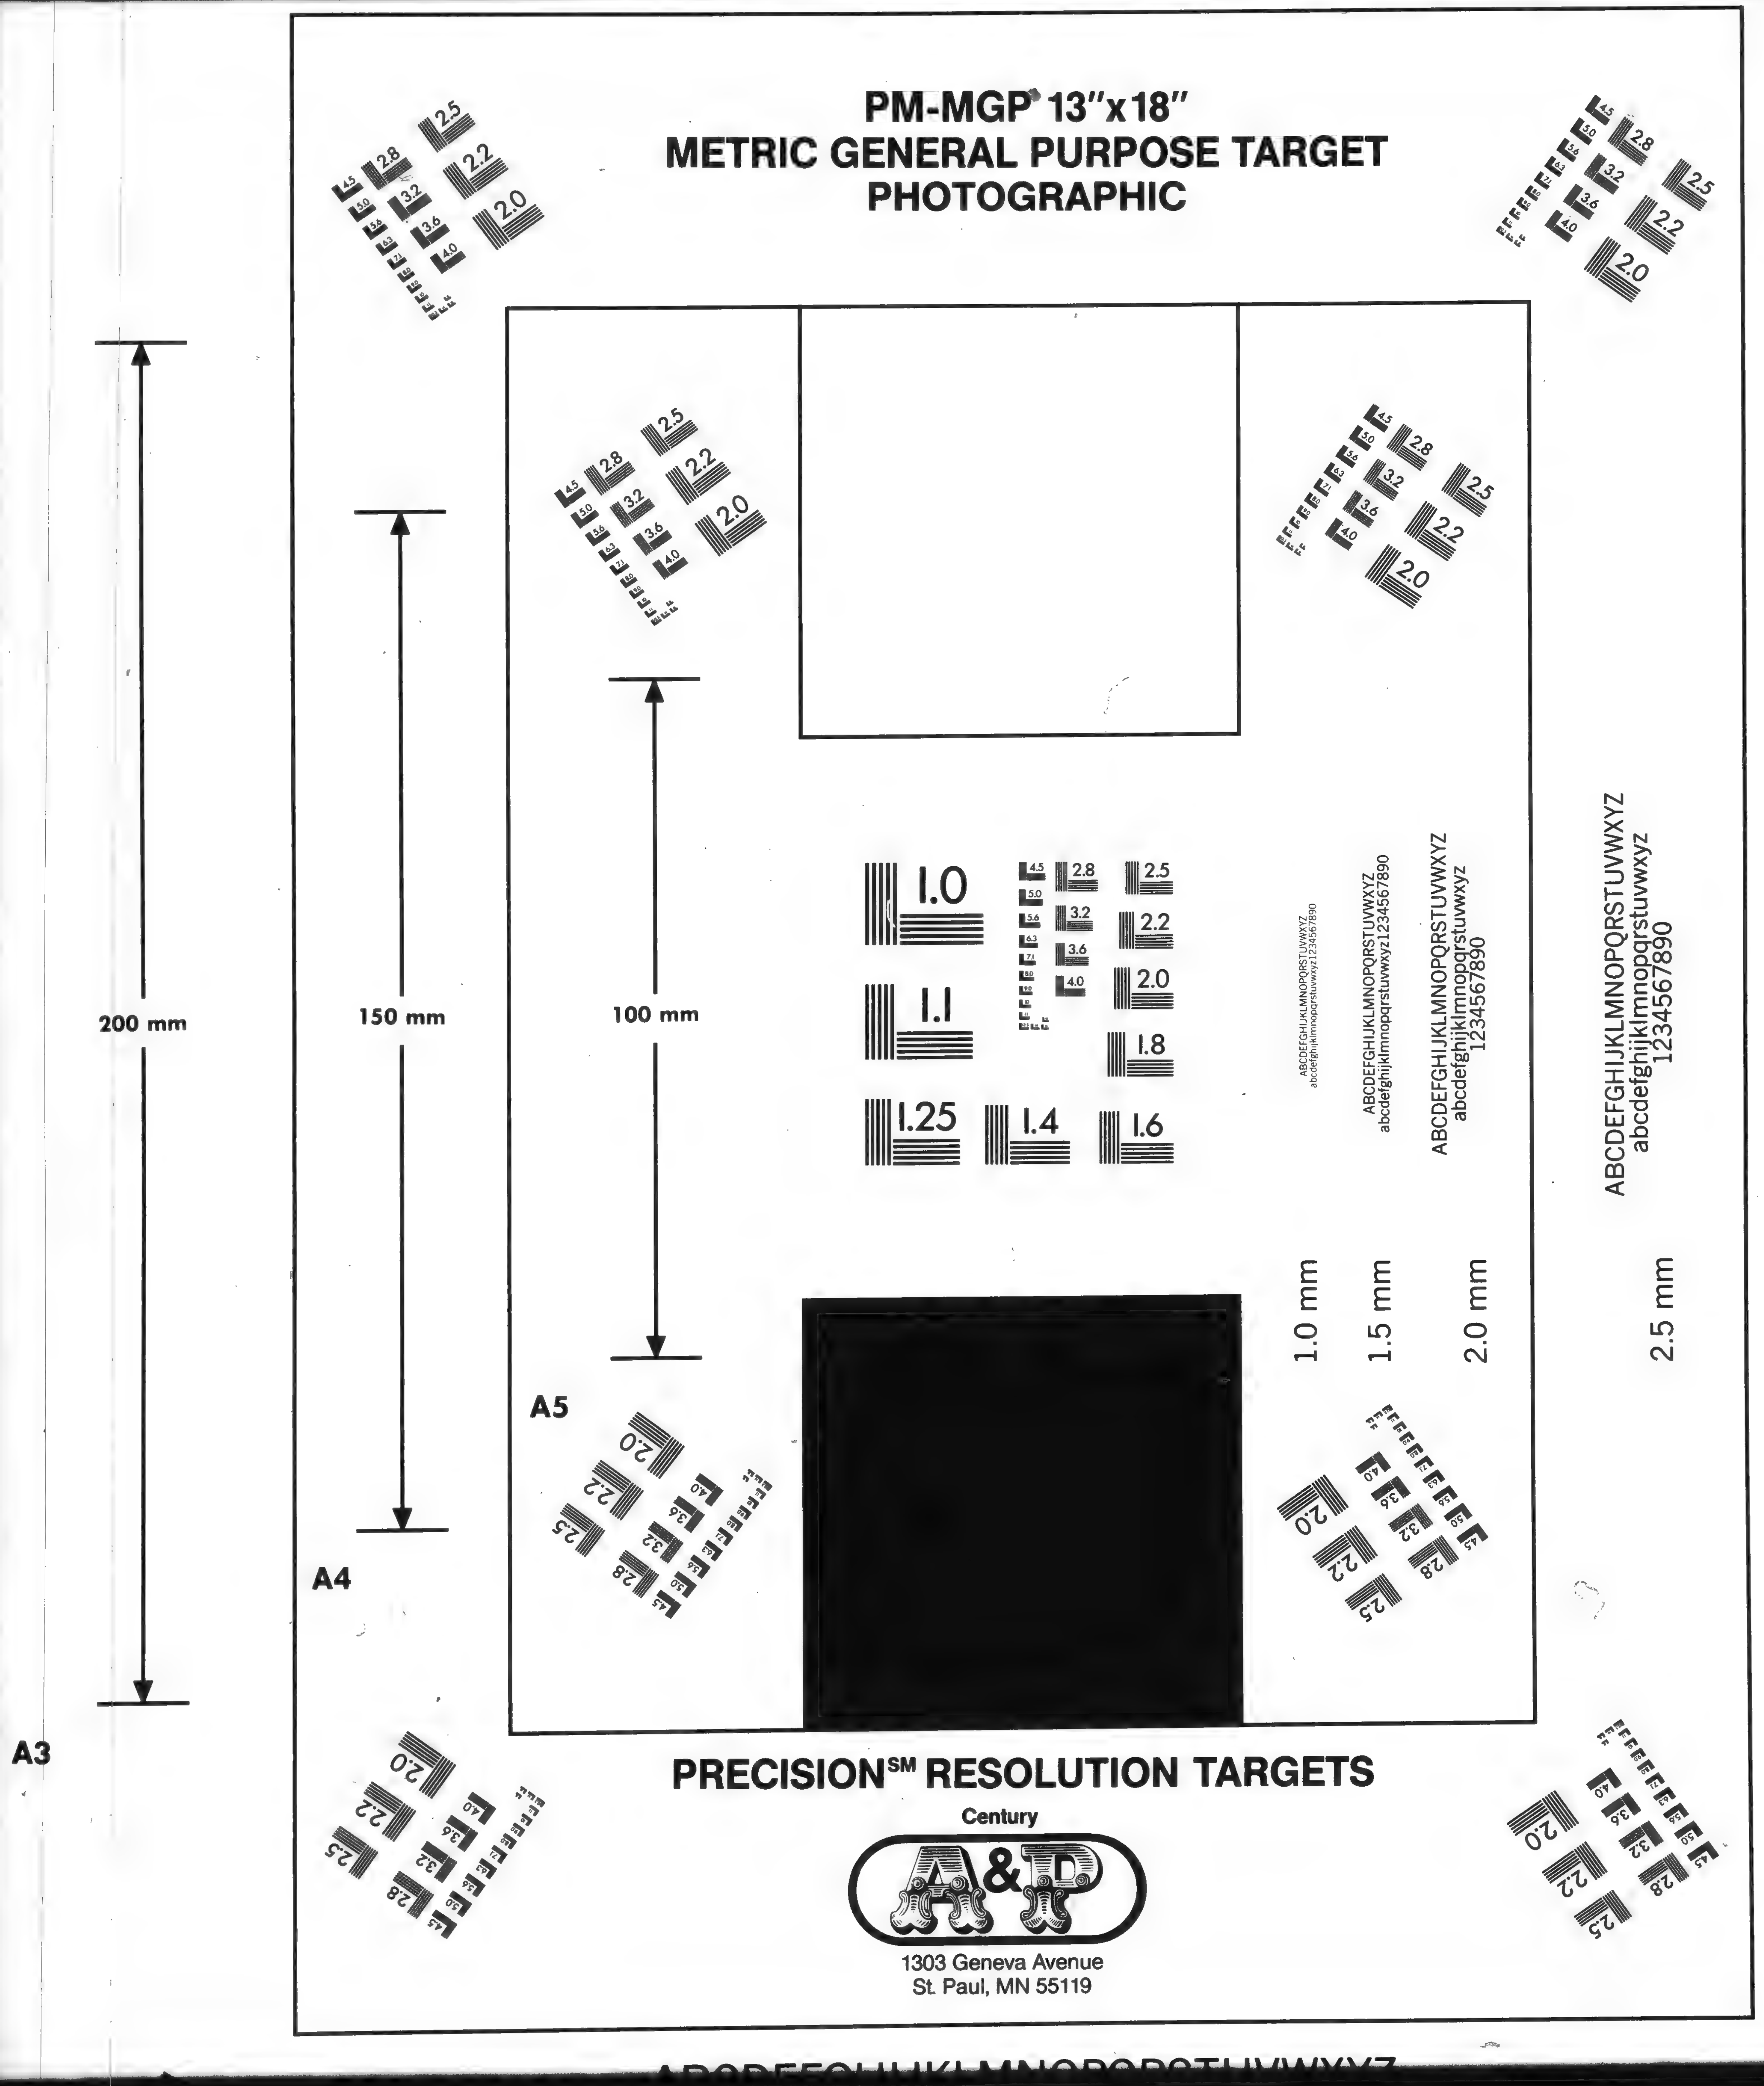
"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

The Festival Chorus sang a dedicatory piece which was composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Mr. Thompson will shortly visit the school as one of its guest lecturers. The Festival Chorus of 200 was led by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will begin rehearsals tomorrow on Bach's B minor Mass, scheduled for performance at the Festival, Aug. 17.

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

PM-MGP® 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

48

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
JUL 8 - 1940

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP AWARDED VIOLIST HAROLD SORIN

Studies With Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony.

HAROLD SORIN.
Given Scholarship.

Harold Sorin, son of Mr. and Mrs Isadore Sorin of 20 Homer street, talented violinist, has been notified that he is the winner of a scholarship from the Berkshire Music Centre in Stockbridge, Mass. He will study under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The privilege of studying under the renowned Koussevitsky is limited to the most advanced players. For the past two years the Brockton young man has been playing with the Juilliard Graduate orchestra under Albert Stoessel and the national orchestra, under Leon Barzin, and with other musical organizations in New York.

Mr. Sorin has received an offer to tour the western States with a quartette, the leader of which is Orlando Borera, concert master of the Havana Symphony and soloist with the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic. However, he has chosen to study with Mr. Koussevitsky.

A graduate of Brockton High school in 1933, where he was first violinist in the school orchestra, he joined the Junior Symphony Orchestra in Boston under Fabien Sevitsky. He was accepted into the first violin section and gave concerts with the orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston.

He demonstrated such marked ability that from the 34 violinists he was awarded the prize of a violin for excellence in playing. He was made a member of the Sevitsky Ensemble, one of Boston's well-known musical organizations.

The scholarship from the Berkshire Centre will cover his tuition and expenses for the summer.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Music Center

Conductor, Boston Orchestra Men, to Teach at School Augmenting Berkshire Festival

BY T. H. PARKER.

Lenox, Mass., July 8.—Another chapter was added to the burgeoning annals of American musical history here today, when for the first time in this country, a noted conductor and orchestra received a large student body.

The scene was Tanglewood, already laureated site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals. The participants were Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra who annually laureate it, the 350 wide-eyed, score-toting students from all over the country who have come to learn from the nation's most illustrious assembly of musicians, a gallery of celebrated virtuosi upon every instrument from the celesta to the harp, and several hundred specially invited guests looking very pleased but somewhat dwarfed under the great roof of Eliel Saarinen's huge, prim shed.

When the speeches had been made, the telegrams read, the Festival Chorus had touched off Randall Thompson's "Allelluia" particularly contrived for the occasion, and libations of tea and cakes had been offered to the melodious and wellbred muses presumably infesting the local air, the Berkshire Music Center was declared officially open and in session.

350 Listen, Learn.

Here each summer promising students may learn the theory, technic and consumption of music from the imperial Dr. Koussevitzky, his chiefest bandsmen and occasionally from a well-thought-of outsider or two. This year 600 had high hopes, but only 350 were accepted for instruction, among them four especially blessed lads whom Dr. Koussevitzky himself will coach in the art of conducting. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals, will coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will unreel the mysteries of operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will instruct in composition.

The remainder, more than 200 (called "the Academy") consisting of pupils without necessarily professional intentions, will have a go at music from various quarters. Many will sing in the Festival Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth. Others will fiddle away in the Academy orchestra, an amateur group. Some will listen to lectures on how to listen to music, and still others will folkdance.

From Hartford this season are Robert Maxwell, Florence Sheehan, Alice Rowley and Elizabeth Northen.

The Doctor's Vision.

The metronomic side of the Berkshire Music Center all seemed very remote except by implication today, however, as the opening formalities went forward. Seated on the lily-flanked stage, in flannels and tub-silks, were members of the faculty and the women-of-Berkshire, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, first president of the Festival and still its chief practical Muse. Dr. Koussevitzky, in summer white, sat in the center of the semi-circle, a little more stooped and a great deal more bronzed than in former seasons. Roundabout were leading spirits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board.

Compared to the resounding orchestral occasions, the event was almost hushed. The summer air was incredibly bright and still, the speakers automatically lowered

---

BROOKLYN, N.Y
CONEY ISLAND
TIMES
7/20/40

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
JUL 10 1940

Queens Musicians To Attend Festival

Many Queens residents will attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 1 to 18.

Lyra Nicholas, director of the Douglaston Music Guild, is on the board of advisers of the festival. Douglaston plans to send many visitors to the affair.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a repertory of Tchaikovsky in celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. Other music to be heard will include compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert and Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

FLUSHING, N.Y
BROADWAY-FLUSHING
TIMES
7/18/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM

FLUSHING, N.Y
BAYSIDE TIMES
7/18/40

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

MORE than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

---

assachusetts. Monday, July 8, 1940. Berkshire Eagle

His Vision Comes True

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Greet Students

Berkshire Music Center Opens at Tanglewood—Koussevitzky, Dane, Downes, Foster, Spalding, Speak

For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke works of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Inception of Idea

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity; and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a music center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the corner-stone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who acted as chairman.

Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school, speaking as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Sym-

Music Center
Continued on Second Page

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky
At Berksh

LENOX, July 8—For the fi
time in this country, a famous co
ductor and orchestra received large student body as their pupi
This afternoon at Tanglewood, t
Boston Symphony Orchestra's
tate in the Berkshire Hills, Se
Koussevitzky spoke words of w come at the inauguration of Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director
the new school, in which he is ta
ing pupils in conducting, address
the 350 students who had co
from many parts of the country, leading music schools and colleg
and were assembled for the fi
time, in the Shed where the Ber
shire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described t
inception of the idea, which he h cherished for many years, its pr
ent realization, and its hopes f further expansion. He opened address by emphasizing the sign
cance of a music center in Ameri
at the present time. "So long culture and art exist," he sa
"there is hope for humanity: a
all those who believe in the valu
and inheritance of culture and should stand in the front rank.
there was ever a time to speak
music, it is now, in the New Worl

The conductor told how he fi

Harold Sorin, son of Mr. and Mrs Isadore Sorin of 20 Homer street, talented violinist, has been notified that he is the winner of a scholarship from the Berkshire Music Centre in Stockbridge, Mass. He will study under Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The privilege of studying under the renowned Koussevitsky is limited to the most advanced players. For the past two years the Brockton young man has been playing with the Juilliard Graduate orchestra under Albert Stoessel and the national orchestra, under Leon Barzin, and with other musical organizations in New York.

Mr. Sorin has received an offer to tour the western States with a quartette, the leader of which is Orlando Borera, concert master of the Havana Symphony and soloist with the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic. However, he has chosen to study with Mr. Koussevitsky.

A graduate of Brockton High school in 1933, where he was first violinist in the school orchestra, he joined the Junior Symphony Orchestra in Boston under Fabien Sevitsky. He was accepted into the first violin section and gave concerts with the orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston.

He demonstrated such marked ability that from the 34 violinists he was awarded the prize of a violin for excellence in playing. He was made a member of the Sevitsky Ensemble, one of Boston's well-known musical organizations.

The scholarship from the Berkshire Centre will cover his tuition and expenses for the summer.

HAROLD SORIN.
Given Scholarship.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Music Center

Conductor, Boston Orchestra Men, to Teach at School Augmenting Berkshire Festival

BY T. H. PARKER.

Lenox, Mass., July 8.—Another chapter was added to the burgeoning annals of American musical history here today, when for the first time in this country, a noted conductor and orchestra received a large student body.

The scene was Tanglewood, already laureated site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals. The participants were Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra who annually laureate it, the 350 wide-eyed, score-toting students from all over the country who have come to learn from the nation's most illustrious assembly of musicians, a gallery of celebrated virtuosi upon every instrument from the celesta to the harp, and several hundred specially invited guests looking very pleased but somewhat dwarfed under the great roof of Eliel Saarinen's huge, prim shed.

When the speeches had been made, the telegrams read, the Festival Chorus had touched off Randall Thompson's "Allelluia" particularly contrived for the occasion, and libations of tea and cakes had been offered to the melodious and wellbred muses presumably infesting the local air, the Berkshire Music Center was declared officially open and in session.

350 Listen, Learn.

Here each summer promising students may learn the theory, technic and consumption of music from the imperial Dr. Koussevitzky, his chiefest bandsmen and occasionally from a well-thought-of outsider or two. This year 600 had high hopes, but only 350 were accepted for instruction, among them four especially blessed lads whom Dr. Koussevitzky himself will coach in the art of conducting. The Institute Orchestra of 60 musicians will begin work upon their first program while members of the Boston Symphony, including all of the principals, will coach them collectively or individually, or play beside them in performance. Dr. Herbert Graf will unreel the mysteries of operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith will instruct in composition.

The remainder, more than 200 (called "the Academy") consisting of pupils without necessarily professional intentions, will have a go at music from various quarters. Many will sing in the Festival Chorus under G. Wallace Woodworth. Others will fiddle away in the Academy orchestra, an amateur group. Some will listen to lectures on how to listen to music, and still others will folkdance.

From Hartford this season are Robert Maxwell, Florence Sheehan, Alice Rowley and Elizabeth Northen.

The Doctor's Vision.

The metronomic side of the Berkshire Music Center all seemed very remote except by implication today, however, as the opening formalities went forward. Seated on the lily-flanked stage, in flannels and tub-silks, were members of the faculty and the women-of-Berkshire, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, first president of the Festival and still its chief practical Muse. Dr. Koussevitzky, in summer white, sat in the center of the semi-circle, a little more stooped and a great deal more bronzed than in former seasons. Roundabout were leading spirits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board.

Compared to the resounding orchestral occasions, the event was almost hushed. The summer air was incredibly bright and still, the speakers automatically lowered their voices. Only a chorus of sparrows up under the steel beams chirped brazenly out of time and tune.

Dr. Koussevitzky told the audience that a Music Center had been his dream since 1913 Moscow days, but that until the recent swimming successes of the Festivals, it had not been realizable. "So long as culture and arts exist, there is hope for humanity," he said, looking out at what is now the world's only Salzburg.

Albert Spalding, noted violinist, told of the Florentine philosopher who worked 20 years making one door, and then 20 years more, to make the second, in order to close himself off from the world. Here at the Music Center, the doors of music and its inherent philosophy are open, not shut, to the world.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, stressed the humane purposes of music, its place among the other arts, its mission to add to the spiritual binding of mankind.

---

his birth. Other music to be heard will include compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert and Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

FLUSHING, N.Y
BROADWAY-FLUSHING
TIMES
7/18/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM

FLUSHING, N.Y
BAYSIDE TIMES
7/18/40

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL OPENS

MORE than 300 students will assemble at the opening exercises to be held tomorrow afternoon at the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, will make an address to the students at the initial meeting.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. But the buildings have been greatly altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of school this Summer Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of sixty highly trained musicians will at once start rehearsing its first program. All of its members will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation, and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the Institute. In this department only skilled musicians, who have passed the most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have been enrolled in a different department, called the Academy. It is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's Festival Chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood" from Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald T. Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the Festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral programs.

SERGE K
Director of the Berkshire

Koussevitzky Symphony G

Berkshire Music Tanglewood—Kou Downes, Foster, S

For the first time in thi and orchestra received a larg This afternoon at Tanglewood tra's estate in the Berkshire works of welcome at the inaug Center.

York Times, who is a member o the faculty at the Music Center and who will give a series of lec tures. Reginald C. Foster, truste of the Boston Symphony Orchestra spoke in acknowledgment of th generous grant of the Rockefelle Foundation, the fine organ give by the Carnegie Foundation, an the scholarships donated by th Juilliard Foundation, the presiden of the New England Conservator of Music and the American Societ of Composers and Publishers.

Governor's Telegram

The following telegram fron Gov. Leverett Saltonstall wa read:

"Extremely sorry Mrs. Salton stall and I cannot be with you a opening of the Berkshire Musi Center. Please accept greetings o commonwealth and convey to par ticipants and friends my apprecia tion of your splendid undertaking Such manifestations of one of th noblest of the arts goes far towar preserving highest ideals of human ity, never more needed than today I wish you every success."

The Festival Chorus then san a dedicatory piece which was com posed for the occasion by Randal Thompson, director of the Curti Institute of Music at Philadelphia Mr. Thompson will shortly visit th school as one of its guest lecturers The Festival chorus of 200 was le by G. Wallace Woodworth, wh will begin rehearsals tomorrow o Bach's B minor mass, schedule for performance at the Festival August 17.

Organ Played for First Time

The exercises opened as E

Phonograph
Choice of Electric or Spring Wind reduced to $ 95

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

JUL 9 - 1940

~~Koussevitzk~~y Greets Students At Berkshire Music Center

LENOX, July 8—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

The Festival Chorus sang a dedicatory piece which was composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Mr. Thompson will shortly visit the school as one of its guest lecturers. The Festival Chorus of 200 was led by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will begin rehearsals tomorrow on Bach's B minor Mass, scheduled for performance at the Festival, Aug. 17.

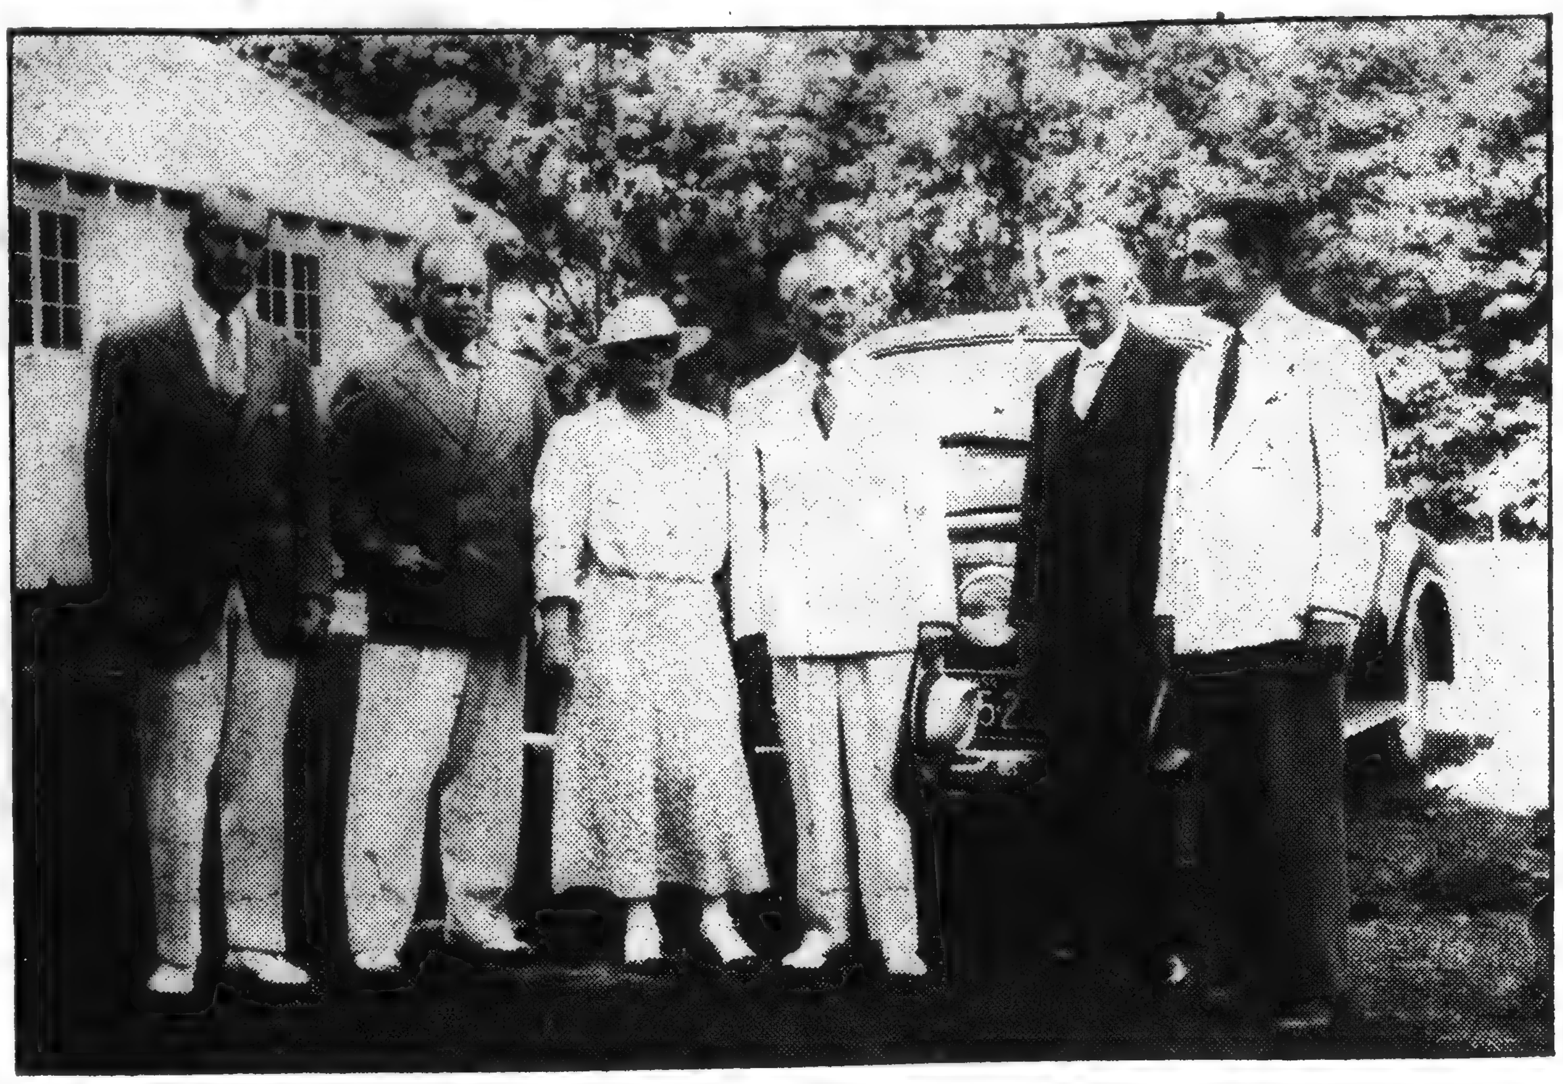
49

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940—TWENTY

Republican

OSES ITS NEWE

As Berkshire Music Center Opens



(Photo by Gravelle)

Among those present, left to right: Reginald C. Fos-ter, trustee, Boston Symphony orchestra; Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times; Gertrude Robinson Smith, Serge Koussevitzky, Ernest B. Dane, chairman of Boston Symphony trustees and Albert Spalding, violinist.

Berkshire Music Center Opens With 425 Students

Dr Serge Koussevitzky Sees Dream Come True at Tanglewood, in Lenox — Best Wishes Wired by Roosevelts, Gov Saltonstall and Others

Lenox, July 8—Another step in the developments of Tanglewood as a great American center of music was taken this perfect July afternoon with the formal opening of the new school of 425 registered students directed by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Exercises were held in the music shed with Ernest B. Dane, chairman of the Boston Symphony trustees, presiding.

Mrs Margaret Grant, secretary of the new school, read a telegram from President and Mrs Roosevelt expressing "Hearty best wishes for great success."

Gov Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts wired: "Please accept greetings of the commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestation of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity never more needed than today." Others who sent messages were Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college and Roy Harris.

A company of 700, including many of the students, heard Dr Koussevitzky describe the inception of the hope which he has cherished for many years, its realization and its hopes for the future. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the new world."

The conductor said he first dreamed of a music center in Moscow in 1913, but the war and revolution intervened. He returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire festivals [illegible] Tanglewood [illegible] made it possible.

(Continued on [illegible])

(Continued from First [illegible])

"I told the Boston Symphony trustees of my vision of a music center," said Dr Koussevitzky reading from manuscript, "and I shall never forget the words of our president, Mr Earnest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. Mr Dane said 'Go ahead, we cannot afford to lose it.' Today the ground is set and as we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr Koussevitzky closed by reading the names of members of the school faculty, each of who stood from his seat on the stage and was vigorously applauded.

Albert Spalding defined music as language, beauty, thought, art, peace. In cooperation with the Boston Symphonic festival Nature and tradition have provided an ideal place for the school, he said.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, referred to the "shift of balance in musical power from Europe to America," and added "faith, conviction purpose, vision of the future can reshape this world from the forces of darkness."

Reginald C. Foster, a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, acknowledged the gifts of scholarships from the Juilliard foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music, American Society of Composers and Publishers and the new music shed organ given by the Carnegie foundation, which was played today for the first time in public by E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Prof G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, who is on the new school faculty, led the chorus of 200 students in singing a new choral work by Ran[illegible] Philadelphia. The [illegible] stanza of [illegible]ica" [illegible] Mr Dane [illegible] end

Slaying Over

Berkshire Eagle

TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940

Music in the New World

"If there ever was a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

These were the words of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he unfolded his dream of a music center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Addressing the 350 students assembled for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Koussevitzky, moved by the tragedy of Europe, explained his idea of "working and living with music," an idea which was on the verge of fulfillment in Moscow when the World War broke out in 1914. He brought his dream to America and now it is about to come true.

"So long as culture and art exist," he declared, "there is hope for humanity; and all those who believe in the values of inheritance of culture and art, should stand in the front rank. If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the New World. Today the ground is set and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Appropriately, the exercises closed with the first verse of America and there was a glow on the face of every participant when he sang:

From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

There have been thrilling moments in the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It was an achievement to launch the Festival at the Hanna farm in 1934 in face of apathy if not outright antagonism. It was a great moment when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in three concerts at Holmwood in 1936. Their coming set the stage for the magnificent gift of Tanglewood from Mrs. Gorham Brooks and this gift in turn provided for the setting of the dedication of the Berkshire Music Center yesterday.

To be sure the Center is not the Festival; it is a project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But the Festival and the orchestra have become so closely associated in this tremendous Berkshire enterprise, that when we think of one, we think of both. Consequently, everyone who has had anything to do with the promotion, and encouragement of either organization, must have experienced tremendous pride and satisfaction yesterday afternoon.

The Berkshire Music Center, an inseparable part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is launched. Students who have come to Tanglewood with a serious purpose to study under a faculty of eminent musicians, are bound to enrich American culture. Through the Center the Festival will be digging itself into the soil of the community and if the roots are sound they will spread and grow and so will the Center and the Festival.

The second important step in musical development at Tanglewood has been taken. If the weather was prophetic; if the remarkable performance by the Festival Chorus of 200 voices of "Allelulia," composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson was prophetic; if the words of wisdom from Olin Downes, Albert Spalding and Reginald Foster were prophetic, then the Berkshires and America will have reason to feel proud.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 12 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Tanglewood School

"So long as culture and art exist there is hope for humanity," Serge Koussevitzky said in an address opening the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday. "If there was ever a time to speak of music it is now in the New World."

The Boston Symphony orchestra and Conductor Koussevitzky welcomed a large number of pupils to the new school. The exercises began with E. Power Biggs playing the new organ for the first time.

Albert Spaulding, violinist and Berkshire resident, and Olin Downes, music critic and member of the faculty of the Berkshire school, were among the speakers.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1940

NEW MUSIC SCHOOL IS OPENED AT LENOX

Exercises Held at Tanglewood in Berkshires, Gift to Boston Symphony Orchestra

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 8—Another step in the development of Tanglewood as a great American center of music was taken this afternoon with the formal opening of the new school of 425 registered students directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Exercises were held in the music shed with Ernest B. Dane, chairman of the Boston Symphony trustees, presiding.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the new school, read a telegram from the President and Mrs. Roosevelt expressing "hearty best wishes for great success."

Governor Wires Greetings

Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts wired: "Please accept greetings of the Commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestation of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity never more needed than today." Others who sent messages of regret were Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College, and Roy Harris, composer.

A company of 700, including many of the students, heard Dr. Koussevitzky describe the inception of the undertaking which he has cherished for many years, its realization and its hopes for the future "so long as culture and art exist."

"There is hope for humanity and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank," he declared. "If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the New World."

The conducter said he first thought of creating a music center in Moscow in 1913, but the war and revolution intervened. He resumed his plans when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festivals. The gift of Tanglewood to the orchestra finally made it possible.

"I told the Boston Symphony trustees of my vision of a music center," said Dr. Koussevitzky, reading from manuscript, "and I shall never forget the words of our president, Mr. Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. Mr. Dane said: 'Go ahead, we cannot afford to lose it.' Today the ground is set and as we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center, I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky closed by reading the names of members of the school faculty, each of whom rose from his seat on the stage and was applauded vigorously.

Albert Spalding defined music as language, beauty, thought, art, peace. In cooperation with the Boston Symphonic Festival nature and tradition have provided an ideal place for the school, he said.

Olin Downes Speaks

Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, referred to the "shift of balance in musical power from Europe to America," and added that "faith, conviction, purpose and vision of the future can reshape this world from the forces of darkness."

Reginald C. Foster, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, acknowledged gifts of scholarships from the Juilliard Foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music, American Society of Composers and Publishers and the gift of the new music shed organ by the Carnegie Foundation. The instrument was played publicly today for the first time by E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra.

Professor G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, who is on the faculty of the new school, led the chorus of 200 students in singing a new choral work by Randall Thompson of Philadelphia. The assembly sang a stanza of "America" and Mr. Dane invited all to attend a tea in the beautiful Tanglewood Gardens as guests of the orchestra.

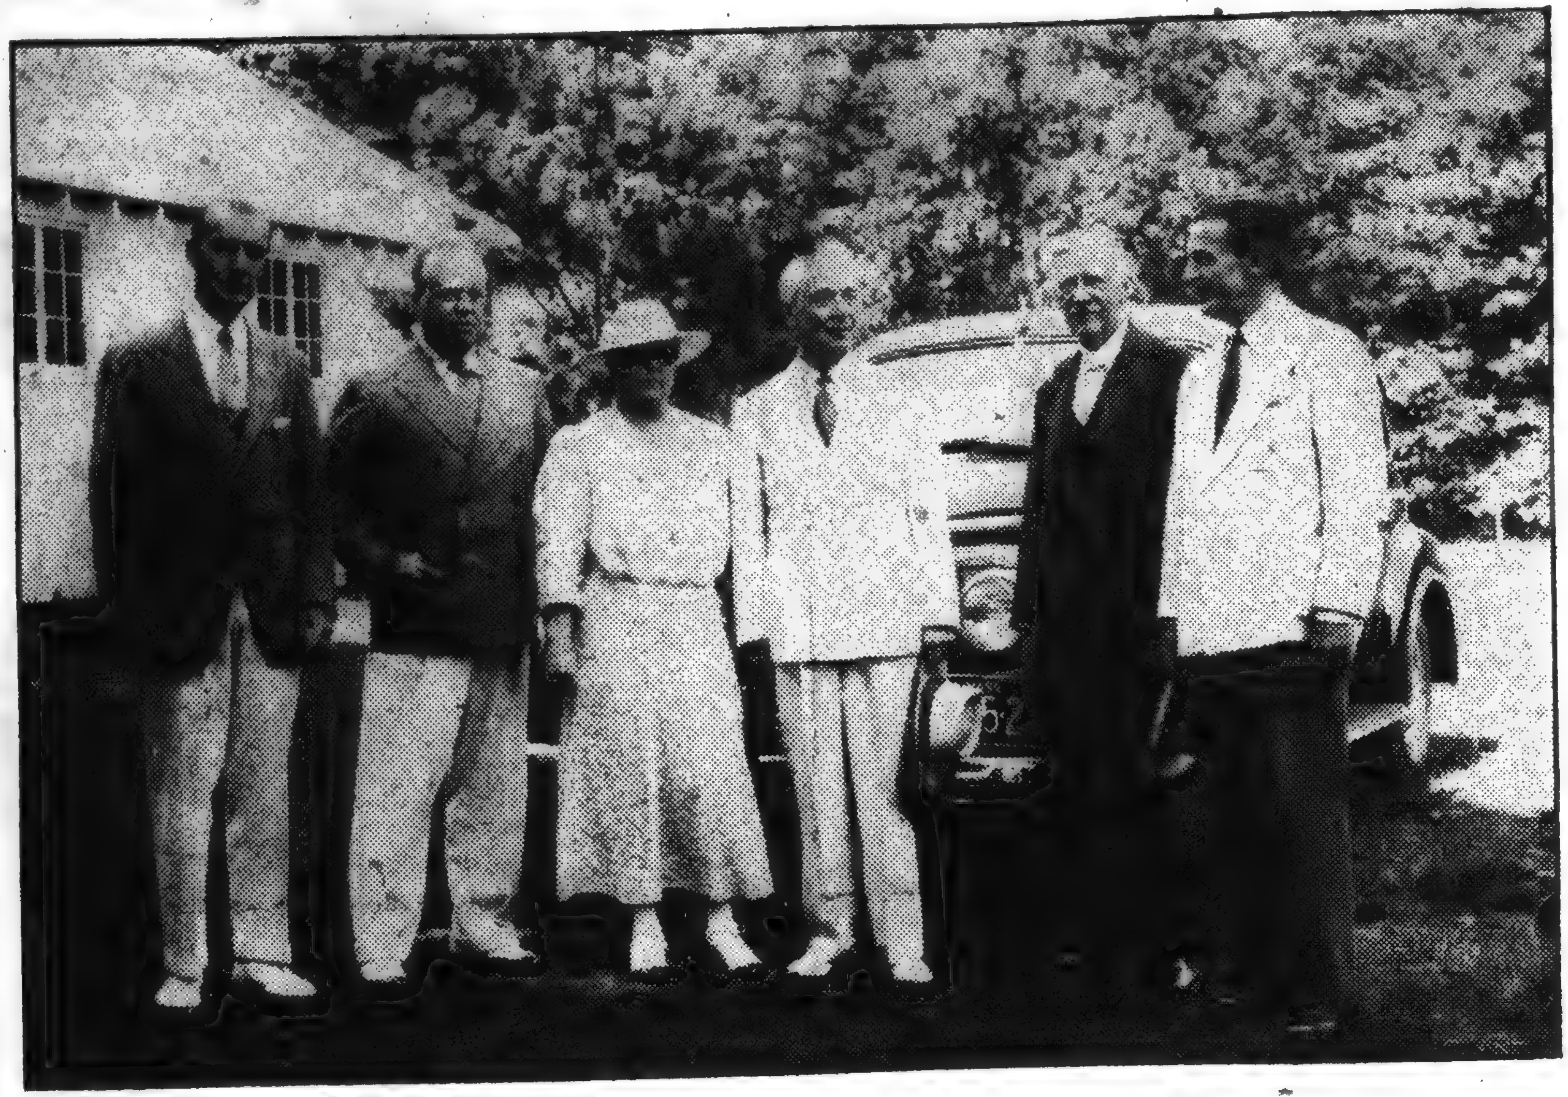
Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, came from Dublin, N. H., for the event and are staying at the Lenox Club. Mrs. Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, after a family ownership of eighty years, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Music Festival and other officers attended.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940—TWENTY

Republican

OSES ITS NEWE

As Berkshire Music Center Opens



(Photo by Gravelle)

Among those present, left to right: Reginald C. Fos-ter, trustee, Downes, music critic of the New York Times; Gertrude Robinson
B. Dane, chairman of Boston Symphony trustees and A

Berkshire Eagle
TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1940

Music in the New World

"If there ever was a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

These were the words of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he unfolded his dream of a music center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Addressing the 350 students assembled for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Koussevitzky, moved by the tragedy of Europe, explained his idea of "working and living with music," an idea which was on the verge of fulfillment in Moscow when the World War broke out in 1914. He brought his dream to America and now it is about to come true.

"So long as culture and art exist," he declared, "there is hope for humanity; and all those who believe in the values of inheritance of culture and art, should stand in the front rank. If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the New World. Today the ground is set and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Appropriately, the exercises closed with the first verse of America and there was a glow on the face of every participant when he sang:

From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

There have been thrilling moments in the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It was an achievement to launch the Festival at the Hanna farm in 1934 in face of apathy if not outright antagonism. It was a great moment when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in three concerts at Holmwood in 1936. Their coming set the stage for the magnificent gift of Tanglewood from Mrs. Gorham Brooks and this gift in turn provided for the setting of the dedication of the Berkshire Music Center yesterday.

To be sure the Center is not the Festival; it is a project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But the Festival and the orchestra have become so closely associated in this tremendous Berkshire enterprise, that when we think of one, we think of both. Consequently, everyone who has had anything to do with the promotion, and encouragement of either organization, must have experienced tremendous pride and satisfaction yesterday afternoon.

The Berkshire Music Center, an inseparable part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is launched. Students who have come to Tanglewood with a serious purpose to study under a faculty of eminent musicians, are bound to enrich American culture. Through the Center the Festival will be digging itself into the soil of the community and if the roots are sound they will spread and grow and so will the Center and the Festival.

The second important step in musical development at Tanglewood has been taken. If the weather was prophetic; if the remarkable performance by the Festival Chorus of 200 voices of "Allelulia," composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson was prophetic; if the words of wisdom from Olin Downes, Albert Spalding and Reginald Foster were prophetic, then the Berkshires and America will have reason to feel proud.

Berkshire Mu
Opens Wi

Dr Serge Koussevitzky
Tanglewood, in Leno
Roosevelts, Gov Salto

Lenox, July 8—Another step in th developments of Tanglewood as great American center of music wa taken this perfect July afternoon wi the formal opening of the new scho of 425 registered students directed b Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor o the Boston Symphony orchestra. Exercises were held in the music she with Ernest B. Dane, chairman of th Boston Symphony trustees, presiding

Mrs Margaret Grant, secretary o the new school, read a telegram fron President and Mrs Roosevelt expressing "Hearty best wishes for grea success."

Gov Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts wired: "Please accept greetings of the commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestation of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity never more needed than to-

---

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 12 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Tanglewood School

"So long as culture and art exist there is hope for humanity," Serge Koussevitzky said in an address opening the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday. "If there was ever a time to speak of music it is now, in the New World."

The Boston Symphony orchestra and Conductor Koussevitzky welcomed a large number of pupils to the new school. The exercises began with E. Power Biggs playing the new organ for the first time.

Albert Spaulding, violinist and Berkshire resident, and Olin Downes, music critic and member of the faculty of the Berkshire school, were among the speakers.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 13 1940

Dr. and Mrs. John Carter Rowley with the Misses Sally and Ethel Rowley of Colony Rd., West Hartford, leave Monday to spend the season at Keene Valley, N. Y. Miss Alice Rowley left Tuesday for Stockbridge, Mass., to attend the six weeks' course at the Boston Symphony Music School under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Samuel R. Rowley is spending the summer as counselor at Pine Island Camp on Belgrade Lake.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1940

NEW MUSIC SCHOOL IS OPENED AT LENOX

Exercises Held at Tanglewood in Berkshires, Gift to Boston Symphony Orchestra

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 8—Another step in the development of Tanglewood as a great American center of music was taken this afternoon with the formal opening of the new school of 425 registered students directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Exercises were held in the music shed with Ernest B. Dane, chairman of the Boston Symphony trustees, presiding.

Mrs. Margaret Grant, secretary of the new school, read a telegram from the President and Mrs. Roosevelt expressing "hearty best wishes for great success."

Governor Wires Greetings

Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts wired: "Please accept greetings of the Commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestation of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity never more needed than today." Others who sent messages of regret were Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d, president of Williams College, and Roy Harris, composer.

A company of 700, including many of the students, heard Dr. Koussevitzky describe the inception of the undertaking which he has cherished for many years, its realization and its hopes for the future "so long as culture and art exist."

"There is hope for humanity and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank," he declared. "If there ever was a time to speak of music it is now in the New World."

The conducter said he first thought of creating a music center in Moscow in 1913, but the war and revolution intervened. He resumed his plans when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festivals. The gift of Tanglewood to the orchestra finally made it possible.

"I told the Boston Symphony trustees of my vision of a music center," said Dr. Koussevitzky, reading from manuscript, "and I shall never forget the words of our president, Mr. Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. Mr. Dane said: 'Go ahead, we cannot afford to lose it.' Today the ground is set and as we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center, I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky closed by reading the names of members of the school faculty, each of whom rose from his seat on the stage and was applauded vigorously.

Albert Spalding defined music as language, beauty, thought, art, peace. In cooperation with the Boston Symphonic Festival nature and tradition have provided an ideal place for the school, he said.

Olin Downes Speaks

Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, referred to the "shift of balance in musical power from Europe to America," and added that "faith, conviction, purpose and vision of the future can reshape this world from the forces of darkness."

Reginald C. Foster, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, acknowledged gifts of scholarships from the Juilliard Foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music, American Society of Composers and Publishers and the gift of the new music shed organ by the Carnegie Foundation. The instrument was played publicly today for the first time by E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra.

Professor G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, who is on the faculty of the new school, led the chorus of 200 students in singing a new choral work by Randall Thompson of Philadelphia. The assembly sang a stanza of "America" and Mr. Dane invited all to attend a tea in the beautiful Tanglewood Gardens as guests of the orchestra.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, came from Dublin, N. H., for the event and are staying at the Lenox Club. Mrs. Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, after a family ownership of eighty years, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Music Festival and other officers attended.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1940

Boston Symphony Opens Berkshire Center for Music

Lenox, Mass.—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion.

Hope for Humanity

He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said. "There is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the Orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last.

"At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a Music Center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Enest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

Looks to Future

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Mr. Dane, who acted as chairman.

Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

There was an address by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty at the Music Center, and who will give a series of lectures. Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphonic Orchestra, spoke in acknowledgment of the generous grant of the Rockefeller Foundation, the fine organ given by the Carnegie Foundation, and the scholarships donated by the Juilliard Foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

Message from Governor

The following telegram from Governor Leverett Saltonstall was read: "Extremely sorry Mrs. Saltonstall and I cannot be with you at opening of the Berkshire Music Center. Please accept greetings of Commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestations of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity, never more needed than today. I wish you every success."

The Festival Chorus then sang a dedicatory piece which was composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Mr. Thompson will shortly visit the school as one of its guest lecturers.

Festival Chorus

The Festival Chorus of 200 was led by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will begin rehearsals tomorrow on Bach's B minor Mass, scheduled for performance at the festival, Aug. 17.

The exercises opened as E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played the new organ for the first time. A reception followed the exercises in the beautiful gardens of Tanglewood where the student body and invited guests met the faculty. The following wives of the faculty poured tea: Mrs. Olin Downes, Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth, Mrs. Herbert Graf, Mrs. Howard Abell, Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mrs. Jean Bedetti, Mrs. Julius Theodorowicz, Mrs. Georges Mager, Mrs. Victor Polatschek, Mrs. Fernand Gillet, Mrs. Robert Gundersen.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 9 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center Is Formally Inaugurated

Distinguished Gathering Meets in Tanglewood; School Begins Today for 340 Students

PITTSFIELD, July 8—Hailed as a unique venture for peace in a war-torn world, the only school of its kind in the entire globe, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, was formally inaugurated this afternoon before a distinguished gathering.

Tuesday morning the 340 students in the school, including nearly 150 in the master classes, known as the Institute, will commence six weeks of study.

Dream Comes True

The music center, under Serge Koussevitsy, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the realization of a dream which he has carried with him since his earliest years in Russia. After Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston had given the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Orchestra her historic estate at Stockbridge, he saw the dream coming true. Today, he said, as he pointed to the company on the stage of the music shed behind him, an outstanding faculty has been assembled. Professional musicians, and those intending to make music their profession, may find here the finest instruction, and persons using music as their avocation may live and work in inspiring surroundings.

On the stage were Ernest B. Danes, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who acted as chairman of the meeting; Albert Spalding of Stockbridge, eminent violinist; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, famous composers, who will teach composition to a limited number of pupils; Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Orchestra, and the other first chairs of the orchestra, who will be part of the school's faculty.

(Continued on Second Page)

(Continued From First Page)

Mr. Spalding pointed out that perhaps this year will prove the beginning of a great renaissance in art, and that it will be fathered by the music center. He noted that 125 years ago Napoleon's armies had overrun Europe, and were battering at the gates of Vienna. And during that time Beethoven was writing his greatest works.

Mr. Downes saw the music center as the commencement of a true democracy, a democracy of art in which the professional artist as well as the businessman join in a common interest. Such a democracy, nurtured on a faith in its ultimate triumph, he felt could be the antidote for the faith in destiny which has carried Hitler so far.

Plays New Organ

The exercises opened with E. Powers Biggs, organist of the Boston Orchestra, playing the new festival organ for the first time, and ended with the festival chorus of 200 voices, composed of members of the school, singing for the first time anywhere a new work by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. The piece "Hallelujah" for four parts, sung a cappella, was written for the dedication of the music center, and music for it arrived from the composer only three hours before it was given this afternoon. For an hour and a half before the services, G. Wallace Woodworth, who will direct the choruses of the school, rehearsed with his brand new chorus, and the result of his labors was an excellent rendition of what apparently is not an easy work to sing.

Tea was served to several hundred in the gardens of Tanglewood following the exercises in the shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 10 1940

Tanglewood Changes Made

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear, so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor Mass Aug. 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus, trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center, which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the center, have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood are open to public inspection.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

JUL 10 1940

Berkshire Music Fete Scheduled for August

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three week-ends in August. The program covers nine concerts, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting the entire series.

The symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., has become an important annual feature in the summer social life of New England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 10 1940

Berkshire School Of Music Opened With 340 Pupils

Stockbridge, Mass. (INS)—Koussevitzky's dream came true yesterday.

Twenty-seven years ago Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started a great school of music in Moscow. The revolution blasted the dream, temporarily. Eleven years ago he attempted to carry out the plan at White Plains, N. Y. But then came the depression.

Now at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Hills estate given the Boston Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a school of music has been opened for the summer with 340 pupils—amateurs taking a six weeks' course and professors of music attempting to rise in musical careers.

During the last three weeks—beginning Aug. 1—the Berkshire symphonic festival will be in progress.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 10 1940

MUSIC CENTER HAS OPENED

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Addresses Gathering at Tanglewood, Lenox

Lenox, Mass., July 10.—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the Orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the corner-stone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who acted as chairman. Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

There was an address by Olin Downs, music critic of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty at the Music Center, and who will give a series of lectures. Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, spoke in acknowledgment of the generous grant of the Rockefeller Foundation. the fine organ given by the Carnegie Foundation, and the scholarships donated by the Juilliard Foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 11 1940

Koussevitzky Sees A Dream Come True

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 10—With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

JUL 11 1940

"So long,

Dreams Realized At Music Center

Great Music School Forms In Berkshires.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. – (AP) – With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

The dream began in 1913-14, Dr. Kousseitsky explained Tuesday to an audince ofg 1,000 in the flatiron shaped music shed, when he organized what he felt would become one of the great schools of music in a residential district of Moscow.

But the war, and then the Russian revolution came, and after that he came to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony. So it was not until 1929 that he tried again; this time in White Plains, N. Y.

The depression checked off that attempt. Now, in another war year, the center is an actuality, due to efforts of the board of trustees and the Boston Symphony, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and a faculty of Americans and Europeans which includes such names as Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes, Herbert Gray, Abram Chasins and others — not to mention all the principals of the Boston Symphony.

The school accepted half the applicants, George E. Judd, manager of the Symphony, said. Of the 340 chosen, a third are professionals studying definitely for musical careers, and the remainder is made up of amateurs who want to spend six weeks in contact with great music.

The last three weeks of the school overlap the three weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the first program of which is set for Aug. 1. Opening exercises included talks by Ernest B. Dane, Dr. Koussevitzky, Reginald C. Foster and Downes.

As a benediction there was the first performance of an "Alleliua" written especially for the occasion by Randall Thompson.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 10 1940

Opening of the Music Centre at beautiful Tanglewood in the Berkshires brings to realization a project which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has long had in mind. For it the Berkshire Music Festival concerts in the summer, now firmly established, have paved the way. But the expanded activities of the Centre, one believes, are destined to have a far greater influence on the development of music in America. There will be opportunities for the acquirement of technical skill in performance or conducting. And one of the aims is to encourage and develop American talent in the creation of fine music. Happily also opportunities are furnished for music-lovers who are not looking toward a professional career. It is as important to train our audiences as our performers and composers. This project comes into being at a time when the cables from abroad almost daily are announcing the abandonment of festivals and kindred cultural developments abroad. As Dr. Koussevitzky said at the opening of the Centre: "So long as culture and art exist, there is hope for humanity and all those who be-ieve in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there ever as a time to speak of music, it now in the new world."

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1940

Boston Symphony Opens Berkshire Center for Music

Lenox, Mass.—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion.

Hope for Humanity

He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said. "There is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with

DANCING MUSICAL "Shadow Play"
With Harrison & Fisher
Mon. to Fri. Eves. 8:30—66c, $1.10, $1.49. Sat. Eve. 83c, $1.10, $1.65.
Mats. Wed. & Fri. 2:30—55c & 99c.
(Tax Incl.)
Reservations at Steiger's, 2-4203

WEBSTER
AIR CONDITIONED
ALWAYS DELIGHTFULLY
COOL and COMFORTABLE
Tyrone Power—Dorothy Lamour
JOHNNY APOLLO
Linda Darnell—STAR DUST
Blue Orchid Dinnerware

RIVOLI
Mickey Rooney
YOUNG TOM EDISON
Loretta Young—Ray Milland
THE DOCTOR TAKES A WIFE

PLAZA WINDSOR
James Cagney—Ann Sheridan
TORRID ZONE
Wayne Morris—Rosemary Lane
ANGEL FROM TEXAS

DOORS OPEN DAILY 9:30—10c 'TIL 1
10c PROVEN PICTURE 15c
WED. 3 — PROVEN REQUEST — 3
Tyrone Power - M. Loy - G. Brent
"The Rains Came"
--- ALSO ---
Gary Cooper - C. Colbert
"BLUEBEARD'S 8TH WIFE"

[illegible] gar-[illegible] as guest [illegible] the [illegible] Symphony o[illegible]

Mrs Gorham Brooks and daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, came down from Dublin, N. H., for the event and are staying at the Lenox club. Mrs Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappam, after family ownership of 80 years, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and other officers of Berkshire Music festival attended.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 9 - 1940

Berkshire Music Center Is Formally Inaugurated

Distinguished Gathering Meets in Tanglewood; School Begins Today for 340 Students

PITTSFIELD, July 8—Hailed as a unique venture for peace in a war-torn world, the only school of its kind in the entire globe, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, was formally inaugurated this afternoon before a distinguished gathering.

Tuesday morning the 340 students in the school, including nearly 150 in the master classes, known as the institute, will commence six weeks of study.

Dream Comes True

The music center, under Serge Koussevitsy, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the realization of a dream which he has carried with him since his earliest years in Russia. After Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston had given the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Orchestra her historic estate at Stockbridge, he saw the dream coming true. Today, he said, as he pointed to the company on the stage of the music shed behind him, an outstanding faculty has been assembled. Professional musicians, and those intending to make music their profession, may find here the finest instruction, and persons using music as their avocation may live and work in inspiring surroundings.

On the stage were Ernest B. Danes, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who acted as chairman of the meeting; Albert Spalding of Stockbridge, eminent violinist; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, famous composers, who will teach composition to a limited number of pupils; Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Orchestra, and the other first chairs of the orchestra, who will be part of the school's faculty.

(Continued on Second Page)

(Continued From First Page)

Mr. Spalding pointed out that perhaps this year will prove the beginning of a great renaissance in art, and that it will be fathered by the music center. He noted that 125 years ago Napoleon's armies had overrun Europe, and were battering at the gates of Vienna. And during that time Beethoven was writing his greatest works.

Mr. Downes saw the music center as the commencement of a true democracy, a democracy of art in which the professional artist as well as the businessman join in a common interest. Such a democracy, nurtured on a faith in its ultimate triumph, he felt could be the antidote for the faith in destiny which has carried Hitler so far.

Plays New Organ

The exercises opened with E. Powers Biggs, organist of the Boston Orchestra, playing the new festival organ for the first time, and ended with the festival chorus of 200 voices, composed of members of the school, singing for the first time anywhere a new work by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. The piece "Hallelujah" for four parts, sung a cappella, was written for the dedication of the music center, and music for it arrived from the composer only three hours before it was given this afternoon. For an hour and a half before the services, G. Wallace Woodworth, who will direct the choruses of the school, rehearsed with his brand new chorus, and the result of his labors was an excellent rendition of what apparently is not an easy work to sing.

Tea was served to several hundred in the gardens of Tanglewood following the exercises in the shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
JUL 10 1940

Tanglewood Changes Made

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear, so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor Mass Aug. 15. This concert, opening at 7 p. m. with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus, trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center, which opens at Tanglewood next month.

The stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the center, have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new center. These features and others such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood are open to public inspection.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

JUL 10 1940

Berkshire Music Fete Scheduled for August

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three week-ends in August. The program covers nine concerts, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting the entire series.

The symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., has become an important annual feature in the summer social life of New England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 10 1940

Berkshire School Of Music Opened With 340 Pupils

Stockbridge, Mass. (INS)—Koussevitzky's dream came true yesterday.

Twenty-seven years ago Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started a great school of music in Moscow. The revolution blasted the dream, temporarily. Eleven years ago he attempted to carry out the plan at White Plains, N. Y. But then came the depression.

Now at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Hills estate given the Boston Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a school of music has been opened for the summer with 340 pupils—amateurs taking a six weeks' course and professors of music attempting to rise in musical careers.

During the last three weeks—beginning Aug. 1—the Berkshire symphonic festival will be in progress.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 10 1940

MUSIC CENTER HAS OPENED

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Addresses Gathering at Tanglewood, Lenox

Lenox, Mass., July 10.—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. This afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the Orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the corner-stone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who acted as chairman. Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

There was an address by Olin Downs, music critic of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty at the Music Center, and who will give a series of lectures. Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, spoke in acknowledgment of the generous grant of the Rockefeller Foundation. the fine organ given by the Carnegie Foundation, and the scholarships donated by the Juilliard Foundation, the president of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 11 1940

Koussevitzky Sees A Dream Come True

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 10—With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

JUL 11 1940

"So long, [illegible]

Dreams Realized At Music Center

Great Music School Forms In Berkshires.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. – (AP) – With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

The dream began in 1913-14, Dr. Kousseitsky explained Tuesday to an audince ofg 1,000 in the flatiron shaped music shed, when he organized what he felt would become one of the great schools of music in a residential district of Moscow.

But the war, and then the Russian revolution came, and after that he came to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony. So it was not until 1929 that he tried again; this time in White Plains, N. Y.

The depression checked off that attempt. Now, in another war year, the center is an actuality, due to efforts of the board of trustees and the Boston Symphony, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and a faculty of Americans and Europeans which includes such names as Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes, Herbert Gray, Abram Chasins and others — not to mention all the principals of the Boston Symphony.

The school accepted half the applicants, George E. Judd, manager of the Symphony, said. Of the 340 chosen, a third are professionals studying definitely for musical careers, and the remainder is made up of amateurs who want to spend six weeks in contact with great music.

The last three weeks of the school overlap the three weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the first program of which is set for Aug. 1. Opening exercises included talks by Ernest B. Dane, Dr. Koussevitzky, Reginald C. Foster and Downes.

As a benediction there was the first performance of an "Alleliua" written especially for the occasion by Randall Thompson.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 10 1940

Opening of the Music Centre at beautiful Tanglewood in the Berkshires brings to realization a project which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has long had in mind. For it the Berkshire Music Festival concerts in the summer, now firmly established, have paved the way. But the expanded activities of the Centre, one believes, are destined to have a far greater influence on the development of music in America. There will be opportunities for the acquirement of technical skill in performance or conducting. And one of the aims is to encourage and develop American talent in the creation of fine music. Happily also opportunities are furnished for music-lovers who are not looking toward a professional career. It is as important to train our audiences as our performers and composers. This project comes into being at a time when the cables from abroad almost daily are announcing the abandonment of festivals and kindred cultural developments abroad. As Dr. Koussevitzky said at the opening of the Centre: "So long as culture and art exist, there is hope for humanity and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there ever was a time to speak of music, it is now in the new world."

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 10 1940

51

MUSIC

"SLUMBER" MUSIC

The radio audience has always been divided on the type of "slumber" music it prefers at the end of the day. One group urges dance bands; the other, string ensembles and peaceful taunes that quiet the mind instead of stirring the feet. Up to last week the jazz bands prevailed on the midnight air. Now it seems the string ensembles are to have their inning.

The name bands have been ordered off the major networks by the American Federation of Musicians, which has informed its members that all such bands not bound by contracts must sign-off. For those listeners who favor more plaintive melodies at night the "strike" comes, as the broadcasters see it, as a blessing in disguise. They say that if sufficient number of listeners indicate that slumber music and not jazz is favored the dance bands may find it difficult to get back on the wave-lengths after the controversy is negotiated.

The union called off the bands for not employing the required number of musicians on their staff orchestras.

BERKSHIRE CENTER

More than 300 students assembled at the opening of the new Berkshire Music Center, on the "Tanglewood" estate of the Boston Symphony orchestra, near Lenox, July 8. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the center's director, who conceived the idea of this large-sized school for interpretation through practice and performance, made an address to students.

During their pursuit of music through performance in association with the musicians of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky, its conductor, those attending the school will have as their surroundings the same buildings and grounds where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held. These buildings have been altered for studio and class work purposes.

Throughout the six-week session of this summer school, Dr. Koussevitzky will give instruction in conducting to the four advanced musicians whom he has accepted as pupils. The privilege of attending these lessons has been granted to certain others.

The Institute Orchestra of 60 highly trained musicians will be coached collectively or individually by musicians of the Boston Symphony. Dr. Herbert Graf will hold a class in operatic interpretation and Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland will teach a few advanced pupils in composition.

The activities mentioned constitute the curriculum of the upper department of the school known as the "Institute." In this, only skilled musicians, who have passed most rigid tests, are accepted.

More than 200 of the students have enrolled in the department, called the Academy. This is composed of students not necessarily intending to become professional musicians, who desire to widen their musical horizon by performing scores with the players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Under G. Wallace Woodworth, the school's festival chorus will prepare Bach's Mass in B minor for presentation at one of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held at "Tanglewood," Aug. 1-18, during the last three weeks of the school's sessions. Mr. Woodworth also will hold classes in choral conducting, and Malcolm Holmes will train and lead the Academy's orchestra, an amateur group.

Another feature of the curriculum will be the series of lectures to be given by Dr. Koussevitzky, Olin Downes, Howard Abell, Archibald Davison, Carleton Sprague Smith, Randall Thompson, Augustus D. Zanzig and others. In addition to study of the festival repertoire the lectures will include particular consideration of the music being rehearsed on the school's orchestral program.

E. B. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 13 1940

Conductors Perform at Tanglewood

Walter Prichard Eaton Gives Talk At Music Center

Three members of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's class in conducting at Tanglewood last night, demonstrated some of the finesse they had acquired under the tutelage of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert was given by the Institute orchestra in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Shed.

In the presence of students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and a few friends, Leonard Bernstein of Curtis Institue; Richard Bales of Juilliard and Thor Johnson of the University of Michigan conducted in that order. They were given enthusiastic applause and recalled repeatedly.

Mr. Bernstein conducted Randall Thompson's Symphony No. 2; Mr. Bales, Debussy's Nocturne and Mr. Johnson, the Brahms Academic Overture. Mr. Thompson who has been lecturing at the Center this week was in attendance for the performance of his symphony. Bernstein is one of his pupils in Philadelphia.

Dr. Koussevitzky was delighted at the performance declaring that "soon, America will have five great native conductors."

As a concluding feature of the afternoon's program for students and faculty yesterday, Prof. Walter Prichard Eaton of Sheffield gave a talk on "The Berkshires." He and Mrs. Eaton and Mr. Thompson were dinner guests at the Curtis Hotel of George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The barn on the southern slope of Tanglewood is being given concentrated use every day by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth's Festival chorus. The chorus is rehearsing the Bach B. Minor mass for performance at the Festival next month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 12 1940

REHEARSAL TICKETS TO BE DISTRIBUTED

J. M. Chambers Has Passes to Boston Symphony Orchestra Sessions for Students.

James Morley Chambers, supervisor of music in the local schools, stated today that arrangements have been made again this year for the distribution of free tickets to rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood on Aug. 3, 10, and 17, for those who took the laymen's course in music appreciation given at Drury high school this past year and others interested in music.

Mr. Chambers said that anyone interested in securing these tickets can communicate with him, with Donald W. Fowler, principal of the high school, or the high school office.

The plan of giving music courses in the schools of the county was inaugurated last year by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. In these courses the students learn the fundamentals of symphonic music. It is believed that this knowledge will bring about a better understanding and hence a better appreciation of symphonic music. The plan worked successfully last year, and it is expected that a fine group of Berkshire students will show up at the rehearsals this year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
JUL 13 1940

With the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a 27-year-old dream of Serge Koussevitzky's became an actuality.

Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, is now the seat of a school of music comparable with the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which next month on the same grounds again will demonstrate how it gained its reputation as probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

The school accepted half the applicants, George E. Judd, manager of the symphony, said. Of the 340 chosen, a third are professionals studying definitely for musical careers, and the remainder is made up of amateurs who want to spend six weeks in contact with great music.

The last three weeks of the school overlap the three weeks of the Berkshire symphonic festival, the first program of which is set for Aug. 1. Opening exercises included talks by Ernest B. Dane, Dr. Koussevitzky, Reginald C. Foster and Downes.

* * *

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
JUL 11 1940

Town Tattler

By Jake Rachman

Four thousand gallons of pure, cold spring water are going to waste down the sewer every hour at John Yager's bottling plant, Fiftieth street and Woolworth avenue, he says. That's enough water to supply a goodly part of town if impounded and released when needed. Yager says he can use only a small fraction of it and that it is bubbling up in a big round pool as strong as ever, even down through the drouth years. The spring, according to local historians, must be at least 90 years old.

* * *

When you see "Our Town" and hear the music of Aaron Copeland, it may remind you that Copeland at present is the cottage chum of Richard Duncan, director of the Omaha university orchestra and the Little Symphony. They are at the Sergei Koussevitzky colony at Lenox, Mass., where the famous musician has taken four conductors for study under his wing for the summer, the Omahan being one of them.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 13 1940

WHERE ELSE BUT IN AMERICA?

A dream dreamed in Russia, driven from the old world to the new, finds sanctuary in America. Tanglewood, a magnificent estate given the Boston Symphony orchestra by a public-spirited citizen, is now the seat of a school of music, probably the best prepared summer music festival in the world.

The dream began in 1913-14, in a flat iron shaped music shed in the outskirts of Moscow, Dr. Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston symphony, explained to a Boston audience last week. Came the war and the revolution. And the dream, as have so many dreams, sought sanctuary in America.

Where else but in America? Not only in Boston, but in Grand Rapids, and Knoxville, Omaha, Kalamazoo and Tulsa, symphony orchestras are preserving sanity through harmony in this sorely distraught world.

Tulsa's starlight concerts open their tenth season in Skelly stadium Tuesday night. It is one of the compensations of our summer. An average attendance of more than 3,000 persons has borne testimony to the pleasure and appreciation which Tulsa audiences draw from this excellent body of musicians, under the baton of another able director, whose fatherland is no longer free. His dream, too, is realized here.

It is in a spirit of reverence then that those who attend these lovely concerts under the stars may well sit in silent contemplation of a blessing which today is almost uniquely American.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 15 1940

Gives Address

Prof. Walter Prichard Eaton addressed the music school students at Tanglewood in the Berkshires yesterday afternoon, and was later a guest at the dinner given by Mr. George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mass. Mrs. Eaton, Mr. Randall Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman were also dinner guests.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 11 1940

School Pupils Invited to Tanglewood

May Attend Boston Symphony Rehearsals Again

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival it was voted to send again this year invitations to selected students of all the public and parochial schools in Berkshire Couny to attend certain rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The invitations apply to the rehearsals of Aug. 3, 10 and 17.

All students in Berkshire schools who took the laymen's music course of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival are automatically included in this invitation. Other students selected by the music supervisors and school officials are also invited to attend.

F. Carl Gorman, music supervisor in Pittsfield, has received 300 tickets for each of the three rehearsals. The Notre Dame School in Pittsfield is also planning to send a large group.

Mr. Gorman said this morning that junior high and high school students may apply for tickets at the music room, No. 108, Pittsfield High School, on Mondays and Tuesdays, from 2 to 4 PM and Wednesdays from 11 AM to 3 PM. Transportation is needed to take students to Tanglewood, and persons wishing to offer cars will be given free rehearsal tickets. They are asked to give their names and addresses to Mr. Gorman.

The plan of giving music courses in the schools of the county was inaugurated last year by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. In these courses the students learn the fundamentals of symphonic music. It is believed that this knowledge will bring about a better understanding and hence a better appreciation of symphonic music. The plan worked successfully last year, and it is hoped that a fine group of Berkshire students will show up at the rehearsals this year.

Any inquiries may be addressed to Miss Alice Riggs, of Stockbridge, who is chairman of the committee in charge of these laymen's music courses.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
JUL 14 1940

Music Center Inaugurated

Novel School Opened By Boston Symphony

LENOX, Mass., July 13—For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. Monday afternoon at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's estate in the Berkshire hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization and its hopes for further expansion.

He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the annual Berkshire festivals together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last.

"At a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, I spoke of my vision of a Music center. I shall never forget the words of our president, Ernest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. "Go ahead—we cannot afford to lose it!"

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

Berkshire's Music Center

In his brief speech at the opening, on Monday, of the Boston Symphony orchestra's music center at Tanglewood, Dr Koussevitzky told his hearers that he first dreamed of a music center at Moscow in 1913 but war and revolution intervened. Now the world is at war again, but its distressed state makes all the more precious this refuge for music among the Berkshire hills. Music at Tanglewood is no cloistered art, delightful as the symphony concerts are to residents and summer visitors.

The festival itself draws thousands of visitors who travel great distances to hear as many concerts as they can manage, and its prestige is enlarging Berkshire's summer colonies. But besides this the summer school, which opened Monday with 425 pupils and is capable of great expansion, draws serious students of music from all parts of the country to enjoy the rare opportunity to study under eminent specialists in so inspiring a musical atmosphere. Nor is active participation lacking. At the opening exercises a chorus of 200 singers led by Prof G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, a member of the school faculty, presented a new work by Randall Thompson, and is hard at work on choral music for the festival next month.

Even last year the mutterings of political volcanos did not deter a good many Americans from sailing for music study with eminent teachers in Paris, London, Milan, Vienna and other famous music centers in Europe. Before that Dr Koussevitzky had made it a practice to visit the old world every summer, to keep in touch with the musical trend and to find new scores suitable for performance. But even before the great crash he found the state of Europe too depressed musically to justify these visits, and became all the more convinced of the need of doing the utmost that can be done for music in America.

A good while ago it became unnecessary for Americans to go abroad for a first-rate musical education, and at present the United States is becoming the mecca of European musicians. Nor is there lack of interest in serious music, as many musicians have feared might be the case because of such distractions as automobiles, games, radio and the films. The popular response to the Berkshire festival is a good sign, and so is the number, sure to increase year by year, of the professional musicians and teachers of music who find it worth-while to journey to Berkshire for the rare advantages which the Boston Symphony orchestra's school of music makes possible.

How swiftly the standards of musical proficiency have been rising in America is also illustrated in the creation of the young people's orchestra, now rehearsing at Atlantic City, which Leopold Stokowski is to take to South America for a good-will tour. Twenty years ago competent young players could probably have been found for most of the orchestral instruments, but their selection would not have been a very difficult task.

That both numbers and quality have risen greatly has been shown in recent years in broadcasts by collective high school organizations, and in the selection of young musicians for this tour the competitors in most parts of the country were so numerous and so accomplished that the choice was not easy. Music in our own country is looking up, and the same must be true of the rest of the new world, if we can judge from South America's welcome to Toscanini and his orchestra.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 14 1940

Changes at Tanglewood

WHEN MUSIC lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three week ends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they will note many changes. Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections. The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass Aug. 15. This concert, opening at 7 o'clock with an intermission of an hour, will feature the Berkshire Festival Chorus trained at the orchestra's new Berkshire Music Center, which is open at Tanglewood this month. Stage and wings of a theater for use in ensemble work and by classes in operatic dramatics to be conducted by Dr. Herbert Graf at the Center, have been completed. This construction, complete for this year, was made possible with a portion of the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. The house, garage and barn at Tanglewood have been transformed for use by the 325 students and faculty of the new Center. Those features and others such as the gardens and the lovely grounds at Tanglewood are open to public inspection.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION & REPUBLICAN
JUL 14 1940

LENOX WILL BENEFIT FROM MUSIC SCHOOL

Businessmen Pleased at Prospect of 350 Students' Stay, Also at Coming Festival

From Our Special Correspondent

Lenox, July 13—The outstanding event during the past week was the opening Monday of the new music school at Tanglewood under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra. This is the first time such an opportunity has ever been offered to the public to study under the tutorship of one of the leading orchestras of the country. About 350 students from all parts of the United States were present at the music shed to hear the welcoming addresses from the famed conductor and many other celebrities in music who were present for the event.

To the businessmen of this town this added business, which the students are bound to bring during their six weeks' stay, is most welcome. In a season which is far from good due to economic conditions this new source of business will go a long way toward averaging the year. The students are staying at the private schools in town which can accommodate approximately 100 at each school. The remaining students are rooming in private homes throughout the town. The schools which have been opened for the students' use are Cranwell Preparatory school, Lenox School for Boys and Fox Hollow school.

The school will continue for six weeks until the final three concerts of the festival on the 15th, 17th and 18th of August. Plans are being made for even a larger number of students attending next season.

The town has been making every effort to make things pleasant and attractive for the guests expected for the festival. The main street has been resurfaced with half-inch rock and tarmac as has the road out to the festival grounds. The sidewalks and roadsides have been put in shape and all back roads through the town have been scraped making these motor drives as pleasant as possible. It is estimated that every possible room in town will be taken during the three weeks of the festival, which is one week longer than usual.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 14 1940

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA.

THIS column was privileged to be present at one of the most significant events in the history of cultural life of America; the opening, last Monday afternoon of the Berkshire Music center at "Tanglewood," near Stockbridge, Mass.

The exercises were held in the great music shed where a distinguished audience was present, including many of the summer residents of the Berkshires and the student body of the school.

After a short musical program on the newly installed organ in the music shed, Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, introduced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and sponsor of the idea of a summer school in connection with the symphonic festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky, dressed in a white linen suit, contrasting with the formal evening clothes he wears at the concerts, and not immediately recognized by the members of the audience, spoke at length on the wonderful opportunity for America in wresting the summer musical capital of the world from war-torn Europe.

Twenty-seven years ago Serge Koussevitzky started a great school along similar lines in Moscow only to have his dream shattered by the Revolution. Eleven years ago he again attempted to establish another school at White Plains and again his plan for a great music center was interrupted by the depression. Now at "Tanglewood," the Berkshire hills estate given to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a school of music has been opened for the summer with 340 pupils — amateurs and professionals—taking a six-weeks course in every branch of the art under the instruction of the masters in their particular fields. The final three weeks of the semester will coincide with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Seated on the stage were Miss Robinson Smith, president of the festival; Albert Spalding, American violinist and summer resident of Stockbridge, who spoke on the challenge to America to carry the musical torch to the war-ridden world; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times; Jesus Sanroma, official pianist of the orchestra; Aaron Copland, pianist and composer; Paul Hindemith, composer; members of the faculty and several invited guests.

* * *

Berkshire Program

The Berkshire Symphonic festival has established an Albany branch ticket office at the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street, where subscriptions may be reserved or single concert tickets obtained. Owing to the conditions in Europe, the trustees of the festival anticipate the greatest season in its seven years of existence, and urge those who expect to attend the concerts to make their selection of seats as early as possible. The complete program for the three series of nine concerts is as follows:

SERIES A.

Thursday, August 1—at 8:30 p. m.
Beethoven, Symphony No. 1;
Schumann, Symphony No. 1;
Sibelius, Symphony No. 1,
Saturday, August 3—at 8:30 p. m.
Berlioz, Overture in "Benvenuto Cellini"
Strauss, "Don Quixote," soloist, Gregor Piatgorsky
Harris, Symphony No. 3
Debussy, "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune"
Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No. 2)
Sunday, August 4—at 3:30 p. m.
Mozart, Symphony in E flat, No. 3
Stravinsky, Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Brahms, Symphony No. 2

SERIES B.

Tchiakovsky (commemorating Programmes of Beethoven and Tchiakovsky (commemorating the Hundredth Anniversary of Tchiakovsky's birth)

Thursday, August 8—at 8:30 p m.
Beethoven, "Egmont" Overture
Beethoven, Violin Concerto, Soloist, Albert Spalding
Tchiakovsky, Symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique")
Saturday, August 10—at 8:30 p. m.
Beethoven, Overture, "Coriolanus"
Beethoven, Symphony No. 4
Tchiakoxsky, Symphony No. 4
Sunday, August 11—at 3:30 p. m.
Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale")
Tchiakovsky, Symphony No. 5

SERIES C.

Thursday, August 15—at 7:00 p. m.
Bach, Mass in B Minor
Berkshire Festival Chorus
SoloisSeSEHRetaoinetaointao
Soloists: Elizabth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain, Alexander Kipnis
Saturday, August 17—at 8:30 p. m.
Prokofieff, "Classical" Symphony
Hindemith, "Mathis der Maler"
Mozart, Concert Aria
Beethoven, "Adelaide"
Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Faure, Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande"
Respighi, "Pines of Rome"
Sunday, August 18—at 3:30 p. m.
Haydn, Symphony in G Minor, No. 88
Sibelius, Symphony No. 7
Brahms, Symphony No. 1

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 16 1940

Unique School Of Music Opens

NEW YORK (U.P.)—The Berkshire Music Center, a unique school with a symphony orchestra conductor and some of his players as a faculty, opened in Lenox, Mass., recently for a six-week term.

About 325 pupils, chosen from 600 applicants, are attending the school and study under Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and 20 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The center will be divided into two sections—The Institute for Advanced Study and The Academy, or general school. The institute includes a class in orchestral conducting, under direct supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky; an orchestra of skilled players, who are studying and perform under the Boston Symphony conductor and who are being coached by principals of the orchestra; a class in opera dramatics, taught by Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera, and a class in advanced composition, conducted by Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith.

The Academy has no formal entrance requirements and the main part of its work includes singing, playing, lectures and concerts. The Academy chorus is studying under G. Wallace Woodworth, chairman of the Harvard University music department, and will assist in performances of the 1940 Berkshire festival concerts.

The course, costing each pupil $100, is designed to cover collective performance and thus will supplement rather than duplicate the training available in established schools of music.

Rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Summer home in Tanglewood are open to the students.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 16 1940

Festival Sponsors Children's Course

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18 but it is interested in more than that.

For two years the Festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the Festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays.

Tickets for the nine Festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUL 17 1940

Betty Cook With KDKA Group

Pittsburgh, July 16.

Fresh out of Roanoke College, Virginia, where she got her degree just a month ago, Betty Cook, without any previous experience, has been added to artists staff at KDKA and spotted for the summer as featured vocalist on Maurice Spitalny's beer-sponsored Tap Time program.

She's a lyric coloratura and is pinch-hitting on the show for Mary Martha Briney, who has gone to Stockbridge, Mass., for a summer of study at Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center.

ca

83

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 16 1940

CITY NEWS

FESTIVAL AIDS LOVE OF MUSIC AMONG CHILDREN

Boys Win Highest Honors at Conclusion of Lectures In Berkshires

The Berkshire Symphonic Festiva' is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18, but it is interested in more than that.

Honor Awards

For two years the festival has sponsored the layman's music course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant. Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils; most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, boys not girls won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High School, scored 98 and Neil Como of the Drury High School in North Adams was second with 97.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 16 1940

FESTIVAL AIDS LOVE OF MUSIC AMONG CHILDREN

Boys Win Highest Honors at Conclusion of Lectures In Berkshires

The Berkshire Symphonic Festiva' is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18, but it is interested in more than that.

Honor Awards

For two years the festival has sponsored the layman's music course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant. Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, boys not girls won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High School, scored 98 and Neil Como of the Drury High School in North Adams was second with 97.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 16 1940

Berkshire Festival Lists Nine Concerts

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will present nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, August 1 to 18.

For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire county public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

JUL 16 1940

Berkshire Festival Gives Music Course

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, which is presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to Aug. 18, has sponsored the Layman's Music course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Katherine Philbrick of New York, and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, the boys won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High school, scored 98 and Neil Como of the Drury High school in North Adams was second with 97.

The festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

JUL 17 1940

Mrs. Chamberlain Local Representative For 1940 Of Berkshire Festival

Mrs. Arthur P. Chamberlain of Mason St., is local representative for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, at Tanglewood, on motor route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox. There will be three series as follows: A, Aug. 1, 3 and 4; B, Aug. 8, 10 and 11; C, Aug. 15, 17 and 18.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was established in 1934 by summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, not for monetary profit, but to bring joy and beauty, to promote the cause of music, to establish a great fesival center in America. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has its own home on a lovely 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. On this estate, the former Tappan place, Hawthorne lived and write "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and other tales.

Here in 1938 before a capacity audience, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival dedicated its music shed with a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The music shed, seating over 6,000, is unique in America. Its utter utilitarian simplicity only emphasizes the beauty of its design. Also at "Tanglewood" there is being established this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center. The school will operate six weeks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 17 1940

Music for Bristol

By William J. Murphy

Last week Russian-born, double-bass virtuoso, conductor Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center School, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed for the first time 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges to spend six weeks of intensive study at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills. He opened his address by emphaizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist," he said, "there is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

Twenty seven years ago, in 1913, the conductor dreamed of establishing such a Music Center in his native city of Moscow. War and revolution nullified such a project. Again he returned to this thought when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This position, the annual Berkshire Festivals, together with the gift to the orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at least.

"Today the ground is set, and we lay the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Music lovers of Connecticut should be particularly anxious to attend the festival which begins Friday evening, August 1st, at eight-thirty. The festival itself is the outstanding event of its kind of which Americans can boast, and certainly, claim for their own.

Established in 1934 by summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, not for monetary profit, but to bring joy and beauty, it has promoted the cause of music and established a great festival center in America The new home is situated on a lovely 200 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. On this estate, the former Tappan place, Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of Seven Gables", "The Wonder Brook", and other tales. Here in 1938 before a capacity audience, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival dedicated its new music shed, which seats six thousand, with a superb concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction, of course, of Dr. Koussevitsky. Advance programs of this year's concert will appear in this column. And, for your information in making plans, all the concerts occur over week-ends.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

JUL 17 1940

BRILLIANT MUSIC FESTIVAL

The Berkshire Music festival scheduled to be held in the hills of Massachusetts in August promises to rival and perhaps surpass this year the brilliant festivals in Europe to which Americans annually made pilgrimages. Like art, music has taken wings and flown to American shores for a haven during the tumultous times in Europe. Under the direction of Dr. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, the Boston Symphony orchesrta promises to round out a musical event of international importance.

Actually the development of physical features which have made possible the American Salzburg came about through the inconsiderate performance of nature. Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY, impatient at the tumultous sound of a thunder storm, which drowned out his orchestra housed in a tent brought the situation to a climax in 1937. "Tanglewood" was donated to create a center, $80,000 was subscribed for an appropriate building, another large sum for the development of the scheme came from the Rockefeller foundation, and the Carnegie foundation contributed a $12,000 organ. A school has been opened in connection with the festival, and many of America's outstanding musicians will be in attendance. A series of three concerts, with a grand finale in the combined use of orchestra and assembled chorus in the performance of BACH'S "B Minor Mass" will round out the greatest musical event ever held in America.

Thus America comes of age musically. With such impetus to one of the arts during a year when the populace is attuned to defense and politics, the future of good music in America seems more than assured.

Indeed since the World war America's destiny as a guardian of music has been marked. But where there is peace and freedom the sentiment is ripening for an appreciation of the great heritage left by European masters, and the promotion likewise of American music made possible through the learning in the old world.

No longer must America travel to Europe to hear the best. It has now become an established institution in this country.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

JUL 20 1940

Mrs. Arthur P. Chamberlain of Mason St., is local representative for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, at Tanglewood, on motor route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox. There will be three series as follows: A, Aug. 1, 3 and 4; B, Aug. 8, 10 and 11; C, Aug. 15, 17 and 18.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

JUL 17 1940

Dr. and Mrs. Veeder To Motor East

DR. AND MRS. BORDEN S. VEEDER of Kent road, will leave Tuesday to drive east. They will visit friends on their way to Stockbridge, Mass., where they will attend three of the performances of the Berkshire music festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Afterward, they will spend some time in fishing at the French River in Ontario.

Mrs. Veeder's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Lovejoy Anderson, will spend the summer at the Veeder home. Another son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Talbot Rantoul, are visiting here for two weeks.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Koerber, 7953 Park drive, Hampton Park, will depart Saturday for Greenwich, Conn., to see their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hallett (Miss Katherine Koerber). After their visit they will go to Chatham on Cape Cod, Mass., for three weeks, and then journey to Stockbridge, Mass., to attend the last three performances of the Berkshire music festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. H. Bethune Hall moved last week to their newly built home at 33 Sussex, York Woods. They formerly lived at 7514 Byron place, Clayton.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 17 1940

Student Tickets For Festival Distributed

Tickets for three Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra now are being distributed in the music room of the Pittsfield High School.

They may be obtained there Monday and Tuesday afternoons from 2 to 4 and Wednesday from 11 to 3.

Extra drivers are needed to transport the school children to Tanglewood. Each driver will receive a free ticket to the rehearsal Those who are interested are requested to communicate with F. Carl Gorman, supervisor of music in the public schools.

The rehearsals will be held for three successive Saturday mornings at 10, starting Aug. 3.

SAVANNAH, GA.
TIMES

JUL 17 1940

350 Students Study Music

Lenox, Mass., July 16 (TP) 850 students are busy today working under the direction of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first session of the Berkshire Music Center.

The music center at Tanglewood, the estate owned by the Symphony Orchestra, is the fulfillment of a dream long cherished by Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. He had wanted to establish a rural music center ever since his young manhood in Russia. The acquisition comparatively recently of Tanglewood by the Boston Orchestra and the repeated successes of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals finally made it possible to establish the music school.

This year's Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held from August 1st to August 18th. The high point of the program will be the presentation of Bach's great B minor Mass by the Festival Choir of 200 voices on August 17th.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/18/40

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens July 8

Koussevitsky Welcomes 350 Students For First Season

For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. Monday afternoon, July 8, at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of the new school, in which he is taking pupils in conducting, addressed the 350 students who had come from many parts of the country, its leading music schools and colleges, and were assembled for the first time, in the Shed where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is held.

Dr. Koussevitzky described the inception of the idea, which he has cherished for many years, its present realization, and its hopes for further expansion. He opened his address by emphasizing the significance of a music center in America at the present time. "So long as culture and art exist", he said, "There is hope for humanity: and all those who believe in the values and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank. If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

The conductor told how he first dreamed of a Music Center in Moscow in 1913. The war and revolution made such a project impossible. Again he returned to these thoughts when he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the annual Berkshire Festivals together with the gift to the Orchestra of Tanglewood made the plan seem tangible at last. "At a meeting of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I spoke of my version of a Music Center. I shall never forget the words of our President, Mr. Earnest B. Dane, when I unfolded my plan. 'Go ahead— we cannot afford to lose it!'

"Today, the ground is set, and we lay the corner-stone of the Berkshire Music Center. I look into its future with faith and confidence."

Dr. Koussevitzky was introduced by Ernest B. Dane, President of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who acted as chairman. Mr. Dane then introduced Albert Spalding, the noted violinist. Mr. Spalding welcomed the new school as a trustee of the Berkshire Festival, and a permanent resident of the Berkshire community. Mr. Spalding is to appear as soloist at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given at Tanglewood August first to eighteenth.

There was an address by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who is a member of the faculty at the Music Center, and who will give a series of lectures. Reginald C. Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, spoke in acknowledgment of the generous grant of the Rockefeller Foundation, the fine organ given by the Carnegie Foundation, and the scholarships donated by the Juilliard Foundation, the President of the New England Conservatory of Music and the American Society of Composers and Publishers.

The following telegram from Governor Leverett Saltonstall was read: "Extremely sorry Mrs. Saltonstall and I cannot be with you at opening of the Berkshire Music Center. Please accept greetings of Commonwealth and convey to participants and friends my appreciation of your splendid undertaking. Such manifestations of one of the noblest of the arts goes far toward preserving highest ideals of humanity, never more needed than today. I wish you every success."

The Festival Chorus then sang a dedicatory piece which was composed for the occasion by Randall Thompson, director of the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Mr. Thompson will shortly visit the school as one of its guest lecturers The Festival Chorus of 200 was led by G. Wallace Woodworth, who will begin rehearsals tomorrow on Bach's B minor Mass, scheduled for performance at the Festival, August 17.

The exercises opened as E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played the new organ for the first time. A reception followed the exercises in the beautiful gardens of Tanglewood where the student body and invited guests met the faculty. The following wives of the faculty poured tea: Mrs. Olin Downes, Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth, Mrs. Herbert Graf, Mrs. Howard Abell, Mrs. Richard Burgin, Mrs. Jean Bedetti, Mrs. Julius Theodorowicz, Mrs. Georges Mager, Mrs. Victor Polatschek, Mrs. Fernand Gillet, Mrs. Robert Gunderson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 19 1940

FESTIVAL SALES SHATTER RECORDS

All Tickets for Rear Section Gone—Demand for Concert Seats Exceeds All Expectations.

All tickets for the popular seats in the extreme rear of the huge Berkshire Symphonic Festival shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge have been sold, it was announced today by the Festival management.

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Festival office at Stockbridge for the series of nine concerts to be given next month by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been sold. Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the Festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad, or both, cannot be ascertained, but the Festival office staff says that the demand is there. Therefore persons wishing tickets were urged today to order them as soon as possible in order to avoid disappointment.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's First symphony in C Major, Schumann's First symphony in B flat, and Sibelius Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

The grounds at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the new Berkshire Music Center, are ready for the opening. The parking area is reported to be in unusually fine condition, and the state police have already been organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 19 1940

Familiar Compositions On Berkshire Schedule

The Berkshire Festival concert on August 1 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky as the first in a series of nine summer programs will be presented in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusually fine condition, and State police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 20 1940

FESTIVAL OPENS ON AUG. 1

Record-Breaking Attendance Is Forseen at Tanglewood Shed

A record-breaking attendance is expected at the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 1, at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., when a program composed of the First symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced yesterday by the festival office.

Reservations for the nine concerts of the three-week event surpass all expectations of the festival authorities. There are no seats available for any of the concerts in the extreme rear section of the Music Shed, but tickets for single concerts may still be obtained by addressing the festival headquarters in Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
JUL 19 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Concerts Begin August 1

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky August 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given August 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusualy fine condition, and the State police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

PEABODY, MASS
ENTERPRISE
7/19/40

Michael Denesuk Playing In Boston Symphony Orchestra

Michael Denesuk of Audette street is currently playing with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky during their summer concerts in the Berkshires. He received this opportunity to learn under one of the great masters only after an exhaustive audition before Koussevitsky himself in Symphony Hall, Boston. Koussevitsky has often stated that any man whom he chooses to play for him is capable of playing with any orchestra in the country so that certainly places Denesuk up with the best musical talent tha he country affords.

Denesuk graduated from Peabody High School in 1935 and from there went to Tufts College where he majored in music, receiving his degree in 1939. Last year he returned to Tufts to work for his master's degree. While completing his studies he had complete charge of all musical organizations on the campus and had such phenomenal success that it is now said he will be offered a post as director of all musical units at the college for the coming year.

While in High School he was student leader of the High School orchestra and a winner of the George Peabody Medal for excellent scholarship and gave early promise of the budding genius that is now bursting into full flower under the tutelage of one of the greatest conductors in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HARTSDALE, N.Y
TIMES
7/19/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM

AMHERST, MASS
RECORD
7/17/40

CHILDREN'S MUSIC COURSES OFFERED AT BERKSHIRE

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood August 1st to 18th, but it is interested in more than that.

For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York, and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, yous, not girls, won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High School, scored 98 and Neil Como of the Drury High School in North Adams was second with 97.

The course has presented symphonic, operatic and chamber music and at the same time has given many children their first opportunity to know what different instruments look like.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Ticekts for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 19 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 20 1940

Tanglewood Concert Aug. 1-18

Reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in condition, and state police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 20 1940

Orchestra Led By Three Conductors

Tanglewood Audience Enthusiastic Over Program

Two men distinguished in the world of music and a third not so well known, conducted the institute orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood last night.

All three, Paul Hindemith, composer as well as conductor; Thor Johnson of the University of Michigan and Serge Koussevitzky, were all given enthusiastic applause when they had completed their assignments. Mr. Hindemith conducted the orchestra in a stirring redition of his own composition, concerto for strings and brass.

Mr. Johnson conducted the orchestra in the first movement of Wieniawski's violin concerto in D minor, with Eugene Orloff of New York as soloist. Mr. Johnson is one of Dr. Koussevitzky's pupils at the Center.

When Dr. Koussevitzky had completed Symphonie Fantastique, C major, by Berlioz, he was recalled repeatedly by thunderous applause and shouts from the audience of 500 students and guests standing in tribute.

Comments on the quality of the orchestra were heard everywhere. Olin Downes' music editor of the Now York Times remarked: "It is the most amazing and stimulating experience I've ever had."

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/18/40

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens July 8

Koussevitsky Welcomes 350 Students For First Season

For the first time in this country, a famous conductor and orchestra received a large student body as their pupils. Monday afternoon, July 8, at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate in the Berkshire Hills, Serge Koussevitzky spoke words of welcome at the inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Koussevitzky, as director of

THIS CLIPPING FROM

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 19 1940

Miss Helen M. Nims of 74 School street, librarian at the Waltham Public Library, is planning to attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge August 1 to 18. Nine concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the festival shed at "Tanglewood."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 19 1940

FESTIVAL SALES SHATTER RECORDS

All Tickets for Rear Section Gone—Demand for Concert Seats Exceeds All Expectations.

All tickets for the popular seats in the extreme rear of the huge Berkshire Symphonic Festival shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge have been sold, it was announced today by the Festival management.

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Festival office at Stockbridge for the series of nine concerts to be given next month by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been sold. Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the Festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad, or both, cannot be ascertained, but the Festival office staff says that the demand is there. Therefore persons wishing tickets were urged today to order them as soon as possible in order to avoid disappointment.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's First symphony in C Major, Schumann's First symphony in B flat, and Sibelius Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

The grounds at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the new Berkshire Music Center, are ready for the opening. The parking area is reported to be in unusually fine condition, and the state police have already been organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 19 1940

Familiar Compositions On Berkshire Schedule

The Berkshire Festival concert on August 1 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky as the first in a series of nine summer programs will be presented in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusually fine condition, and State police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 20 1940

FESTIVAL OPENS ON AUG. 1

Record-Breaking Attendance Is Forseen at Tanglewood Shed

A record-breaking attendance is expected at the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 1, at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., when a program composed of the First symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced yesterday by the festival office.

Reservations for the nine concerts of the three-week event surpass all expectations of the festival authorities. There are no seats available for any of the concerts in the extreme rear section of the Music Shed, but tickets for single concerts may still be obtained by addressing the festival headquarters in Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 19 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Concerts Begin August 1

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky August 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given August 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusualy fine condition, and the State police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

PEABODY, MASS
ENTERPRISE
7/19/40

Michael Denesuk Playing In Boston Symphony Orchestra

Michael Denesuk of Audette street is currently playing with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky during their summer concerts in the Berkshires. He received this opportunity to learn under one of the great masters only after an exhaustive audition before Koussevitsky himself in Symphony Hall, Boston. Koussevitsky has often stated that any man whom he chooses to play for him is capable of playing with any orchestra in the country so that certainly places Denesuk up with the best musical talent tha he country affords.

Denesuk graduated from Peabody High School in 1935 and from there went to Tufts College where he majored in music, receiving his degree in 1939. Last year he returned to Tufts to work for his master's degree. While completing his studies he had complete charge of all musical organizations on the campus and had such phenomenal success that it is now said he will be offered a post as director of all musical units at the college for the coming year.

While in High School he was student leader of the High School orchestra and a winner of the George Peabody Medal for excellent scholarship and gave early promise of the budding genius that is now bursting into full flower under the tutelage of one of the greatest conductors in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HARTSDALE, N.Y
TIMES
7/19/40

THIS CLIPPING FROM

AMHERST, MASS
RECORD
7/17/40

CHILDREN'S MUSIC COURSES OFFERED AT BERKSHIRE

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood August 1st to 18th, but it is interested in more than that.

For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire County public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York, and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, yous, not girls, won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High School, scored 98 and Neil Como of the Drury High School in North Adams was second with 97.

The course has presented symphonic, operatic and chamber music and at the same time has given many children their first opportunity to know what different instruments look like.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Ticekts for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 19 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 20 1940

Tanglewood Concert Aug. 1-18

Reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in condition, and state police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 20 1940

Orchestra Led By Three Conductors

Tanglewood Audience Enthusiastic Over Program

Two men distinguished in the world of music and a third not so well known, conducted the institute orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood last night.

All three, Paul Hindemith, composer as well as conductor; Thor Johnson of the University of Michigan and Serge Koussevitzky, were all given enthusiastic applause when they had completed their assignments. Mr. Hindemith conducted the orchestra in a stirring redition of his own composition, concerto for strings and brass.

Mr. Johnson conducted the orchestra in the first movement of Wieniawski's violin concerto in D minor, with Eugene Orloff of New York as soloist. Mr. Johnson is one of Dr. Koussevitzky's pupils at the Center.

When Dr. Koussevitzky had completed Symphonie Fantastique, C major, by Berlioz, he was recalled repeatedly by thunderous applause and shouts from the audience of 500 students and guests standing in tribute.

Comments on the quality of the orchestra were heard everywhere. Olin Downes' music editor of the Now York Times remarked: "It is the most amazing and stimulating experience I've ever had."

55

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
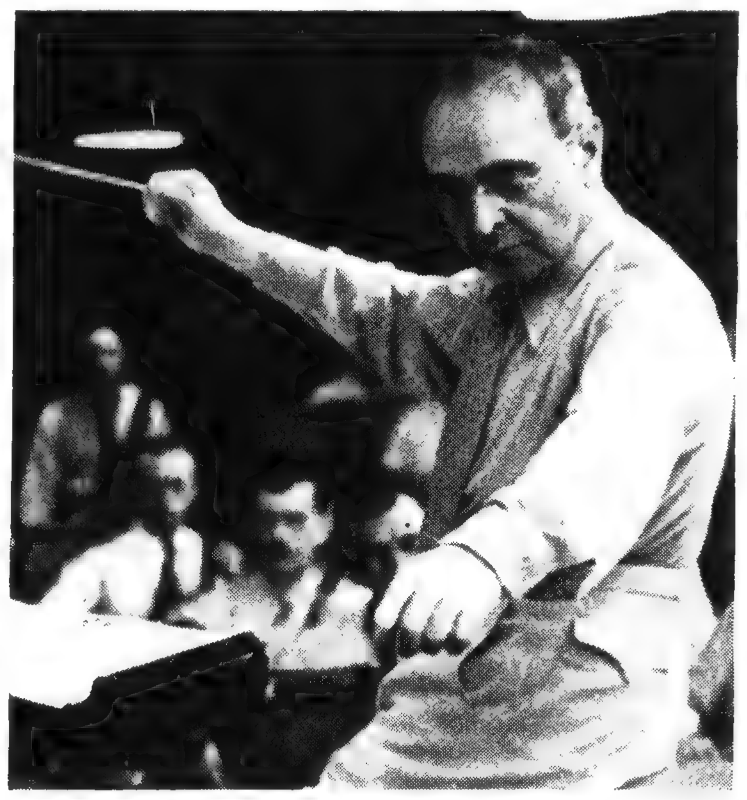
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 20 1940



Attention! Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at a Boston Symphony rehearsal in the Shed, Tanglewood, near Lenox.

MUSIC

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival this year, more than any in its history, offers the prospective traveler from afar an enticing array of great music, superlatively played, in a setting of rare beauty. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offer their first program in the Shed of Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Thursday, Aug. 1. Three series are announced:

Aug. 1, 3, 4—Series A: The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius; the C major, Schubert; second, Brahms; third, Roy Harris. Other works: Bach organ passacaglia, as orchestrated by Ottorino Respighi; Fauré suite, "Pelleas et Melisande"; Stravinsky "Capriccio" (pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma); Prokofieff "Classical" symphony, and the second suite from Ravel's ballet score, "Daphnis et Chloe".

Aug. 8, 10, 11—Series B: Tchaikowsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of his birth. First, second, fourth, fifth and sixth symphonies; violin concerto (violinist, Albert Spalding); fantasy-overture, "Romeo et Juliette"; Serenade for Strings; Second Suite; other works to be announced. Artur Rodzinski will conduct one of these three programs.

Aug. 15, 17, 18—Series C: Beethoven "Eroica", first of Brahms, a symphony by Hadyn. Other works: Wagnerian excerpts, Hindemith "Mathis der Maler", Beethoven "Adelaide", arias sung by Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano; Bach Mass in B minor, assisted by Festival Chorus. Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, basso.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 20 1940

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three weekends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 20 1940

Demand for reservations for the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is reported sur-Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Koussevitzki will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Festival's Tanglewood shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., August 1 to 18.

The opening concert will be given Thursday night, August 1, and will include First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. Since June 30 only tickets for single concerts have been available, and all seats in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

JUL 21 1940

Noted Soloists Will Be Heard

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Aug. 1

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, Summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17, comes Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last Summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Belle mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 21 1940

Three Series Listed For Boston Company Under Koussevitzky

COMPLETE programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, are announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's "Symphony No. 1 in C Major" and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms "Symphony No. 1 in G Minor."

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin the opening night.

Third Series

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance.

They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston.

They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of United States, Canada and Latin America. Adavnce reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

First Series

Series A, opening Thursday, Aug. 1, is as follows: Beethoven, Symphony No. 1; Schumann, Symphony No. 1; Sibelius, Symphony No. 1. Saturday, Aug 3: Berlioz Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss, "Don Quixote" (soloist, Gregor Piatrigorsky); Harris, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune;" Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No 2). Sunday, Aug. 4: Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Stravinsky, Capriccio for piano and orcehstra (soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

Series B, opening Thursday, Aug. 8, is as follows: Beethoven, "Egmont" overture; Beethoven, violin concerto (soloist Albert Spalding); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6. (Programs of Tchaikovsky commemorating the hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth). Saturday, Aug. 10: Beethoven, Overture, "Coriolanus;" Beethoven, Symphony No. 4; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4. Sunday, Aug. 11: Beethoven, Symphony No. 6; Tschaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

Series C, opening Thursday, Aug. 15, includes: Bach, Mass in B Minor (Berkshire Festival Chorus. Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain, Alexander Kipnis). Saturday, Aug. 17: Prokofief, "Classical" Symphony; Hindemith, "Mathis der Maler; Mozart, Concert Aria; Beethoven, "Adelaide" (soloist Dorothy Maynor); Faure, Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande;" Respighi, "Pines of Rome." Sunday, Aug. 18: Haydn, Symphony in G major, No. 88; Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUL 21 1940

Music Notes

The Four Showmen, radio singers, will appear Wednesday at 8.40 P. M. in the grand court of the Wanamaker Store, singing popular music arronged by Harold B. Anderson and accompanied by four pianos and the organ. Sylvia MacDonald, Coloratura soprano, will assist. The quartet consists of Howard Tarpy, Nace Bernert, George Johnston and Roger Kinne, former members of the Savoy Opera Company.

Dr. Douglas Stanley will lecture on the voice, in Irvine Auditorium 34th and Spruce sts., on Wednesday at 2 P. M.

The University of Pennsylvania's summer school chorus, band and orchestra will give a concert Thursday evening in Irvine Auditorium. Allan V. Nern will conduct the chorus of 160; Edward P. Rutledge will direct the band and orchestra of 70 pieces each.

John Lawler, bass, of Philadelphia is one of two winners of the second series of auditions by the Chicago Opera Company. Lawler, 28, is a student of the Academy of Vocal Arts. He will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next month at the Berkshire Festival. Annette Burford, 21-year-old soprano of Oklahoma City, is the other winner.

Boys and girls between the ages of 7 and 18 are invited to join the outdoor orchestra for youth at the D. Roy Miller Creative Center, Painters Farm, Chester Springs, Pa. All instruments are welcome, and there is no charge. Otto Koehler is director.

Singers between the ages 15 and 25 are invited to join the young people's chorus of the Nicetown Baptist Church. The chorus is rehearsing Maunder's Song of Thanksgiving" for November performance. The director is Robert D. Ford, 100 W. Sharpnack st., Germantown.

The ninth annual performance of the Brandywiners in Longwood Gardens, Kennett Square, Pa., will be "The Pirates of Penzance," on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 9 P. M. Frederick W. Wyatt is directing; there will be a chorus of 115.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 21 1940

Festival Tickets Now In Demand

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire symphonic festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, August 1 to 18, in the festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the festival office.

Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad or both cannot be ascertained, but the festival staff knows from long hours spent at the office that the demand is there.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the festival office, too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodition of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

JUL 21 1940

Annual Berkshire Festival Planned

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, featuring the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is to be held in August in the music shed at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. There will be three concert series, August 1, 3 and 4; August 8, 10 and 11, and August 15, 17 and 18.

The Berkshire festival, established in 1934 by summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, has its own home on a 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. The music shed, seating more than 6000, is unique in America for its wholly utilitarian simplicity and beauty of design. This year the Boston Symphony orchestra is establishing the Berkshire Music center, with a school period of six weeks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 23 1940

55

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 20 1940

When music lovers from America, Canada and Latin America arrive at Tanglewood the first three week-ends in August for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they will note many changes.

Three thousand additional chairs painted blue have been purchased and installed in the front section of the huge shed. The red chairs formerly used in the front section have been moved to the rear so that now the color of the chairs corresponds with the color of the tickets for these sections.

The Bach organ made possible through a gift from the Carnegie Corporation to the orchestra has been installed over the stage and will be dedicated with the Bach B minor mass August 15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
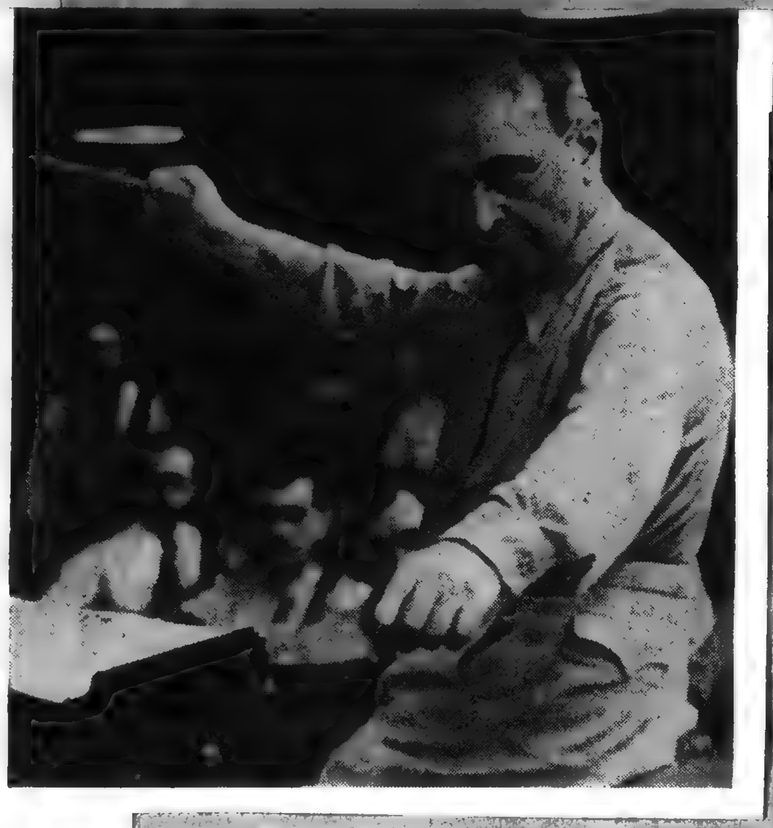
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 20 1940



Attention! Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at a Boston Symphony rehearsal in the Shed, Tanglewood, near Lenox.

MUSIC

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival this year, more than any in its history, offers the prospective traveler from afar an enticing array of great music, superlatively played, in a setting of rare beauty. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offer their first program in the Shed of Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Thursday, Aug. 1. Three series are announced:

Aug. 1, 3, 4—Series A: The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius; the C major, Schubert; second, Brahms; third, Roy Harris. Other works: Bach organ passacaglia, as orchestrated by Ottorino Respighi; Fauré suite, "Pelleas et Melisande"; Stravinsky "Capriccio" (pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma); Prokofieff "Classical" symphony, and the second suite from Ravel's ballet score, "Daphnis et Chloe".

Aug. 8, 10, 11—Series B: Tchaikowsky festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of his birth. First, second, fourth, fifth and sixth symphonies; violin concerto (violinist, Albert Spalding); fantasy-overture, "Romeo et Juliette"; Serenade for Strings; Second Suite; other works to be announced. Artur Rodzinski will conduct one of these three programs.

Aug. 15, 17, 18—Series C: Beethoven "Eroica", first of Brahms, a symphony by Hadyn. Other works: Wagnerian excerpts, Hindemith "Mathis der Maler", Beethoven "Adelaide", arias sung by Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano; Bach Mass in B minor, assisted by Festival Chorus. Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, basso.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 20 1940

Demand for reservations for the nine concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is reported sur-Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Koussevitzki will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Festival's Tanglewood shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., August 1 to 18.

The opening concert will be given Thursday night, August 1, and will include First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. Since June 30 only tickets for single concerts have been available, and all seats in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

JUL 21 1940

Noted Soloists Will Be Heard

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Aug. 1

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, Summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17, comes Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last Summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Belle mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 21 1940

Three Series Listed For Boston Company Under Koussevitzky

COMPLETE programs for the three weeks of concerts at Tanglewood to be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, are announced today by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival will open Aug. 1 with Beethoven's "Symphony No. 1 in C Major" and will close Aug. 18 with the Brahms "Symphony No. 1 in G Minor."

In the first series of concerts, Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will appear as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist Aug. 4 when the orchestra presents Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will include compositions of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. Albert Spalding, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin the opening night.

Third Series

The third series will open Aug. 15 with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor. This performance starting at 7 p. m. will be in two parts. The second part of the program will begin at 9:30. The soloists who performed this work with the orchestra in Boston this spring with outstanding success will appear at the Berkshire performance.

They will be: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will make its initial appearance with the orchestra. The chorus will include many singers who have appeared in this mighty work with the orchestra in Boston.

They will be students at the orchestra's new music center being established this summer at Tanglewood. They will be prepared as was the chorus in Boston by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard university.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano who has won wide acclaim since her appearance last summer at a picnic given at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky, will appear on the program Aug. 17. She will be the soloist in the Mozart Concert Aria and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Other composers represented on the program include Sibelius, Schumann, Berlioz, Harris, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky Brahms, Prokofieff, Hindemith and Faure.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge. Indications already point to a tremendous audience planning to make the pilgrimage to Tanglewood from all parts of United States, Canada and Latin America. Adavnce reservations are substantially ahead of the same date last year.

First Series

Series A, opening Thursday, Aug. 1, is as follows: Beethoven, Symphony No. 1; Schumann, Symphony No. 1; Sibelius, Symphony No. 1. Saturday, Aug 3: Berlioz Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss, "Don Quixote" (soloist, Gregor Piatrigorsky); Harris, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune;" Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No 2). Sunday, Aug. 4: Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Stravinsky, Capriccio for piano and orcehstra (soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

Series B, opening Thursday, Aug. 8, is as follows: Beethoven, "Egmont" overture; Beethoven, violin concerto (soloist Albert Spalding); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6. (Programs of Tchaikovsky commemorating the hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth). Saturday, Aug. 10: Beethoven, Overture, "Coriolanus;" Beethoven, Symphony No. 4; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4. Sunday, Aug. 11: Beethoven, Symphony No. 6; Tschaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

Series C, opening Thursday, Aug. 15, includes: Bach, Mass in B Minor (Berkshire Festival Chorus. Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain, Alexander Kipnis). Saturday, Aug. 17: Prokofief, "Classical" Symphony; Hindemith, "Mathis der Maler; Mozart, Concert Aria; Beethoven, "Adelaide" (soloist Dorothy Maynor); Faure, Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande;" Respighi, "Pines of Rome." Sunday, Aug. 18: Haydn, Symphony in G major, No. 88; Sibelius, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

JUL 21 1940

Annual Berkshire Festival Planned

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, featuring the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is to be held in August in the music shed at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. There will be three concert series, August 1, 3 and 4; August 8, 10 and 11, and August 15, 17 and 18.

The Berkshire festival, established in 1934 by summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, has its own home on a 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac. The music shed, seating more than 6000, is unique in America for its wholly utilitarian simplicity and beauty of design. This year the Boston Symphony orchestra is establishing the Berkshire Music center, with a school period of six weeks.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUL 21 1940

Music Notes

The Four Showmen, radio singers, will appear Wednesday at 8.40 P. M. in the grand court of the Wanamaker Store, singing popular music arranged by Harold B. Anderson and accompanied by four pianos and the organ. Sylvia MacDonald, Coloratura soprano, will assist. The quartet consists of Howard Tarpy, Nace Bernert, George Johnston and Roger Kinne, former members of the Savoy Opera Company.

Dr. Douglas Stanley will lecture on the voice, in Irvine Auditorium 34th and Spruce sts., on Wednesday at 2 P. M.

The University of Pennsylvania's summer school chorus, band and orchestra will give a concert Thursday evening in Irvine Auditorium. Allan V. Nern will conduct the chorus of 160; Edward P. Rutledge will direct the band and orchestra of 70 pieces each.

John Lawler, bass, of Philadelphia is one of two winners of the second series of auditions by the Chicago Opera Company. Lawler, 28, is a student of the Academy of Vocal Arts. He will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next month at the Berkshire Festival. Annette Burford, 21-year-old soprano of Oklahoma City, is the other winner.

Boys and girls between the ages of 7 and 18 are invited to join the outdoor orchestra for youth at the D. Roy Miller Creative Center, Painters Farm, Chester Springs, Pa. All instruments are welcome, and there is no charge. Otto Koehler is director.

Singers between the ages 15 and 25 are invited to join the young people's chorus of the Nicetown Baptist Church. The chorus is rehearsing Maunder's Song of Thanksgiving" for November performance. The director is Robert D. Ford, 100 W. Sharpnack st., Germantown.

The ninth annual performance of the Brandywiners in Longwood Gardens, Kennett Square, Pa., will be "The Pirates of Penzance," on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 9 P. M. Frederick W. Wyatt is directing; there will be a chorus of 115.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 21 1940

Festival Tickets Now In Demand

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire symphonic festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, August 1 to 18, in the festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the festival office.

Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad or both cannot be ascertained, but the festival staff knows from long hours spent at the office that the demand is there.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the festival office, too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodition of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
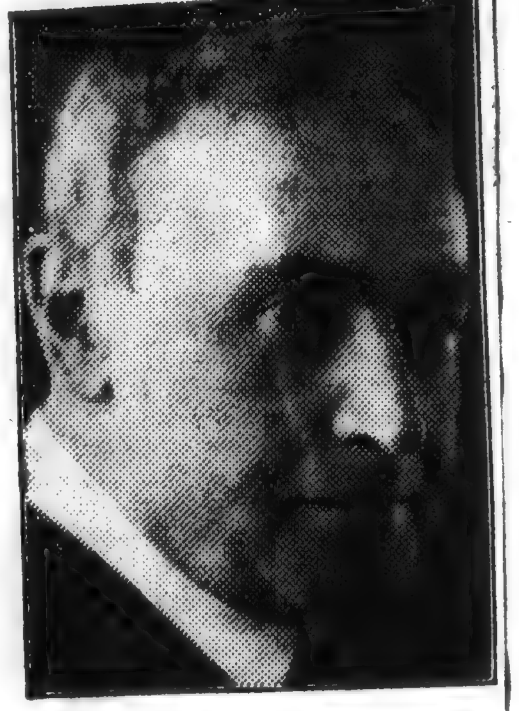
GAZETTE

JUL 23 1940

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

JUL 21 1940



Gaylord Browne (right above) conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, has been selected one of three active conductors at the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., one of the highest honors accorded an American musician. He will be under the personal tutelage of Sergei Alexandrovitch Konssevitzky (above), who ranks as one of the world's most competent conductors.

Several Bridgeporters will take in the Berkshire Symphonic festival events in Stockbridge, beginning Aug. 1. Mrs. Adelaide Zeigler Cohan will take up a party, including her two children, Corky and Joan, Miss Blanche Weinstock, and Mrs. Harry Freedman of Calhoun place. Miss Catherine Russell, supervisor of music in the Bridgeport schools, Frank Foti, director of the Bridgeport Symphony orchestra, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Snyder, of Stratford, whose son, Louis, Jr., is treasurer of the Stockbridge Players at Stockbridge, Wilbur Thiel, new organist at the United church, Celia Kotler, and Mrs. Elmer Beardsley are others who will take in all or part of the events. The cocktail party this year will be held Saturday, August 3 from 5 to 7 p. m. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, the former, editor of The Berkshire Eagle, Pittsfield. The festival will present nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky, at the huge shed, Tanglewood, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL. 21, 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 21 1940

Festival Fosters Children's Interest

The Berkshire Symphonic festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood August 1 to 18 but it is interested in more than that. For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music course in Berkshire county public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, who take the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman of the festival.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra with Dr Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway hall,

---

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 21 1940

The opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940 takes place on Thursday evening, August 1, at 8:30 in the great Shed at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play that evening, on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, the 3d, and 4th. Here are the programs:

Thursday Evening

Beethoven—Symphony No. 1 in C Major.

Schumann—Symphony No. 1 in B flat Major.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 1 in E minor.

Saturday Evening

Berlioz—Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini."

Strauss—"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character.

Harris—Symphony No. 3.

Debussy—Prelude, a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune.

Ravel—Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe."

Sunday Afternoon

Mozart—Symphony in E flat Major.

Stravinsky—Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Brahms—Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 21 1940

Music Fete In Berkshires

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three weekends in August. The program covers nine concerts, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning August 1st and terminating on the 18th. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood near Lenox, Massachusetts, has become an important annual feature of the Summer social life of New England, reports Douglas Malcolm of the American Express Travel Service. The attendance has grown from year to year so that now one must make reservations well in advance in the resort hotels in the nearby communities.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 21 1940

LEFT — Berkshire Music Center personalities pictured at Tanglewood, Lenox. —Left to right, Stanley Chapple of London, conductor and lecturer, Dr Margaret Grant, secretary, and Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 21 1940

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL IN THE BERKSHIRES

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, August 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the Festival office.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office too.

The opening concert will be given August 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Fat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

JUL 21 1940

Gaylord Browne (right above) conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, has been selected one of three active conductors at the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., one of the highest honors accorded an American musician. He will be under the personal tutelage of Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky (above), who ranks as one of the world's most competent conductors.

Several Bridgeporters will take in the Berkshire Symphonic festival events in Stockbridge, beginning Aug. 1. Mrs. Adelaide Zeigler Cohan will take up a party, including her two children, Corky and Joan, Miss Blanche Weinstock, and Mrs. Harry Freedman of Calhoun place. Miss Catherine Russell, supervisor of music in the Bridgeport schools, Frank Foti, director of the Bridgeport Symphony orchestra, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Snyder, of Stratford, whose son, Louis, Jr., is treasurer of the Stockbridge Players at Stockbridge, Wilbur Thiel, new organist at the United church, Celia Kotler, and Mrs. Elmer Beardsley are others who will take in all or part of the events. The cocktail party this year will be held Saturday, August 3 from 5 to 7 p. m. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, the former, editor of The Berkshire Eagle, Pittsfield. The festival will present nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky, at the huge shed, Tanglewood, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL. 21, 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 21 1940

Festival Fosters Children's Interest

The Berkshire Symphonic festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood August 1 to 18 but it is interested in more than that. For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music course in Berkshire county public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, who take the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman of the festival.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra with Dr Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the New York office at Steinway hall.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 21 1940

The opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1940 takes place on Thursday evening, August 1, at 8:30 in the great Shed at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play that evening, on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, the 3d, and 4th. Here are the programs:

Thursday Evening

Beethoven—Symphony No. 1 in C Major.

Schumann—Symphony No. 1 in B flat Major.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 1 in E minor.

Saturday Evening

Berlioz—Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini."

Strauss—"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character.

Harris—Symphony No. 3.

Debussy—Prelude, a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune.

Ravel—Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe."

Sunday Afternoon

Mozart—Symphony in E flat Major.

Stravinsky—Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Brahms—Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 21 1940

Music Fete In Berkshires

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is scheduled for the first three weekends in August. The program covers nine concerts, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning August 1st and terminating on the 18th. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the entire series.

This festival of symphonic music, which is heard at Tanglewood near Lenox, Massachusetts, has become an important annual feature of the Summer social life of New England, reports Douglas Malcolm of the American Express Travel Service. The attendance has grown from year to year so that now one must make reservations well in advance in the resort hotels in the nearby communities.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 21 1940

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL IN THE BERKSHIRES

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, August 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the Festival office.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office too.

The opening concert will be given August 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Fat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 21 1940

LEFT — Berkshire Music Center personalities pictured at Tanglewood, Lenox. —Left to right, Stanley Chapple of London, conductor and lecturer, Dr Margaret Grant, secretary, and Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN

JUL 21 1940

57

Boston Symphony Under Koussevitzky

Berkshire Music Festival to Open Aug. 1

Noteworthy Music Events Are Set for "Tanglewood," Mass.

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the festival office.

Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad or both cannot be ascertained, but the festival staff knows from long hours spent at the office that the demand is there.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the festival office too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusually fine condition, and state police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the orchestra. The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play at the second concert Aug. 3 in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo. Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following. Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Velkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17 comes Dorothy Maynor whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella Mia Fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent with more attractive sandwiches and drinks than ever. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time before concert time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll. The refreshment tent will be in operation at intermissions.

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

JUL 21 1940

Will Study With Sergei Koussevitzky

GAYLORD BROWNE, conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, is one of three of the country's outstanding musicians selected to be active conductors at the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass.

This is one of the highest honors to be given an American musician.

Professor Browne, who is also head of the Evansville College Department of Music, will be under the personal tutelage of Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considered one of the world's most competent conductors.

Each of the three musicians chosen will conduct a major work with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in the weekly concerts at the festival.

Nine musicians from the Berkshire Music Festival conducting class of 40 conductors were selected to compete for the honor of active conductorship under Koussevitzky.

Professor Browne conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his audition test.

Several hours of study daily with Conductor Koussevitzky will be allotted each of the three conductors during the festival. All rehearsals are personally criticized by the Boston conductor.

TO DATE, according to word received here, Professor Browne has conducted performances of Beethoven's First Symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Scarlatti's sonatas and Mozart's "Serenade."

The conducting class of which Professor Browne is a member is composed of leading musicians from both this country and Europe.

The Berkshire Music Festival has been held annually since 1918, and is maintained by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, contemporary American music patron, who has been active in aiding young American musicians.

Its purpose is the presentation of chamber music and symphony concerts, both classical and modern, particularly the works of native composers. The finest European and American chamber groups are employed to interpret the music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of 110 musicians, considered by most musicians the finest symphony in the world, conducts the music festival. Leading members of the orchestra teach chamber music and various instruments during the summer festival.

Koussevitzky, Russian conductor and double-bass virtuoso, has been permanent conductor of the symphony since 1924.

At the age of four, he began studying music at the Ecole Philharmonique and the double-bass with Rambauseck. He acquired a reputation as a double-bass virtuoso, gave many concerts on that instrument both in Russia and other European countries, becoming greatly admired for his pure style and remarkable technique.

LATER, HE attended orchestral conducting classes under Arthur Nikisch at the Royal Hochschule, Berlin.

In 1909, he returned to Russia, where he organized his own orchestra, and also founded a musical publishing house, the "Russian Musical Edition," which specialized in the publication of works by modern Russian composers, including Scriabin, Stravinsky, Medtner and Rachmaninoff.

After the Russian revolution, his orchestra was disbanded and his publishing business confiscated by the new Soviet government. He left Russia in 1922 for Paris, where he conducted a series of orchestral concerts at the Paris Opera, and also directed productions of Moussorgsky's "Boris Godounoff" and Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame." Until 1924, he fulfilled various engagements as conductor in London, Rome, Berlin and Paris.

During the season of 1908 he had already conducted the London Symphony Orchestra in a program of Beethoven's works. The years spent in the capitals of Europe gradually built his reputation as one of the leading modern conductors of the continent.

Respected by composers for sponsoring new works, Koussevitzky was honored recently by the Beethoven Association of New York for his services to American music.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 21 1940

IN THE

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood August 1 to 18 but it is interested in more than that.

For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire county public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York, and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, boys, not girls, won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High school, scored 98, and Neil Como, of the Drury High school in North Adams, was second with 97.

The course has presented symphonic, operatic and chamber music and at the same time has given many children their first opportunity to know what different instruments look like.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street, Albany.

• • •

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

JUL 22 1940

SOLOISTS FOR FESTIVAL

Noted Musicians to Appear on Boston Symphony Programs.

Pittsfield, Mass., July 22—Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Pietigorsky will play at the second concert, August 3 in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Bershires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass August 15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 22 1940

TOP RANK SOLOISTS AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3 in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 22 1940

Noted Soloists To Be Heard in Festival Series

Ticket Sale Still Continues Heavy For Berkshire Events

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play at the second concert, Aug. 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, violist.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo. Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D, Opus 61.

Mass Participants

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. C. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17 comes Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Ticket Sale Surprising

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour in. Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the Festival office.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office, too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Buses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

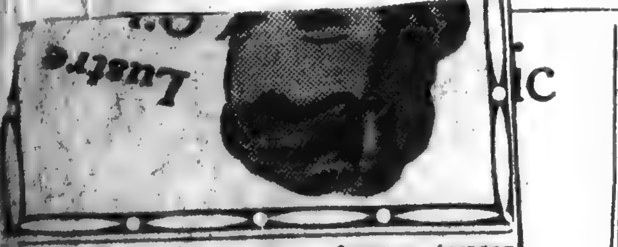
Grounds Ready

The grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in fine condition, and State Police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires.

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time before concert time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll. The refreshment tent will be in operation at intermissions.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN
JUL 21 1940 57

Boston Symphony Under Koussevitzky



THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 22 1940

Top Rank Soloists To Appear At Tanglewood Festival

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Se[redacted]itzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, August 3 in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass August 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, obo d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert August 17, comes Dorothy Maynor whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

JUL 21 1940

Will Study With Sergei Koussevitzky

GAYLORD BROWNE, conductor of the Evansville Philharmonic Orchestra, is one of three of the country's outstanding musicians selected to be active conductors at the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass.

This is one of the highest honors to be given an American musician.

Professor Browne, who is also head of the Evansville College Department of Music, will be under the personal tutelage of Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considered one of the world's most competent conductors.

Each of the three musicians chosen will conduct a major work with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in the weekly concerts at the festival.

Nine musicians from the Berkshire Music Festival conducting class of 40 conductors were selected to compete for the honor of active conductorship under Koussevitzky.

Professor Browne conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his audition test.

Several hours of study daily with Conductor Koussevitzky will be allotted each of the three conductors during the festival. All

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 26 1940

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 21 1940

IN THE

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival is interested in presenting nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood August 1 to 18 but it is interested in more than that.

For two years the festival has sponsored the Layman's Music Course in Berkshire county public schools, hoping thereby to add to the musical knowledge and entertainment of thousands of children. The course, established by Miss Harriet Johnson, has been continued by her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick of New York, and the measure of their success may be shown by the increasing number of pupils, most of them in high schools, taking the course. In many instances the lectures have been given after school hours and attendance has been voluntary. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge has been chairman for the festival.

When quizzes were given last month at the close of the lectures, boys, not girls, won the highest honors. John McMaster of Hinsdale, a pupil at the Dalton High school, scored 98, and Neil Como, of the Drury High school in North Adams, was second with 97.

The course has presented symphonic, operatic and chamber music and at the same time has given many children their first opportunity to know what different instruments look like.

As a further opportunity of enjoyment, the festival has invited high school boys and girls to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky three Saturdays during the festival period.

Tickets for the nine festival concerts continue to be in great demand. The great shed at Tanglewood has been two-thirds sold. Only tickets for single concerts are now available. They may be obtained by communicating with the office at Stockbridge or the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street, Albany.

• • •

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

JUL 22 1940

SOLOISTS FOR FESTIVAL

Noted Musicians to Appear on Boston Symphony Programs.

Pittsfield, Mass., July 22—Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Pietigorsky will play at the second concert, August 3 in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Bershires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass August 15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 22 1940

TOP RANK SOLOISTS AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Soloists of the top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3 in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 22 1940

Noted Soloists To Be Heard in Festival Series

Ticket Sale Still Continues Heavy For Berkshire Events

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play at the second concert, Aug. 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, violist.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo. Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D, Opus 61.

Mass Participants

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. C. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17 comes Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Ticket Sale Surprising

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour in. Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the Festival office.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office, too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Buses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

Grounds Ready

The grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in fine condition, and State Police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires.

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time before concert time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll. The refreshment tent will be in operation at intermissions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

JUL 22 1940

MUSIC

Tanglewood Dream School: a Seminar of Music Eventuates for Sergei Koussevitzky

Tanglewood is a 150-acre estate nestled in a blue bowl of the Berkshire Hills at Lenox, Mass. Here Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and spun his "Tanglewood Tales"; here also Emerson, Holmes, and Melville were frequent guests. Tanglewood's importance now is not literary but musical: in 1937 Mrs. Gorham Brooks, wealthy Boston society matron and music lover, gave the estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a summer home.

Here for three years have been held the fashionable Berkshire Music Festivals with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, who has conducted the orchestra since 1924. Often called the American Salzburg, this summer concert series has become famous for its superb music—and its carriage-trade clientele. But in a year when democracy is elsewhere on the wane, the Russian-born maestro has democratized his festival.

In Tanglewood last week 325 music lovers and students, selected from more than 600 applicants from nearly every state, Canada, and Mexico, assembled for the start of a unique six-week study course for which the tuition is a mere $100, while room and board are a reasonable $18 weekly. The faculty is topped by the greatest living double-bass (bull fiddle) virtuoso, who also happens to be Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky. Other "teachers" include 30 members of the Boston Symphony, the composers Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and a handful of music-world luminaries like Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, and Carleton Sprague Smith of the New York Public Library's music division.

Quartered at Cranwell and Lenox, boys' prep schools closed for the summer, the students—half of whom are under 25, all under 40, and for the most part graduates of good music schools like the Juilliard in Manhattan—will attend all the rehearsals and regular programs of the Boston Symphony. They will constitute a choir and chorus which will sing Bach's B minor Mass with the orchestra Aug. 17, while others will play in a student orchestra. And everybody will attend the nine regular Boston Symphony Festival concerts in the handsome $80,000 shed, new last year, between Aug. 1 and 18. For recreation, among other things, there is folk dancing or a swim in Lake Mahkeenac.

The festival is the realization of one man's dream. In Moscow before the World War and revolution wiped out his wife's large fortune, Koussevitzky hoped to establish just such a music seminar; again in 1929 he dreamed of a similar venture in White Plains, N.Y., only to have his hopes dashed by the market crash. Last week at the dedicatory exercises, for which Mrs. Brooks and her daughter Violet came down from their summer home in Dublin, N.H., the sleek maestro could turn his back on an unhappy Europe where his reputation was made and declare: "So long as culture and art exist there is hope for humanity . . . If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

DAYTON, OHIO
HERALD

JUL 22 1940

Nadejda

The 1940 Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens August 1 at Stockbridge, Mass., commemorates the 100th anniversary of the birth of the composer, Peter Ilyich Tchaikowsky, with the Boston Symphony orchestra playing the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth and Pathetique Symphonies under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

August 9 the dramatic role of Nadejda von Meck, the true story of whom was told for the first time by Catherine Drinker Bowen in her book, "Beloved Friend" will be enacted by Lillian Beall Hicks, Michigan artist, in Pittsfield at the Berkshire Art museum, in the heart of the Berkshire Summer festival country.

The drama to be presented is the adaptation of the story for a single actress by Virginia Balinger of Grosse Pointe, Mich.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
8/1/40

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 22 1940

restaurants.

Top-Ranking Soloists To Be Heard

Piatigorsky To Play at Tanglewood Aug. 3

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3 in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of Great Barrington will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in O Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich harpsicord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17, comes Dorothy Maynor whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mit fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent with more attractive sandwiches and drinks than ever. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll. The refreshment tent will be in operation at intermissions.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUL 22 1940

Festival Soloists

Piatigorsky, Spalding to Appear at Tanglewood

Special to Newark News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — Top-ranking soloists will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will play at the second concert, August 3, in Strauss's "Don Quixote." In this number the viola soloist will be Jean Lefrance.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio at the first Sunday concert, August 4. Albert Spalding will be the soloist in Beethoven's concerto for violin.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, will sing in Bach's B Minor Mass August 15. Soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.

August 17 Dorothy Maynor will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
Jul 25, 1940

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 22 1940

Berkshire Music Festival To Start Thursday, Aug. 1

Koussevitzky, Boston Orchestra to Be Assisted By Eminent Artists

With a program including three First Symphonies —by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius— the seventh annual Berkshire Festival, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Thursday evening, August 1.

For the first time, three series of concerts will be given: Series A, including concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 1 and 3, and Sunday afternoon, August 4; Series B, on Thursday, August 8 and Saturday, August 10, in the evening, and Sunday afternoon, August 11; and Series C, Thursday, August 14 and Saturday, August 16, again in the evening, and Sunday afternoon, August 18, when the final program will be played.

Also an innovation this season will be the list of soloists. The eminent 'cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play in Strauss's "Don Quixote," on August 3, together with Jean LaFrance, violist.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony, will be heard at the first Sunday concert on August 4, in Stravinsky's "Capriccio For Orchestra and Pianoforte."

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will play the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will appear under direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodsworth in Bach's B Minor Mass, on August 15. Soloists in the Mass will include Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, basso. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn, Georges Laurent, flute; E. Bower Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Dorothy Maynor, introduced by Dr. Koussevitzky at a special concert last season, will sing Mozart's concert aria, "Bella Mia Fiamma" and Beethoven's "Adelaide," on August 17.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 22 1940

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
EVENING DISPATCH

JUL 23 1940

Down the Scale

By RUTH K. NOLAN

Many Westchester musicians will attend the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will open Aug. 1 at Tanglewood, Mass. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that cellist Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist at the second concert Aug. 3. Jean Lefrance will assist Mr. Piatigorsky on the viola in Strauss's "Don Quixote."

On Aug. 4, Jesus Maria Sanroma, orchestra pianist, will play Stravinsky's piano score for the Capriccio for Orchestra. Albert Spalding will play Beethoven's Concerto for Violin, Op. 61. The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, will give Bach's "B Minor Mass" Aug. 15.

Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the vocal soloists. Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord, will be instrumental soloists. Dorothy Maynor will sing with the orchestra Aug. 17.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 23 1940

Many Chicagoans To Hear Opening Berkshire Concert

A NUMBER of Chicagoans who vacation in New England are certain to be in the audience at the opening of the Berkshire Music Festival on Aug. 1—Thursday of next week. Mrs. William Sherman Hay is planning to motor East for part of the three-week concert series given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, who spends her summers at Osterville, Mass., annually attends most of the programs, as do the Donald McPhersons, who are in Pittsfield, Mass., only eight miles from the concert shed at Tanglewood.

The spot in which Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales," Tanglewood, was given to the Boston Symphony particularly for this summer series by the Gorham Brooks. The great fan-shaped shed, subsequently erected, seats almost 6,000 persons.

Party for Lily Pons.

Carleton Smith, who has just arrived in town and is giving a luncheon and circus party for Lily Pons and Andre Kostelanetz tomorrow, is also going East for the festival and for Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's chamber music series, held at the same time. Because only 400 listeners can be accommodated on Music Mountain, Mrs. Coolidge's Berkshire estate, admission to the latter is by invitation only.

It is by courtesy of Mrs. Coolidge that the Ravinia Festival Association will have a week's post-season series of concerts given by the Belgian Pro Arte Quartet, beginning Aug. 5. Next week is the last of the regular season programs.

McLennans Giving Box Party.

At tonight's concert at which John Barbirolli will be guest conductor for the first time, the Donald McLennans are having Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wesley Dempster and the Charles Fosters as their box guests Mrs. Frederick Preston has turned her box over to her niece, Mrs. James A. Drain Jr. and Mr. Drain, who have invited the Marshall Sampsells to join them. Saturday evening the Prestons will be hosts to the James Lawrence Houghtelings and Alfred Hamills.

Preceding this evening's concert, Mrs. Louis Eckstein is giving a dinner party in honor of Artur Rodzinski, conductor for the last two weeks, and Mme. Rodzinski. Her other guests are to be the Edward L. Ryersons, Charles Swifts and Francis Knights.

The Rodzinskis will also be in the East for the rest of the summer —living not far from Bald Head, estate of the late Kate Buckingham that was bought by Maestro Koussevitzky. It overlooks the Andrew Carnegie estate.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES

JUL 26 1940

MRS. ALEXANDER GIRARD may be envisaged soon in the coolth of the Berkshires enjoying the Music Festival staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lennox. She leaves either today or tomorrow.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 23 1940

List Soloists For Concerts At Tanglewood

Important Artists To Appear at Berkshire Festival

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Kerskire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in he seventh annual Berkshire Symthe Berkshires August 1 to 18. The eminent 'cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, will play at the second concert, August 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sandroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo. Albert Spalding, Summer resident of the Berkshires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D, Op. 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's B. Minor Mass August 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

For the August 17 concert Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last Summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard in Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent. The grounds will be open ample time before concert time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

JUL 23 1940

U. S. SCHEDULES 2000 FESTIVALS

Affairs Range From Fish Rodeos to Anniversary Parties.

America in 1940 is a land of festivals.

World Fairs are booming on both coasts and some 2000 cities and towns will hold fete periods from one day to a week during the next 90 days.

The U. S. Travel Bureau, at 45 Broadway, New York City, has issued a free 24-page booklet listing summer fetes. Just a few of them are:

SEE THE AMERICAS NOW

In the quiet Berkshire Hills between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., the Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens on Aug. 1. Dates of the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18.

The concerts are staged in a great student-built shed at Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate on Lake Mahkeenac where Hawthorne wrote some of his romances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

JUL 22 1940

MUSIC

Tanglewood Dream School: a Seminar of Music Eventuates for Sergei Koussevitzky

Tanglewood is a 150-acre estate nestled in a blue bowl of the Berkshire Hills at Lenox, Mass. Here Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and spun his "Tanglewood Tales"; here also Emerson, Holmes, and Melville were frequent guests. Tanglewood's importance now is not literary but musical: in 1937 Mrs. Gorham Brooks, wealthy Boston society matron and music lover, gave the estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a summer home.

Here for three years have been held the fashionable Berkshire Music Festivals with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, who has conducted the orchestra since 1924. Often called the American Salzburg, this summer concert series has become famous for its superb music—and its carriage-trade clientele. But in a year when democracy is elsewhere on the wane, the Russian-born maestro has democratized his festival.

In Tanglewood last week 325 music lovers and students, selected from more than 600 applicants from nearly every state, Canada, and Mexico, assembled for the start of a unique six-week study course for which the tuition is a mere $100, while room and board are a reasonable $18 weekly. The faculty is topped by the greatest living double-bass (bull fiddle) virtuoso, who also happens to be Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky. Other "teachers" include 30 members of the Boston Symphony, the composers Paul Hindemith and Aaron Copland, and a handful of music-world luminaries like Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, and Carleton Sprague Smith of the New York Public Library's music division.

Quartered at Cranwell and Lenox, boys' prep schools closed for the summer, the students—half of whom are under 25, all under 40, and for the most part graduates of good music schools like the Juilliard in Manhattan—will attend all the rehearsals and regular programs of the Boston Symphony. They will constitute a choir and chorus which will sing Bach's B minor Mass with the orchestra Aug. 17, while others will play in a student orchestra. And everybody will attend the nine regular Boston Symphony Festival concerts in the handsome $80,000 shed, new last year, between Aug. 1 and 18. For recreation, among other things, there is folk dancing or a swim in Lake Mahkeenac.

The festival is the realization of one man's dream. In Moscow before the World War and revolution wiped out his wife's large fortune, Koussevitzky hoped to establish just such a music seminar; again in 1929 he dreamed of a similar venture in White Plains, N.Y., only to have his hopes dashed by the market crash. Last week at the dedicatory exercises, for which Mrs. Brooks and her daughter Violet came down from their summer home in Dublin, N.H., the sleek maestro could turn his back on an unhappy Europe where his reputation was made and declare: "So long as culture and art exist there is hope for humanity . . . If there was ever a time to speak of music, it is now, in the New World."

DAYTON, OHIO
HERALD

JUL 22 1940

Nadejda

The 1940 Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens August 1 at Stockbridge, Mass., commemorates the 100th anniversary of the birth of the composer, Peter Ilyich Tchaikowsky, with the Boston Symphony orchestra playing the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth and Pathetique Symphonies under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

August 9 the dramatic role of Nadejda von Meck, the true story of whom was told for the first time by Catherine Drinker Bowen in her book, "Beloved Friend" will be enacted by Lillian Beall Hicks, Michigan artist, in Pittsfield at the Berkshire Art museum, in the heart of the Berkshire Summer festival country.

The drama to be presented is the adaptation of the story for a single actress by Virginia Balinger of Grosse Pointe, Mich.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
8/1/40

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 22 1940

Top-Ranking Soloists To Be Heard

Piatigorsky To Play at Tanglewood Aug. 3

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Aug. 1 to 18.

The eminent cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky will play at the second concert, Aug. 3 in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of Great Barrington will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in O Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's mighty B Minor Mass Aug. 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich harpsicord.

Then for the concert Aug. 17, comes Dorothy Maynor whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic. She will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mit fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent with more attractive sandwiches and drinks than ever. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll. The refreshment tent will be in operation at intermissions.

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUL 22 1940

Festival Soloists

Piatigorsky, Spalding to Appear at Tanglewood

Special to Newark News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — Top-ranking soloists will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood August 1 to 18.

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will play at the second concert, August 3, in Strauss's "Don Quixote." In this number the viola soloist will be Jean Lefrance.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio at the first Sunday concert, August 4. Albert Spalding will be the soloist in Beethoven's concerto for violin.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, will sing in Bach's B Minor Mass August 15. Soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.

August 17 Dorothy Maynor will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
Jul 25, 1940

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 22 1940

Berkshire Music Festival To Start Thursday, Aug. 1

Koussevitzky, Boston Orchestra to Be Assisted By Eminent Artists

With a program including three First Symphonies —by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius— the seventh annual Berkshire Festival, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., on Thursday evening, August 1.

For the first time, three series of concerts will be given: Series A, including concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 1 and 3, and Sunday afternoon, August 4; Series B, on Thursday, August 8 and Saturday, August 10, in the evening, and Sunday afternoon, August 11; and Series C, Thursday, August 14 and Saturday, August 16, again in the evening, and Sunday afternoon, August 18, when the final program will be played.

Also an innovation this season will be the list of soloists. The eminent 'cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky, will play in Strauss's "Don Quixote," on August 3, together with Jean LaFrance, violist.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony, will be heard at the first Sunday concert on August 4, in Stravinsky's "Capriccio For Orchestra and Pianoforte."

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will play the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will appear under direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodsworth in Bach's B Minor Mass, on August 15. Soloists in the Mass will include Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, basso. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn, Georges Laurent, flute; E. Bower Biggs, organ; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

Dorothy Maynor, introduced by Dr. Koussevitzky at a special concert last season, will sing Mozart's concert aria, "Bella Mia Fiamma" and Beethoven's "Adelaide," on August 17.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 22 1940

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL
NEWS

JUL 23 1940

Many Chicagoans To Hear Opening Berkshire Concert

A NUMBER of Chicagoans who vacation in New England are certain to be in the audience at the opening of the Berkshire Music Festival on Aug. 1—Thursday of next week. Mrs. William Sherman Hay is planning to motor East for part of the three-week concert series given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, who spends her summers at Osterville, Mass., annually attends most of the programs, as do the Donald McPhersons, who are in Pittsfield, Mass., only eight miles from the concert shed at Tanglewood.

The spot in which Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales," Tanglewood, was given to the Boston Symphony particularly for this summer series by the Gorham Brooks. The great fan-shaped shed, subsequently erected, seats almost 6,000 persons.

Party for Lily Pons.

Carleton Smith, who has just arrived in town and is giving a luncheon and circus party for Lily Pons and Andre Kostelanetz tomorrow, is also going East for the festival and for Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's chamber music series, held at the same time. Because only 400 listeners can be accommodated on Music Mountain, Mrs. Coolidge's Berkshire estate, admission to the latter is by invitation only.

It is by courtesy of Mrs. Coolidge that the Ravinia Festival Association will have a week's post-season series of concerts given by the Belgian Pro Arte Quartet, beginning Aug. 5. Next week is the last of the regular season programs.

McLennans Giving Box Party.

At tonight's concert at which John Barbirolli will be guest conductor for the first time, the Donald McLennens are having Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wesley Dempster and the Charles Fosters as their box guests. Mrs. Frederick Preston has turned her box over to her niece, Mrs. James A. Drain Jr. and Mr. Drain, who have invited the Marshall Sampsells to join them. Saturday evening the Prestons will be hosts to the James Lawrence Houghtelings and Alfred Hamills.

Preceding this evening's concert, Mrs. Louis Eckstein is giving a dinner party in honor of Artur Rodzinski, conductor for the last two weeks, and Mme. Rodzinski. Her other guests are to be the Edward L. Ryersons, Charles Swifts and Francis Knights.

The Rodzinskis will also be in the East for the rest of the summer —living not far from Bald Head, estate of the late Kate Buckingham that was bought by Maestro Koussevitzky. It overlooks the Andrew Carnegie estate.

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
EVENING DISPATCH

JUL 23 1940

Down the Scale

By RUTH K. NOLAN

Many Westchester musicians will attend the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will open Aug. 1 at Tanglewood, Mass. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that cellist Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist at the second concert Aug. 3. Jean Lefrance will assist Mr. Piatigorsky on the viola in Strauss's "Don Quixote."

On Aug. 4, Jesus Maria Sanroma, orchestra pianist, will play Stravinsky's piano score for the Capriccio for Orchestra. Albert Spalding will play Beethoven's Concerto for Violin, Op. 61. The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, will give Bach's "B Minor Mass" Aug. 15.

Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass, will be the vocal soloists. Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord, will be instrumental soloists. Dorothy Maynor will sing with the orchestra Aug. 17.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES

JUL 26 1940

MRS. ALEXANDER GIRARD may be envisaged soon in the coolth of the Berkshires enjoying the Music Festival staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lennox. She leaves either today or tomorrow.

• • •

58

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 23 1940

List Soloists For Concerts At Tanglewood

Important Artists To Appear at Berkshire Festival

Soloists of top rank will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Kerskire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in he seventh annual Berkshire Symthe Berkshires August 1 to 18. The eminent 'cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, will play at the second concert, August 3, in Strauss' "Don Quixote." Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sandroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo. Albert Spalding, Summer resident of the Berkshires will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D, Op. 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's B. Minor Mass August 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elizabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass. Instrumentalists will include Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

For the August 17 concert Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last Summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard in Mozart's concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma," and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent. The grounds will be open ample time before concert time to permit picnics and a pleasant stroll.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

JUL 23 1940

U. S. SCHEDULES 2000 FESTIVALS

Affairs Range From Fish Rodeos to Anniversary Parties.

America in 1940 is a land of festivals.

World Fairs are booming on both coasts and some 2000 cities and towns will hold fete periods from one day to a week during the next 90 days.

SEE THE AMERICAS NOW

The U. S. Travel Bureau, at 45 Broadway, New York City, has issued a free 24-page booklet listing summer fetes. Just a few of them are:

In the quiet Berkshire Hills between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., the Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens on Aug. 1. Dates of the nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18.

The concerts are staged in a great student-built shed at Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate on Lake Mahkeenac where Hawthorne wrote some of his romances.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 22 1940

Many Hartford Music Lovers Will Swell the Audience at Tanglewood

THE MUSIC SHED AT TANGLEWOOD, where this scene, photographed during one of the 1939 concerts, will be re-enacted in August when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky presents its first three-weekend series of concerts in Stockbridge. Many noted soloists will be heard this year and the Festival Chorus, made up of students of the Music Center now in progress on the grounds, will take part.

Berkshire Festival Programs at Tanglewood

SERIES A

Thursday, August 1—at 8:30 p. m.

Beethoven	Symphony No. 1
Schumann	Symphony No. 1
Sibelius	Symphony No. 1

Saturday, August 3—at 8:30 p. m.

Berlioz	Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Strauss	"Don Quixote"
	Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky
Harris	Symphony No. 3
Debussy	"Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune"
Ravel	"Daphnis et Chloe" (Suite No. 2)

Sunday, August 4—at 3:30 p. m.

Mozart	Symphony in E flat, No. 3
Stravinsky	Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra
	Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Brahms	Symphony No. 2

SERIES B

Program of Beethoven and Tchaikowsky (commemorating the 100th Anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth)

Thursday August 8—at 8:30 p. m.

Beethoven	"Egmont" Overture
Beethoven	Violin Concerto
	Soloist: Albert Spalding
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique")

Saturday, August 10—at 8:30 p. m.

Beethoven	Overture, "Coriolanus"
Beethoven	Symphony No. 4
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 4

Sunday, August 11—at 3:30 p. m.

Beethoven	Symphony No. 6 ("Pastorale")
Tchaikowsky	Symphony No. 5

SERIES C

Thursday, August 15—at 7 p. m.

Bach	Mass in B Minor
	Berkshire Festival Chorus
	Soloists: Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain, Alexander Kipnis

Saturday, August 17—at 8:30 p. m.

Prokofieff	"Classical" Symphony
Hindemith	"Mathis der Maler"
Mozart	Concert Aria
Beethoven	"Adelaide"
	Soloist: Dorothy Maynor
Faure	Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande"
Respighi	"Pines of Rome"

Sunday, August 18—at 3:30 p. m.

Haydn	Symphony in G Major, No. 88
Sibelius	Symphony No. 7
Brahms	Symphony No. 1

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

JUL 23 1940

Paging New England By ERB

Summer School Days

These are something in New England now. And if the old-timer could come back, he surely would be bewildered by our interpretation of the word "school." No doubt of it—learning is on the increase in this democracy.

New England is a favorite summer school section—climate, history, reputation, mecca for artists, writers, scholars, dramatists. Art and the community grow nearer together.

Let us go astray from the "three R's" and see what we can find in educational New England this month.

* * * *

Thinking It Through

Is United States going to be the musical center of the world? It looks that way. All but faded from sight are the cultural centers of Europe.

Like the summer theatrical stock companies are the music centers here at Peterboro, home of MacDowell colonists; the Rockport, Me., summer home of the Curtis Quartet.

In Tanglewood, Mass., this year and this week, opens for the first time the Berkshire Music center. Here in setting of meadows and trees, Dr. Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony coaches talented pupils in the art of conducting, while members of the world famous orchestra play beside their pupils in individual performance.

There will be classes in operatic interpretation, in choral conducting, even, and not least by any means, in interpretation and appreciation. For a fine and worthy patron of music is not necessarily a creator.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUL 23 1940

Dramatic Role To Be Presented By Lillian Hicks

The 1940 Berkshire Symphonic festival which opens August 1 at Stockbridge, Mass., commemorates the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the great composer, Peter Ilyich Tchaikowsky, with the Boston Symphony's playing the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth and Pathetique Symphonies under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

August 9, during this Tchaikowsky program, the dramatic role of Nadejda von Meck, the true story of whom was told for the first time by Catherine Drinker Bowen in her book, "Beloved Friend," will be enacted by Lillian Beall Hicks, Michigan artist, in Pittsfield at the Barkshire Art Museum, in the heart of the Berkshire summer festival country.

The drama to be presented is the adaptation of the story written for a single actress by Virginia Balinger, of Grosse Pointe, Mich.

The Berkshire-Pittsfield presentation is one of a series of summer programs presented by Lillian Hicks, which are sponsored by the artist bureau of the Michigan Federation of Music clubs. The drama was recently enacted at the Colony Town club in Detroit and is to be featured as the opening program of the Detroit Tuesday musicale in October.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTCHESTER, N. Y.
ITEM

JUL 23 1940

Berkshire Festival To Open August 1

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, will open for the first of a series of three programs on Aug. 1, at the new music shed at "Tanglewood", between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The festival, which annually attracts thousands of music lovers to the Berkshires, will include programs on the first, third and fourth of August for Series A; Aug. 8, 10 and 11 for series B, and Aug. 15, 17 and 18 for Series C. Mrs. Arthur P. Chamberlain, of 115 Mason Street, Greenwich, is chairman for the Greenwich and Westchester district.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OMAHA, NEB.
Morning World-Herald

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FRO
SPRINGFIELD, MAS
REPUBLICAN
JUL 24 1940

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

JUL 28 1940

Berkshire Music Center Is Koussevitzky Dream

By John Selby
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 22—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, the 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, who spends his winters directing the Boston Symphony, which has been called the finest orchestra the world has known.

The Berkshire music center is actually a "dream walking."

It began back in opulent pre-war Rusia, when Koussevitzky had money to do things in the grand style. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as he himself was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Koussevitzky came to America.

The second attempt was also under a depressing and malignant star—in 1929 and at White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Now, in still another war year, he has exactly what he dreamed of. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be acepted.

Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class. But be felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to re-establish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Two thirds of the students are in that class. So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting—a privilege dozens of American youths would have give their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have acepted a few pupils for study of composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

A chorus of about two hundred voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances—even dancing for those who want it.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PATERSON, N. J.
CALL

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM ONEONTA, N. Y.
STAR

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PLATTSBURGH, N. Y.
PRESS

JUL 23 1940

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
JUL 23 1940

This Clipping From MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

JUL 25 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BLOOMINGTON, ILL.
PANTAGRAPH

Jul 26

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
Jul 26.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LANCASTER, PA.
SUNDAY NEWS

JUL 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DULUTH, MINN.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 28 1940

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUL 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

JUL 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
Jul 28 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY-HERALD

JUL 24 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD

JUL 23 1940

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD

JUL 23 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 23 1940

This Clipping From
RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH

JUL 23 1940

60

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

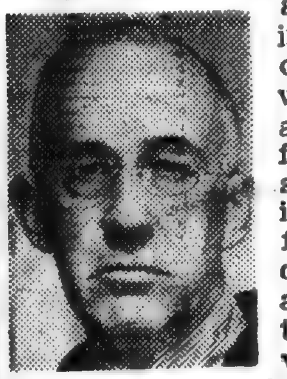
JUL 24 1940

Our Berkshires

Double Stop

By WALTER PRICHARD EATON

Mr. Eaton, author, dramatic critic and university professor, is Berkshire's most articulate conservationist. His writings and lectures championing clean roadsides and wilderness preservation and the Yankee heritage give him a national audience.



AS I was wandering the other day over behind the Shed at Tanglewood, to see if there were any Indian pipes in that corner of old forest where the oaks are a hundred feet tall, I heard somebody sawing away on a fiddle. Some double stopping arrested my attention, and vaguely stirred my memory—at first I could not tell why. Double stopping—hitting two notes at once, with a bow drawn across strings. Surely I never did that! I never even played a mandolin, when that was a fashionable instrument for prep school boys. No, I never . . .

Yes, I did, too! Suddenly it came to me. I played a devil's fiddle! And how! I not only played it, I made it. I was Stradivari and Kreisler rolled into one. The memories of those creative days now swept over me in a flood, and I almost forgot to look for the Indian pipes.

* * *

But perhaps you of an effete generation do not know what a devil's fiddle is. Anyhow, you would find it difficult to secure the proper material for its manufacture. I will tell you how it was made.

First you secured a large wooden shoe box, by what means we will not too carefully inquire. These boxes were about four feet long, and four feet high, but only as wide as the length of the pasteboard boxes containing the separate pairs of shoes which were paced in them. They were well made, of pine—and in those days pine was pine, not a collection of knots. (When I hear somebody boasting of a room finished in knotty pine I think how my grandfather, in his box mill, would have considered such lumber not even fit for shoe boxes). You took this box, then, minus the cover, and made sure that the half-inch top boards on the long sides were firmly nailed at the ends. Then you carefully sandpapered their top edges till they were smooth and level, and then you resined these edges.

The next step was to secure a long two-by-four, one narrow face of which you planed and sandpapered till it was smooth as glass. Then you put resin on that. Now you had a fiddle and a bow.

To keep the fiddle rigid, since you couldn't tuck it under your chin, you next hunted up a few hundred weight of stones, to place in the bottom of the box. All this, I may say, was done in the remotest corner of the barn, except putting in the stones. Nobody, especially your parents, were aware of what you were up to. In fact, you had never been suspected of musical proclivities. You waited until darkness to bring your fiddle forth into the open air, and load in the stones.

* * *

Now all was ready. It was the night before the Fourth, to be exact. Firecrackers were popping. Somebody in the village had eluded the police and got into the church belfrey and rung the bell. But these were minor and unmusical disturbances. You and your chum (it took two pairs of strong arms to double stop with a bow 12 feet long) were ready at last. It was midnight. Sleep had come fitfully to the adults in the neighborhood. You laid the bow across the strings. You gave the signal. You pulled, your chum pushed. And the result, I assure you, was something memorable.

There was loosed upon the midnight clear a kind of stuttering shriek, as if a mastodon had stepped into a pool of boiling asphalt, or a gargantuan banshee was just let out from Hell. The art was to keep the two-by-four bearing down on both board edges at once, true double stopping. One board made a nice note, but the two together were superb. They howled a discord any modern composer would give his soul to achieve.

But in those days modern music had not arrived. The neighbors for at least a mile around were strangely unappreciative of our efforts. We had scarcely stated our opening theme and gone into the first variation when father appeared in his night shirt and indulged in musical criticism much pithier and much briefer than any ever penned by Olin Downes.

It was our Unfinished Symphony.

The fiddle made excellent kindling wood. But I still like the idea. We were simply ahead of our times Music has now caught up with the devil's fiddle. I present this description of it, gratis, to Dr. Koussevitsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

JUL 27 1940

Berkshire Festival Opens Next Week

The seventh Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the "Music Shed" at Tanglewood near Pittsfield, Mass., opens next Thursday evening, August 1. Three series of three concerts each will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, on the Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the three successive weeks of the festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 24 1940

Stockbridge

May Attend Rehearsals

Pupils' Opportunity Includes Transportation

STOCKBRIDGE—Miss Alice Riggs, chairman of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival laymen's music courses, announced the plans today for inviting the students of Stockbridge grammar and high schools to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Aug. 3, 10 and 17.

Postcards are being sent to all students who were in the laymen's music classes this year. These cards are being addressed and sent out through the co-operation of the local NYA office. The students are asked to fill out the answers to the questions on the cards which inquire about the number of rehearsals the student desires to attend, and whether transportation is wanted. The cards should be returned to the committee as soon as possible so arrangements can be made.

Because some high school students, who are interested in music were unable to take the courses owing to conflict in class schedules, the invitation is also open to them. These students must write or telephone Miss Riggs before July 30 in order to get their tickets.

Richard Thorsell has volunteered to transport the students in his bus to Tanglewood free of charge on the days of the rehearsals. The bus will leave the High School yard at 9. Stops will be made at the Glendale store at 9.15 and at the Interlaken store at 9.30.

Students will be given detailed information concerning the arrangements upon the receipt of their acceptance of this invitation. The committee in charge hopes that there will be a large Stockbridge delegation.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 24 1940

Berkshire Festival Expects Largest Crowd in History

STOCKBRIDGE, July 23.—Reservations are continuing to come into the Berkshire Symphonic festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 1 to 18 in the festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the festival office.

It has been requested that persons wishing tickets communicate with the festival office at Stockbridge.

The opening concert will be given Aug. 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor. For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusually fine condition, and state police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1940

City Residents to Attend Berkshire Symphony

Worcester residents will be interested in the activities preceding and during the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens with the first series of concerts Thursday evening at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is permanent conductor of the festival. The concerts of the first series are Thursday, Friday, and Sunday evenings with Jesus Maria Sanroma as guest artist.

THIS CLIPP
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 24 1940

Soloists to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, August 1 to 18, will include:

Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, who will play at the second concert, August 3, in Strauss's "Don Quixote". Soloist also for the same number will be Jean Lefrance, viola.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, August 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo.

Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Opus 61.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center under the direction of Professor G. Wallace Woodsworth, will appear in Bach's B Minor Mass August 15 and soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass.

Dorothy Maynor, whose career was assured after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic, will be heard in Mozart's Concert Aria, "Bella mia fiamma", and Beethoven's "Adelaide" August 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHATHAM, N.Y
COURIER
7/25/40

DEMAND FOR BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL TICKETS GREATEST EVER

Surpassing all expectations, reservations continue to pour into the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the nine concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky August 1 to 18 in the Festival's shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Subscription sales ended June 30, and since then only tickets for single concerts have been available, and they are in great demand. All tickets in the extreme rear section of the shed have been sold, according to the Festival office.

Whether the tremendous demand is due to the greater stature of the Festival or whether it is due to conditions abroad or both cannot be ascertained, but the Festival staff knows from long hours spent at the office that the demand is there.

Persons wishing tickets are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment. Inquiries for accommodations may be sent to the Festival office too. Rooms in Lenox and Stockbridge are growing scarcer, but there are ample accommodations in Pittsfield, Richmond, Great Barrington, Lee, West Stockbridge and other towns within easy driving distances of Tanglewood. Busses will be in operation from nearby centers for the accommodation of those without cars.

The opening concert will be given August 1, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor.

For the opening the grounds at Tanglewood are ready. The buildings are in constant use now by the Boston Symphony's new Berkshire Music Center. The parking area has been put in unusually fine condition, and State Police are already organized to handle the greatest throng that ever visited the Berkshires for a single occasion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 25 1940

Koussevitzky At Festival Meeting

Tanglewood Shed Rapidly Being Filled for Concerts

At a meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees at the Austen Riggs Foundation Workshop yesterday, it was reported by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, the Tanglewood Shed was 70 per cent sold for the three series of concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky next month. Indications point to capacity audiences for practically all nine concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky was a guest at the meeting and was enthusiastic about the progress and achievements of the Berkshire Music Center.

An indication of interest is the increased number of music critics planning to attend the concerts this year. Buffalo, Baltimore, Chicago, Louisville, Ky., Montclair, N. J., and Rochester are sending representatives for the first time this year. All New York, Boston, Hartford, Albany, Springfield, Poughkeepsie, Schenectady, Syracuse, Philadelphia papers will be represented again.

Newspaper representatives will be entertained this year by Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, 500 William Street, Aug. 3 from 5 to 7.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT

JUL 26 1940

FROM the Berkshire Festival management at Tanglewood, nea Stockbridge, Mass., we learn tha literally thousands of music lov ers from all parts of America wi attend the opening concert ther by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitskey. Th event marks the seventh annu Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The opening concert will be o August 1, and we hear that on tickets for single concerts a available and that accommodations are to be had within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1. There will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The second series of concerts opening August 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, who played here last year as guest artist with the Harrisburg Symphony Orchestra under the baton of George King Raudenbush, will appear with the Boston men on the opening concert of this week.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard with the orchestra at the concert scheduled for August 17, and a festival chorus of 200 students will be heard with the orchestra August 15 in the Bach B Minor Mass.

So if you should be going to Boston-town on your vacation you might be interested in driving a little farther and hearing one or more of these outstanding concerts by an orchestra which rates as one of the Nation's major orchestras.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 26 1940

ENLARGE PARKING LOT FOR CONCERTS

Sheriff McIntyre Completes Tanglewood Arrangements . — Lord Lothian May Attend Benefit.

Arrangements for parking at the music festival concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra which start on Aug. 1 have been completed by Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield. Several loads of gravel have been placed in the parking field near the main entrance and there will be room for 3,000 more automobiles than in previous years. Fred N. Cummings will be chief of staff and will have 45 aides, mostly from the American Legion posts in the southern part of the county.

State police arrangements on the highways are in charge of Lieut. McLaughlin of Northampton and there will be four uniformed officers on the grounds.

It was reported in Lenox yesterday that Philip Kerr, marquis of Lothian, British ambassador at Washington and once a member of the former Institute of Politics at Williamstown, will be on hand for the concert to be given at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 16, for the benefit of British relief organizations. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the sympathy orchestra, is said to be enthusiastic over the proposed special entertainment.

BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
7/26/40

C Sharp Minor . .

Bloomington and Its Look-in on Music

By Prof. Guido H. Stempel
Star Music Editor

ANOTHER version of this colyum's "Old Refrain" "In the Good Old Summertime": "The summer seasons of music in America have generally been a long dry spell when those who thirsted for living waters had to be their own rain-makers. That drouth is now ending, thanks to an idea which has taken root in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts."

Lucien Price, of the Boston Globe is writing under the caption "Music in Shirt Sleeves" in the Atlantic for July. He continues: "The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is a rugged plant. Since it sprouted in a horseshoe ring on the Hanna farm seven years ago, its transmutations have been phenomenal. In its second, third, and fourth year it grew under canvas; in its third, still under a tent, though now a larger one,—it was transplanted to a two-hundred-acre estate, 'Tanglewood,' one of the show places of Stockbridge, which its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, deeded outright to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Next, the Festival was befriended by the elements themselves. In August 1937, Father Wotan sent a cloudburst and thundersquall to drown out the music of Wagner. The friendly hint was taken to the tune of gifts amounting to $80,000, which before the next season had built from designs by the eminent Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, an acoustically flawless Music Shed to seat fifty-seven hundred. And this summer the vigorous plant puts forth a new shoot—six weeks of an institute for advanced study, the Berkshire Music Centre.

". . . When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was asked if he would bring the Boston Symphony to the Berkshires he replied: 'I am not interested in conducting concerts for the Berkshire community. My idea is to organize a great music festival of a national and even international scope.' . . . This July the Berkshire Music Centre opens with 350 students whose enrollment was completed last April, and the range of whose talents and personnel already suggest a scope that is national.

"The school is exactly aimed. There is a gap in musical education as attainable in America: it is between training for technique and practice in performance, between mastery of an instrument (including the voice) and experience in ensemble for the development of imaginative insight and interpretative power. Since nine tenths of the present musical training in this country is for mastery of an instrument, technique is now common. Where the lack occurs is in some indigenous equivalent to those Kursaal orchestras and provincial operahouses which in Europe turn the student into a professional. It is an agreeable shock to learn that the Berkshire Music Centre will confer no degrees, award no diplomas, will give not even 'credits.' Not a single thing to hang on the wall! Here is an art to be practised. 'The central idea of our short summer work,' says Koussevitzky, 'will be interpretation. You know that the art of interpretation is still very young. In six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as in conservatories and music schools. Our function is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret.'

"Other music schools find this to their liking. Berkshire is in no sense a competitor—it is a school for graduate study. It does not even duplicate the work of other summer schools in colleges and universities."

The Rockefeller Foundation has granted $60,000 to the Centre, chiefly for scholarships. The Carnegie Corporation has given a "specially designed" organ, which will be dedicated next month with a performance of Bach's B-minor Mass.

"Shirt sleeves," to quote further, "tactfully ingratiate an art with a population still mindful of its pioneer and workaday origins. 'For my part,' says Miss Vilda (poets are under discussion) in a famous story of rural New England, 'I've always despised to see a strong, hulkin' man, that could handle a hoe or a pitchfork, sit down and twirl a penstalk.' But when sweat is seen streaming off the brows of musicians hatless and coatless in an open Music Shed entirely surrounded by farmlands, art begins to wear the lock of honest toil. . . . in America the musician's place must be devised within the framework of a democratic way of life. One sure sign that music is to become a main ingredient in American culture is this force of gravity which draws music more and more to the multitude, and the eagerness with which the multitude comes to music."

On this note we close with a long and strong fermata.

IT is no disparagement of the author or his article to point at the parochial blinders. Hawthorne wrote not only "Tanglewood Tales" but also "Twice-told Tales." And this is happily a twice-told tale as well as a Tanglewood tale.

The importance of Berkshire is by no means less than Mr. Price says. But Berkshire is not unique. The "hum of mighty workings" (Keats, Sonnet to Haydon) have been heard elsewhere in the land. The concerts in the Lewisohn Stadium, the "Symphonies under the Stars" of Hollywood Bowl, Cincinnati's "Opera at the Zoo," St. Louis' summer opera in Tower Grove Park—these have been running, and like the Berkshire Festival running strong, from approximately the same date. The Chautauqua summer season came a little later. The Ravinia Park summer opera antedates Berkshire eight or ten years; and 'way back in the 'naughties of this century Ravinia Park had for several summers two concerts daily by the New York Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Walter Damrosch—a flood of music that would have made history if it had had then, is it would have now, the radio to carry its inspiration over the land. At the 1934 Century of Progress the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Eric De Lamarter gave two symphony concerts daily at the Swift Bridge of Service and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Hans Kolar likewise two at the Ford Symphony Gardens, both organizations, sponsored by "soulless corporations," playing to capacity audiences afternoon and night. And then there are the Bach festivals at Bethlehem. The list is a haphazard one and incomplete, but it will serve as a check in estimating, without at all minimizing, the pioneering importance of Berkshire.

Nor is the idea of the Berkshire Music Centre wholly new. The summer camp at Interlochen, Michigan, and a similar Eastern camp at, if I remember rightly, Bluehills, Maine, have been operating for several years as laboratories and clinics. Wherein the Berkshire setup is new is in the emphasis on graduate study—in the sense that Johns Hopkins at its foundation was new as compared with Harvard and Yale. Ha! that comparison may illustrate how necessary a corrective is.

When I was a young instructor at Wisconsin President Charles W. Eliot once came for a lecture and talked informally to the faculty. Now, I had held unquestioningly the idea of the uniqueness of Johns Hopkins. It came to me as a shock, therefore, when President Eliot remarked quite offhand that Harvard was as well equipped for graduate study as was Johns Hopkins. — A moment's digression. President Eliot amazed me by another plain statement, namely that the annual cost of running Harvard was a million dollars. A million dollars! it seemed incredible. I did not dream that I should see the day when the little college down on the Monon, with the two brick buildings and a stone building just being finished, which I had visited the June before, or its sister college up the road which, when I had seen it in March before that, its two or three buildings on a treeless, sodden plain looking like a county poor form—I did not dream that I should see the day when I.U. and Purdue would be cramped to get along on a mere million a year—Mr. Innocent as I was I had as yet heard but imperfectly "the hum of mighty workings."

WE were not long since talking of plans for vacation—or rather of possible, some even impossible plans. Professor Tangeman spoke up with a sudden gleam in his eye: "Why not drive East for the Berkshire Music Festival?" Das ist bei Gott eine gute Idee! as the lady said in Heine's Memoiren des Herren von Schnabelewopski. But . . . if . . . moreover—oh, well, we can hum to ourselves the refrain of Werner's song in Scheffel's Trompeter von Saekkingen. But it is a good idea.

THE paragraph with reference to Hawthorne above [illegible] merely from the [illegible] stion

---

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUL 27 1940

Berkshire

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music and director of the Philharmonic chorus and the Singers Club, is busily engaged in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, summer home of the Boston Orchestra.

Comes a note from Maurice Goldman, Clevelander, there with Goldovsky assisting in coaching and training singers and studying choral direction, telling of their work.

"Its greatest significance," he writes, "is perhaps the contrast between this great venture and what is going on abroad. It seems that we are laying a cornerstone, as it were. It is a wonderful thing to see Dr. Koussevitzky's long-cherished dream of an American Salzburg become a reality.

"Rubbing shoulders here with Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes and Herbert Graf is in itself an experience."

The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens August 1 with Dr. Koussevitzky directing the Boston Symphony in the first symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Nine concerts are to be given.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 25 1940

Music Views

Another Festival

BY EUGENE STINSON

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will commence its annual summer festival at Tanglewood, Conn., next Thursday. The festival will continue for three weeks, and will be divided into three series of three concerts each, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoons.

Mr. Koussevitzky's opening program for Aug. 1 lists the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Gregor Piatigorsky will play the cello solos in Strauss' "Don Quixote" on the second program. The orchestra's pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, will be soloist in the Strawinsky capriccio on the third, when Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct symphonies by Mozart (E flat) and Brahms (D major).

In the second week Albert Spalding will play the Beethoven violin concerto on a program also containing Tschaikowski's "Pathetique"; the fourth symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky are paired on a second program; the sixth symphony of Beethoven and the fifth symphony of Tschaikowsky comprise the second Sunday matinee.

The Bach Mass will be sung in two sittings at the third Thursday concert, with Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hein and Alexander Kipnis as soloists. Dorothy Maynor will be soloist on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, singing a concert aria of Mozart and Beethoven's "Adelaide"; the Classical symphony of Prokofieff, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," Faure's suite for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Respighi's "Pines of Rome" are also listed. The final concert of Aug. 18 contains three symphonies, the eighty-eighth of Haynd, the seventh of Sibelius and the fourth of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY HONORED

Music School Fetes Conductor in Lenox on 66th Birthday

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 26—In recognition of the sixty-sixth birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty and students of the Summer school that he founded gave a tea this afternoon in the Tanglewood Gardens.

Mrs. Koussevitzky assisted, and Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, gave a brief talk. The Curtis Hotel provided a birthday cake.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
JUL 26, 1940

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
JUL 27, 1940

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 28 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 27 1940

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
JUL 30 1940

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 28. 1940

U. S. MUSIC LOVERS

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commerate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The festival chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitney are in Great Barrington, Mass., for the summer. Quite an honor has come to Mr. Whitney, who, as you know, is conductor of the Louisville Civic Arts Orchestra. He is in Koussevitsky's conducting class for the summer. Kousevitsky is the world-famous conducter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and plays in the Berkshire Music Festival, which is to this country what the Salzburg Festival once was to Europe.

Programs are given the first three week-ends in August at "Tanglewood," the beautiful Berkshire estate at which Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." One of the privileges accorded Mr. Whitney is that of attending every rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 27 1940

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Many music lovers from Bergen County will be among the thousands from all parts of America heading for picturesque Tanglewood within a few days for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most will have their tickets with them, while many others will start hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1. The complete revised programs for the Festival, released today, follow:

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1940

Going to Berkshire Music Festival.

Music-loving Long Islanders are leaving on a pilgrimage to Lenox, Mass., where they will attend the first session of the Berkshire Music Festival, which opens Thursday. The featured orchestra for the seventh annual meeting again will be the Boston Symphony, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The concert program will be run in three parts, each beginning on a successive Thursday, starting next week. Long Islanders attending will include Miss Pauline B. Herrick, Mrs. Milton D. Brown, Mrs. Hobart Porter, Mrs. Lewis A. Eldridge, Mrs. C. Whitney Dall, Mrs. Mansfield Ferry, Mrs. Randall J. LeBoeuf, Jr., and Mrs. Byford Ryan.

BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
7/26/40

C Sharp Minor . .

Bloomington and Its Look-in on Music

By Prof. Guido H. Stempel
Star Music Editor

ANOTHER version of this colyum's "Old Refrain" "In the Good Old Summertime": "The summer seasons of music in America have generally been a long dry spell when those who thirsted for living waters had to be their own rain-makers. That drouth is now ending, thanks to an idea which has taken root in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts."

Lucien Price, of the Boston Globe is writing under the caption "Music in Shirt Sleeves" in the Atlantic for July. He continues: "The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is a rugged plant. Since it sprouted in a horseshoe ring on the Hanna farm seven years ago, its transmutations have been phenomenal. In its second, third, and fourth year it grew under canvas; in its third,—still under a tent, though now a larger one,—it was transplanted to a two-hundred-acre estate, 'Tanglewood,' one of the show places of Stockbridge, which its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, deeded outright to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Next, the Festival was befriended by the elements themselves. In August 1937, Father Wotan sent a cloudburst and thundersquall to drown out the music of Wagner. The friendly hint was taken to the tune of gifts amounting to $80,000, which before the next season had built from designs by the eminent Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, an acoustically flawless Music Shed to seat fifty-seven hundred. And this summer the vigorous plant puts forth a new shoot—six weeks of an institute for advanced study, the Berkshire Music Centre.

". . . When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was asked if he would bring the Boston Symphony to the Berkshires he replied: 'I am not interested in conducting concerts for the Berkshire community. My idea is to organize a great music festival of a national and even international scope.' . . . This July the Berkshire Music Centre opens with 350 students whose enrollment was completed last April, and the range of whose talents and personnel already suggest a scope that is national.

"The school is exactly aimed. There is a gap in musical education as attainable in America: it is between training for technique and practice in performance, between mastery of an instrument (including the voice) and experience in ensemble for the development of imaginative insight and interpretative power. Since nine tenths of the present musical training in this country is for mastery of an instrument, technique is now common. Where the lack occurs is in some indigenous equivalent to those Kursaal orchestras and provincial operahouses which in Europe turn the student into a professional. It is an agreeable shock to learn that the Berkshire Music Centre will confer no degrees, award no diplomas, will give not even 'credits.' Not a single thing to hang on the wall! Here is an art to be practised. 'The central idea of our short summer work,' says Koussevitzky, 'will be interpretation. You know that the art of interpretation is still very young. In six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as in conservatories and music schools. Our function is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret.'

"Other music schools find this to their liking. Berkshire is in no sense a competitor—it is a school for graduate study. It does not even duplicate the work of other summer schools in colleges and universities."

The Rockefeller Foundation has granted $60,000 to the Centre, chiefly for scholarships. The Carnegie Corporation has given a "specially designed" organ, which will be dedicated next month with a performance of Bach's B-minor Mass.

"Shirt sleeves," to quote further, "tactfully ingratiate an art with a population still mindful of its pioneer and workaday origins. 'For my part,' says Miss Vilda (poets are under discussion) in a famous story of rural New England, 'I've always despised to see a strong, hulkin' man, that could handle a hoe or a pitchfork, sit down and twirl a penstalk.' But when sweat is seen streaming off the brows of musicians hatless and coatless in an open Music Shed entirely surrounded by farmlands, art begins to wear the lock of honest toil. . . . in America the musician's place must be devised within the framework of a democratic way of life. One sure sign that music is to become a main ingredient in American culture is this force of gravity which draws music more and more to the multitude, and the eagerness with which the multitude comes to music."

On this note we close with a long and strong fermata.

IT is no disparagement of the author or his article to point at the parochial blinders. Hawthorne wrcte not only "Tanglewood Tales" but also "Twice-told Tales." And this is happily a twice-told tale as well as a Tanglewood tale.

The importance of Berkshire is by no means less than Mr. Price says. But Berkshire is not unique. The "hum of mighty workings" (Keats, Sonnet to Haydon) have been heard elsewhere in the land. The concerts in the Lewisohn Stadium, the "Symphonies under the Stars" of Hollywood Bowl, Cincinnati's "Opera at the Zoo," St. Louis' summer opera in Tower Grove Park—these have been running, and like the Berkshire Festival running strong, from approximately the same date. The Chautauqua summer season came a little later. The Ravinia Park summer opera antedates Berkshire eight or ten years; and 'way back in the 'naughties of this century Ravinia Park had for several summers two concerts daily by the New York Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Walter Damrosch—a flood of music that would have made history if it had had then, is it would have now, the radio to carry its inspiration over the land. At the 1934 Century of Progress the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Eric De Lamarter gave two symphony concerts daily at the Swift Bridge of Service and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Hans Kolar likewise two at the Ford Symphony Gardens, both organizations, sponsored by "soulless corporations," playing to capacity audiences afternoon and night. And then there are the Bach festivals at Bethlehem. The list is a haphazard one and incomplete, but it will serve as a check in estimating, without at all minimizing, the pioneering importance of Berkshire.

Nor is the idea of the Berkshire Music Centre wholly new. The summer camp at Interlochen, Michigan, and a similar Eastern camp at, if I remember rightly, Bluehills, Maine, have been operating for several years as laboratories and clinics. Wherein the Berkshire setup is new is in the emphasis on graduate study—in the sense that Johns Hopkins at its foundation was new as compared with Harvard and Yale. Ha! that comparison may illustrate how necessary a corrective is.

When I was a young instructor at Wisconsin President Charles W. Eliot once came for a lecture and talked informally to the faculty. Now, I had held unquestioningly the idea of the uniqueness of Johns Hopkins. It came to me as a shock, therefore, when President Eliot remarked quite offhand that Harvard was as well equipped for graduate study as was Johns Hopkins. — A moment's digression. President Eliot amazed me by another plain statement, namely that the annual cost of running Harvard was a million dollars. A million dollars! it seemed incredible. I did not dream that I should see the day when the little college down on the Monon, with the two brick buildings and a stone building just being finished, which I had visited the June before, or its sister college up the road which, when I had seen it in March before that, its two or three buildings on a treeless, sodden plain looking like a county poor form—I did not dream that I should see the day when I.U. and Purdue would be cramped to get along on a mere million a year—Mr. Innocent as I was I had as yet heard but imperfectly "the hum of mighty workings."

WE were not long since talking of plans for vacation—or rather of possible, some even impossible plans. Professor Tangeman spoke up with a sudden gleam in his eye: "Why not drive East for the Berkshire Music Festival?" Das ist bei Gott eine gute Idee! as the lady said in Heine's Memoiren des Herren von Schnabelewopski. But . . . if . . . moreover—oh, well, we can hum to ourselves the refrain of Werner's song in Scheffel's Trompeter von Saekkingen. But it is a good idea.

THE paragraph with reference to Hawthorne above arose merely from the [illegible]

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUL 27 1940

Berkshire

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music and director of the Philharmonic chorus and the Singers Club, is busily engaged in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, summer home of the Boston Orchestra.

Comes a note from Maurice Goldman, Clevelander, there with Goldovsky assisting in coaching and training singers and studying choral direction, telling of their work.

"Its greatest significance," he writes, "is perhaps the contrast between this great venture and what is going on abroad. It seems that we are laying a cornerstone, as it were. It is a wonderful thing to see Dr. Koussevitzky's long-cherished dream of an American Salzburg become a reality.

"Rubbing shoulders here with Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes and Herbert Graf is in itself an experience."

The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens August 1 with Dr. Koussevitzky directing the Boston Symphony in the first symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Nine concerts are to be given.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 25 1940

Music Views

Another Festival

BY EUGENE STINSON

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will commence its annual summer festival at Tanglewood, Conn., next Thursday. The festival will continue for three weeks, and will be divided into three series of three concerts each, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoons.

Mr. Koussevitzky's opening program for Aug. 1 lists the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Gregor Piatigorsky will play the cello solos in Strauss' "Don Quixote" on the second program. The orchestra's pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, will be soloist in the Strawinsky capriccio on the third, when Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct symphonies by Mozart (E flat) and Brahms (D major).

In the second week Albert Spalding will play the Beethoven violin concerto on a program also containing Tschaikowski's "Pathetique"; the fourth symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky are paired on a second program; the sixth symphony of Beethoven and the fifth symphony of Tschaikowsky comprise the second Sunday matinee.

The Bach Mass will be sung in two sittings at the third Thursday concert, with Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hein and Alexander Kipnis as soloists. Dorothy Maynor will be soloist on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, singing a concert aria of Mozart and Beethoven's "Adelaide"; the Classical symphony of Prokofieff, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," Faure's suite for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Respighi's "Pines of Rome" are also listed. The final concert of Aug. 18 contains three symphonies, the eighty-eighth of Haynd, the seventh of Sibelius and the fourth of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY HONORED

Music School Fetes Conductor in Lenox on 66th Birthday

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 26—In recognition of the sixty-sixth birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty and students of the Summer school that he founded gave a tea this afternoon in the Tanglewood Gardens.

Mrs. Koussevitzky assisted, and Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, gave a brief talk. The Curtis Hotel provided a birthday cake.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
JUL SUN 26, 1940

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
JUL 27, 1940

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 28 1940

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 28. 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 27 NEWS 1940

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
JUL 30 1940

U. S. MUSIC LOVERS

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commerate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The festival chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitney are in Great Barrington, Mass., for the summer. Quite an honor has come to Mr. Whitney, who, as you know, is conductor of the Louisville Civic Arts Orchestra. He is in Koussevitsky's conducting class for the summer. Koussevitsky is the world-famous conducter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and plays in the Berkshire Music Festival, which is to this country what the Salzburg Festival once was to Europe.

Programs are given the first three week-ends in August at "Tanglewood," the beautiful Berkshire estate at which Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." One of the privileges accorded Mr. Whitney is that of attending every rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the festival.

THIS CLIPP
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 27 1940

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Many music lovers from Bergen County will be among the thousands from all parts of America heading for picturesque Tanglewood within a few days for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most will have their tickets with them, while many others will start hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1. The complete revised programs for the Festival, released today, follow:

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1940

Going to Berkshire Music Festival.

Music-loving Long Islanders are leaving on a pilgrimage to Lenox, Mass., where they will attend the first session of the Berkshire Music Festival, which opens Thursday. The featured orchestra for the seventh annual meeting again will be the Boston Symphony, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The concert program will be run in three parts, each beginning on a successive Thursday, starting next week. Long Islanders attending will include Miss Pauline B. Herrick, Mrs. Milton D. Brown, Mrs. Hobart Porter, Mrs. Lewis A. Eldridge, Mrs. C. Whitney Dall, Mrs. Mansfield Ferry, Mrs. Randall J. LeBoeuf, Jr., and Mrs. Byford Ryan.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

BLOOMINGTON, IND
STAR
7/26/40

C Sharp Minor . .

Bloomington and Its Look-in on Music

By Prof. Guido H. Stempel
Star Music Editor

ANOTHER version of this colyum's "Old Refrain" "In the Good Old Summertime": "The summer seasons of music in America have generally been a long dry spell when those who thirsted for living waters had to be their own rain-makers. That drouth is now ending, thanks to an idea which has taken root in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts."

Lucien Price, of the Boston Globe is writing under the caption "Music in Shirt Sleeves" in the Atlantic for July. He continues: "The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is a rugged plant. Since it sprouted in a horseshoe ring on the Hanna farm seven years ago, its transmutations have been phenomenal. In its second, third, and fourth year it grew under canvas; in its third, still under a tent, though now a larger one,—it was transplanted to a two-hundred-acre estate, 'Tanglewood,' one of the show places of Stockbridge, which its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, deeded outright to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Now, the Festival was befriended by the elements themselves. In August 1937, Father Wotan sent a cloudburst and thundersquall to drown out the music of Wagner. The friendly hint was taken to the tune of gifts amounting to $80,000, which before the next season had built from designs by the eminent Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, an acoustically flawless Music Shed to seat fifty-seven hundred. And this summer the vigorous plant puts forth a new shoot—six weeks of an institute for advanced study, the Berkshire Music Centre.

". . . When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was asked if he would bring the Boston Symphony to the Berkshires he replied: 'I am not interested in conducting concerts for the Berkshire community. My idea is to organize a great music festival of a national and even international scope.' . . . This July the Berkshire Music Centre opens with 350 students whose enrollment was completed last April, and the range of whose talents and personnel already suggest a scope that is national.

"The school is exactly aimed. There is a gap in musical education as attainable in America: it is between training for technique and practice in performance, between mastery of an instrument (including the voice) and experience in ensemble for the development of imaginative insight and interpretative power. Since nine tenths of the present musical training in this country is for mastery of an instrument, technique is now common. Where the lack occurs is in some indigenous equivalent to those Kursaal orchestras and provincial operahouses which in Europe turn the student into a professional. It is an agreeable shock to learn that the Berkshire Music Centre will confer no degrees, award no diplomas, will give not even 'credits.' Not a single thing to hang on the wall! Here is an art to be practised. 'The central idea of our short summer work,' says Koussevitzky, 'will be interpretation. You know that the art of interpretation is still very young. In six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as in conservatories and music schools. Our function is to help artists with good training and knowledge to acquire a penetrating and vivid conception of the music they interpret.'

"Other music schools find this to their liking. Berkshire is in no sense a competitor—it is a school for graduate study. It does not even duplicate the work of other summer schools in colleges and universities."

The Rockefeller Foundation has granted $60,000 to the Centre, chiefly for scholarships. The Carnegie Corporation has given a "specially designed" organ, which will be dedicated next month with a performance of Bach's B-minor Mass.

"Shirt sleeves," to quote further, "tactfully ingratiate an art with a population still mindful of its pioneer and workaday origins. 'For my part,' says Miss Vilda (poets are under discussion) in a famous story of rural New England, 'I've always despised to see a strong, hulkin' man, that could handle a hoe or a pitchfork, sit down and twirl a pen-stalk.' But when sweat is seen streaming off the brows of musicians hatless and coatless in an open Music Shed entirely surrounded by farmlands, art begins to wear the lock of honest toil. . . . in America the musician's place must be devised within the framework of a democratic way of life. One sure sign that music is to become a main ingredient in American culture is this force of gravity which draws music more and more to the multitude, and the eagerness with which the multitude comes to music."

On this note we close with a long and strong fermata.

IT is no disparagement of the author or his article to point at the parochial blinders. Hawthorne wrote not only "Tanglewood Tales" but also "Twice-told Tales." And this is happily a twice-told tale as well as a Tanglewood tale.

The importance of Berkshire is by no means less than Mr. Price says. But Berkshire is not unique. The "hum of mighty workings" (Keats, Sonnet to Haydon) have been heard elsewhere in the land. The concerts in the Lewisohn Stadium, the "Symphonies under the Stars" of Hollywood Bowl, Cincinnati's "Opera at the Zoo," St. Louis' summer opera in Tower Grove Park—these have been running, and like the Berkshire Festival running strong, from approximately the same date. The Chautauqua summer season came a little later. The Ravinia Park summer opera antedates Berkshire eight or ten years; and 'way back in the 'naughties of this century Ravinia Park had for several summers two concerts daily by the New York Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Walter Damrosch—a flood of music that would have made history if it had had then, is it would have now, the radio to carry its inspiration over the land. At the 1934 Century of Progress the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Eric De Lamarter gave two symphony concerts daily at the Swift Bridge of Service and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Hans Kolar likewise two at the Ford Symphony Gardens, both organizations, sponsored by "soulless corporations," playing to capacity audiences afternoon and night. And then there are the Bach festivals at Bethlehem. The list is a haphazard one and incomplete, but it will serve as a check in estimating, without at all minimizing, the pioneering importance of Berkshire.

Nor is the idea of the Berkshire Music Centre wholly new. The summer camp at Interlochen, Michigan, and a similar Eastern camp at, if I remember rightly, Bluehills, Maine, have been operating for several years as laboratories and clinics. Wherein the Berkshire setup is new is in the emphasis on graduate study—in the sense that Johns Hopkins at its foundation was new as compared with Harvard and Yale. Ha! that comparison may illustrate how necessary a corrective is.

When I was a young instructor at Wisconsin President Charles W. Eliot once came for a lecture and talked informally to the faculty. Now, I had held unquestioningly the idea of the uniqueness of Johns Hopkins. It came to me as a shock, therefore, when President Eliot remarked quite offhand that Harvard was as well equipped for graduate study as was Johns Hopkins. — A moment's digression. President Eliot amazed me by another plain statement, namely that the annual co of running Harvard was a milli dollars. A million dollars! it seem incredible. I did not dream th should see the day when the college down on the Monon, w two brick buildings and building just being finishe I had visited the June bef sister college up the when I had seen it i fore that, its two or t ngs on a treeless, sodden king like a county poor form d not dream that I should see the day when I.U. and Purdue would be cramped to get along on a mere million a year—Mr. Innocent as I was I had as yet heard but imperfectly "the hum of mighty workings."

WE were not long since talking of plans for vacation—or rather of possible, some even impossible plans. Professor Tangeman spoke up with a sudden gleam in his eye: "Why not drive East for the Berkshire Music Festival?" Das ist bei Gott eine gute Idee! as the lady said in Heine's Memoiren des Herren von Schnabelewopski. But . . . if . . . moreover—oh, well, we can hum to ourselves the refrain of Werner's song in Scheffel's Trompeter von Saekkingen. But it is a good idea.

THE paragraph with reference to Hawthorne above arose merely from the [illegible] stion of [illegible]

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUL 27 1940

Berkshire

Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music and director of the Philharmonic chorus and the Singers Club, is busily engaged in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, summer home of the Boston Orchestra.

Comes a note from Maurice Goldman, Clevelander, there with Goldovsky assisting in coaching and training singers and studying choral direction, telling of their work.

"Its greatest significance," he writes, "is perhaps the contrast between this great venture and what is going on abroad. It seems that we are laying a cornerstone, as it were. It is a wonderful thing to see Dr. Koussevitzky's long-cherished dream of an American Salzburg become a reality.

"Rubbing shoulders here with Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes and Herbert Graf is in itself an experience."

The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens August 1 with Dr. Koussevitzky directing the Boston Symphony in the first symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Nine concerts are to be given.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 25 1940

Music Views

Another Festival

BY EUGENE STINSON

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will commence its annual summer festival at Tanglewood, Conn., next Thursday. The festival will continue for three weeks, and will be divided into three series of three concerts each, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoons.

Mr. Koussevitzky's opening program for Aug. 1 lists the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Gregor Piatigorsky will play the cello solos in Strauss' "Don Quixote" on the second program. The orchestra's pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, will be soloist in the Strawinsky capriccio on the third, when Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct symphonies by Mozart (E flat) and Brahms (D major).

In the second week Albert Spalding will play the Beethoven violin concerto on a program also containing Tschaikowski's "Pathetique"; the fourth symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky are paired on a second program; the sixth symphony of Beethoven and the fifth symphony of Tschaikowsky comprise the second Sunday matinee.

The Bach Mass will be sung in two sittings at the third Thursday concert, with Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hein and Alexander Kipnis as soloists. Dorothy Maynor will be soloist on Saturday evening, Aug. 17, singing a concert aria of Mozart and Beethoven's "Adelaide"; the Classical symphony of Prokofieff, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," Faure's suite for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Respighi's "Pines of Rome" are also listed. The final concert of Aug. 18 contains three symphonies, the eighty-eighth of Haynd, the seventh of Sibelius and the fourth of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY HONORED

Music School Fetes Conductor in Lenox on 66th Birthday

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., July 26—In recognition of the sixty-sixth birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty and students of the Summer school that he founded gave a tea this afternoon in the Tanglewood Gardens.

Mrs. Koussevitzky assisted, and lin Downes, music critic of The w York Times, gave a brief talk. Curtis Hotel provided a birth ake.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
JUL SUN 26, 194

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
Jul 27, 1940

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 28 1940

RKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO ACT THOUSANDS OF S. MUSIC LOVERS

sands of music lovers from arts of America will head for glewood within a few days for opening August 1 of the seventh nnual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commerate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The festival chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

---

s Clipping From
GFIELD, MASS.
NEWS 1940

rama

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

JUL 27 1940

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitney are in Great Barrington, Mass., for the summer. Quite an honor has come to Mr. Whitney, who, as you know, is conductor of the Louisville Civic Arts Orchestra. He is in Koussevitsky's conducting class for the summer. Koussevitsky is the world-famous conducter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and plays in the Berkshire Music Festival, which is to this country what the Salzburg Festival once was to Europe.

Programs are given the first three week-ends in August at "Tanglewood," the beautiful Berkshire estate at which Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." One of the privileges accorded Mr. Whitney is that of attending every rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the festival.

THIS CLIPP

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 27 1940

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Many music lovers from Bergen County will be among the thousands from all parts of America heading for picturesque Tanglewood within a few days for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most will have their tickets with them, while many others will start hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1. The complete revised programs for the Festival, released today, follow:

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1940

Going to Berkshire Music Festival.

Music-loving Long Islanders are leaving on a pilgrimage to Lenox, Mass., where they will attend the first session of the Berkshire Music Festival, which opens Thursday. The featured orchestra for the seventh annual meeting again will be the Boston Symphony, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

The concert program will be run in three parts, each beginning on a successive Thursday, starting next week. Long Islanders attending will include Miss Pauline B. Herrick, Mrs. Milton D. Brown, Mrs. Hobart Porter, Mrs. Lewis A. Eldridge, Mrs. C. Whitney Dall, Mrs. Mansfield Ferry, Mrs. Randall J. LeBoeuf, Jr., and Mrs. Byford Ryan.

* * *

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS

JUL 26 1940

At Berkshire Music Festival

MAURICE GOLDMAN and Mr. and Mrs. Boris Goldovsky form a trio of Clevelanders active in the Berkshire Music Festival, in progress near Stockbridge, Mass., now. Goldman coaches singers and is studying choral conducting this summer. Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music, is an assistant on the faculty this summer. The festival is under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1940

DR KOUSSEVITZKY HONORED AT TEA ON HIS 66TH BIRTHDAY

Boston Symphony Conductor Feted by Faculty and Students of Summer School He Founded

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 26—In recognition of the 66th birthday of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, the faculty and students of the summer school which he founded gave a tea this afternoon in Tanglewood gardens. Mrs Koussevitzky assisted and Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, spoke. Curtis hotel provided a birthday cake with crystal music bars of notes: "Happy Birthday to You."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD

JUL 28 1940

Beethoven's First Is Koussevitzy's

The revised program for the nine-concert Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., has the opening concert featuring Beethoven's First, Thursday night.

Soloist August 3 will be the Cellist Gregor Piatagorsky and August 4, Pianist Jesus Maria Sanroma.

The seventh concert will be the Bach Mass in B Minor, at 7 and at 9:30 P. M.

Dorothy Maynor who is coming to Bridgeport next Fall will be the soloist August 17. For the seventh year Koussevitzky is conducting.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

JUL 27 1940

Festival Lists Programs

Nine Concerts In Berkshires

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America, including many Poughkeepsie and Dutchess county residents, will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, Thursday, Aug. 1, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky as conductor.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and other concerts will be given Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The second series of concerts, opening Aug. 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spaulding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival chorus, made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will be heard in this classic. The new organ also will be dedicated at this time. Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The Festival will close Aug. 18, with Brahms' Symphony No. 1, as the closing number.

Gregor Piatigorsky, eminent cellist, will play at the second concert, Aug. 3, in Strauss's "Don Quizote." Jean Lefrance, viola, also will be a soloist for this number.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, will be soloist at the first Sunday concert, Aug. 4. He will appear in Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra, with piano solo. Albert Spalding, summer resident of the Berkshires, will be the soloist for Beethoven's Concerto for violin in D Opus 61.

The complete program for the concerts includes:

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 26 1940

MANY ATTRACTIONS DURING FESTIVAL

Outstanding Presentations at Berkshire Playhouse

CHAMBER CONCERTS

Numerous Entertainment Opportunities Besides Symphony Are Offered Visitors.

Persons attending the concerts to be presented by the Boston Symphonic orchestra at Tanglewood on the Lenox-Stockbridge road the first three weeks in August will find a number of other entertainment opportunities scheduled in the southern part of the county during that season, principally at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, and at the annual South Mountain chamber concerts in Pittsfield.

The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge will open with Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" starring Tallulah Bankhead next Monday. On the following week George Bernard Shaw's "The Millionaires" with Ruth Gordon will be presented and the week of Aug. 12 will see Ethel Barrymore in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's classic comedy, "The School for Scandal."

Following its usual custom, the Playhouse will present an extra Saturday matinee each Festival week in addition to the Wednesday matinee and performances every evening except Sundays.

The Symphonic Festival opens on Aug. 1, with concerts on that date, Aug. 3 and 4, and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday afternoons of the two following weeks. There will be a special benefit on Friday night, Aug. 16 for the British Relief organizations. In past years, the Festival has only lasted two weeks, with six concerts, but in answer to a demand, there are to be three series of three concerts each this year, making a total of nine.

Chamber music concerts will be presented at South Mountain in Pittsfield under the direction of William Willeke on Friday afternoons at 4 o'clock, a day when there is no activity scheduled at Tanglewood. There is no charge for these concerts.

The concerts will be presented by the South Mountain String Quartet, founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. In the quartet are Mr. Willeke, cello; Kathleen Parlow, first violin; Edwin Ideler, second violin, and Conrad Hold, viola.

Harold Bauer, pianist, will be the assisting artist at the concert Aug. 2, and Aug. 16, while Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Harvey Shapiro, cellist, will be the assisting artists Aug. 9.

Tickets for the concerts may be obtained by writing to Mr. Willeke, South Mountain Association, Pittsfield.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 27 1940

Piston Hears Composition At Tanglewood

Institute Orchestra Gives Another Program at Shed

Lukas Foss, only 17, of Jamaica, L. I., made his debut as an orchestral conductor at Tanglewood last night in the presence of his teacher, Serge Koussevitzky. Foss conducted the Berkshire Music Center's institute orchestra in Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra.

At the conclusion of the work, both Foss and the composer were given loud applause by the students, faculty and friends who constituted the audience of 1000.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the opening number, P. E. Bach's Concerto arranged by Max Steinberg.

There was keen interest in the appearance of the first soloist with the orchestra, Miss Rose Dirman of New York wo sang "Deh, Vieni non tardar . . ." from "The Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart. Richard Bayles of Juilliard conducted the orchestra for this performance.

The closing number of the evening was Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade (two movements). Leonard Bernstein, of Curtis Institute another of Dr. Koussevitzky's promising students conducted this work.

Yesterday afternoon, following a lecture by Olin Downes, all students assembled on the lawn in front of the residence to have their picture taken after which there was a tea party in honor of Dr. Koussevitzky's 66th birthday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1940

Berkshire Festival On Thursday Night

Seventh Annual Series of Concerts to Open at Tanglewood With Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky Holding the Center of the Stage — Nine Programs This Year Listed

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, extended this year from two to three weekend series of concerts, will open Thursday night at Tanglewood, permanent home of the festival, with a varied program of symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. The Boston Symphony orchestra, led as usual by Dr Serge Koussevitzy, will hold the center of the stage throughout the festival, during which a wide selection of symphonic, vocal and choral music will be presented.

Soloists of top rank will appear at this seventh annual event, including Gregor Piatigorsky, who will appear next Sunday afternoon in Strauss's "Don Quixote." Another soloist will be J. M. Sanroma, pianist for the orchestra, who will also be heard next Sunday night; Albert Spalding, noted American violinist who is a summer Berkshire resident, on Thursday night, August 8, during the first of three Beethoven-Tschaikowsky concerts commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth.

The festival chorus, made up of students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center under the leadership of Prof G. Wallace Woodworth, will appear in Bach's B-minor mass on August 15. Soloists for this occasion will include the following: Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor, and Alexander Kipnis, bass.

Instrumentalists in the Mass will include the following: Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, obio d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord.

At the August 17 concert Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano, who during the past year has made rapid strides and gained much popularity before the American public. Her selections will include Mozart's "Bella mia fiamma" and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

Music lovers motoring any distance who wish to picnic at Tanglewood are urged to do so. The Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington will again have a refreshment tent with sandwiches and soft drinks. The Tanglewood grounds will be open in ample time before each concert to permit picnics and a stroll about the spacious grounds. The refreshment tent will be in operation during intermissions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAVENPORT, IA.
Democrat-Leader

JUL 28 1940

MUSIC LOVERS

. . . from parts of the United States are headed for Tanglewood, Mass., where the annual Berkshire music festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra will begin next Thursday. Tanglewood, the historic farm where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales," has been deeded to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home for its summer festival. During the past weeks the music Center at Tanglewood has been in session and improvements in the music shed and its surroundings have been made. Practically all of the tickets for the concerts which will continue for three weeks have been sold, only a few single tickets are available.

THE FESTIVAL

. . . will open on Thursday evening with an entirely symphonic program: Beethoven's No. 1, Schumann's No. 1 and Sibelius' No. 1. The Saturday evening program will include Berlioz Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" "Don Quixote' by Strauss; Harris' Symphony No. 3, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and orchestral excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite. On Sunday afternoon Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony in Stravinsky's Cappriccio for orchestra and piano. Other numbers will be Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, No. 3 and Brahms Symphony No. 2.

THE SECOND SERIES

. . . of concerts by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood will begin on Aug. 8 and commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth and will feature works by Tschaikowsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist at the final concert of that series. The last series of concerts begins on Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The festical chorus of 200 students at the Music Center will be heard and the new organ will be dedicated at this concert. Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be the soloist at the concert on Aug. 17 and the entire festival comes to a close on Sunday, Aug. 18, with another all symphonic program, Haydn's Symphony in G Major, Sibelius' Symphony No. 7 in one movement and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

103

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1940

A NOTABLE FESTIVAL

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

WHEN the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, plays the opening chord of Beethoven's first symphony next Thursday evening at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have launched the most expansive season in its brief but distinguished history. Three concerts have been added to the quota of six which had been maintained for the last three summers. The repertoire, while remaining primarily instrumental, will include for the first time a major choral work occupying an entire program, Bach's Mass in B minor. The inauguration of the Berkshire Music Center under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction has more than doubled the length of Tanglewood's annual period of active service.

This history of gradual but steady progress began in May, 1934, when the late Henry Hadley made his suggestion of an orchestral festival in Berkshire County to a group of its music-loving permanent and summer residents. This attractive region in western Massachusetts had already been for some years one of the principal American summer centers of chamber music, thanks to the festivals and the series of concerts presented by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge on South Mountain, near Pittsfield.

In June it was decided to go ahead with the project. A site was offered at the horse show ring on the Dan R. Hanna Farm, in the village of Interlaken, near Stockbridge. A Federal grant of a few hundred dollars aided the sponsors in meeting the cost of constructing a shell and providing benches; the rest of the expense involved was met by a group of guarantors. On Aug. 23 the first of the three scheduled concerts was performed by sixty-five members of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Hadley's leadership. The audiences for the three programs ranged from 1,500 to 2,000 persons. After this encouraging start, plans were made for a second season. The festival was incorporated in the fall of 1934 under Massachusetts laws on a non-profit-making basis. Its purpose, as announced in the by-laws, was "to encourage education in the arts, to organize, conduct and support an annual musical festival, to provide opportunities for developing musical and artistic talents, to engage in any other activities that will legitimately aid and foster art." Mrs. Coolidge was made honorary president, and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the present head of the festival organization, became the active president.

* * *

Early History

FOR the concerts of Aug. 8, 10 and 11, 1935, Dr. Hadley returned to the Hanna Farm with an ensemble of eighty-five members of various Eastern orchestras. In the first season the sponsors had taken their chance with the weather, but this time they rented a large tent to offset the risk of rain. This proved useful for the last concert, held after a series of showers had soaked the grounds. A gross attendance of 7,500 bettered the 1934 records, and a second small Federal grant had been used for building additional benches, but yet the second season left a deficit which was made up by friends of the festival.

In September, 1935, Dr. Hadley wrote to the festival trustees that his plans for the summer of 1936 would prevent him from continuing as the festival's conductor. The trustees decided that the engagement of a permanent orchestra under a prominent leader was a necessary step in insuring the continuance of the institution, and, in October, tentative arrangements were made with the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the participation of that eminent organization under its regular conductor. The necessary number of advance subscribers had been enrolled before a deadline on Dec. 15, and contracts were signed in February.

* * *

Advent of the Boston Symphony

THE idea of developing a permanent festival and music center in the Berkshires greatly appealed to Dr. Koussevitzky, whose plans for a somewhat similar institution in Russia had been halted by the onset of the Revolution. Meanwhile, the Hanna Farm had become unavailable, and the 1936 series was presented in a tent giving room for 5,000 seats on Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge. The Bostonians made their Berkshire debut on Aug. 13, and audiences averaging 5,000 attended each of the three programs. There was no deficit, and the festival had now acquired a definite artistic individuality and prestige. It was now capable of maintaining standards which could not have been expected from a group specially recruited for a short time, no matter how talented the conductor or how able the musicians.

The new owner of the Hanna Farm, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, had offered it as a site for the 1937 festival, and the institution would probably have returned to its original locale had it not been for the offer of the Tanglewood estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home for the festival. No longer faced with the prospect of migration, the trustees were able to make more ambitious plans. The number of concerts was raised from three to six, but the average attendance did not suffer. Patrons came from thirty-two states, as well as from Canada and Europe; more than fifty publications were represented in the press contingent.

* * *

The Music Shed

A PERMANENT festival building was already under consideration before the 1937 season, and Eliel Saarinen had been commissioned to prepare preliminary plans. No date, however, had been settled upon for beginning construction when the 1937 series opened under canvas. Acoustic conditions were satisfactory during the first three concerts, but the need of a building was dramatically illustrated by the historic storm which operated during the Wagner program of Aug. 12, drowning out the softer measures of the music with thunder and the heavy drumming of the rain upon the tent. Dr. Koussevitzky valiantly carried out the program, but the trustees readily agreed with him on the necessity of having the projected theater ready for use before the concerts of August, 1938. A fund of $80,000 was raised during the fall; plans were approved on Dec. 28, and ground was broken on the last day of 1937.

The Music Shed housed its first concert on Aug. 4, 1938, when the first announcement was made of Dr. Koussevitzky's plan for an Academy at Tanglewood. Large audiences and high artistic standards again characterized the six concerts of 1938 and those of 1939. Meanwhile, plans for the improvement of the Music Shed and the grounds are gradually being carried out. The latest step is the installation of an organ, made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York. This will be played for the first time ~~in public in~~ the performance of the Bach mass on Aug. 15.

* * *

Present Status and Future Prospects

THE festival probably has not yet achieved its ultimate scope and significance. One can look to further gradual expansion both in its length and in its repertoire, as well as in the activity and importance of the associated Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky's programs have thus far been relatively conservative, although modern works have not been lacking, and American composers have had some representation each year. More experimental programs would doubtless please the audiences less well, but later on the schedule might not inappropriately include some feature which could be regarded as particularly characteristic of the festival.

Gradual, but tangible and well considered, progress will undoubtedly mark the future of this institution, as it has marked its past. The trustees of the festival can be lauded for a notable blend of prudence, vision and foresight, so that the record is one of eminent actual achievement rather than of ambitious dreams which have never advanced beyond the paper stage. It has become the major summer musical event of the eastern United States, outside of the large cities, and has gained this standing entirely on its own account, without trying to borrow glamour by representing itself as the American counterpart of a European series.

Serge Koussevitzky

Underwood & Underwood

Who conducts the opening Berkshire Festival concert next Thursday night

---

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 28 1940

Goldman At Tanglewood

MAURICE GOLDMAN, associate conductor and coach of the Akron Civic Opera Guild, Inc., writes this department from Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., where he is attending the Berkshire music center, that "it is gratifying to see Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's long cherished dream become a reality. The wonderful spirit of this rare person pervades the entire atmosphere of the music center."

Goldman is working under Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Berkshire center's faculty, on a conducting scholarship granted him by the Boston orchestra. Boris Goldovsky, director of the Akron opera guild, is one of the assistants to Koussevitzky this summer, and Carabella Johnson, the local guild's stage director, is working with Goldovsky in the staging of operas at Tanglewood.

"We have an unusually remarkable faculty," writes Goldman. "Imagine rubbing shoulders with Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Olin Downes and Herbert Graf. That in itself is a wonderful experience. Also, we have 35 of the most talented persons in the country—composers, conductors, instrumentalists and singers.

"Let me say that this is the moment when we as Americans can point to Europe and say 'you are decaying and destroying, while we are growing and building.' Really, this has the makings of an American Salzburg.

"As for myself, I can safely venture to say that I am probably the busiest person around here. My schedule runs something like this: 9 to 11:30 a. m., conducting with Koussevitzky; 11:30 a. m. to 1 p. m., choral conducting; 1 to 5 p. m., coaching various persons in opera.

"This goes on five days a week, and it's really hard work. All of us here are working hard. Boris Goldovsky also has his hands full."

Goldovsky, Goldman and Miss Johnson, all of whom live in Cleveland, will be on hand when the Akron opera guild's rehearsals for "Carmen" are resumed in September.

Soloists who will appear with the Boston orchestra and Koussevitsky for the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Aug. 1 to 18, include Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano. Her sensational career began after an appearance last summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Tanglewood picnic.

This Clipping From SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1940

Wins Honor

John R. Halliday of the B. Y. U. music department, who has won a renewal of his teaching fellowship in east.

Utah Musician Earns More Eastern Study

John R. Halliday, now on leave of absence from the music department faculty of Brigham Young university, has been awarded a one-year renewal of a teaching fellowship at the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, New York, according to word received at the B. Y. U. campus.

Mr. Halliday left Rochester last week to attend the Berkshire music festival in Tanglewood, Mass., conducted for six weeks each summer by the Boston Symphony orchestra. ~~A feature~~ of the festival is a triple series of three-day concerts given by the orchestra.

While attending the summer music festival, the B. Y. U. instructor will study with Paul Hindemith, a prominent contemporary German composer who is teaching theory and composition while in exile in America. He will gather material for his doctor's dissertation, which will be on the subject of Mr. Hindemith's works.

Returning to the Eastman school in the fall, Mr. Halliday will resume his teaching in the department of music theory, and will complete his doctorate studies during 1940-41.

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

JUL 31 1940

Norwalkers Among Festival Audience

No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood Shed should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night at 8:30, in Stockbridge, Mass. Numerous Norwalk music patrons will attend.

The shed is not yet sold out. Plenty of single concert tickets for the opening series are available. But if there should be an overflow, trustees have planned for this contingency. Hundreds of benches are available since 3000 chairs were purchased this year to replace benches in the shed.

Music lovers coming to Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "all first" program. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius will be played.

64

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN

JUL 28 1940

Music Festival At Tanglewood Opens Aug. 1

Beethoven's First Will Be Feature Under Koussevitzky

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood, Mass., within a few days for the opening Aug. 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The Festival will open Thursday night with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth and will feature works by Tschaikowsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opeing night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The Festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

Complete and revised programs for all the concerts follow:

Distinguished Leader

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has arranged programs for the Berkshire Music Festival at "Tanglewood" starting Aug. 1 with three week-end series of concerts. At the left is Dr. Koussevitzky in more recent years. At the right, when he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Laws at Harvard University 10 years ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1940

MUSIC

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Next Saturday

Thousands of muisc lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening Aug. 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commenorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The festival chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUL 30 1940

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra players ~~will give~~ their services for a special concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the benefit of Great Britain's war relief. A fete also will be held on the grounds. On the committee representing the orchestra and Berkshire symphonic festival are Ernest F. Dane, chairman; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Robert K. Wheeler, Albert Spalding, Reginald C. Foster and Richard C. Paine.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1940

BERKSHIRE EVENTS

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the ~~first program~~ of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next Thursday night at 8:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program consists of the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, in the respective keys of C and B flat major and E minor.

The second program, next Saturday night, August 3, will have Gregor Piatigorsky as solo cellist and Jean Lefranc as solo violist in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote." The program begins with Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." Roy Harris's third symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite will follow the intermission. The third program, and the last of Series A, will take place next Sunday afternoon, August 4, at 3:30, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as assisting artist in ~~Stravinsky's~~ Capriccio for orchestra and piano solo. The concert begins with Mozart's symphony in E flat (K. 543) and closes with the second symphony of Brahms.

The three programs of Series B will be devoted to music by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the latter's birth. Dr. Koussevitzky will open the concert of Thursday night, Aug. 8, with the "Egmont" overture. Albert Spalding, who lives in Great Barrington, will be the soloist in Beethoven's violin concerto, and Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony will follow. The program for Saturday night, Aug. 10, will consist of the sixth symphonies of the two composers, the Pastoral and the Pathetic. Beethoven's "Corialanus" overture and fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony will be played on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 11.

Bach Mass Aug. 15

Dr. Koussevitzky will present Bach's B minor Mass in the first concert of Series C, on Thursday evening, Aug. 15, with the co-operation of the Berkshire Festival Chorus, composed of 200 students at the Berkshire Music Center which is now holding its first session at Tanglewood. The soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. ~~The performance~~ will begin at 7 o'clock and the Credo, after a substantial intermission, at 9:30.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, ~~whose singing at~~ a reception given by Dr. Koussevitzky during last summer's festival first attracted public notice to her talent, will be heard in Mozart's "Bella mia fiamma" and Beethoven's "Adelaide" in the concert of Saturday night, Aug. 17. The orchestral program begins with Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony and Hindemith's symphony "Mathis der Maler" and closes with excerpts from Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" music and Bach's C minor Passacaglia and Fugue. The works announced for the ninth and last program, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18, are Haydn's symphony in G major, Sibelius's seventh symphony and Brahms's first symphony.

Although there has been a large advance sale, tickets are still available for single concerts. Information about these and about lodgings during the festival period may be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge, but accommodations may be obtained in near-by towns within easy driving distance of Tanglewood. Buses will also be available for those not bringing cars. The regular entrances to Tanglewood are on Route 183.

6

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 29 1940

Revised List For Festival Is Announced

Only One Substitution Made in Boston Symphony Programs

The revised programs to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in the Berkshire Festival which opens at Tanglewood this week has changed the position of several compositions but substituted only one.

Most affected by the interchange is the second series, Aug. 8 through 11. The first series, which starts this week Thursday, remains unchanged. The following week Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony will be played Thursday evening and the Sixth, "Pathetique," originally scheduled then, will be transferred to the Saturday evening program.

Programs Interchanged

The rest of the Saturday program and the Sunday afternoon list are virtually exchanged. Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, the "Pastoral," makes up the first half of the Saturday evening fare. Sunday afternoon Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and his Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60, will be played with Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64, as originally planned.

The only change in the third series is that of the Saturday night program, Aug. 17, on which Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor for organ, transcribed for orchestra by Respighi, has been substituted for Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

Thousands to Attend

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved some where near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

To Honor Tschaikowsky

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth and will feature works by Tschaikowsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The Festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
Jul STAR 30, 1940

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

JUL 30 1940

* * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—In fact, we're in for quite a spell of music, and culture will rage unchecked. My sisters Ada and Frances, and I, have taken a cottage at Stockbridge, Mass., for the duration of the music festival played there each summer by the great Boston Symphony. A beautiful place and an exciting experience. Since Ada's husband, Pierre Mayer, fiddles in the Boston band, we can sneak into morning rehearsals and watch Conductor Koussevitzky's alarming didoes . . .

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

JUL 30 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

JUL 29 1940

Berkshire Music Festival

The opening program of the 1940 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., will take place on Thursday, Aug. 1, with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducting. Other programs in Series A will be given on Aug. 3 and 4, as follows:

Series A
Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky
Thursday, Aug. 1, 8:30 P. M.

Symphony No. 1 in C, Op. 21 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38 .... Schumann
Symphony No. 1, in E minor, Op. 39 .. .. Sibelius

Saturday, Aug. 3, 8:30 P. M.

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" .... Berlioz
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35 .... Strauss
Symphony No. 3 .... Harris
Prelude to "L'apres-midi d'un faune" . ... Debussy
Orchestral excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe (Second Suite) ..... Ravel

Sunday, Aug. 4, 3:30 p. m.
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano

Symphony in E flat, No. 3, K. 543 ... . Mozart
Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo .... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 2, in D, Op. 73 .... Brahms

---

Soloists for Berkshire Festival Programs

ALEXANDER KIPNIS, bass, and Elizabeth Schumann, soprano, (above left and right) with William Hain, tenor, (lower right) will be heard in the Bach B minor Mass with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Thursday, Aug. 15, at 7 p. m. Dorothy Maynor, noted Negro soprano (lower left) will be the evening's soloist at the 8:30 concert Saturday, Aug. 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 29 1940

Social Activities

Local Residents Among Sponsors Of Exhibition

Several Berkshire people are among the officers and committee members of the American Association for Assistance to French Artists, which is sponsoring an exhibition of contemporary French painting in the Reed Studios in Gloucester. The show opened today and will extend through Sept. 3.

Those with Berkshire connections identified with the association are Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, members of the board of directors; Mrs. W. Murray Crane of Dalton and New York and Mrs. Nina L. Duryea of Stockbridge, members of the honorary committee.

The paintings in the show are to be exhibited and sold for the benefit of the artists of France suffering from the war. The exhibition is one of a series of five envisaged by the committee in charge, and represents only a small part of a large and comprehensive project to show the many and varied phases of French paintings to the American public with the hope of selling at the very low prices set by the artists themselves.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 29 1940

TANGLEWOOD OPENS SEASON THURSDAY

Boston Symphony Attracting Thousands of Music Lovers

PROGRAMS GIVEN

Three Concerts Each Week for Three Weeks —Single Tickets Still Available.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin its seventh season Thursday evening at Tanglewood at Stockbridge with the first of the nine concerts to be give by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky, conductor.

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the festival's opening. Most of these have procured their tickets already and have accommodations reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will make the trip to Stockbridge, hopeful of obtaining tickets and accommodations at the last minute. Tickets for single concerts are still available at the gate and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The opening night's concert will include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schuman and Sibelieus and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

To Note Anniversary

The second series of concerts opening Aug. 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens Aug. 5 with the Bach B Minor mass. The festival chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard at the concert Aug. 17. The festival will close Aug. 18 with Brahams Symphony No. 1.

The complete and revised program for the concerts is as follows:

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

JUL 29 1940

Last Thursday night marked the closing of the summer series of concerts on the Boston Esplanade, conducted by Arthur Fiedler as a sequel to the jocund season of the Pops at Symphony hall. The Boston musicians, whose year is a pretty full one now compared with what it was in the old days, repair to the Berkshires for their seventh annual season of concerts in the "shed" at Tanglewood in Stockbridge. This seems by way of becoming a sort of American Salzburg, or Bayreuth. The concerts begin on Aug. 1 and continue in three series until Aug. 18, Mr. Koussevitzky conducting, with programs very like those at the Boston Symphony season. After that, I suppose the players can take a holiday until the Symphony season opens in October.

* * *

In the older days the leading members of the famous band were free all summer. Five of them, you may recall, went to their deaths in a collision at sea in 1898—a tablet commemorates this from its perch on the wall in one of the corridors of Symphony hall. Still the bulk of the orchestra has always stayed on to participate in the famous Pop Concerts, which used to run until July 4, after which they scattered, some for a vacation, some to play in various summer hotel orchestras throughout the East. Today they have to stick around through a good part of August, though with Europe closed by war it is probably not such a hardship as it might otherwise be. Mr. Koussevitzky is precluded this year from making his customary visit to Paris, where he is wont to give several concerts as conductor and whence he generally brings home something new in the way of compositions.

* * *

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, JULY 29, 1941

Berkshire Concert Aug. 15

Boston Symphony, Festival Chorus Join for USO, British War Relief

By CONSTANCE WINSLOW

THE OUTSTANDING MUSICAL and social event of the summer season will be the concert at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, on Friday, August 15. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will star at the concert which will benefit jointly the United States Service Organization and the British War Relief Society, Inc.

Philip R. Allen is chairman of the group serving on the executive committee for the event. Assisting him are Jerome D. Greene, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft of the board of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DR. JAMES PHINNEY BAXTER, III, president of Williams College, is another member of the executive committee, as are Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, George W. Edman of Pittsfield, both of whom represent the board of the Berkshire Festival. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, will assist the executive committee.

Honorary chairmen are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and Ernest Blaney Dane, president of the orchestra. Co-chairmen of the ticket committee are Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield. In addition, there are assisting committees in New York and in Boston.

MRS. MORTIMER A. SEABURY of Weston is general chairman of the Boston committee, which has its headquarters in Symphony Hall. Working with her are the junior Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, who was graduated with distinction from Radcliffe last month; Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. William P. Homans, Mrs. Morton P. Prince, Mrs. Ellery Sedgwick and Mrs. A. Clement Titcomb.

The purpose of the Taanglewood concert is to supply every major Army camp, at lease those east of the Mississippi, with a recording machine and 200 records made by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra, and many needed articles to Great Britain. Last season's Tanglewood concert for the benefit of the British War Relief Society, in one day, netted $23,000.

THE GOVERNORS OF THE six New England States have accepted Chairman Allen's invitation to attend the concert, and Gov. Saltonstall has been asked to preside at a gathering in Tanglewood's "Shed," at which persons of international importance will speak.

The program will begin at 5:30 p. m., with a concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a Yankee Division band, comprising 250 selected men. The second part of the benefit will be the "Berkshire Music Center on Parade," comprising an orchestra in the Shed, a chorus in the Barn, opera in the Theater, and instrumental ensembles in the Chamber Music Hall.

There will follow a lawn party, picnic style, with a typical New England baked bean supper.

Topping the program will be the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the Berkshire Festival Chorus and its soloists. Then there will be the draw for prizes, band music on the lawn, and the program will end with a display of fireworks over Lake Mahkeenac and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

MRS. F. MURRAY FORBES

In concert benefit group

Additional ushers have been announced for the exhibition tennis match taking place at the fashionable Oyster Harbors Club on Cape Cod, Wednesday Aug. 6, for the benefit of the British War Relief Society, Inc. They are: Shirley Ellis, daughter of the Alexander Ellises, of Boston; Louise Newell, daughter of Mrs. Gould Newell, of Brookline; Ann Shedden, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Shedden, of Concord; Belle Kilborne, daughter of the junior R. Stewart Kilbornes, of Washington, Ct.; Gale Kelly, of Cincinnati, and Barbara Tilden, daughter of the J. Addison Tildens, of Oyster Harbors.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTCHESTER, N. Y.
ITEM

JUL 30 1940

Music Festival Opens Thursday Evening

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which Mrs. Arthur P. Chamberlain, of 115 Mason Street, Greenwich, is chairman for the Greenwich and Westchester district, will open Thursday night at the new music shed at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the first of a series of three programs. Serge Koussevitzky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will present the concert.

The festival's program schedule includes events on the first, third and fourth of August for Series A; Aug. 8, 10 and 11 for Series B, and Aug. 15, 17 and 18 for Series C.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 30 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL SEATS STILL AVAILABLE

Stockbridge, July 30—No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood shed should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival Thursday night at 8.30, festival trustees declared today.

Plenty of single concert tickets for the opening series are available. But if there should be an overflow, trustees have planned for this contingency. Hundreds of benches are available since 3000 chairs were purchased this year to replace benches in the shed.

The official government weather forecast for the Berkshire area for the week is fair and cooler for the festival period. At the first concert, the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius will be played.

Trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic festival announced today that they would sponsor a unique benefit program August 16 for the Allied Relief fund, inc. The program will be given at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky has been named chairman of the committee in charge of the program with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it will overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

The whole program will be announced at the opening festival concert, Thursday evening together with information where boxes and tickets may be secured. The sale for this special concert will be open Friday. Reservations will be accepted by mail at Tanglewood.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 30 1940

Concert Series Is To Open This Week

Berkshire Music Festival Will Begin Thursday

Several Portland persons are planning to attend one or more of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., which opens Thursday evening. Announcement has been made by trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival that they will sponsor a benefit program August 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The program will be given at Tanglewood, the orchestra's newly established Berkshire Music Center.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and the festival, as well as director of the Music Center, has been named chairman of the committee in charge of the program, with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 p. m. and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it will overflow the spacious grounds of the estate, with two assemblies in the shed. The whole program will be announced at the opening of the festival concert Thursday. On the joint committee are Albert Spalding, Ernest B. Dane, Richard C. Paine, Reginald C. Foster, Mrs. William Felton Barrett and Robert K. Wheeler.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

JUL 31 1940

MR. AND MRS. FREDERICK KOUNTZ will leave next Wednesday for two weeks' stay in Lenox, Mass., where they will be guests in the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Boston while attending the Berkshire Music Festival. Mr. Sawyer is vice president of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. En route to Lenox they will stop at Chautauqua, N. Y., to attend several symphony concerts.

When they return Mr. and Mrs. Kountz will be accompanied by Miss Frances Dowd of New York who will be their guest for a week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 30 1940

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 31 1940

Berkshire Festival To Open Thursday

No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood Shed, near Stockbridge, Mass., should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night, festival trustees said today.

Trustees have planned for a possible overflow. Hundreds of benches are available, since 3,000 chairs weer bought this year to replace benches in the shed.

Music lovers at Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "al first" program. The first symphonies of Beethoven. Schumann and Sibelius will be played.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUL 29 1940

Heat Sends Social Set Scurrying From Town

All Who Can Find the Slightest Excuse Are Off to the Sea Shore, Mountains Or Any Place Else That Offers Relief

By Elizabeth Henney

A small and unobtrusive item in the paper within the last day or so told of a thermometer that hung in the sun on a store front in a little suburb of Washington. A few days of Washington's recent weather were too much for the temperature recorder. It shot up to the top of the register and exploded with a loud pop.

Most Washingtonians have felt lately a great sympathy for the little thermometer, and that one more degree of heat or one more ounce of pressure would cause them, too, to wind up in a loud explosion. With that state of mind, is it any wonder that all those who can find any excuse at all, business or social, have forsaken this city for mountain or sea breezes? As a result, all the popular watering places have visitor lists sounding like pages from the Washington Social Register.

The Berkshires have drawn some of the cream of the crop of society folk in the last few days, for in addition to the delightfully cool weather, they are offering a special symphony treat. The famous and fashionable Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Lenox, Mass,. will begin on Tuesday evening and continue for three week-ends at the Tanglewood Music Shed. It will feature the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Norman H. Davis, president of the Red Cross, and Mrs. Davis already have reserved boxes for the event, as have Mr. and Mrs. James Lawson Karriak, of Washington. It is expected that Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, will also attend.

Others Seek Relief At Hot Springs

In another direction, also seeking cooler weather, have fled other capitalites. Hot Springs, Va., is for the moment the vacationing spot of Lieut. and Mme. Guy dal Piaz, of the French Embassy. On Friday they entertained at a mint julep party at the Warecrest to welcome some of the new Washingtonian arrivals.

Mrs. John W. Meehan, wife of Col. Meehan of the Medical Corps of the U. S. Army, and her young son, Richard Donnelly Meehan, also are stopping in Hot Springs at The Homestead.

Col. Meehan and his daughter, Miss Ruth L. Meehan, are now en route by motor to the colonel's former home in York, Nebr. The Meehans recently arrived in Washington from Panama, where the colonel was on duty at the Gorgas Hospital. They will reassemble the family here in town on August 15, when they will move into their new home at 3333 Stephenson place, Chevy Chase.

The Justice Millers Prefer Far West

Justice Justin Miller, of the United States Court of Appeals, and Mrs. Miller have gone to the far West for their cooling breezes. They have closed their apartment at Wardman Park and are visiting in Los Angeles.

Justice and Mrs. Fred Vinson, who also live at Wardman, have gone with their two sons for a vacation to Ashland, Ky., and will remain there until the school term opens in September.

Cape May, Too, Has Its Devotees

Cape May, N. J., and its invigorating sea breezes have drawn many a Capitalite. Among those at the Admiral Hotel there now are Mrs. Franklin Nevius, Mrs. R. C. Marshall, jr., Mrs. James Totten, Miss Sarah D. Moore and Dr. and Mrs. John S. Brooks.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee P. Warren, whose home here is on Massachusetts avenue, are spending a few days in New York and are stopping at the Ritz-Carlton there.

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Charles S. Kilburn, who have been motoring through Virginia, stopped off last week with Gen. and Mrs. John L. Hines at the Hines' summer home, Rocky Gap.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER

JUL 30 1940

Berkshire Fete Attracts Many From Essex

Unusual interest is being shown this year in the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens Thursday at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. A large list of subscribers from Essex County was announced yesterday by the festival management through Mrs. Clifford W. Elling of 33 Glen rd., Montclair. There are also, this year, a large number of Essex music students at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Festival will be held at its permanent home on a 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, the former Tappan place, where Hawthorne lived and wrote several of his books. The festival will consist of a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The concerts will be in three series—Aug. 1, 3 and 4; Aug. 8, 10 and 11, and Aug. 15, 17 and 18. All programs are arranged to be of special interest to music lovers and students who include the festival in their vacation plans.

Among this year's subscribers are: Miss Charlotte M. Rubinow, 350 Parker st., Newark; Mrs. Herbert M. Lloyd, 24 Lloyd rd., Montclair; Miss Edna Ambrose, 157 Harrison st., East Orange; Miss Elizabeth Faron, 55 Randolph pl., South Orange; Mrs. Norman H. Wright, Cranbury; Mrs. Marion Wilcox, West Englewood; Charles A. Van Keuren, 141 Gordonhurst ave., Montclair; Miss Jane K. Valleau, 2474 Boulevard, Jersey City; Mrs. J. P. Stevens, 965 Hillside ave., Plainfield; Harry W. Sherman, 744 Broad st., Newark; Mrs. Charles H. Seymour, 162 Madison ave., Morristown; Miss Celia R. Polskin, 830 West Front st., Plainfield; Leonard J. Emmerglick, 744 Broad st., Newark; Mrs. Henry H. Bruns, 400 Highland ave., Upper Montclair; Mrs. Ernest M. Baker, Bernardsville; Mrs. Margaret G. Hulst, 3 Macopin ave., Upper Montclair.

Also Mrs. Gardiner Hawkins, Tenafly; Mrs. John Emerson La Veck, Weehawken; Mill Alice Mulford, Trenton; W. O. Morgan, 244 South Mountain ave., Montclair; Richard B. Mason, Englewood; Mrs. Charles M. Newcombe, Far Hills; Mrs. Wallace M. Scudder, 510 Parker st., Newark; Mrs. W. Floyd Taylor, Highland Park; J. A. Talbot, Smoke Rise, Butler; Miss Ethel Lapat, Paterson; Richard H. Seymur, 469 Elizabeth ave., Newark; Mrs. Edward H. Peplow, Jr., Princeton; Bernard M. Shanley, Jr., 404 Scotland rd., South Orange; J. H. Roberts, 34 Roosevelt rd., Maplewood.

Some of the students at the Berkshire Music Center from New Jersey are: Jane Bauer, 180 Inwood ave., Upper Montclair; Gertrude Carpenter, 180 Inwood ave., Upper Montclair; Esther Prager, Long Branch; Lilly Van Ameringen, 387 Hillside pl., South Orange; Donald Fuller, 16 Courter ave., Maplewood; Michael Kuttner, Westminster Choir College, Princeton; Joseph S. Sheppard, 7 Madison ave., Arlington; Joseph Siegelman, 2280 Hudson blvd., Jersey City; Helen St. J. Clarke, Bogota.

Boston Herald
July 30, 1940

Many Bostonians Will Attend Berkshire Music Festival

Boxholders Include Miss Ellen T. Bullard And Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren

By ALISON ARNOLD

With the opening of the Berkshire Music Festivall at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Thursday, midsummer festivities in the hills will be at their very peak for the next three weeks. Hundreds of visitors, including many distinguished members of Greater Boston society, will throng the resort towns and there will be much entertaining. Formal dinners and luncheons will precede the concerts and informal suppers will take place afterwards.

The boxholders for the first series of festival concerts include many whose names head the list of Opera uarantors and the sponsors for the Boston Symphony concerts. Among hem are Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren of Beacon street, Miss Ellen T. Bullard of Commonwealth avenue, who shares a box with Mrs. David T. Dana of Lenox, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller of Beacon street, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton of Commonwealth avenue, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Jr., of Chestnut Hill, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft of Walnut street, who are to be at the Lenox Club during their stay.

Others include Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt (Nora Iasigi) of "Oxmoor," Louisville, Ky., Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs of Commonwealth avenue, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., of Boston and Palm Beach, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Dr. and Mrs. John W. Bartol of Chestnut street, Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane and Princses Diane R. Eristavi and her mother, Mrs. George Otis Rockwood.

Still others are Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. Philip Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson and Mr. Grenville Lindall.

Gov. Saltonstall will attend the second series of concerts and Thursday evening, Aug. 8, will be the guest of honor at a Berkshire Harvard Club dinner at the Hotel Wendell in Pittsfield. Among the boxholders for the succeeding series are Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Dartmouth street and Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird of "Endean," East Walpole.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas N. Metcalf of Beaver place will make the Lenox Club their rendezvous during the festival. Mr. Alfred Lawrence Ripley and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sweeney of Andover will motor over to "Glen Crannie Farm," Richmond, to be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly for the first concert series. Arriving tomorrow at Harrod Inn, Stockbridge, will be Mrs. Livingston Davis of Commonwealth avenue and Mrs. Augustus Hemenway of Readville.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Butler Swann at "Cherry Hill," Stockbridge, will be Mrs. Lyneham Crocker of Commonwealth avenue, Miss Eunice, Miss Marianne A. and Miss Evelyn H. Crocker, and Mr. Richard Moulton, who is motoring from West Falmouth. Prof. Albert Sprague Coolidge, Mrs. Coolidge and Miss Elizabeth Coolidge of Cambridge, motored down Friday from their summer home at Greensboro, Vt., and will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Willeke at "Mountain House," Pittsfield, for 10 days.

Mr. and Mrs. George B. Cabot have joined Mrs. Cabot's mother, Mrs. George Baty Blake at "Pine Needles," Lenox.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Stuyvesant Fish have gone to Old Lyme, Ct., following a visit with Mrs. Fish's mother, Mrs. Clark G. Voorhees at "Merrywood," Lenox.

Miss Louisa G. Ludlow has rented her house on Main street, Lenox, for a month from Aug. 12 to Mrs. Frederic A. Keep of Washington, who is a sister of Mrs. W. Murray Crane and of Miss Josephine T. Boardman.

Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield, of which Mr. Stuart C. Henry is director, is having a members' night this evening to mark the opening of an exhibition of Shaker art and craftsmanship loaned and arranged by Dr. and Mrs. Edward Deming Andrews of Richmond. Dr. Andrews is writing a history of the Shaker sect under a Guggenheim Foundation grant.

Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt of Longacre, Dalton, president of the Pittsfield Wednesday Morning Club, has secured Walter Hard, Vermont poet, as speaker the 31st. He will give readings and later Mrs. Colt will entertain at a luncheon in his honor at the Pittsfield Country Club.

Prof. Livingston Hall of Harvard Law School and Mrs. Hall of Weston have secured George Kelly's 45-foot ketch, "Yram," for a cruise up the coast starting next Saturday. Their guests will include Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. B. Peirce of Weston, Miss Louise Goddard of St. Louis and Mr. and Mrs. Kimball Prince of Short Hills, N. J.

Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff will entertain the Lenox Garden Club this afternoon and Prof. A. P. Saunders will speak on "Peonies."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 30 1940

Music Lovers Beginning To Arrive for Festival Opening

Festival Trustees Say No One Will Be Turned Away—Seats Still Available for Initial Series—Cool Weather Forecast

Though the great influx of Festival visitors will not come until Thursday, a few people have already arrived for the Tanglewood concerts.

Charles A. Sink, director of Music at the University of Michigan, and Mrs. Sink were at Tanglewood today and will remain for the opening. A large delegation of Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees is expected for the opening. In the delegation will be Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane who will be at the Lenox Club, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Jerome D. Greene, Mark A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Cabot, Richard C. Paine, Edward A. Taft and Bentley C. Warren.

No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood Shed should be sold out before the opening of the Festival Thursday night at 8:30, Festival trustees declared today.

The shed is not yet sold out. Plenty of single concert tickets for the opening series are available. But if there should be an overflow, trustees have planned for this contingency Hundreds of benches are available since 3000 chairs were purchased this year to replace benches in the shed.

Cooler Weather Forecast

The official government weather forecast for the Berkshire area for the week of July 29 is fair and cooler for the Festival period.

Music lovers coming to Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "all first" program. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius will be played.

Late-comers who have not made arrangements for accommodations during their stay in the Berkshires, should communicate at once with the Accommodations Bureau at the Festival office in Stockbridge. Stephen Thach states that he has a number of attractive places still on his list, although few of them are within the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood.

Busses will leave Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before the concerts daily for the convenience of persons without cars.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his aide, Deputy Fred N. Cummings, with American Legion members from neighboring communities serving on a volunteer basis, are prepared to handle 3000 cars in the spacious parking area at Tanglewood.

For the convenience of those who come early, the Thursday Morning Club's refreshment tent at Tanglewood is prepared to serve light suppers and soft drinks.

62

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 30 1940

MUSIC FESTIVAL SEATS AVAILABLE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens Thursday

AT TANGLEWOOD

Trustees Announce Benefit Concert for Allied Relief Fund—Weather Forecast Favorable.

Even if the entire music shed should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Thursday night at 8.30 o'clock, no one will be turned away, since the purchase of 3,000 new chairs to replace the former benches in the shed proper has made these benches available for accommodations close to the building, Festival trustees said today.

A number of single concert tickets are still available it was stated. The official government weather forecast for the Berkshire area this week-end is fair and cooler, so it is believed that a number of persons will take advantage of the outdoor seats.

Music-lovers coming to Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "all first" program when the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius will be played.

Busses will leave Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before the concert and Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his corps of about 75 volunteer workers are prepared to handle 3,000 cars in the spacious parking space. For the convenience of those who arrive early to inspect the grounds, a light supper and soft drinks will be served at the refreshment tent at the rear of the shed.

Trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra announced yesterday that a benefit concert will be given on Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, with the musicians donating their services and all the proceeds going to this agency for work in Europe, particularly in England. The program and seating arrangements will be announced at the first concert, and in the Transcript later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 30 1940

Berkshires on Parade

This week the Berkshires will be host to thousands of people coming from all parts of America. They will be here to enjoy the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

We have no misgivings over the quality of program to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Superlative artistry has been the rule in years gone by and there is no reason to suspect that standards will be lowered this year.

At Tanglewood since July 8 have been more than 300 students and a faculty of 45 and they already have their impressions of the Berkshire. Many of them will help us who dwell here permanently to extend a friendly greeting.

But it will be no inconsiderable problem to take care of the many visitors who come here for the next three weeks. Let us take pains to see that those with whom we come in contact are given every consideration and courtesy, that prices of rooms and commodities remain at their fair level and these pilgrims who recognize Tanglewood as America's outstanding contribution to musical advancement shall not be disappointed because of any short-sighted act on our part.

The Berkshires are on parade. We have an opportunity to show the world that Berkshire hospitality is no myth.

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
JUL 30 1940

Musical Calendar

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is to be undertaken during the three coming weeks at Tanglewood, located between Stockbridge and Lenox. Serge Koussevitzky, wielding his baton over his Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, will present brilliant repertoires to the joy of all Lynn music lovers. Such celebrities as Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will be featured as the accomplished soloists. Bach's B minor Mass will be given with chorus and soloists during the third week making this concert one of the most brilliant of the series.

The complete program dates are as follows: Thursday, 8.30 PM; Aug. 8, 8.30 PM; Aug. 10, 8.30 PM; Aug. 11, 3.30 PM; Aug. 15, 7 PM; Aug. 17, 8.30 PM and Aug. 18, 3.30 PM.

It is interesting to note that the concerts of the second week will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth.

My parting thought for today is found in just 12 little words—by Horace—but what 12 words—"He who combines the useful with the agreeable, carries off the prize." I like to repeat them for it is to share them with my readers.

THIS CLIPPING
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

JUL 30 1940

Koussevitzky and his Boston Orchestra, rehearsing at Tanglewood, Mass, for the great festival to start Thursday, were thankful for the relatively cool estate, but wished they could continue their informal attire.

In midwinter Toscanini, soaking with perspiration, changes everything at intermission. He'd hate to have to conduct the Choral Symphony now.

* * *

Personality sketch: Just as pre-Revolution Russia sent forth one now-world famous group of artists, so post-Bolshevist Muscovy has produced another generation of musicians, bearers of a new spirit. Typical of the present age is Gregor Piatigorsky, the cellist, who will be featured at the Saturday Berkshire concert.

Six feet, 3 inches tall, with black hair and dark eyes, Piatigorsky, is a striking figure as he handles his 1739 Montagnana, as if it were a violin. "When he plays it," said the late Lawrence Gilman, "it sings like a morning star encased in wood."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 31 1940

TICKETS READY FOR REHEARSALS

Will be Given Out at Senior High School Tomorrow to Pupils Who Registered.

Tickets for a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra on Saturday morning at Tanglewood to which pupils of Adams high school who have registered for attendance are entitled have arrived in Adams and will be distributed at the senior high school throughout tomorrow morning, it was announced today by Principal Edward W. Martin.

Approximately 35 pupils of the school registered for attendance at the rehearsals which will be held on the next three Saturdays. The rehearsals will be at 10 o'clock in the morning and all pupils are expected to be in their seats at the music hall by that hour.

In addition to securing the tickets tomorrow for this week's rehearsal, transportation to Lenox will be arranged at the same time. Tickets for the other two rehearsals will be distributed during the next two weeks.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1940

7th Berkshire Music Festival On Tomorrow

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius Program

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. where Serge Koussevitzky wil conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first symphonies of Beethoven Schumann and Sibelius. The second and third concerts will be held next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

According to an announcement yesterday from the festival office in Stockbridge, plenty of single tickets are still available for tomorrow's concert. Even if all the regular seats are sold by tomorrow, hundreds of benches will be ready to accommodate late ticket buyers.

Those who have not yet made arrangements for lodgings while in the Berkshires during the festival are advised to communicate as soon as possible with the accommodations bureau at the festival office. Few accommodations are still open in the immediate neighborhood of Tanglewood, but there is still a considerable choice elsewhere in the region. Buses will leave Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before each concert.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings and American Legion volunteers are prepared to take care of 3,000 cars in the parking area on the festival grounds. The concerts of the festival's second and third series will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18. The New Haven Railroad offers low fare excursion rates for the three Sundays, Aug. 4, 11 and 18, on a special train leaving the Grand Central Terminal at 7:55 a. m. (daylight saving time).

In addition to the regular festival concerts, a special benefit concert will be held at Tanglewood Friday night, Aug. 16, beginning at 6 o'clock, for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. It will be presented under the sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Dr. Koussevitzky and Albert Spalding as chairmen of the committee in charge of the program. All the artists taking part have donated their services. "We shall make a manifestation from New England to old England," Dr. Koussevitzky has stated, "in which all America is invited to join."

The program is to be announced at tomorrow night's concert, and information as to where boxes and tickets may be obtained will also be given out at that time. The sale of tickets for the benefit will open on Friday. Reservations may be made by mail at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The joint committee of the festival and the orchestra, which includes Mr. Spalding, Ernest B. Dane, Richard C. Paine, Reginald C. Foster, Mrs. William Felton Barrett and Robert K. Wheeler, has announced that it will be glad to receive contributions for the fund from any one unable to attend the benefit program. Such contributions may be sent to the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 31 1940

Berkshire Festival To Open Tomorrow

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

68

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 31 1940

Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival To Open Tomorrow Evening

Thousands To Attend Famous Event At Stockbridge

Thousands of Connecticut music lovers including hundreds from Waterbury and Western Connecticut will attend the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., which begins at 8:30 p. m. Thursday under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This year the festival has been increased to nine concerts spread over three week-ends instead of six concerts and the famous Boston Symphony orchestra will be augmented by soloists of international repute.

This festival is one of the most outstanding musical events in the United States each year and attracts thousands of music lovers from all parts of the United States and many foreign countries. Last year the attendance at the six concerts totalled more than 33,000 and this year the advance ticket sale has been far ahead of any other year. With the increase in the number of concerts to be given during the festival it is expected that the total attendance will be close to the 50,000 mark.

Two Outstanding Features.

Each year more and more persons go long distances to hear this orchestra, admitted by many to be the best in the world today. The music shed at Tanglewood where these concerts are presented is on one of the most beautiful estates in the Berkshires.

The programs will include two special features which alone would be enough to make the festival outstanding in musical events this year. Special programs will be given during the second week-end commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth. The second feature will be the singing of Bach's "Mass in B Minor" with the festival orchestra on Aug. 15 at 7 p. m.

Several Soloists.

In addtiion to music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, there will be a number of soloists this year, including Albert Spalding, violinist; Elisabeth Schumann, Alexander Kipnis, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer who scored such a triumph when she was presented last year by Dr. Koussevitzky at a picnic he gave for the orchestra she was later acclaimed by the critics when she appeared in recital in New York. By many Miss Maynor is ranked with Marion Anderson. Waterburians will be interested to know that Rev. Dr. James E. Gregg of First church was president of Hampton institute when Miss Maynog was a student there. Last summer she sang in the church in Pittsfield when Dr. Gregg, its former pastor, was in charge of the summer service.

The opening concert will include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Much of the second series of three concerts will be devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikowsky who seem to share the time equally despite the fact that it is the latter's birthday which is being celebrated. At the first Sunday concert at 3:30 p. m. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in the Stravinsky "Capriccio for piano and orchestra". Other composers to be heard include Strauss, Brahms, Mozart, Prokofieff, Hindemith, Haydn, Faure and Respighi.

Many Other Attractions.

All who plan to attend should try to have tickets in advance or they may find themselves obliged to stand or sit on the grass at the back of the music shed. But even that is no deterrent to the hundreds we have seen do so, for the acoustics are as good there as anywhere in this unusual music shed.

The festival authorities again extend an invitation to all to arrive early and picnic on the grounds of the estate where Hawthorne lived and to walk in the gardens and enjoy this peaceful Berkshire idyllic setting.

For those who come the section offers many other attractions in beautiful scenery, musical programs at South mountain in Pittsfield where the famous South Mountain quartet appears on Friday afternoons during the festival under the sponsorship of that famous patroness of music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. With them will appear as soloists, Harold Bauer, pianist; Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola player, and Harvey Shapiro, violoncellist.

Theater, Dance Programs.

Lovers of the theater and the dance will find interesting programs in Stockbridge or in nearby Jacob's Pillow or at the Bennington festival. The Berkshire Playhouse under the direction of William Miles who has been there year after year will present some outstanding guest stars during the festival weeks. Tallulah Bankhead is appearing in Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" this week. Ruth Gordon will be seen in Shaw's "The Millionairess" during the week of Aug. 5 and Ethel Barrymore will appear in Sheridan's "The School for Scandal" during the week of Aug. 12.

Berkshire Programs.

The programs for the Berkshire Symphonic festival will be as follows:—

Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord; E. Power Biggs, organ.

Saturday evening, Aug. 17, at 8:30—Prokofieff: "Classical" Symphony; Hindemith: "Mathis der Maler"; Mozart: Concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma" (Dorothy Maynor, soprano soloist); Beethosoloist); Faure; Suite, "Pellas and Melisande"; Bach; Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor (transcribed by Respighi).

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18, at 3:30—Haydn: Symphony in G major, No. 88; Sibelius: Seventh Symphony; Brahms: First Symphony.

—SAMUEL MEYERS.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUL 31 1940

AN AMERICAN MUSIC CENTER

By SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY

IF THERE ever was a time to speak of music in the New World, it is now. There is hope for humanity, and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank.

The thing that fills me with deep gratification is the realization this month of my long-cherished dream, the starting of a great American music center. I first thought of creating a music center in Moscow in 1913, but the war and revolution intervened. I resumed my plans when I became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festivals. The gift of Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass., to the orchestra finally made it possible.

Now we have laid the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center, and I look into the future of the project with faith and confidence.

There are 325 students in the new school, and among those who have contributed gifts of scholarships are the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the Rockefeller, Carnegie and Juilliard Foundations and the president of the New England Conservatory of Music.

With encouraging cooperation of this kind, we have every confidence that the Berkshire Music Center will carry on as one of America's foremost endeavors so long as culture and art exist.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 31 1940

MUSIC
In Albany

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood tomorrow evening for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

An Albany branch ticket office has been established at the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street (telephone 4-7495), where any available seats may be reserved. The complete program for Series A is as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING
August 1, at 8:30 o'Clock

Beethoven—
Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21.
Schumann—
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38.
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Sibelius—
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39.

Second Programme:
SATURDAY EVENING
August 3, at 8:30 o'Clock

Berlioz—
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini."
Strauss—
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35.
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violincello Solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola Solo: Jean Lefranc
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Harris—
Symphony No. 3 (in one movement.)
Debussy—
"Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eclogue de S. Mallarme.)
Ravel—
Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite.)
Lever du Jour—Pantomine—Danse Generale

Third Programme:
SUNDAY AFTERNOON
August 4, at 3:30 o'Clock

Mozart—
Symphony in E flat, No. 3 (K. 543.)
Stravinsky—
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano.
Solo—
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Brams—
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUL 20 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 31 1940

Berkshire Festival Opens Aug. 1

Noted Soloists to Appear With Boston Symphony Orchestra

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will open tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock and thousands from this state and Massachusetts are expected to be present. This year's festival, under the direction of the famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, has been increased to spread over three week-ends. The Boston Symphony orchestra will be augmented by soloists of international repute. Last year the attendance at the concerts totaled more than 33,000.

Soloists will include Albert Spalding, violinist; Elizabeth Schumann, Alexander Kipnis and Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer. Concerts will be given on the following days and hours: Aug. 1, 8:30 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 3, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 4, 3:30 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 10, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 11, 3:30 p. m.; Thursday, Aug. 15, 7 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 17, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 18, 3:30 p. m.

Lovers of the theater and the dance will find interesting programs in Stockbridge or in nearby Jacob's Pillow or at the Bennington festival. The Berkshire Playhouse under the direction of William Miles who has been there year after year will present some outstanding guest stars during the festival weeks. Tallulah Bankhead is appearing in Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" this week. Ruth Gordon will be seen in Shaw's "The Millionairess" during the week of Aug. 5 and Ethel Barrymore will appear in Sheridan's "The School for Scandal" during the week of Aug. 12.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 31 1940

THRONGS ARRIVE FOR OPENING OF MUSIC FESTIVAL

Benefit Program Is Planned for Allied Fund on Aug. 16

PITTSFIELD, July 30—Hotels and rooming houses of Central and Southern Berkshire are rapidly filling as hundreds arrive who plan to attend concerts at Tanglewood of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Expect Good Weather

Fair and cooler is the prediction by the Festival authorities for the opening concert Thursday night. Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra already are arriving and it is probable that Gov. Saltonstall will attend the initial concert.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Berkshire County is in charge of the Festival traffic squad. Three thousand cars a night will be handled, it is expected. American Legion members will act as traffic guides and parking officials.

Trustees of the Boston orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that they would sponsor a unique benefit program Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The program will be at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and Festival and director of the Music Center, is chairman of the committee in charge with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it is expected to overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

The whole program will be announced at the opening Festival concert Thursday with information where boxes and tickets may be secured. Sale for this special concert will open Friday throughout the East. Reservations will be accepted by mail at Tanglewood, Lenox.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 31 1940

FIRST CONCERT SEATS AVAILABLE AT TANGLEWOOD

When All Are Sold, Benches Will Accommodate Overflow and No One Will Be Turned Away

Stockbridge, July 30—No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood Shed should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival Thursday night at 8.30, festival trustees declared today.

The shed is not yet sold out. Plenty of single concert tickets for the opening series are available. But if there should be an overflow, trustees have planned for this contingency. Hundreds of benches are available since 3000 chairs were purchased this year to replace benches in the shed.

The official government weather forecast for the Berkshire area for the week of July 29 is fair and cooler for the festival period.

Music lovers coming to Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "all first" program. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius will be played.

Late-comers who have not made arrangements for accommodations during their stay in the Berkshires, should communicate at once with the accommodations bureau at the festival office in Stockbridge. Stephen Thach states that he has a number of attractive places still on his list, although few of them are within the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood.

Busses will leave Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before the concerts daily for the convenience of persons without cars.

For the convenience of those who come early, the Thursday Morning club's refreshment tent at Tanglewood is prepared to serve light suppers and soft drinks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 31 1940

Program For Tanglewood First Concert

Boston Symphony Starts Summer Series Tomorrow Night

Programs for the first week-end of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, which opens tomorrow night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, have been announced as follows:

Thursday, 8:30 p. m.

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21	Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38	Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39	Sibelius

Saturday, 8:30 p. m.

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"	Berlioz
Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35	Strauss
Introduction, Theme with Variations and Finale Violincello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky Violin solo: Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3 in one movement	Harris
Prelude a L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune	Debussy
Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" Lever du Jour Pantomime Danse Generale	Ravel

Sunday, 3:30 p. m.

Symphony in E flat, No. 3	Mozart
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma	Stravinsky
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73	Brahms

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS. REPUBLICAN

JUL 31 1940

LEE

MAY ATTEND FESTIVAL REHEARSALS FREE

Special Invitation to Lee High and Junior High School Students

Lee, July 30—All students of the Lee high school as well as the Junior high are invited to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Saturday morning at 10. Any pupils interested in attending may do so free of charge by notifying either Principal Walter A. Potter or Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller. The students are invited to attend the three Saturday rehearsals, August 3, 10 and 17, and those attending should be at the high school at 9.30 where they will be presented a ticket and transportation to Tanglewood.

Ordinarily there is a charge for admission to these Saturday morning rehearsals which are of more interest to pupils than the actual concert, as it gives an inside picture of the essential details that go to make up a finished symphonic program. It is because of this educational feature that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., has made it possible for the high school children throughout the county to attend the rehearsals free of charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS. EAGLE

JUL 31 1940

Must Arrange For Rehearsals At Tanglewood

LEE.—High school students of the music appreciation course interested in attending the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held on Saturday mornings, Aug. 3, 10 and 17, at 10 are requested to notify Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller or Principal Walter J. Potter so that transportation may be arranged. Tickets may be obtained at the high school on Saturday morning from 9.30 to 9.45. Mr. Miller requests the donation of cars to transport the children, the drivers of which will be issued passes to attend the rehearsals.

Music Festival in the Berkshires

Whe 8/1

Annual Schedule Starts There Today

All roads lead to the Berkshires this week as the gracious little towns of Pittsfield, Lenox and Stockbridge play host to dozens of Bostonians for the annual music festival.

The festival starts today, and has its usual schedule of good concerts listed through Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18. Many Bostonians who are away at the shore at this time are making plans to go to the festival for the last half of the concerts, which includes the much-anticipated performance of Bach B-minor Mass on Thursday evening, Aug. 15. The mass has been given in Symphony Hall by the Radcliffe and Harvard choral groups, and many members of the two universities have been out in Stockbridge this Summer studying, and will sing again under Dr. Koussevitsky's baton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS. TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1940

Drury Pupils to Attend Concert Rehearsals

Only 10 Drury high school pupils have taken advantage of the opportunity to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the Berkshire symphonic festival. The rehearsals are open to students who have taken the music appreciation courses during the past year and others interested. The tickets locally may be obtained mornings at the Drury high school office. Tickets are now available for the third and 10th rehearsals.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO PRESS

AUG 1 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Lures Music Lovers

Concerts Held in Open Air Gardens of Tanglewood

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is about to commence its seventh season under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and thousands of people are pouring in from all over the country—many of them still without tickets or a place to stay. The little town of Lenox, where these concerts take place, is literally packed with musicians and music lovers.

The festival has become quite as celebrated as any of the great musical bouts that used to attract thousands of tourists to Europe before the ugly shadow of the swastika fell across the land. It takes place in the beautiful open air gardens of Tanglewood and it is within the means of everyone who has the time and the ridiculously small entrance fee.

And it has made the entire countryside music conscious. There are boxes, of course, for the more affluent or the socially prominent who like that sort of thing, but there also are hundreds of inexpensive seats for those who are more casual or less well-heeled and they are sold out at every performance.

All of the hotels, even the tony Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, serve dinner early so that the waitresses, busboys, et cetera, can be on time.

I must admit, however, that it is a little startling to draw up at a gasoline station and have the attendant announce through a mouthful of chewing tobacco, "I see they're doing Piatigorsky's 'Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character' this year."

But there you are. Things like that have been happening to me all the time lately and it wouldn't be so bad if only half the time I could hold up my end of the erudition.

* * *

REGARDLESS of my own musical shortcomings, however, the festival devotees are going to have an exciting session. The concerts take place on Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18, with matinees on Sundays.

That's a lot of music for anyone to digest, but if you will notice there are interludes permitting the weary to hunt up a good hot swing band for a nice change.

The programs have all been beautifully balanced and while it would obviously be impossible to list them here in their entirety, as far as I am concerned the two outstanding events are the Bach Mass in B Minor on Aug. 15 and the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, the great colored soprano, Aug. 17.

You might jot those dates down just in case you happen to be driving through this part of the country at the time.

There also is a good deal of excitement over the programs of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky—commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. These fall on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, with Albert Spaulding appearing as guest artist in the first concert.

Finally, anyone interested in obtaining seats for any of the concerts in advance may write the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

THE behavior of the elements in this part of the world also is likely to contribute a little additional excitement to things. Sinister clouds suddenly roll across the hills, thunder such as you have never heard before roars through the valley and then all hell breaks loose.

It happened once as Koussevitsky was leading the Boston Symphony through a lyrical passage.

At that time the concerts were given under a vast tent and for a moment it looked as though it would collapse. Vivid flashes of lightning illuminated the pitchy skies, torrents of driving rain swept through the enclosure, women in evening clothes who had started to beat a quick retreat to their cars were standing knee-deep in mud and panic seemed imminent.

Mr. Koussevitsky, however, is a showman as well as an artist. There were a few hurried instructions and then presently the "Walkure" with all of its wild fury roared right back at the elements with magnificent eloquence.

Wagner probably wanted to leap out of his grave and join the drenched, cheering hundreds who had suddenly forgotten in the intense excitement that huge elms were crashing to the earth—and a little too nearby for comfort.

* * *

But things like that happen all the time around here. Last night, for instance, Tallulah Bankhead, of the husky voice, appeared here as Pinero's unhappy and tortured "Second Mrs. Tanquery." It was a hot, restless night with distant thunder in the air.

Then suddenly the thunder came and curtains of rain rushed through the trees. The Playhouse quivered and shook like some kind of terrified animal and Tallulah, who likes attention when she is showing the world she can take abuse and still come back for more, had to use more than a full stage voice. Miss Bankhead, in fact, had to shout. She knows how, too.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX. NEWS

AUG 1 - 1940

Music Festival Opens Thursday

NEW YORK, July 31.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Thursday in the new music shed at Tanglewood, 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Three series of concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky during the festival. The first series will be given on Aug. 1, 3 and 4; the second, on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, and the third, on Aug. 15, 17 and 18.

For the opening concert, Mr. Koussevitzky has chosen three great symphonies: Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Opus 21; Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Opus 39.

Other programs on this first series will include Strauss' Don Quixote, with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist; Roy Harris' Third Symphony and works by Debussy, Berlioz, Ravel, Stravinsky, Mozart and Brahms.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will appear as soloist on the final concert of the first series. He will be heard in Capriccio, by Stravinsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

AUG 1 - 1940

People are talking about

Lindbergh.... Roosevelt.... The flight of royalty.... Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Festival and the great plans for doing the Bach B Minor Mass with the country's greatest orchestra, the Boston Philharmonic...

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS. EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Tanglewood Echoes From 1939

"A number of Poughkeepsians are planning to attend the performances of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this week." Poughkeepsie Eagle-News, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Richard Rice Henyan of North Church Street and Richard G. Day Jr. of Lowell Road tonight will attend the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood." Schenectady Gazette, Aug. 11, 1939.

"Sherwood Kains has accepted the position of music director for 1940 . . . He is now on his way to the Berkshire Festival . . ." Malone (N. Y.) Telegram, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Helen Corbin of Madison, Wash., said to be the millionth visitor at the World's Fair New England exhibits, arrived in Burlington yesterday . . . She will make a stop in Bennington before going to Lenox, Mass., where she will attend the Berkshire music festival." Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

"Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sciutto of Claverack, Rev. J. J. Gaffigan of Stuyvesant and Rev. S. F. Olszewski and Gerald Bliss of this city will attend the rehearsal which will be held this morning at Tanglewood." Hudson (N. Y.) Register, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"At the end, Dr. Koussevitzky and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall." The Boston Traveler, Aug. 14, 1939.

"The sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed today at its permanent home, Tanglewood, with two outbursts of applause as noisy and as heartfelt as any heard this summer outside a baseball park." The Boston Post, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"Again there was reason for warm admiration for the clarity of detail, the instant responsiveness to the conductor's interpretive wishes, the general impression of a single, seldom-rivalled musical entity composed of musicians who are masters of their instruments." New Bedford Mercury, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"The Berkshire Musical Festival, which has come to mean so much to music lovers the world over, started off last week Thursday, Aug. 3, and will finish next Sunday, Aug. 13, with an afternoon concert of rare beauty. In the beautiful green setting of Tanglewood up in Stockbridge, the distinguished maestro, Dr. Koussevitzky and his incomparable symphony orchestra gave a superb concert for the opening event . . ." Reading (Mass.,) Chronicle.

* * * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony conductor who led his splendid orchestra in the six triumphal concerts of the season, was fairly lionized at the end. An audience wild with enthusiasm applauded and huzzaed for five minutes or more."—C. R. Roseberry in the Knickerbocker News, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 6 by taking the largest audience which ever attended any concert of the six festivals on a tour of Russian 'Never-Never-Land'." — Rockland (Me.) Courier-Gazette, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"To the stout lady with lorgnette in one of the boxes, very handsome lady with luxurious garments and (I'm surprised at you) who should know much better: It's OR-chestra, accent on the first syllable; not or-CHES-tra. And the 'th' in Beethoven does not have the diphthong sound—pardon me." Roger S. Vreeland in the Hackensack (N. J.) Bergen Evening Record, Aug 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"The fourth concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which took place Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., was another triumph for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it brought out a record attendance." The Hudson (N. Y.) Star, Aug. 12, 1939.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/1/40

FESTIVAL OPENS

Thousands of Music Lovers Head for Berkshire Symphonic Program.

Music lovers from all parts of America have come to the Berkshires the past few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens August 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus, made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard at the concert August 17. The Festival will close August 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

The complete and revised program for the first series of concerts follows:

THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 1
at 8:30 o'clock

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, Op. 38 — Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39 — Sibelius

SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 3
at 8:30 o'clock

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" — Berlioz
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35 .... Strauss
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violincello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3 (in one movement) — Harris
"Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eclogue de S. Mallarme) — Debussy Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Ghloe" (Second Suite .... Ravel
Lever du Jour—Pantomime—Danse Generale

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 4
at 3:30 o'clock

Symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K. 543) — Mozart
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano solo .... Stravinsky
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73 — Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 31 1940

Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival To Open Tomorrow Evening

Thousands To Attend Famous Event At Stockbridge

Thousands of Connecticut music lovers including hundreds from Waterbury and Western Connecticut will attend the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., which begins at 8:30 p. m. Thursday under the direction of Serge Kousevitzky. This year the festival has been increased to nine concerts spread over three week-ends instead of six concerts and the famous Boston Symphony orchestra will be augmented by soloists of international repute.

This festival is one of the most outstanding musical events in the United States each year and attracts thousands of music lovers from all parts of the United States and many foreign countries. Last year the attendance at the six concerts totalled more than 33,000 and this year the advance ticket sale has been far ahead of any other year. With the increase in the number of concerts to be given during the festival it is expected that the total attendance will be close to the 50,000 mark.

Two Outstanding Features.

Each year more and more persons go long distances to hear this orchestra, admitted by many to be the best in the world today. The music shed at Tanglewood where these concerts are presented is on one of the most beautiful estates in the Berkshires.

The programs will include two special features which alone would be enough to make the festival outstanding in musical events this year. Special programs will be given during the second week-end commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikowsky's birth. The second feature will be the singing of Bach's "Mass in B Minor" with the festival orchestra on Aug. 15 at 7 p. m.

Several Soloists.

In addtiion to music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, there will be a number of soloists this year, including Albert Spalding, violinist; Elisabeth Schumann, Alexander Kipnis, and Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer who scored such a triumph when she was presented last year by Dr. Koussevitzky at a picnic he gave for the orchestra she was later acclaimed by the critics when she appeared in recital in New York. By many Miss Maynor is ranked with Marion Anderson. Waterburians will be interested to know that Rev. Dr. James E. Gregg of First church was president of Hampton institute when Miss Maynog was a student there. Last summer she sang in the church in Pittsfield when Dr. Gregg, its former pastor, was in charge of the summer service.

The opening concert will include the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Much of the second series of three concerts will be devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikowsky who seem to share the time equally despite the fact that it is the latter's birthday which is being celebrated. At the first Sunday concert at 3:30 p. m. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in the Stravinsky "Capriccio for piano and orchestra". Other composers to be heard include Strauss, Brahms, Mozart, Prokofieff, Hindemith, Haydn, Faure and Respighi.

Many Other Attractions.

All who plan to attend should try to have tickets in advance or they may find themselves obliged to stand or sit on the grass at the back of the music shed. But even that is no deterrent to the hundreds we have seen do so, for the acoustics are as good there as anywhere in this unusual music shed.

The festival authorities again extend an invitation to all to arrive early and picnic on the grounds of the estate where Hawthorne lived and to walk in the gardens and enjoy this peaceful Berkshire idylic setting.

For those who come the section offers many other attractions in beautiful scenery, musical programs at South mountain in Pittsfield where the famous South Mountain quartet appears on Friday afternoons during the festival under the sponsorship of that famous patroness of music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. With them will appear as soloists, Harold Bauer, pianist; Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola player, and Harvey Shapiro, violoncellist.

Theater, Dance Programs.

Lovers of the theater and the dance will find interesting programs in Stockbridge or in nearby Jacob's Pillow or at the Bennington festival. The Berkshire Playhouse under the direction of William Miles who has been there year after year will present some outstanding guest stars during the festival weeks. Tallulah Bankhead is appearing in Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" this week. Ruth Gordon will be seen in Shaw's "The Millionairess" during the week of Aug. 5 and Ethel Barrymore will appear in Sheridan's "The School for Scandal" during the week of Aug. 12.

Berkshire Programs.

The programs for the Berkshire Symphonic festival will be as follows:—

Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; Viola Silva, mezzo-soprano; William Hain, tenor; Alexander Kipnis, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; Willem Valkenier, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord; E. Power Biggs, organ.

Saturday evening, Aug. 17, at 8:30—Prokofieff: "Classical" Symphony; Hindemith: "Mathis der Maler"; Mozart: Concert aria, "Bella mia fiamma" (Dorothy Maynor, soprano soloist); Beethosoloist); Faure; Suite, "Pellas and Melisande"; Bach; Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor (transcribed by Respighi).

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18, at 3:30—Haydn: Symphony in G major, No. 88; Sibelius: Seventh Symphony; Brahms: First Symphony.

—SAMUEL MEYERS.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUL 31 1940

AN AMERICAN MUSIC CENTER

By SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY

IF THERE ever was a time to speak of music in the New World, it is now. There is hope for humanity, and all those who believe in the value and inheritance of culture and art should stand in the front rank.

The thing that fills me with deep gratification is the realization this month of my long-cherished dream, the starting of a great American music center. I first thought of creating a music center in Moscow in 1913, but the war and revolution intervened. I resumed my plans when I became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festivals. The gift of Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass., to the orchestra finally made it possible.

Now we have laid the cornerstone of the Berkshire Music Center, and I look into the future of the project with faith and confidence.

There are 325 students in the new school, and among those who have contributed gifts of scholarships are the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the Rockefeller, Carnegie and Juilliard Foundations and the president of the New England Conservatory of Music.

With encouraging cooperation of this kind, we have every confidence that the Berkshire Music Center will carry on as one of America's foremost endeavors so long as culture and art exist.

✓1 ✓2 ✓3

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUL 31 1940

MUSIC

In Albany

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood tomorrow evening for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands will have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

An Albany branch ticket office has been established at the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street (telephone 4-7495), where any available seats may be reserved. The complete program for Series A is as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING
August 1, at 8:30 o'Clock
Beethoven—
Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21.
Schumann—
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38.
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Sibelius—
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39.

Second Programme:
SATURDAY EVENING
August 3, at 8:30 o'Clock

Berlioz—
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini."
Strauss—
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35.
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violincello Solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola Solo: Jean Lefranc
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Harris—
Symphony No. 3 (in one movement.)
Debussy—
"Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eclogue de S. Mallarme.)
Ravel—
Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite.)
Lever du Jour—Pantomine—Danse Generale

Third Programme:
SUNDAY AFTERNOON
August 4, at 3:30 o'Clock
Mozart—
Symphony in E flat, No. 3 (K. 543.)
Stravinsky—
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano.
Solo—
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Intermission of Twenty-five Minutes
Brams—
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUL 20 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 31 1940

Berkshire Festival Opens Aug. 1

Noted Soloists to Appear With Boston Symphony Orchestra

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will open tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock and thousands from this state and Massachusetts are expected to be present. This year's festival, under the direction of the famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, has been increased to spread over three week-ends. The Boston Symphony orchestra will be augmented by soloists of international repute. Last year the attendance at the concerts totaled more than 33,000.

Soloists will include Albert Spalding, violinist; Elizabeth Schumann, Alexander Kipnis and Dorothy Maynor, Negro singer. Concerts will be given on the following days and hours: Aug. 1, 8:30 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 3, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 4, 3:30 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 10, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 11, 3:30 p. m.; Thursday, Aug. 15, 7 p. m.; Saturday, Aug. 17, 8:30 p. m.; Sunday, Aug. 18, 3:30 p. m.

Lovers of the theater and the dance will find interesting programs in Stockbridge or in nearby Jacob's Pillow or at the Bennington festival. The Berkshire Playhouse under the direction of William Miles who has been there year after year will present some outstanding guest stars during the festival weeks. Tallulah Bankhead is appearing in Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" this week. Ruth Gordon will be seen in Shaw's "The Millionairess" during the week of Aug. 5 and Ethel Barrymore will appear in Sheridan's "The School for Scandal" during the week of Aug. 12.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 31 1940

THRONGS ARRIVE FOR OPENING OF MUSIC FESTIVAL

Benefit Program Is Planned for Allied Fund on Aug. 16

PITTSFIELD, July 30—Hotels and rooming houses of Central and Southern Berkshire are rapidly filling as hundreds arrive who plan to attend concerts at Tanglewood of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Expect Good Weather

Fair and cooler is the prediction by the Festival authorities for the opening concert Thursday night. Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra already are arriving and it is probable that Gov. Saltonstall will attend the initial concert.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Berkshire County is in charge of the Festival traffic squad. Three thousand cars a night will be handled, it is expected. American Legion members will act as traffic guides and parking officials.

Trustees of the Boston orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that they would sponsor a unique benefit program Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The program will be at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and Festival and director of the Music Center, is chairman of the committee in charge with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it is expected to overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

The whole program will be announced at the opening Festival concert Thursday with information where boxes and tickets may be secured. Sale for this special concert will open Friday throughout the East. Reservations will be accepted by mail at Tanglewood, Lenox.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 31 1940

FIRST CONCERT SEATS AVAILABLE AT TANGLEWOOD

When All Are Sold, Benches Will Accommodate Overflow and No One Will Be Turned Away

Stockbridge, July 30—No one will be turned away even if the Tanglewood Shed should be sold out before the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival Thursday night at 8.30, festival trustees declared today.

The shed is not yet sold out. Plenty of single concert tickets for the opening series are available. But if there should be an overflow, trustees have planned for this contingency. Hundreds of benches are available since 3000 chairs were purchased this year to replace benches in the shed.

The official government weather forecast for the Berkshire area for the week of July 29 is fair and cooler for the festival period.

Music lovers coming to Tanglewood for the first concert will hear the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in an "all first" program. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius will be played.

Late-comers who have not made arrangements for accommodations during their stay in the Berkshires, should communicate at once with the accommodations bureau at the festival office in Stockbridge. Stephen Thach states that he has a number of attractive places still on his list, although few of them are within the immediate vicinity of Tanglewood.

Busses will leave Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before the concerts daily for the convenience of persons without cars.

For the convenience of those who come early, the Thursday Morning club's refreshment tent at Tanglewood is prepared to serve light suppers and soft drinks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 31 1940

Program For Tanglewood First Concert

Boston Symphony Starts Summer Series Tomorrow Night

Programs for the first week-end of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, which opens tomorrow night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, have been announced as follows:

Thursday, 8:30 p. m.
Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38 — Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39 — Sibelius

Saturday, 8:30 p. m.
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" — Berlioz
Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35 — Strauss
Introduction, Theme with Variations and Finale
Violincello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Violin solo: Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3 in one movement — Harris
Prelude a L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune — Debussy
Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" — Ravel
Lever du Jour
Pantomime
Danse Generale

Sunday, 3:30 p. m.
Symphony in E flat, No. 3 — Mozart
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo — Stravinsky
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73 — Brahms

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 31 1940

LEE

MAY ATTEND FESTIVAL REHEARSALS FREE

Special Invitation to Lee High and Junior High School Students

Lee, July 30—All students of the Lee high school as well as the Junior high are invited to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Saturday morning at 10. Any pupils interested in attending may do so free of charge by notifying either Principal Walter A. Potter or Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller. The students are invited to attend the three Saturday rehearsals, August 3, 10 and 17, and those attending should be at the high school at 9.30 where they will be presented a ticket and transportation to Tanglewood.

Ordinarily there is a charge for admission to these Saturday morning rehearsals which are of more interest to pupils than the actual concert, as it gives an inside picture of the essential details that go to make up a finished symphonic program. It is because of this educational feature that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., has made it possible for the high school children throughout the county to attend the rehearsals free of charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 31 1940

Must Arrange For Rehearsals At Tanglewood

LEE.—High school students of the music appreciation course interested in attending the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held on Saturday mornings, Aug. 3, 10 and 17, at 10 are requested to notify Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller or Principal Walter J. Potter so that transportation may be arranged. Tickets may be obtained at the high school on Saturday morning from 9.30 to 9.45. Mr. Miller requests the donation of cars to transport the children, the drivers of which will be issued passes to attend the rehearsals.

Music Festival in the Berkshires

WAE 8/1

Annual Schedule Starts There Today

All roads lead to the Berkshires this week as the gracious little towns of Pittsfield, Lenox and Stockbridge play host to dozens of Bostonians for the annual music festival.

The festival starts today, and has its usual schedule of good concerts listed through Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18. Many Bostonians who are away at the shore at this time are making plans to go to the festival for the last half of the concerts, which includes the much-anticipated performance of Bach B-minor Mass on Thursday evening, Aug. 15. The mass has been given in Symphony Hall by the Radcliffe and Harvard choral groups, and many members of the two universities have been out in Stockbridge this Summer studying, and will sing again under Dr. Koussevitsky's baton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1940

Drury Pupils to Attend Concert Rehearsals

Only 10 Drury high school pupils have taken advantage of the opportunity to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the Berkshire symphonic festival. The rehearsals are open to students who have taken the music appreciation courses during the past year and others interested. The tickets locally may be obtained mornings at the Drury high school office. Tickets are now available for the third and 10th rehearsals.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 1 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Lures Music Lovers

Concerts Held in Open Air Gardens of Tanglewood

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is about to commence its seventh season under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and thousands of people are pouring in from all over the country—many of them still without tickets or a place to stay. The little town of Lenox, where these concerts take place, is literally packed with musicians and music lovers.

The festival has become quite as celebrated as any of the great musical bouts that used to attract thousands of tourists to Europe before the ugly shadow of the swastika fell across the land. It takes place in the beautiful open air gardens of Tanglewood and it is within the means of everyone who has the time and the ridiculously small entrance fee.

And it has made the entire countryside music conscious. There are boxes, of course, for the more affluent or the socially prominent who like that sort of thing, but there also are hundreds of inexpensive seats for those who are more casual or less well-heeled and they are sold out at every performance.

All of the hotels, even the tony Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, serve dinner early so that the waitresses, busboys, et cetera, can be on time.

I must admit, however, that it is a little startling to draw up at a gasoline station and have the attendant announce through a mouthful of chewing tobacco, "I see they're doing Piatigorsky's 'Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character' this year."

But there you are. Things like that have been happening to me all the time lately and it wouldn't be so bad if only half the time I could hold up my end of the erudition.

* * *

REGARDLESS of my own musical shortcomings, however, the festival devotees are going to have an exciting session. The concerts take place on Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18, with matinees on Sundays.

That's a lot of music for anyone to digest, but if you will notice there are interludes permitting the weary to hunt up a good hot swing band for a nice change.

The programs have all been beautifully balanced and while it would obviously be impossible to list them here in their entirety, as far as I am concerned the two outstanding events are the Bach Mass in B Minor on Aug. 15 and the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, the great colored soprano, Aug. 17.

You might jot those dates down just in case you happen to be driving through this part of the country at the time.

There also is a good deal of excitement over the programs of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky—commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. These fall on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, with Albert Spaulding appearing as guest artist in the first concert.

Finally, anyone interested in obtaining seats for any of the concerts in advance may write the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

THE behavior of the elements in this part of the world also is likely to contribute a little additional excitement to things. Sinister clouds suddenly roll across the hills, thunder such as you have never heard before roars through the valley and then all hell breaks loose.

It happened once as Koussevitsky was leading the Boston Symphony through a lyrical passage.

At that time the concerts were given under a vast tent and for a moment it looked as though it would collapse. Vivid flashes of lightning illuminated the pitchy skies, torrents of driving rain swept through the enclosure, women in evening clothes who had started to beat a quick retreat to their cars were standing knee-deep in mud and panic seemed imminent.

Mr. Koussevitsky, however, is a showman as well as an artist. There were a few hurried instructions and then presently the "Walkure" with all of its wild fury roared right back at the elements with magnificent eloquence.

Wagner probably wanted to leap out of his grave and join the drenched, cheering hundreds who had suddenly forgotten in the intense excitement that huge elms were crashing to the earth—and a little too nearby for comfort.

* * *

But things like that happen all the time around here. Last night, for instance, Tallulah Bankhead, of the husky voice, appeared here as Pinero's unhappy and tortured "Second Mrs. Tanquery." It was a hot, restless night with distant thunder in the air.

Then suddenly the thunder came and curtains of rain rushed through the trees. The Playhouse quivered and shook like some kind of terrified animal and Tallulah, who likes attention when she is showing the world she can take abuse and still come back for more, had to use more than a full stage voice. Miss Bankhead, in fact, had to shout. She knows how, too.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

AUG 1 - 1940

People are talking about

Lindbergh.... Roosevelt.... The flight of royalty.... Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Festival and the great plans for doing the Bach B Minor Mass with the country's greatest orchestra, the Boston Philharmonic..

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1940

Music Festival Opens Thursday

NEW YORK, July 31.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Thursday in the new music shed at Tanglewood, 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Three series of concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky during the festival. The first series will be given on Aug. 1, 3 and 4; the second, on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, and the third, on Aug. 15, 17 and 18.

For the opening concert, Mr. Koussevitzky has chosen three great symphonies: Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Opus 21; Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Opus 39.

Other programs on this first series will include Strauss' Don Quixote, with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist; Roy Harris' Third Symphony and works by Debussy, Berlioz, Ravel, Stravinsky, Mozart and Brahms.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will appear as soloist on the final concert of the first series. He will be heard in Capriccio, by Stravinsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Tanglewood Echoes From 1939

"A number of Poughkeepsians are planning to attend the performances of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this week." Poughkeepsie Eagle-News, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Richard Rice Henyan of North Church Street and Richard G. Day Jr. of Lowell Road tonight will attend the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood." Schenectady Gazette, Aug. 11, 1939.

"Sherwood Kains has accepted the position of music director for 1940 . . . He is now on his way to the Berkshire Festival . . ." Malone (N. Y.) Telegram, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Helen Corbin of Madison, Wash., said to be the millionth visitor at the World's Fair New England exhibits, arrived in Burlington yesterday . . . She will make a stop in Bennington before going to Lenox, Mass., where she will attend the Berkshire music festival." Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

"Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sciutto of Claverack, Rev. J. J. Gaffigan of Stuyvesant and Rev. S. F. Olszewski and Gerald Bliss of this city will attend the rehearsal which will be held this morning at Tanglewood." Hudson (N. Y.) Register, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"At the end, Dr. Koussevitzky and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall." The Boston Traveler, Aug. 14, 1939.

"The sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed today at its permanent home, Tanglewood, with two outbursts of applause as noisy and as heartfelt as any heard this summer outside a baseball park." The Boston Post, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * *

"Again there was reason for warm admiration for the clarity of detail, the instant responsiveness to the conductor's interpretive wishes, the general impression of a single, seldom-rivalled musical entity composed of musicians who are masters of their instruments." New Bedford Mercury, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"The Berkshire Musical Festival, which has come to mean so much to music lovers the world over, started off last week Thursday, Aug. 3, and will finish next Sunday, Aug. 13, with an afternoon concert of rare beauty. In the beautiful green setting of Tanglewood up in Stockbridge, the distinguished maestro, Dr. Koussevitzky and his incomparable symphony orchestra gave a superb concert for the opening event . . ." Reading (Mass.,) Chronicle.

* * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony conductor who led his splendid orchestra in the six triumphal concerts of the season, was fairly lionized at the end. An audience wild with enthusiasm applauded and huzzaed for five minutes or more."—C. R. Roseberry in the Knickerbocker News, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 6 by taking the largest audience which ever attended any concert of the six festivals on a tour of Russian 'Never-Never-Land'." — Rockland (Me.) Courier-Gazette, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"To the stout lady with lorgnette in one of the boxes, very handsome lady with luxurious garments and (I'm surprised at you) who should know much better: It's OR-chestra, accent on the first syllable; not or-CHES-tra. And the 'th' in Beethoven does not have the diphthong sound—pardon me." Roger S. Vreeland in the Hackensack (N. J.) Bergen Evening Record, Aug 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"The fourth concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which took place Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., was another triumph for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it brought out a record attendance." The Hudson (N. Y.) Star, Aug. 12, 1939.

GREAT BARRINGTON,
MASS.
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/1/40

FESTIVAL OPENS

Thousands of Music Lovers Head for Berkshire Symphonic Program.

Music lovers from all parts of America have come to the Berkshires the past few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens August 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus, made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard at the concert August 17. The Festival will close August 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

The complete and revised program for the first series of concerts follows:

THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 1
at 8:30 o'clock

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21
Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, Op. 38
Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39
Sibelius

SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 3
at 8:30 o'clock

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"
Berlioz
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35 .... Strauss
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violincello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3 (in one movement)
Harris
"Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eclogue de S. Mallarme)
Debussy
Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite .... Ravel
Lever du Jour—Pantomime—Danse Generale

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 4
at 3:30 o'clock

Symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K. 543)
Mozart
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano solo .... Stravinsky
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73
Brahms

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS
REPUBLICAN

JUL 31 1940

LEE

MAY ATTEND FESTIVAL REHEARSALS FREE

Special Invitation to Lee High and Junior High School Students

Lee, July 30—All students of the Lee high school as well as the Junior high are invited to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Saturday morning at 10. Any pupils interested in attending may do so free of charge by notifying either Principal Walter A. Potter or Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller. The students are invited to attend the three Saturday rehearsals, August 3, 10 and 17, and those attending should be at the high school at 9.30 where they will be presented a ticket and transportation to Tanglewood.

Ordinarily there is a charge for admission to these Saturday morning rehearsals which are of more interest to pupils than the actual concert, as it gives an inside picture of the essential details that go to make up a finished symphonic program. It is because of this educational feature that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., has made it possible for the high school children throughout the county to attend the rehearsals free of charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 31 1940

Must Arrange For Rehearsals At Tanglewood

LEE.—High school students of the music appreciation course interested in attending the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held on Saturday mornings, Aug. 3, 10 and 17, at 10 are requested to notify Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller or Principal Walter J. Potter so that transportation may be arranged. Tickets may be obtained at the high school on Saturday morning from 9.30 to 9.45. Mr Miller requests the donation of cars to transport the children, the drivers of which will be issued passes to attend the rehearsals.

Music Festival in the Berkshires

Annual Schedule Starts There Today

All roads lead to the Berkshires this week as the gracious little towns of Pittsfield, Lenox and Stockbridge play host to dozens of Bostonians for the annual music festival.

The festival starts today, and has its usual schedule of good concerts listed through Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18. Many Bostonians who are away at the shore at this time are making plans to go to the festival for the last half of the concerts, which includes the much-anticipated performance of Bach B-minor Mass on Thursday evening, Aug. 15. The mass has been given in Symphony Hall by the Radcliffe and Harvard choral groups, and many members of the two universities have been out in Stockbridge this Summer studying, and will sing again under Dr. Koussevitsky's baton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1940

Drury Pupils to Attend Concert Rehearsals

Only 10 Drury high school pupils have taken advantage of the opportunity to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the Berkshire symphonic festival. The rehearsals are open to students who have taken the music appreciation courses during the past year and others interested. The tickets locally may be obtained mornings at the Drury high school office. Tickets are now available for the third and 10th rehearsals.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 1 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Lures Music Lovers

Concerts Held in Open Air Gardens of Tanglewood

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.: The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is about to commence its seventh season under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and thousands of people are pouring in from all over the country—many of them still without tickets or a place to stay. The little town of Lenox, where these concerts take place, is literally packed with musicians and music lovers.

The festival has become quite as celebrated as any of the great musical bouts that used to attract thousands of tourists to Europe before the ugly shadow of the swastika fell across the land. It takes place in the beautiful open air gardens of Tanglewood and it is within the means of everyone who has the time and the ridiculously small entrance fee.

And it has made the entire countryside music conscious. There are boxes, of course, for the more affluent or the socially prominent who like that sort of thing, but there also are hundreds of inexpensive seats for those who are more casual or less well-heeled and they are sold out at every performance.

All of the hotels, even the tony Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, serve dinner early so that the waitresses, busboys, et cetera, can be on time.

I must admit, however, that it is a little startling to draw up at a gasoline station and have the attendant announce through a mouthful of chewing tobacco, "I see they're doing Piatigorsky's 'Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character' this year."

But there you are. Things like that have been happening to me all the time lately and it wouldn't be so bad if only half the time I could hold up my end of the erudition.

* * *

REGARDLESS of my own musical shortcomings, however, the festival devotees are going to have an exciting session. The concerts take place on Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18, with matinees on Sundays.

That's a lot of music for anyone to digest, but if you will notice there are interludes permitting the weary to hunt up a good hot swing band for a nice change.

The programs have all been beautifully balanced and while it would obviously be impossible to list them here in their entirety, as far as I am concerned the two outstanding events are the Bach Mass in B Minor on Aug. 15 and the appearance of Dorothy Maynor, the great colored soprano, Aug. 17.

You might jot those dates down just in case you happen to be driving through this part of the country at the time.

There also is a good deal of excitement over the programs of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky—commemorating the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth. These fall on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, with Albert Spaulding appearing as guest artist in the first concert.

Finally, anyone interested in obtaining seats for any of the concerts in advance may write the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

THE behavior of the elements in this part of the world also is likely to contribute a little additional excitement to things. Sinister clouds suddenly roll across the hills, thunder such as you have never heard before roars through the valley and then all hell breaks loose.

It happened once as Koussevitsky was leading the Boston Symphony through a lyrical passage. At that time the concerts were given under a vast tent and for a moment it looked as though it would collapse. Vivid flashes of lightning illuminated the pitchy skies, torrents of driving rain swept through the enclosure, women in evening clothes who had started to beat a quick retreat to their cars were standing knee-deep in mud and panic seemed imminent.

Mr. Koussevitsky, however, is a showman as well as an artist. There were a few hurried instructions and then presently the "Walkure" with all of its wild fury roared right back at the elements with magnificent eloquence.

Wagner probably wanted to leap out of his grave and join the drenched, cheering hundreds who had suddenly forgotten in the intense excitement that huge elms were crashing to the earth—and a little too nearby for comfort.

* * *

But things like that happen all the time around here. Last night, for instance, Tallulah Bankhead, of the husky voice, appeared here as Pinero's unhappy and tortured "Second Mrs. Tanquery." It was a hot, restless night with distant thunder in the air.

Then suddenly the thunder came and curtains of rain rushed through the trees. The Playhouse quivered and shook like some kind of terrified animal and Tallulah, who likes attention when she is showing the world she can take abuse and still come back for more, had to use more than a full stage voice. Miss Bankhead, in fact, had to shout. She knows how, too.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

AUG 1 - 1940

People are talking about

Lindbergh.... Roosevelt.... The flight of royalty.... Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Festival and the great plans for doing the Bach B Minor Mass with the country's greatest orchestra, the Boston Philharmonic..

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1940

Music Festival Opens Thursday

NEW YORK, July 31.—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Thursday in the new music shed at Tanglewood, 200-acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Three series of concerts will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky during the festival. The first series will be given on Aug. 1, 3 and 4; the second, on Aug. 8, 10 and 11, and the third, on Aug. 15, 17 and 18.

For the opening concert, Mr. Koussevitzky has chosen three great symphonies: Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Opus 21; Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Opus 39.

Other programs on this first series will include Strauss' Don Quixote, with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist; Roy Harris' Third Symphony and works by Debussy, Berlioz, Ravel, Stravinsky, Mozart and Brahms.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will appear as soloist on the final concert of the first series. He will be heard in Capriccio, by Stravinsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Tanglewood Echoes From 1939

"A number of Poughkeepsians are planning to attend the performances of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this week." Poughkeepsie Eagle-News, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Richard Rice Henyan of North Church Street and Richard G. Day Jr. of Lowell Road tonight will attend the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood." Schenectady Gazette, Aug. 11, 1939.

"Sherwood Kains has accepted the position of music director for 1940 . . . He is now on his way to the Berkshire Festival . . ." Malone (N. Y.) Telegram, Aug. 12, 1939.

"Helen Corbin of Madison, Wash., said to be the millionth visitor at the World's Fair New England exhibits, arrived in Burlington yesterday . . . She will make a stop in Bennington before going to Lenox, Mass., where she will attend the Berkshire music festival." Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

"Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sciutto of Claverack, Rev. J. J. Gaffigan of Stuyvesant and Rev. S. F. Olszewski and Gerald Bliss of this city will attend the rehearsal which will be held this morning at Tanglewood." Hudson (N. Y.) Register, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"At the end, Dr. Koussevitzky and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall." The Boston Traveler, Aug. 14, 1939.

"The sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed today at its permanent home, Tanglewood, with two outbursts of applause as noisy and as heartfelt as any heard this summer outside a baseball park." The Boston Post, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * *

"Again there was reason for warm admiration for the clarity of detail, the instant responsiveness to the conductor's interpretive wishes, the general impression of a single, seldom-rivalled musical entity composed of musicians who are masters of their instruments." New Bedford Mercury, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"The Berkshire Musical Festival, which has come to mean so much to music lovers the world over, started off last week Thursday, Aug. 3, and will finish next Sunday, Aug. 13, with an afternoon concert of rare beauty. In the beautiful green setting of Tanglewood up in Stockbridge, the distinguished maestro, Dr. Koussevitzky and his incomparable symphony orchestra gave a superb concert for the opening event . . ." Reading (Mass.,) Chronicle.

* * * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony conductor who led his splendid orchestra in the six triumphal concerts of the season, was fairly lionized at the end. An audience wild with enthusiasm applauded and huzzaed for five minutes or more."—C. R. Roseberry in the Knickerbocker News, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * *

"Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 6 by taking the largest audience which ever attended any concert of the six festivals on a tour of Russian 'Never-Never-Land'." — Rockland (Me.) Courier-Gazette, Aug. 12, 1939.

* * * * * *

"To the stout lady with lorgnette in one of the boxes, very handsome lady with luxurious garments and (I'm surprised at you) who should know much better: It's OR-chestra, accent on the first syllable; not or-CHES-tra. And the 'th' in Beethoven does not have the diphthong sound—pardon me." Roger S. Vreeland in the Hackensack (N. J.) Bergen Evening Record, Aug 12, 1939.

* * * * * * *

"The fourth concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which took place Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., was another triumph for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it brought out a record attendance." The Hudson (N. Y.) Star, Aug. 12, 1939.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/1/40

FESTIVAL OPENS

Thousands of Music Lovers Head for Berkshire Symphonic Program.

Music lovers from all parts of America have come to the Berkshires the past few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Most of these thousands have their tickets securely in their pockets, accommodations already reserved somewhere near Tanglewood. Many others will start, hoping to obtain tickets and accommodations at the last minute. There are tickets for single concerts still available at the gate, and there are accommodations within a short driving distance of Tanglewood.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening August 8 will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opens August 15 with the Bach B Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus, made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard at the concert August 17. The Festival will close August 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

The complete and revised program for the first series of concerts follows:

THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 1
at 8:30 o'clock

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, Op. 38 — Schumann
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39 — Sibelius

SATURDAY EVENING, AUGUST 3
at 8:30 o'clock

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" — Berlioz
"Don Quixote," Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character, Op. 35 .... Strauss
(Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Finale)
Violincello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo: Jean Lefranc
Symphony No. 3 (in one movement) — Harris
"Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune (Eclogue de S. Mallarme) — Debussy Orchestral Excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe" (Second Suite ..... Ravel
Lever du Jour—Pantomime—Danse Generale

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 4
at 3:30 o'clock

Symphony in E-flat, No. 3 (K. 543) — Mozart
Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano solo .... Stravinsky
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73 — Brahms

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began the seventh chapter of its history tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of this summer's nine concerts in the music shed in the Tanglewood Estate. The addition of three programs to the quota of six offered in the last three seasons did not seem to have affected the patronage for each individual event. Last night's audience was estimated at more than 6,000, and still larger crowds, according to the estimate of advance sales, are expected for the concerts of next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

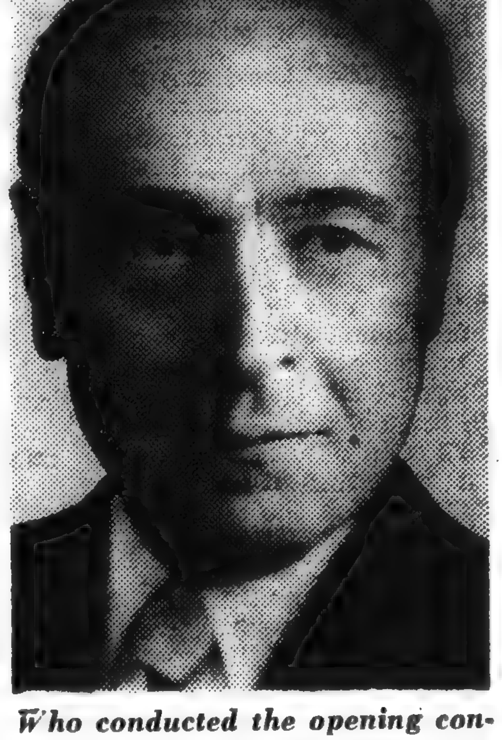
Dr. Koussevitzky, welcomed on his first appearance of the evening with an enthusiasm characteristic of Berkshire festival gatherings, presented a program appropriate for an inaugural concert, consisting of the first symphonies of three eminent composers written at the beginning, the middle and the end o fthe nineteenth century, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. All three works are familiar to any fairly regular patrons of symphonic activities, but they have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single list. This juxtaposition gave their hearers an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of symphonic writing and to note how far each composer's musical individuality had developed at the time when he completed his first essay in this form.

This festival has attained its present status as one of the principal fixtures of the American musical calendar, its artistic prestige and individuality and widespread appeal, within a relatively short time. The late Henry Hadley conducted the first wo series in 1934 and 1935 on the Hanna Farm. In 1936, the festival authorities engaged the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in an alliance which has proved to be permanent. The three concerts of that summer on the Holmwood Estate made the festival an established institution. The following season, of six concerts, was the first to be held at Tanglewood, given by its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent festival site. The summer of 1938 brought the opening of the music shed.

The large building, open at the sides, permits the music to be heard far beyond its borders, and has not substantially changed in appearance since last summer, but new seats have been installed in the forward sections. The color of the blue and red chairs corresponds to the color of the tickets. The benches of the first Tanglewood concerts serve now as a reserve for the seating of particularly large crowds. The new organ in the auditorium will be first played in the performance of Bach's B Minor mass on Aug. 15. The item on the list of projected improvements which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, considers most immediately desirable, is the installation of shutters which can be rolled down in the event of rain or to ward off chilly breezes.

Miss Robinson Smith also pointed out today that such shutters would be valuable in protecting the building from damage by severe weather during the winters, and should therefore be regarded as an investment.

Serge Koussevitzky



Who conducted the opening concert of this year's Berkshire Festival last night

So far as this evening was concerned, the weather offered not the slightest ground for complaint, proving to be clear, calm and cool, while the twilight lent added color to the general scene of the grounds, lawns, trees and buildings as the crowd gathered before the concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of his orchestra have been here since early July to fill their duties as director and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, whose first session at Tanglewood culminates with the festival. The rest of the orchestra arrived on Monday and immediately began an intensive rehearsal schedule. The annual special rehearsal for Berkshire festival members will be held Saturday morning.

What with the journalistic timetable, detailed comment on the concert itstlf must await a later dispatch, but the performance of the Beethoven Symphony and of the first movement of the Schumann gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards customarily associated with the work of this admirable orchestra. The interpretation of these works, marked by a pervasive spirit, also spoke well for the acoustic conditions of the music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Full details have not yet been announced for the benefit concert to be held at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, but tonight's program books revealed that the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitsky and the musical forces of the Berkshire Music Center would take part in this unusual event. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be among the soloists. Miss Dorothy Thompson, specical writer for the New York Herald Tribune, is to speak.

At Tanglewood

Since the war has made the famous European festivals of music, such as those of Salzburg, Bayreuth, Vichy, Zurich and Milan, out of the question for Americans, more attention has been centered on what can be offered locally. Foremost among the summer festivals is that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where, we may congratulate ourselves, the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky holds sway.

A few important changes this year indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky has not temporized. One of his dearest ambitions began to be realized in the past six weeks with the formation of the academy of music, involving a school for advanced musicians in conjunction with the concerts that wind up the season. In addition, the festival season has been extended a week.

The concerts are still all symphonic, with one notable exception. That will occur in the last week, when Bach's B minor Mass will be performed. The chorus has been trained in large measure from the academy students and will therefore provide a practical demonstration of Mr. Koussevitzky's ideal.

Herald
Aug. 1, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAVANNAH, GA.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1940

Music Festival Has Grand Opening Today

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Berkshire Music Festival opens today in the great student built shed at Tanglewood, the 200 acre estate on Lake Mahkeenac where Hawthorne wrote some of his best works.

The shed seats 6,000 but the advance sale has been very heavy. The festival is conducted by Sergei Koussievitzky and the Boston Symphony Orcehstra. Concerts will be given today, and on August 3rd, 4th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 15th, 17th and 18th.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1940

B. Po
Aug

OPENING

Berkshire Concerts Successor to Old Salzburg

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1 (AP)—With less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theatre, the Berkshire Symphonic festival began its seventh season tonight before a colorful international audience of nearly 6000 persons.

Although the festival association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which summer symphonic music has yet reached in America.

SUCCESSOR TO SALZBURG

There are even those who insist that the Berkshire Festival, as served by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the logical successor to the old Salzburg Festival, in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol. Salzburg is hardly more than a memory to most of the thousands who used to ateend each summer.

Serge Korssevitzky and his magnificent orchestra were heard tonight by an audience from every corner of America, and from most European countries as well. As always at the festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the winter in Boston's Symphony Hall, and the programme was rehearsed with the same fastidious care.

Keeps Highest Standard

Koussevitzky has firmly refused to lower performance standards for his summer audience, and as a result the audience has grown beyond the extreme hopes of the original sponsors.

This year the festival is the climax of another unique venture, Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire music centre, in which more than 300 students are studying and living with music through the months of July and August.

All today the grounds of Tanglewood, home of the festival, were peppered with festival patrons wandering from building to building, looking in on classes and rehearsals.

Rehearse in Shorts

In the formal garden they found a group of young men and women in shorts and skirts rehearsing an opera under Hubert Graf's direction, with only a pool of oversized goldfish for an audience.

In the big Ree barn, now furnished oddly with gold ballroom chairs and a piano, G. Wallace Woodworth was rehearsing Bach's B Minor Mass for a performance during the last week of the three-week festival.

Two students orchestras were rehearsing, and the central building was a miniature bedlam due to numerous chamber music rehearsals.

Tonight's programme was made up of three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schuman and Sibelius. It was close to an ideal opening programme and it was received with cheers by the audience. Tomorrow is vacation day but the festival resumes Saturday night and ends its first series with a concert Sunday afternoon.

AN "ALL" FIRST LIST

Nine Concerts to Be Given This Year; Orchestra Sounds as It Does in Symphony Hall

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 1—The elements, so capricious of late, decided to bless the first concert of the current Berkshire festival at "Tanglewood" the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Lenox estate, this evening and produced a perfect night that combined the warmth of summer with the clarity and tang of autumn. For this first concert Dr. Koussevitzky had made an all "first" programme, which presented in the order named, the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

A year ago it looked as though the Berkshire festival had settled into a prosperous complacency or complacent prosperity. But much has happened in the intervening 12 months. The conductor's cherished dream of an academy has come to pass in the already flourishing Berkshire music center.

The number of concerts has been increased from six to nine, extending the festival by another week. Soloists of distinction will appear at some of the concerts and there will be a performance Aug. 15 of Bach's B Minor Mass with a chorus of 200 drawn from the student body of the academy. Next year, no doubt, will see further improvements, extentions and amplifications.

To visit Tanglewood in the afternoon before the concert was to be more than pleasantly impressed with what the Berkshire Music Centre has contributed to the festival. It was good to see the happy, eager faces of the young people, to note all the signs of bustling activity. Fortunate youngsters, these, living in a still fortunate land, and now pursuing their studies, shaping their careers under wise and distinguished guidance and amid surroundings of exceptional beauty. No wonder that Dr. Koussevitzky envisioned "Tanglewood" as the seat of a summer school.

To return to the concert, the orchestra, at least from where this reviewer sat sounded much as it does in Symphony Hall, and the programme was well chosen. None of the three symphonies exacts much of the listener and each one is quite different from the others. That of Beethoven, of course, might on a pinch have been written by Mozart of Haydn. No one but Schumann and Sibelius, before or since, could have signed the initial symphonic efforts of those two composers.

It might be added that with the acquiring of an estate not far from "Tanglewood," Dr. Koussevitzky has now become a permanent member of the summer colony here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 1 - 1940

10

Tonight at 8.30

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens its seventh season tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood, has been discussed, re-discussed and discussed again. Its significance to the world of music in these dark days has been considered by experts and found to be important. It has been variously described as the Salzburg of America, a comparison wisely frowned upon by Festival officials; as the heart of New World music, as a dynamic force in the preservation of many things being destroyed in other parts of the globe, as the greatest summer treat anywhere for those who love good music.

For a change, let us consider it from a purely selfish Berkshire viewpoint, a viewpoint which ignores for the moment the intangible attributes of prestige, of culture, of entertainment. Let the Festival submit to a cold and unemotional audit on the basis of profit and loss. What, in other words, has the Festival done for Berkshire business?

In the first place, and rightly so, are the hotels and rooming houses. Brisk business for them has ramifications which penetrate far into the country's business structure. If the hotels have customers, the benefits are felt not only by the hotelkeepers, but by the butcher and the baker, the laundryman, the druggist, the tailor, the taxicab driver, the bus lines, the garageman, the gas station proprietor.

It is well to consider how the Festival compares with other business activities which might, possibly, have been developed in this area. What if it had been, as seemed a possibility more than once, a race track? Would those attracted to a summer racing season have filled our historic—and somewhat expensive—hotels and inns? Would there have been among the race-followers an equivalent of Dr. Koussevitzky, of Dr. Rodzinski, to buy an estate in the Berkshires? Would there have been the type to make the cash register ring in those other cultural businesses whose success means a great deal, both financially and prestige-wise, to the Berkshires? In short, would they have attended the Berkshire Playhouse, South Mountain, Jacob's Pillow, the Pittsfield Horse Show? Would they have paid to play on our golf courses, to swim in our lakes, to rent our summer homes?

For many years, the Berkshires have designed their artificial attractions to win what is justifiably called a better class of people. We have no Coney Island, no roaring night clubs, no fan dances, no lush gambling joints. Had we sought to coax the attendance of any other type than that which comes to such an event as the Festival, we should have had to provide all these things.

But we didn't have to provide them. The founding and subsequent development of the Festival into an institution of tremendous drawing-power has given us something adapted perfectly to the facilities already at hand. And with the opening this year of the Berkshire Music Center, plus the extension of the Festival itself to three weeks, Tanglewood has given us six weeks of added population, and added income.

Not only has the Festival brought money to the Berkshires; it has brought the kind of money we want.

Boston Herald

MUSIC

Aug 1st

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1—Ideal conditions both for making and hearing music characterized the opening of this year's Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood tonight. The Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky were, one might almost say, in mid-season form; and of course the blessing of a cool evening made things much easier for the players. The vast audience, in this case 5800, that one has come to expect for these concerts was on hand and manifested great enthusiasm. Without doubt even greater throngs will come to Stockbridge and Lenox for the week-end as well as for the other two weeks of the festival.

Mr. Koussevitzky elected a conventional program for the opening concert, if the odd coincidence of three first symphonies be excepted. These were the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius in that order. The same program was heard in Boston last season and at that time it was pointed out that the three firsts actually made a most attractive and well-balanced program.

First one heard the classical Beethoven in the Haydn manner, then Schumann for the romantic spirit, and lastly Sibelius when he was still somewhat influenced by Tchaikovsky and yet striking out a new and individual path for himself.

It might have been thought that the Beethoven symphony would not sound to perfection in the huge spaces of the festival shed, but once again we must pay tribute to the acoustical excellence of this amusingly mis-named auditorium. You really hear the music remarkably well, and that goes for an elaborately orchestrated score by Ravel or the clear outlines and detail of a Haydn or Mozart symphony. It is not, to be sure, Symphony Hall, but still a splendid substitute.

The Schumann symphony, usually called "The Spring," sounded particularly grateful to most of us this evening. It is music of such eternal youth, such refreshing energy and spirit, sometimes it is naive, but you would not wish it otherwise; and always it is what Sir Donald Tovey described as recklessly pretty. Mr. Koussevitzky, who is noted for his devotion to Schumann's often unjustly neglected symphonic music, gave it a superb reading, one that was majestic as well as bright and youthful.

The Sibelius first symphony is not as popular as the second, but for no very good reason except that the finale—long drawn out as it is—captures the fancy of the crowd.

Further concerts will test the capacity of the audience for less generally known scores. It was sufficient for the opening to give us three symphonies that ought to be, if they are not, familiar to all.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 1 - 1940

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

This evening at Lenox, Massachusetts, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival begins. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. Through great festivals like this one at "Tanglewood" America moves into world leadership in music.

But this Berkshire Festival is significant of far more than America's musical leadership. It is significant of a way of life still preserved in a world where brute force has wantonly destroyed cultural values which are "the breath and finer spirit" of man's existence.

Europe which led us so long in these finer achievements, which indeed looked somewhat condescendingly upon our more practical efforts, has seen the fine flower of her civilization pass to America.

It is in no spirit of vainglory that we Americans see this happen, but rather in the fervent hope that the time will come speedily when great festivals like the one now opening at Lenox will be restored to the world.

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began the seventh chapter of its history tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of this summer's nine concerts in the music shed in the Tanglewood Estate. The addition of three programs to the quota of six offered in the last three seasons did not seem to have affected the patronage for each individual event. Last night's audience was estimated at more than 6,000, and still larger crowds, according to the estimate of advance sales, are expected for the concerts of next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky, welcomed on his first appearance of the evening with an enthusiasm characteristic of Berkshire festival gatherings, presented a program appropriate for an inaugural concert, consisting of the first symphonies of three eminent composers written at the beginning, the middle and the end o fthe nineteenth century, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. All three works are familiar to any fairly regular patrons of symphonic activities, but they have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single list. This juxtaposition gave their hearers an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of symphonic writing and to note how far each composer's musical individuality had developed at the time when he completed his first essay in this form.

This festival has attained its present status as one of the principal fixtures of the American musical calendar, its artistic prestige and individuality and widespread appeal, within a relatively short time. The late Henry Hadley conducted the first wo series in 1934 and 1935 on the Hanna Farm. In 1936, the festival authorities engaged the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in an alliance which has proved to be permanent. The three concerts of that summer on the Holmwood Estate made the festival an established institution. The following season, of six concerts, was the first to be held at Tanglewood, given by its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent festival site. The summer of 1938 brought the opening of the music shed.

The large building, open at the sides, permits the music to be heard far beyond its borders, and has not substantially changed in appearance since last summer, but new seats have been installed in the forward sections. The color of the blue and red chairs corresponds to the color of the tickets. The benches of the first Tanglewood concerts serve now as a reserve for the seating of particularly large crowds. The new organ in the auditorium will be first played in the performance of Bach's B Minor mass on Aug. 15. The item on the list of projected improvements which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, considers most immediately desirable, is the installation of shutters which can be rolled down in the event of rain or to ward off chilly breezes.

Miss Robinson Smith also pointed out today that such shutters would be valuable in protecting the building from damage by severe weather during the winters , and should therefore be regarded as an investment.

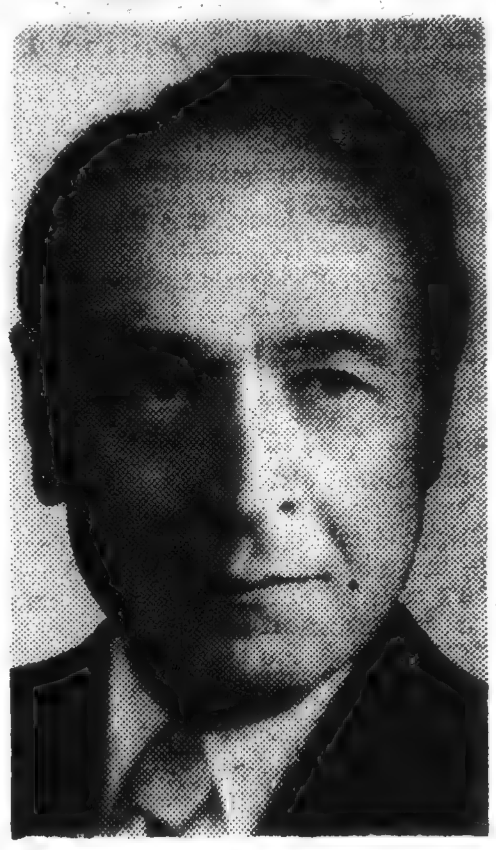
So far as this evening was concerned, the weather offered not the slightest ground for complaint, proving to be clear, calm and cool, while the twilight lent added color to the general scene of the grounds, lawns, trees and buildings as the crowd gathered before the concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of his orchestra have been here since early July to fill their duties as director and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, whose first session at Tanglewood culminates with the festival. The rest of the orchestra arrived on Monday and immediately began an intensive rehearsal schedule. The annual special rehearsal for Berkshire festival members will be held Saturday morning.

What with the journalistic timetable, detailed comment on the concert itstlf must await a later dispatch, but the performance of the Beethoven Symphony and of the first movement of the Schumann gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards customarily associated with the work of this admirable orchestra. The interpretation of these works, marked by a pervasive spirit, also spoke well for the acoustic conditions of the music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Full details have not yet been announced for the benefit concert to be held at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, but tonight's program books revealed that the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky and the musical forces of the Berkshire Music Center would take part in this unusual event. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be among the soloists. Miss Dorothy Thompson, specical writer for the New York Herald Tribune, is to speak.

Serge Koussevitzky



Who conducted the opening concert of this year's Berkshire Festival last night

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1940

B. Po
Aug

OPENING

Berkshire Concerts

---

to Start Games at Hive

BY HOWELL STEVENS

Refreshed by a day of rest, th embattled Bees will tackle the leagu leading Reds at the Hive this afte noon in the first of three successi doubleheaders. Casey Stengel plar to use Manny Salvo and Nick Stri cevich on the hill while Deacon B McKechnie will rely on Jim Turner one of the grapples and either Lloy Whitey Moore or Rookie Joh Hutchings in the other.

HAVE WON FOUR

Although the Bees have been ove whelmed by the Dodgers, Giants, Cu Cards and Pirates so far this seaso they have furnished sturdy oppositi for the Reds, capturing four out of t 10 contests played. If the locals h been able to play .400 ball aganst t five other teams mentioned, they wou be up in fifth place instead of dow in the cellar. Stengel's warriors ha given the Rhinelanders more troub than any of the other seven outfits the loop. Bll McKechnie is at a lo to account for this peculiar situatio since the Swarm was duck soup f the Rhinelanders a year ago.

The Reds are at present in the thro of a minor slump, having lost four their last six tussles. When inte viewed at the Copley-Plaza Hotel ye terday afternoon, Pilot Bill McKech appeared slightly disturbed over dro ping Wednesday night's game to t Giants after entering the ninth rou with a three-run lead.

McKechnie has sent Junior Thom son, who was recently spiked, back Cincinnati, so he will be forced to u relief hurlers Joe Beggs and M Shoffner as starters in the prese series. Billy Myers and Eddie Jo are alternating at shortstop.

A story emanating from New Yor that Bill Terry was anxious to buy t Bees was emphatically denied her Nearly every week some new purchas is mentioned, but so far nothing h come of these rumored deals.

Rabbit Warstler was a visitor in Bo ton yesterday. The former Bee, w is doing a bang-up job for the Cu at short, flew over from Philadelph on Wednesday night and spent the d at his cottage in Atlantic. He will r join the Bruins in Brooklyn today.

PROBABLE PITCHERS IN BIG LEAGUES TODA

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (AP)—Probab pitchers in the major leagues tomorro (won-lost records in parentheses):

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Cincinnati at Boston (2)—Turner (8-3) an Moore (4-4) vs. Salvo (4-5) and Strinc vich (7-4).

St. Louis at New York (2)—Cooper (

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Tonight at 8.30

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens its seventh season tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood, has been discussed, re-discussed and discussed again. Its significance to the world of music in these dark days has been considered by experts and found to be important. It has been variously described as the Salzburg of America, a comparison wisely frowned upon by Festival officials; as the heart of New World music, as a dynamic force in the preservation of many things being destroyed in other parts of the globe, as the greatest summer treat anywhere for those who love good music.

For a change, let us consider it from a purely selfish Berkshire viewpoint, a viewpoint which ignores for the moment the intangible attributes of prestige, of culture, of entertainment. Let the Festival submit to a cold and unemotional audit on the basis of profit and loss. What, in other words, has the Festival done for Berkshire business?

In the first place, and rightly so, are the hotels and rooming houses. Brisk business for them has ramifications which penetrate far into the country's business structure. If the hotels have customers, the benefits are felt not only by the hotelkeepers, but by the butcher and the baker, the laundryman, the druggist, the tailor, the taxicab driver, the bus lines, the garageman, the gas station proprietor.

It is well to consider how the Festival compares with other business activities which might, possibly, have been developed in this area. What if it had been, as seemed a possibility more than once, a race track? Would those attracted to a summer racing season have filled our historic—and somewhat expensive—hotels and inns? Would there have been among the race-followers an equivalent of Dr. Koussevitzky, of Dr. Rodzinski, to buy an estate in the Berkshires? Would there have been the type to make the cash register ring in those other cultural businesses whose success means a great deal, both financially and prestige-wise, to the Berkshires? In short, would they have attended the Berkshire Playhouse, South Mountain, Jacob's Pillow, the Pittsfield Horse Show? Would they have paid to play on our golf courses, to swim in our lakes, to rent our summer homes?

For many years, the Berkshires have designed their artificial attractions to win what is justifiably called a better class of people. We have no Coney Island, no roaring night clubs, no fan dances, no lush gambling joints. Had we sought to coax the attendance of any other type than that which comes to such an event as the Festival, we should have had to provide all these things.

But we didn't have to provide them. The founding and subsequent development of the Festival into an institution of tremendous drawing-power has given us something adapted perfectly to the facilities already at hand. And with the opening this year of the Berkshire Music Center, plus the extension of the Festival itself to three weeks, Tanglewood has given us six weeks of added population, and added income.

Not only has the Festival brought money to the Berkshires; it has brought the kind of money we want.

Boston Herald
Aug 2 1940

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 1—Ideal conditions both for making and hearing music characterized the opening of this year's Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood tonight. The Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky were, one might almost say, in midseason form; and of course the blessing of a cool evening made things much easier for the players. The vast audience, in this case 5800, that one has come to expect for these concerts was on hand and manifested great enthusiasm. Without doubt even greater throngs will come to Stockbridge and Lenox for the week-end as well as for the other two weeks of the festival.

Mr. Koussevitzky elected a conventional program for the opening concert, if the odd coincidence of three first symphonies be excepted. These were the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius in that order. The same program was heard in Boston last season and at that time it was pointed out that the three firsts actually made a most attractive and well-balanced program.

First one heard the classical Beethoven in the Haydn manner, then Schumann for the romantic spirit, and lastly Sibelius when he was still somewhat influenced by Tchaikovsky and yet striking out a new and individual path for himself.

It might have been thought that the Beethoven symphony would not sound to perfection in the huge spaces of the festival shed, but once again we must pay tribute to the acoustical excellence of this amusingly mis-named auditorium. You really hear the music remarkably well, and that goes for an elaborately orchestrated score by Ravel or the clear outlines and detail of a Haydn or Mozart symphony. It is not, to be sure, Symphony Hall, but still a splendid substitute.

The Schumann symphony, usually called "The Spring," sounded particularly grateful to most of us this evening. It is music of such eternal youth, such refreshing energy and spirit, sometimes it is naive, but you would not wish it otherwise; and always it is what Sir Donald Tovey described as recklessly pretty. Mr. Koussevitzky, who is noted for his devotion to Schumann's often unjustly neglected symphonic music, gave it a superb reading, one that was majestic as well as bright and youthful.

The Sibelius first symphony is not as popular as the second, but for no very good reason except that the finale—long drawn out as it is —captures the fancy of the crowd.

Further concerts will test the capacity of the audience for less generally known scores. It was sufficient for the opening to give us three symphonies that ought to be, if they are not, familiar to all.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 1 - 1940

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

This evening at Lenox, Massachusetts, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphony Festival begins. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. Through great festivals like this one at "Tanglewood" America moves into world leadership in music.

But this Berkshire Festival is significant of far more than America's musical leadership. It is significant of a way of life still preserved in a world where brute force has wantonly destroyed cultural values which are "the breath and finer spirit" of man's existence.

Europe which led us so long in these finer achievements, which indeed looked somewhat condescendingly upon our more practical efforts, has seen the fine flower of her civilization pass to America.

It is in no spirit of vainglory that we Americans see this happen, but rather in the fervent hope that the time will come speedily when great festivals like the one now opening at Lenox will be restored to the world.

At Tanglewood

Since the war has made the famous European festivals of music, such as those of Salzburg, Bayreuth, Vichy, Zurich and Milan, out of the question for Americans, more attention has been centered on what can be offered locally. Foremost among the summer festivals is that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where, we may congratulate ourselves, the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky holds sway.

A few important changes this year indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky has not temporized. One of his dearest ambitions began to be realized in the past six weeks with the formation of the academy of music, involving a school for advanced musicians in conjunction with the concerts that wind up the season. In addition, the festival season has been extended a week.

The concerts are still all symphonic, with one notable exception. That will occur in the last week, when Bach's B minor Mass will be performed. The chorus has been trained in large measure from the academy students and will therefore provide a practical demonstration of Mr. Koussevitzky's ideal.

Bn. Herald
Aug. 1, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAVANNAH, GA.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1940

Music Festival Has Grand Opening Today

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Berkshire Music Festival opens today in the great student built shed at Tanglewood, the 200 acre estate on Lake Mahkeenac where Hawthorne wrote some of his best works.

The shed seats 6,000 but the advance sale has been very heavy. The festival is conducted by Sergei Koussievitzky and the Boston Symphony Orcehstra. Concerts will be given today, and on August 3rd, 4th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 15th, 17th and 18th.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 - 1940

At Tanglewood

It's the seventh annual festival of Tanglewood where the Boston Symphony orchestra holds sway with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The festival opened with Beethoven's Symphony no. 1, Aug. 1, and the second series of concerts will open Aug. 8 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky. His compositions and some of Beethoven's will be featured. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be soloist, Aug. 8. The final series, that which fits in with the Bennington festival, will open Aug. 15 with the Bach B minor Mass. The new organ will be dedicated at that time, and the 200 students of the orchestra's music center will form the festival chorus.

Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano who is coming to Maine next season will be concert soloist at the festival, Aug. 17, and the event will close Aug. 18 with Brahms Symphony no. 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

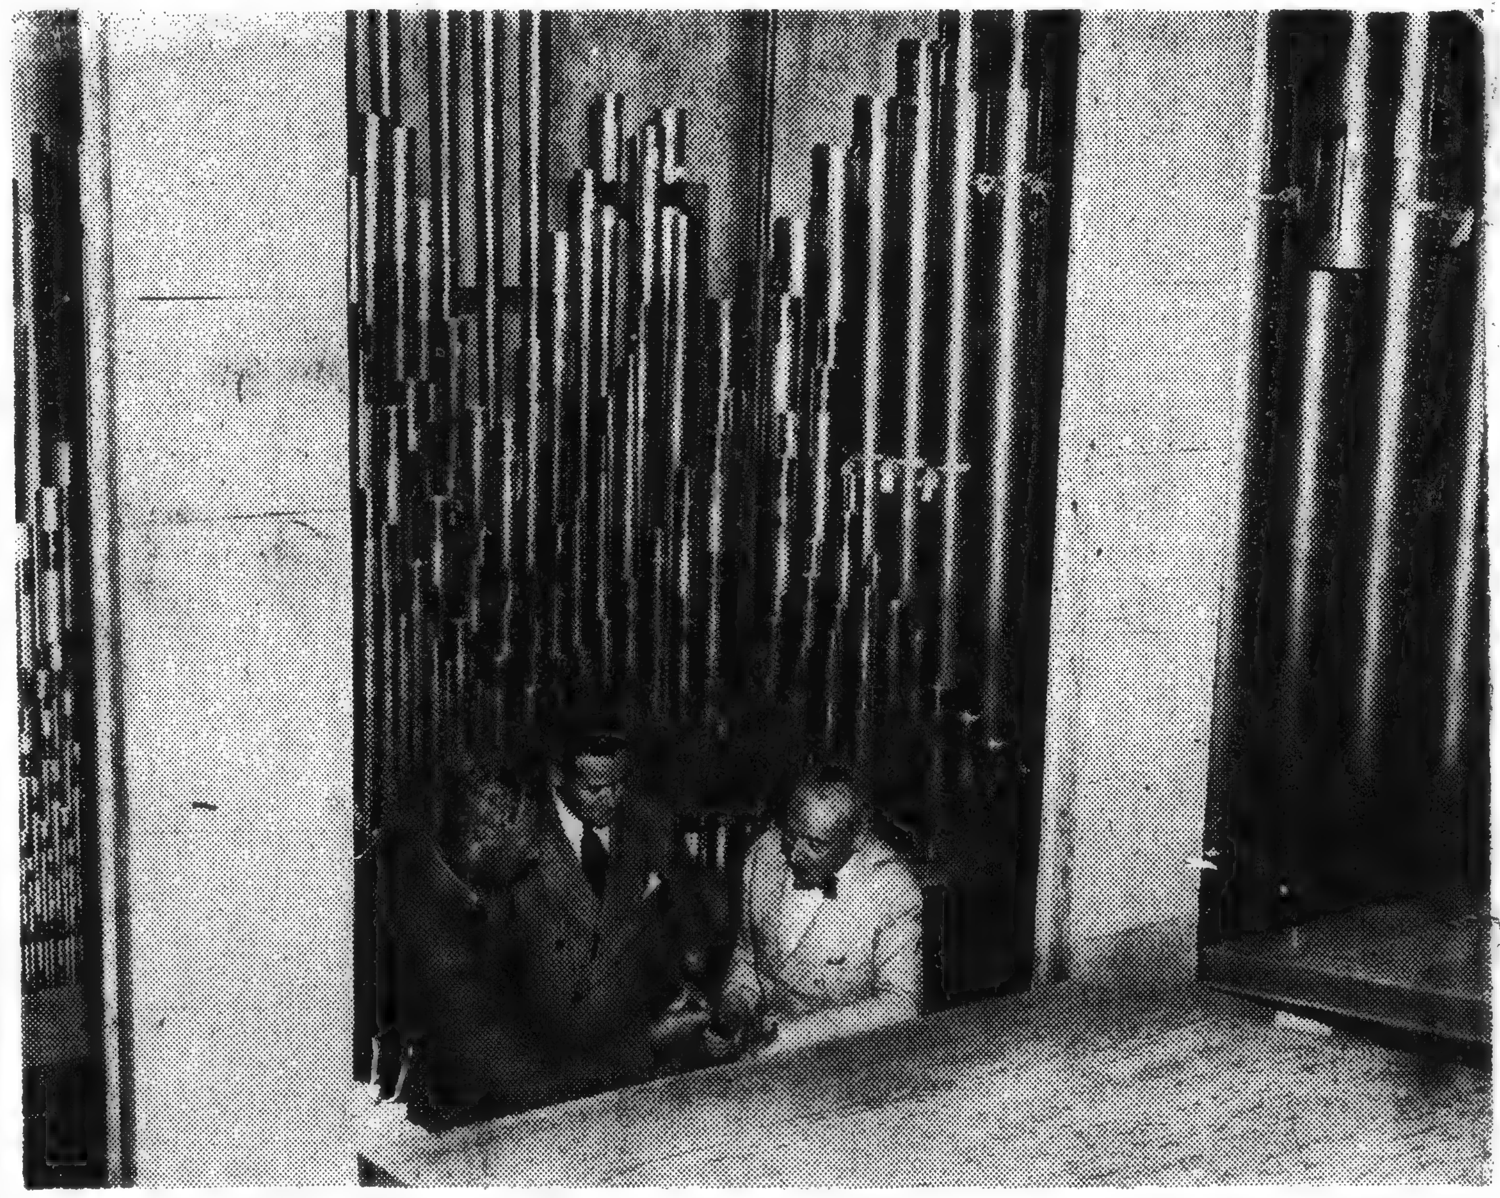
Unique Organ To Make Debut During 1940 Festival

Instrument Synthesizes Old and New

By EMERSON RICHARDS

The Tanglewood organ is unique. It does not follow the traditions of the "Romantic" organ developed in America and England during the lush days of the early 20th century. Tanglewood presents an organ that is subtly different from the instrument to which we have been accustomed. And yet there is nothing revolutionary about Tanglewood.

The modern organ has its roots in the German and French organ of the 18th century, the Schnitgers, the Silbermanns and the Clicquots. With the advent of electricity, the old type of French and German organ disappeared in favor of the high pressure, highly individualistic organs in which the eight-foot tone was overwhelmingly predominant. Many of the individual voices were quite attractive but the organ, as an ensemble instrument, practically ceased to exist. The great literature of the organ from Bach to Franck had been written for the older type of ensemble instrument. Most of these compositions were of the polyphonic type, demanding an organ in which the various voices could be heard with equal clarity. The "Romantic" organ, gravitating towards an orchestral ensemble with a thick, heavy bass, was unable to express such music suitably. Consequently, the compositions of the great masters became almost meaningless when played on the modern American or English organ and the organ recital, in turn, began to decline in popularity among musicians.



G. Donald Harrison explains the workings of the new Tanglewood organ to Organist E. Power Biggs and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the loft above the shell.

Renaissance

About 1920 a re-examination of the existing 18th century organs led to a renaissance of the so-called "Baroque" type of organ with its much lighter bass, its greater reliance upon brilliant mixtures and a more complete development of a chorus nature, together with a suppression of the high pressure orchestral tone colors.

This revolution in the art of organ design was first brought to the attention of the American organ public about 1930 by the writer of this article. In 1937, after a period of investigation in Germany, G. Donald Harrison, then technical director of the Aeolian Skinner Company, designed a Baroque organ for the Germanic Museum at Harvard University. This organ created a sensation and no little controversy among the older type of organists who were wedded to the old style of Romantic organ, and the younger and more progressive organists who saw in the new design greater possibilities for the rendition of true organ music.

The Germanic organ was not a slavish imitation of the old German organ. It has been the idea of Mr. Harrison to take the sound principles underlying the old Baroque ensemble and develop them into a streamlined American version of a modern organ in which every voice is intended to have a distinct part in the chorus and where the organ itself is intended to be distinctly an ensemble instrument designed primarily for playing the literature of the organ. The new organ is necessarily more brilliant, flexible, sharply defined and inherently colorful than the older type of organ and yet always distinctly an ensemble instrument.

Carnegie Foundation Gives Funds

Makeshifts

Up to date Conductor Koussevitsky has been compelled to put up vith various makeshifts where organs have been required in conjunction with the orchestra. Last winter he heard the Germanic organ and decided that a similar organ must form part of the equipment at Tanglewood. The Carnegie Foundation provided the necessary funds and G. Donald Harrison is the artist who produced this very fine organ. The funds available did not admit of a large instrument, yet the favorable acoustics give the impression of a sizeable organ. Mr. Harrison has made every pipe count in the ensemble, with the result that there is a clearness and colorful brilliance of effect not usually found in the organ familiar to an American audience. The organ is situated immediately over the orchestra shell, in what amounts to a duplicate of the shell, speaking through the six openings to be seen immediately above the shell itself. It employs a modern electric action but the organ itself is very simple in its construction. There are no borrowed pipes and every stop is voiced to blend with every other stop, so that there is a complete homogeneity of effect throughout the instrument. Most of the representative tone colors of the modern organ are present, from the faintest whisper of the strings to the full brilliance of the complete ensemble but without the muddiness and stodginess characteristic of the type of organ which it replaces.

E. Power Biggs at the console of the new organ, with Dr. Koussevitzky as interested spectator.

To some extent this new type of instrument is a musician's organ. It is an exacting instrument to play, requiring much greater technical ability than the older type of organ, but its chief interest lies in the fact that it reveals the music as the composer intended. It leads to an understanding of the great polyphonic school of organ music not heretofore available to Americans. The great Bach becomes human, not an exercise in mathematics. This will become quite apparent when the organ is used in conjunction with the orchestra in the B minor mass.

Because of the superior acoustics at Tanglewood the organ naturally sounds bigger than it really is and under the masterful playing of the organist, E. Power Biggs, it fortunately has a competent and sympathetic musician to exhibit its manifold excellencies. The large number of musicians and music lovers who are attracted to the Festival will undoubtedly be greatly impressed by this renaissance in organ design

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Cool Weather, Huge Crowd Expected For Festival Opening This Evening

Music Lovers Are Also Known To Eat

The Misses Margaret and Mary Dewey, who conduct the Festival's refreshment tent for the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, are here pictured as they, along with hundreds of others, prepared for tonight's opening concert at Tanglewood. With an enlarged tent and a new system of giving quick service, they are ready for—they hope—a lot of customers.

All Boxes Sold For First Time

Lower-Priced Seats i
Shed All Taken, but
Available, Officials

Assured of cooler weather and p
the Berkshire Symphonic Festival
opening tonight at 8.30 of its seven

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Dr. Koussevitzky Expects Five Great Conductors in Five Years

An enquiring reporter confronted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his rooms in the mansion house at Tanglewood where the new Berkshire Music Center was in progress. It was a short interview, between one conducting pupil and the next, a brief pause in the midst of a very busy morning in a very busy place. The conductor of an orchestra and director of a school showed no signs of fatigue, despite the fact that he was giving generously of his time and energies to the small group of young men admitted into his class in conducting.

"Inspiring"

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke buoyantly and with eagerness: "We are all working hard, and we are enjoying our work. I am speaking not only for the pupils, but for myself and my colleagues of the faculty. There is extraordinary talent among the young people who have come to us. To work with them is inspiring and makes one feel years younger. I have noticed that the other teachers feel as I do. They are so absorbed in what we are doing, so interested in the young musicians in their charge, that the hours go by unnoticed."

Asked about the prospects that conductors of importance might emerge from the school, he answered quickly and with conviction: "I can promise you in the course of the next five years, five conductors of the first order. And besides that, 20 conductors of high ability, conductors who will be valuable wherever they may go."

Note in Re Shirtsleeves

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra in shirtsleeves, and even Dr. Serge Koussevitzky himself in that state of informal attire, did not faze an audience of crushing proportions which gathered in the shed of Tanglewood here this afternoon for the closing concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival" The New York Herald-Tribune, Aug. 14, 1939.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1940

Festival at Stockbridge

Today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens its seventh annual season at Tanglewood in the quiet New England town of Stockbridge, Mass. For three weeks and nine concerts thousands will come to the huge Music Shed of the "American Salzburg" and listen to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1934 the Festival sprouted from a local undertaking conducted on a hillside under the stars. A huge tent protected patrons from wind and rain till 1938, when it was discovered that not even the thunder of Beethoven could silence the bolts of Jupiter Pluvius. The subsequent Music Shed, built to accommodate 5,000 persons, was the climax of one of those extraordinary community efforts that frequently create the best in American art.

Cash donations, service without pay on committees, as ushers, ticket-takers and traffic directors, local manufacture of benches, free board to the orchestra in the early days: this is the story of an artistic achievement that is internationally famous. The pilgrimage itself is one to remember. The long scenic drive dissolves into the lovely quiet of Stockbridge town. Concertgoers sometimes hear best while sprawled comfortably on the cool grass.

This year Mr. Koussevitzky is giving the Festival a new and larger scope through the teaching of the Music Center, which will put special emphasis on "those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance." The Institute is for advanced study of those making music their career; the Academy is for the intelligent amateur. Where else is the longing for creative rest better satisfied? Nature outdoes herself to inspire. There is the stimulation of a shared enthusiasm, of association with artists, of daily communion with one's muse. It is through festivals like Tanglewood that the strings of harmony are kept vibrating.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1940

GIRLS AND BOYS VISIT FESTIVAL

Group to go to Tanglewood Saturday to Hear Orchestra Rehearse for Concert.

Williamstown high school girls and boys who signed up in advance for the rehearsal the Boston Symphony orchestra is to stage before the high school youth of the county Saturday at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, the scene of tonight's opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, have been asked to meet at the local high school at 9 o'clock that morning. The cars that will accommodate them to and from the music shed are to leave at that time.

Mrs. Gertrude G. Graham, music supervisor, said that 12, a much smaller number than that which went down last year, have registered. Tickets will be distributed just before they leave here.

Girls and boys who have not registered may be able to obtain tickets for the rehearsal but will have to make their own transportation arrangements, Mrs. Graham said.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Cool Weather, Huge Crowd Expected For Festival Opening This Evening

Music Lovers Are Also Known To Eat

The Misses Margaret and Mary Dewey, who conduct the Festival's refreshment tent for the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, are here pictured as they, along with hundreds of others, prepared for tonight's opening concert at Tanglewood. With an enlarged tent and a new system of giving quick service, they are ready for—they hope—a lot of customers.

All Boxes Sold For First Time

Lower-Priced Seats i
Shed All Taken, but
Available, Officials

Assured of cooler weather and p
the Berkshire Symphonic Festival
opening tonight at 8.30 of its seven

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1940

Dr. Koussevitzky Expects Five Great Conductors in Five Years

An enquiring reporter confronted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his rooms in the mansion house at Tanglewood where the new Berkshire Music Center was in progress. It was a short interview, between one conducting pupil and the next, a brief pause in the midst of a very busy morning in a very busy place. The conductor of an orchestra and director of a school showed no signs of fatigue, despite the fact that he was giving generously of his time and energies to the small group of young men admitted into his class in conducting.

"Inspiring"

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke buoyantly and with eagerness: "We are all working hard, and we are enjoying our work. I am speaking not only for the pupils, but for myself and my colleagues of the faculty. There is extraordinary talent among the young people who have come to us. To work with them is inspiring and makes one feel years younger. I have noticed that the other teachers feel as I do. They are so absorbed in what we are doing, so interested in the young musicians in their charge, that the hours go by unnoticed."

Asked about the prospects that conductors of importance might emerge from the school, he answered quickly and with conviction: "I can promise you in the course of the next five years, five conductors of the first order. And besides that, 20 conductors of high ability, conductors who will be valuable wherever they may go."

Note in Re Shirtsleeves

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra in shirtsleeves, and even Dr. Serge Koussevitzky himself in that state of informal attire, did not faze an audience of crushing proportions which gathered in the shed of Tanglewood here this afternoon for the closing concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival" The New York Herald-Tribune, Aug. 14, 1939.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1940

Festival at Stockbridge

Today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens its seventh annual season at Tanglewood in the quiet New England town of Stockbridge, Mass. For three weeks and nine concerts thousands will come to the huge Music Shed of the "American Salzburg" and listen to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1934 the Festival sprouted from a local undertaking conducted on a hillside under the stars. A huge tent protected patrons from wind and rain till 1938, when it was discovered that not even the thunder of Beethoven could silence the bolts of Jupiter Pluvius. The subsequent Music Shed, built to accommodate 5,000 persons, was the climax of one of those extraordinary community efforts that frequently create the best in American art.

Cash donations, service without pay on committees, as ushers, ticket-takers and traffic directors, local manufacture of benches, free board to the orchestra in the early days: this is the story of an artistic achievement that is internationally famous. The pilgrimage itself is one to remember. The long scenic drive dissolves into the lovely quiet of Stockbridge town. Concertgoers sometimes hear best while sprawled comfortably on the cool grass.

This year Mr. Koussevitzky is giving the Festival a new and larger scope through the teaching of the Music Center, which will put special emphasis on "those aspects of musical education concerned with collective performance." The Institute is for advanced study of those making music their career; the Academy is for the intelligent amateur. Where else is the longing for creative rest better satisfied? Nature outdoes herself to inspire. There is the stimulation of a shared enthusiasm, of association with artists, of daily communion with one's muse. It is through festivals like Tanglewood that the strings of harmony are kept vibrating.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1940

GIRLS AND BOYS VISIT FESTIVAL

Group to go to Tanglewood Saturday to Hear Orchestra Rehearse for Concert.

Williamstown high school girls and boys who signed up in advance for the rehearsal the Boston Symphony orchestra is to stage before the high school youth of the county Saturday at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, the scene of tonight's opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, have been asked to meet at the local high school at 9 o'clock that morning. The cars that will accommodate them to and from the music shed are to leave at that time.

Mrs. Gertrude G. Graham, music supervisor, said that 12, a much smaller number than that which went down last year, have registered. Tickets will be distributed just before they leave here.

Girls and boys who have not registered may be able to obtain tickets for the rehearsal but will have to make their own transportation arrangements, Mrs. Graham said.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 1 - 1940

Opening of Berkshire Music Center Makes 1940 Memorable

300 Music Students Gather At Tanglewood for Six Weeks

Outstanding New Adventure Represents a "Dream Come True" for Dr. Koussevitzky

By JOHN N. BURK
Program Annotator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tanglewood, usually uninvaded through most of the year save by a [illegible] of visitors, has been, since July 8, a populous place. The new Berkshire Music Center, established by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and now in the midst of its first season, has appropriated every part of the orchestra's magnificent estate, from the front entrance, where students arrive by private cars, bus, bicycles, or foot, down to Lake Mahkeenac, where from the pier through the trees the splash of swimmers is heard in the hotter hours of the day.

Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Center, summed up its greatest value when he wrote in an introductory announcement: "We have chosen a practical method so that students may draw from us some of the essence of the knowledge and experience we have acquired in our years of work."

300 Students

The 300 members of the school, equally divided as to sex, most of them youthful and of college age, some of them teachers, were drawn to the new venture by just this prospect which the director offered. They have gathered from each point of the compass and often from a long distance. They have been quick to take advantage of "living and working in music" by constant association with 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On the morning following the impressive opening exercises of July 8, Dr. Koussevitzky gave a significant address on "Interpretation," after which the departments, in groups large and small, were at once hard at work. A visitor drawn by chords of Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture" floating across the grass from the Shed would have found there unprecedented activity. A youthful but extremely proficient orchestra of 60, the members of which had scarcely seen each other until that moment, was playing with assurance and finish. A young man, one of the chosen few of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class, was on the platform, while Dr. Koussevitzky sat in the audience and occasionally interrupted the playing by an electrical flash signal, to advise conductor and orchestra, or walked up to the stage to give the conductor a confidential direction. Sitting about in the front rows, listening intently, were the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, each noting how the parts for his own instrument were progressing. The pupils of conducting were, of course, there, watching every halt, every counsel, every repetition.

In the barn down the hill below Hawthorne Street the Festival Chorus was newly assembled and already deep in the opening Kyrie of Bach's mass in B minor, their grand objective for the Festival performance on August 16. G. Wallace Woodworth, who as conductor was to be responsible for this transformation, was goading the five-part choir to a fine, rounded unity, with no audience for Bach's glorious strains except an pathetic herd of cows grazing on the sloping meadow.

Time Out for Lunch

In the garage, which, like the barn, has been converted into a room for ensemble work, Dr. Herbert Graf was coaching the 20 singers whom he has accepted for drilling in operatic interpretation. This manifold agglomeration of musical sound I, freed from mutual interference by distances between buildings, ceased altogether at high noon. A bus equipped as a cafeteria, contrived and supervised by Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel, backed into a surrounding platform and immediately provided trays of hot and cold dishes to the several hundred students, who carried them to shady spots on the surrounding lawn.

At half-past three the entire school was addressed by Olin Downes in the Shed, and an hour later Miss Gadd of the English Folk Dancing Society received a large number on the stage of the newly built little theatre and launched the company in the cross steps and convolutions of country dancing.

These were only the larger activities, for classes in choral conducting under G. Wallace Woodworth; in music in the schools, under Howard Abell; in composition, under Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith, as well as groups for the preparation of chamber music, helped to fill out the full schedule of a single day.

Guest lecturers for the entire school and talks by members of the faculty to the academy with musical illustrations lend further variety and interest to this paradise for a musical amateur. Olin Downes, Walter Prichard Eaton, Randall Thompson, Abram Chasins, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, and Augustus Zanzig are among the celebrities who have addressed the school.

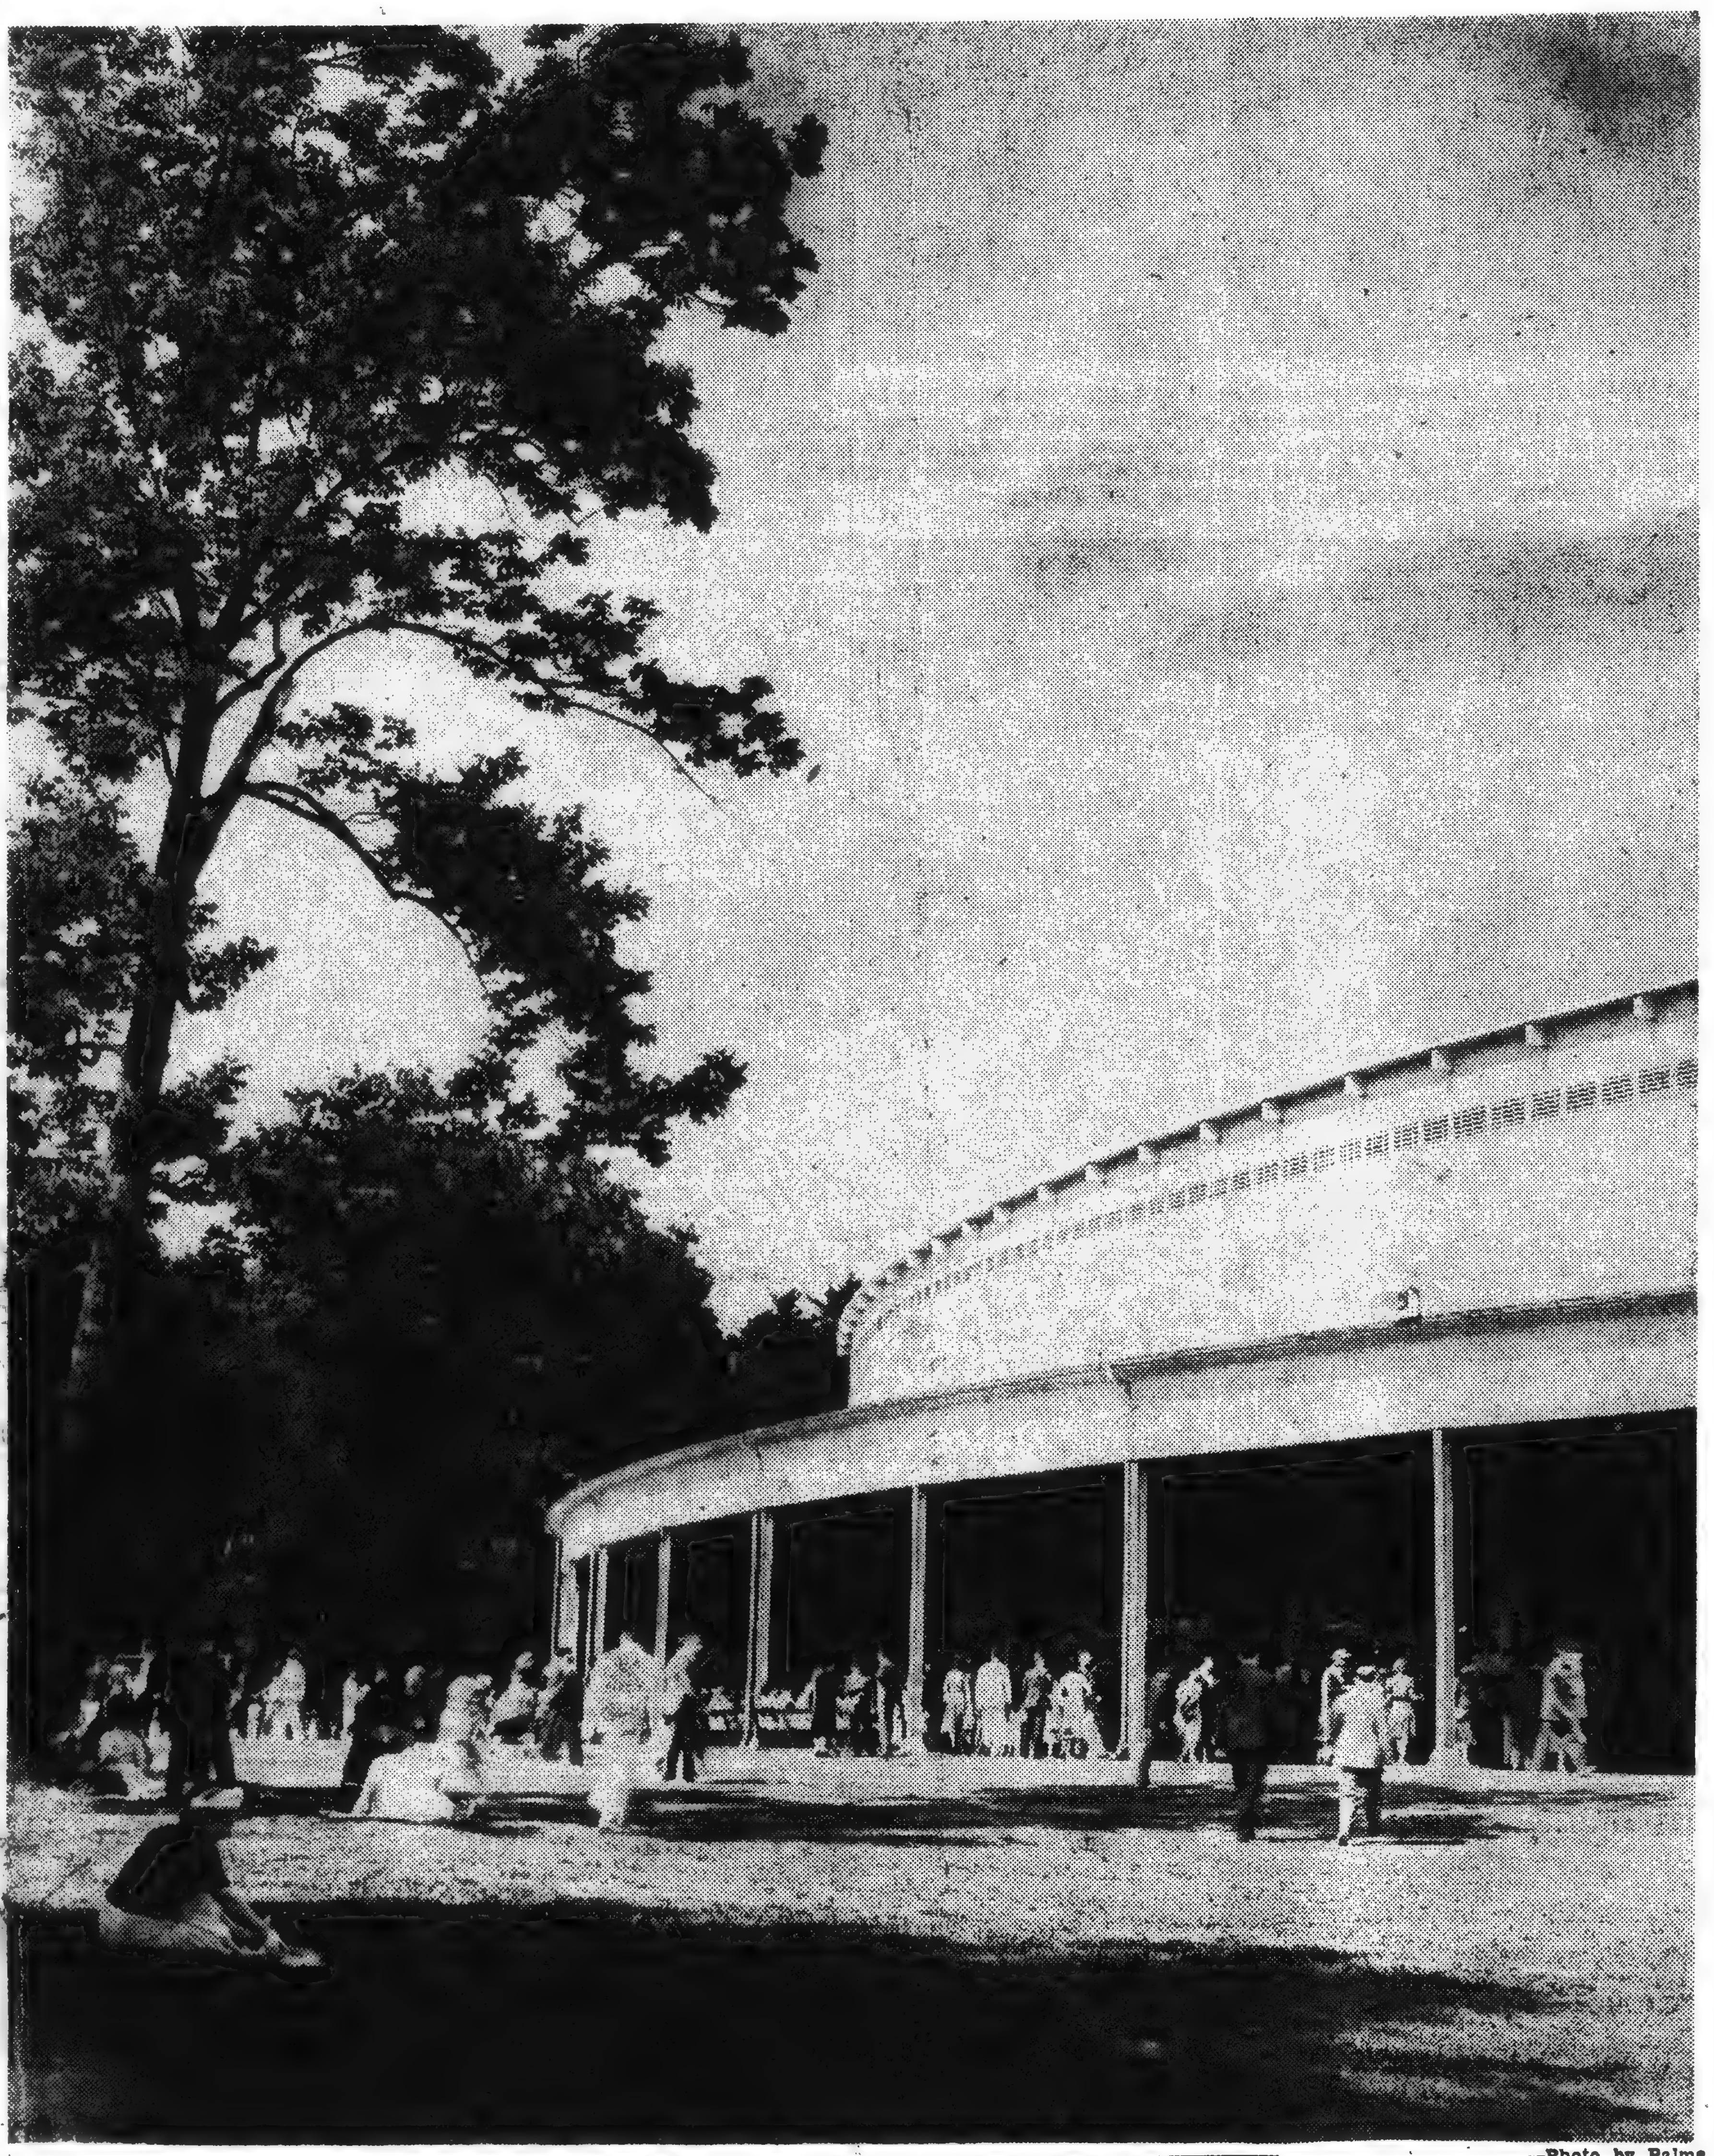
The school in its second three weeks, which coincide with the Festival performances, will continue its classes, although on a somewhat reduced scale for the reason that the majority of the faculty will be occupied with their own rehearsals for performances. Nevertheless, the orchestra and chamber groups will continue to practice and prepare school concerts. They will also have the privilege of attending the Festival rehearsals and performances. The final, full rehearsals of Bach's mass will first bring the Festival Chorus of 250 into direct contact with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky. The performance of the mass thus becomes, in a sense, the climax of six weeks' endeavor by the Academy.

More Satisfying Session Unlikely

"Whatever the length of future seasons, they are unlikely to offer a more satisfying session of music-making than that Dr. Koussevitzky tendered to his listeners yesterday."—Irving Kolodin in the New York Sun, Aug. 14, 1939.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

The Shed Remains the Focal Point of Tanglewood



—Photo by Palme.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Shed at Tanglewood, here pictured during one of the 1939 Sunday afternoon concerts, is the hub of activity for the Berkshire Music Center as it is for the Festival itself.

Festival Chronology

1934 In May, the late Dr. Henry Hadley broached to prominent Berkshire residents the idea of an outdoor summer symphonic series. Received with enthusiasm, the idea grew with the amazing and yet quietly efficient speed which has characterized the Berkshire Symphonic Festival through its six years of existence. By June an organization had been set up and the Dan Hanna estate just west of Stockbridge Bowl was offered as a site. On the night of Aug. 23, under the benign face of a full moon, Dr. Hadley raised his baton over 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society Orchestra to start the Festival on a career whose brilliance could not have been predicted that night even by the most optimistic. Some 6000 people attended the three concerts in the first series. So successful was the adventure from all angles that in the fall, the Festival became a corporate enterprise.

* * *

1935 With an orchestra slightly enlarged in personnel, Dr. Hadley returned the following summer to play before 7500 music-lovers. A huge circus tent, erected on the grounds as rain insurance, came in handy on the final night when continued rain through the day made open bench-sitting a problem. During the series, the Berkshire Musical Association chorus of 200 voices directed by Horace Hunt joined the orchestra and Pianist Rudolph Ganz became the Festival's first soloist. After receipts were counted up, the Festival was in the red, a situation immediately remedied by friends willing to expend more than enthusiasm on a project they considered a rich promise.

* * *

1936 The Festival's third season brought Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time. Scene of that year's concert was Holmwood, the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson on the Lenox-Stockbridge Road, today the site of Foxhollow School. Under a mammoth tent, the Boston Symphony played three concerts in August before a total of 15,000 people, twice as many as attended the series of the previous year. The Festival was on its way up.

* * *

1937 If any year were to be singled out as the Festival's most important, 1937 would demand consideration. First came the gift of a permanent home to the Boston Symphony, Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. On the rolling acres along the north shore of Stockbridge Bowl, Nathaniel Hawthorne once wrote. Broad lawns were ready for such use as the Festival might consider. It was a good beginning. Next came the decision to double the number of concerts. An even bigger tent was erected. Western Union put a branch office in the old Tappan house on the grounds. The National Broadcasting Company arranged to put the three-hour all-Wagner concert on the air. The Festival, in its fourth season, had become an event of national importance. Came the Wagner concert, and came the deluge. The sky thundered and the tent thundered and even the percussive Wagner had to give in. The National Broadcasting Company played piano solos from its New York studios and dance music from Chicago. What had been hope for a permanent outdoor auditorium turned into determination. After the last of the 30,000 people had departed from the two weeks' series, the Festival got down to business. In hardly any time at all, $80,000 was raised and on the last day of 1937, ground was broken for the Shed. It was a significant year.

* * *

1938 Dedication of the huge Shed, originally conceived by Eliel Saarinen and built under the direction of Joseph Franz, unique in musical architecture and, amazing in its acoustical properties, high-lighted the opening of the 1938 series. Even continuous rains before the series started could not faze the Festival. A total of 36,000 people came from 40 states, Canada and Europe, to hear the six concerts.

* * *

1939 Announcement of the plans for the Berkshire Music Center almost overshadowed the brilliance of the six concerts of the 1939 season. The assurance that the Festival's interpretive place in the world of music was to be augmented by a creative, developing project, gave added proof that at Tanglewood was being mobilized one of the most dynamic, vital forces in music today. But the 1939 season had other memorable moments, outstanding among them the "discovery" by Dr. Koussevitzky of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, called by an important critic, "one of the great voices of our day."

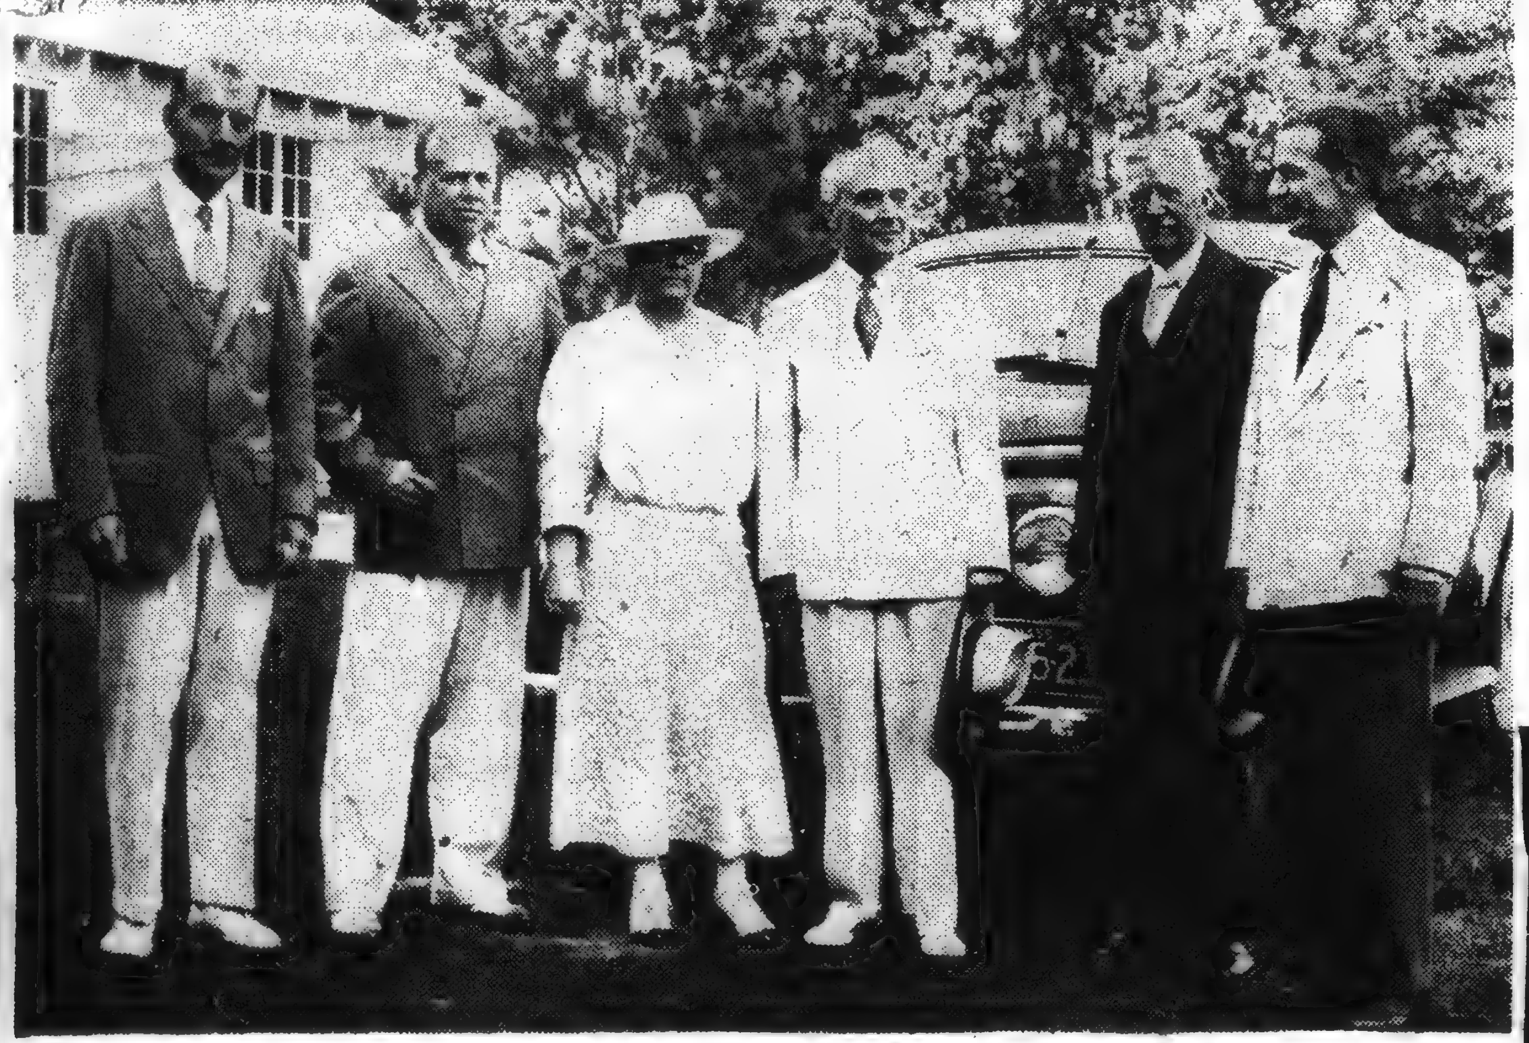
* * *

1940 This year marked the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Center on Monday, July 8, with some 300 students and a faculty including such famous names in music as Dr. Koussevitzky, Paul Hindemith, Aaron Copland, Herbert Graf and G. Wallace Woodworth. This season marks also the Festival's first nine-concert series. The Festival keeps on making musical history.

Stand and Cheer As Series Closes

"Everyone stood and many cheered in the music shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon after the trumpet calls of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had closed the second symphony of Jean Sibelius and, with it, the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival . . . Ringing trumpets accompanied by the steady tread of the trombones seemed to chant 'it is well done!' This effect followed by the tremendous ovation from the audience made living drama out of that last 10 minutes."—Thomas Archer in the Boston Transcript, Aug. 14, 1939.

Christeners of a Musical Infant



Participating in the formal ceremonies which opened the Berkshire Music Center July 8 were, from left to right: Reginald Foster, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and member of the Center faculty; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center; Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony, and Albert Spalding, famed American violinist and Berkshire resident.

Tanglewood a Summer Mecca

"Last week was the final week for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which becomes at this time of year the mecca for thousands who pour into Stockbridge, Lenox and as far south as Great Barrington, Mass., to enjoy one of the rarest treats that America has to offer. You sat happy and content in the marvelous out-of-doors auditorium, watching the lights fall among the pine trees while gentle, chilly breezes wafted the scent of pine and a summer night to your nose. There is nothing like it anywhere in America."—Martha Blair in the Washington Times, Aug. 14, 1939.

How To Listen to a Sympho

ONE-TWO-BUTTON-MY-SHOE—This is a symphonic-listening opportunity for the double-jointed only. In this particular case, Sibelius plays second fiddle to shoe leather.

THE BOO-HOO—Adapted from the approach used by brides who have just been told that dinner was lousy, this position (also called the Artificial Respiration method) shuts out practically everything, some times even music and air. It is also effective since anyone looking at you can't tell definitely whether you're passionately listening to the music or just asleep.

THE THINKER—This is a variation of the Flyi particularly to bench-sitting, but vulnerable to THE YOGA (at left)—This semi-Buddha position is the mark of the real symphonic-lover, requiring ing of complaints from muscles unadapted to bein ning slipknots.

uttress, adapted ical jokers.
-contemplation
oes the ignor-double run-

THE KNEE-HUG—Far and away the favorite outdoor method of symphonic listening. Besides keeping the vertebrae off the ground, it permits sight-seeing. The girl at the top is using the Double-Elbow technique while the listener directly below her favors the Lying-in-State or Everything-but-a-Lily position.

RECLINING VENUS (at right)—A combination between a Cleopatra come-hither technique and setting up exercises, this sky-gazing position is satisfactory for symphonic attention if you don't get pleural pneumonia or circulatory stoppage in the hands.

THE FLYING BUTTRESS—Also called the Roma tion, this is tenable only for short periods unless shovel and dig a hole for the hip bone. It also is mended for music-lovers with toupees.

THE TRIPOD—This technique, feasible only in seats, supports the head but also allows scratching the nose dling the mustache, if any.

---

ertising

Is a Printed Pro

nade with the knowledge that public opinion will pass j loes not meet approval is costly and unprofitable.

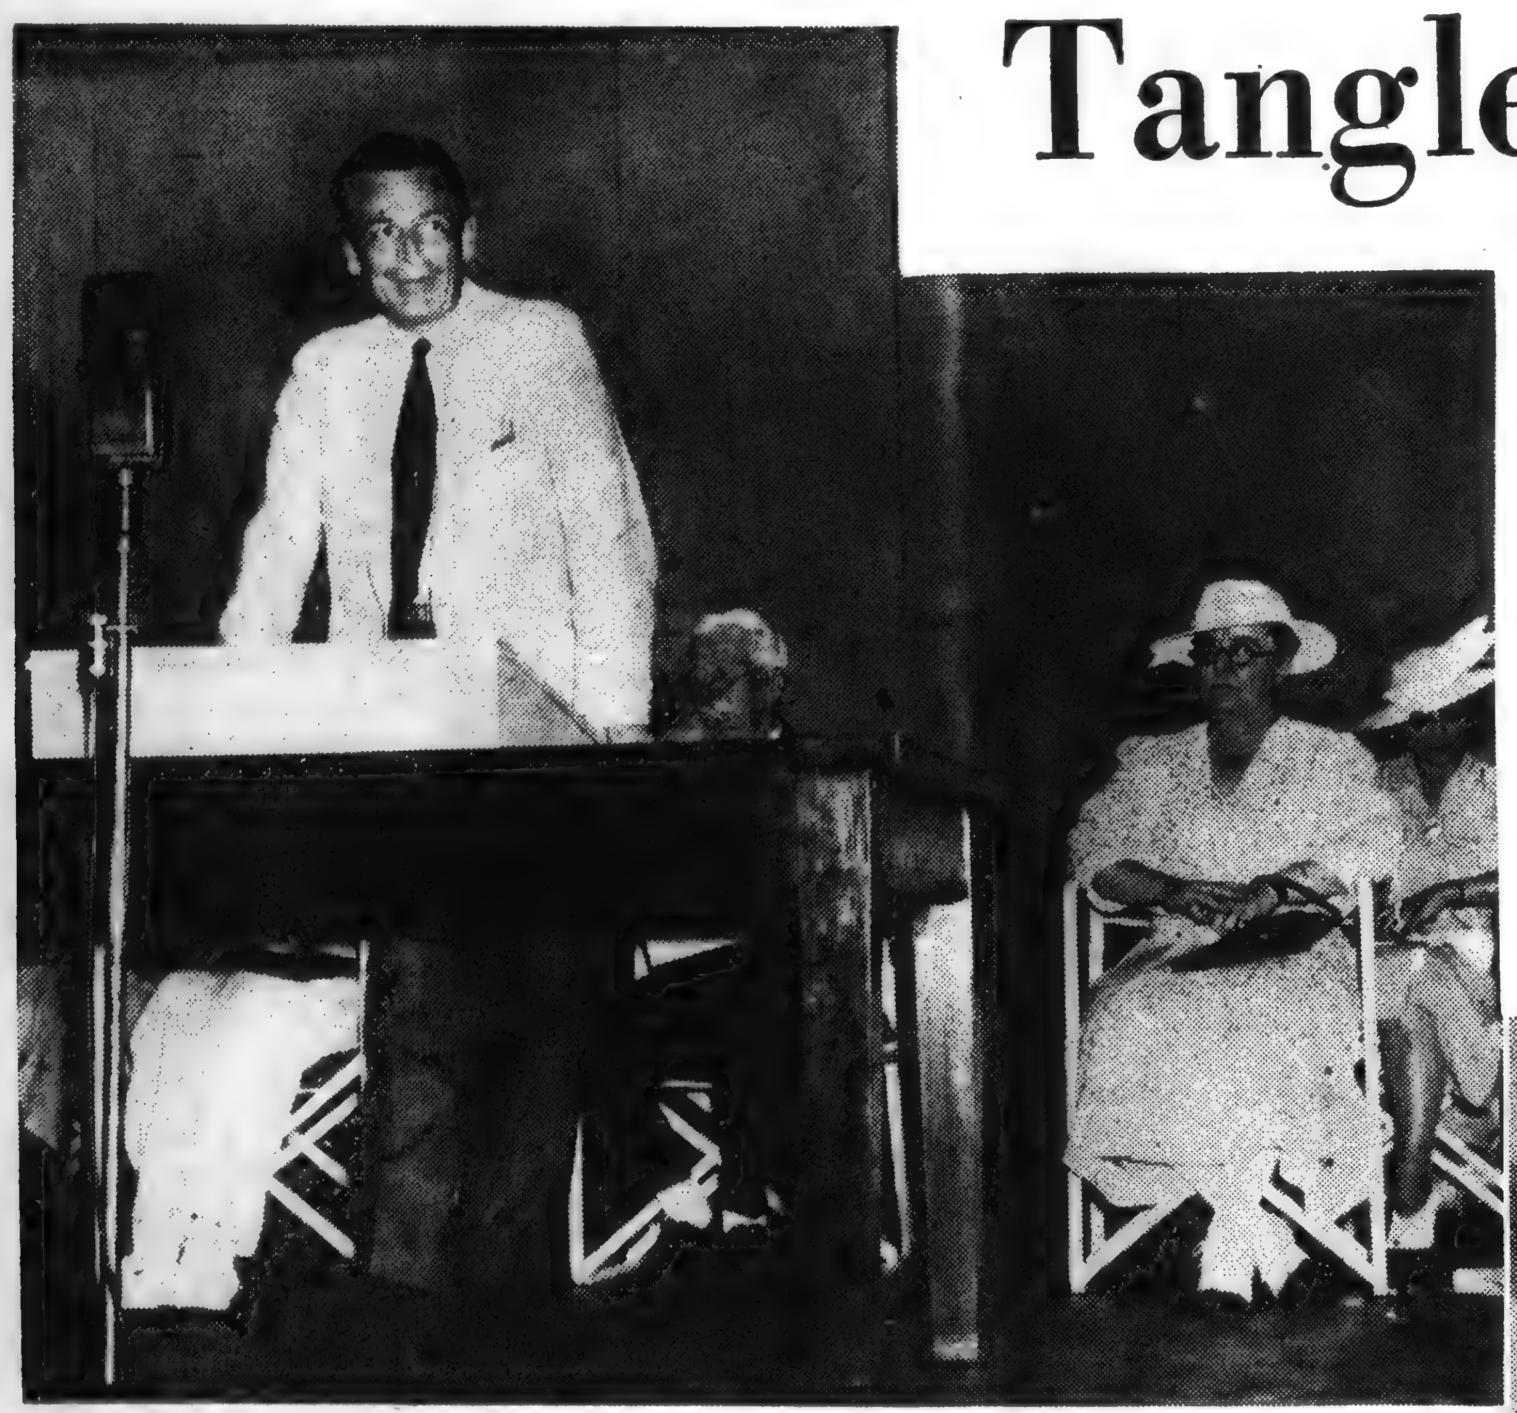
74

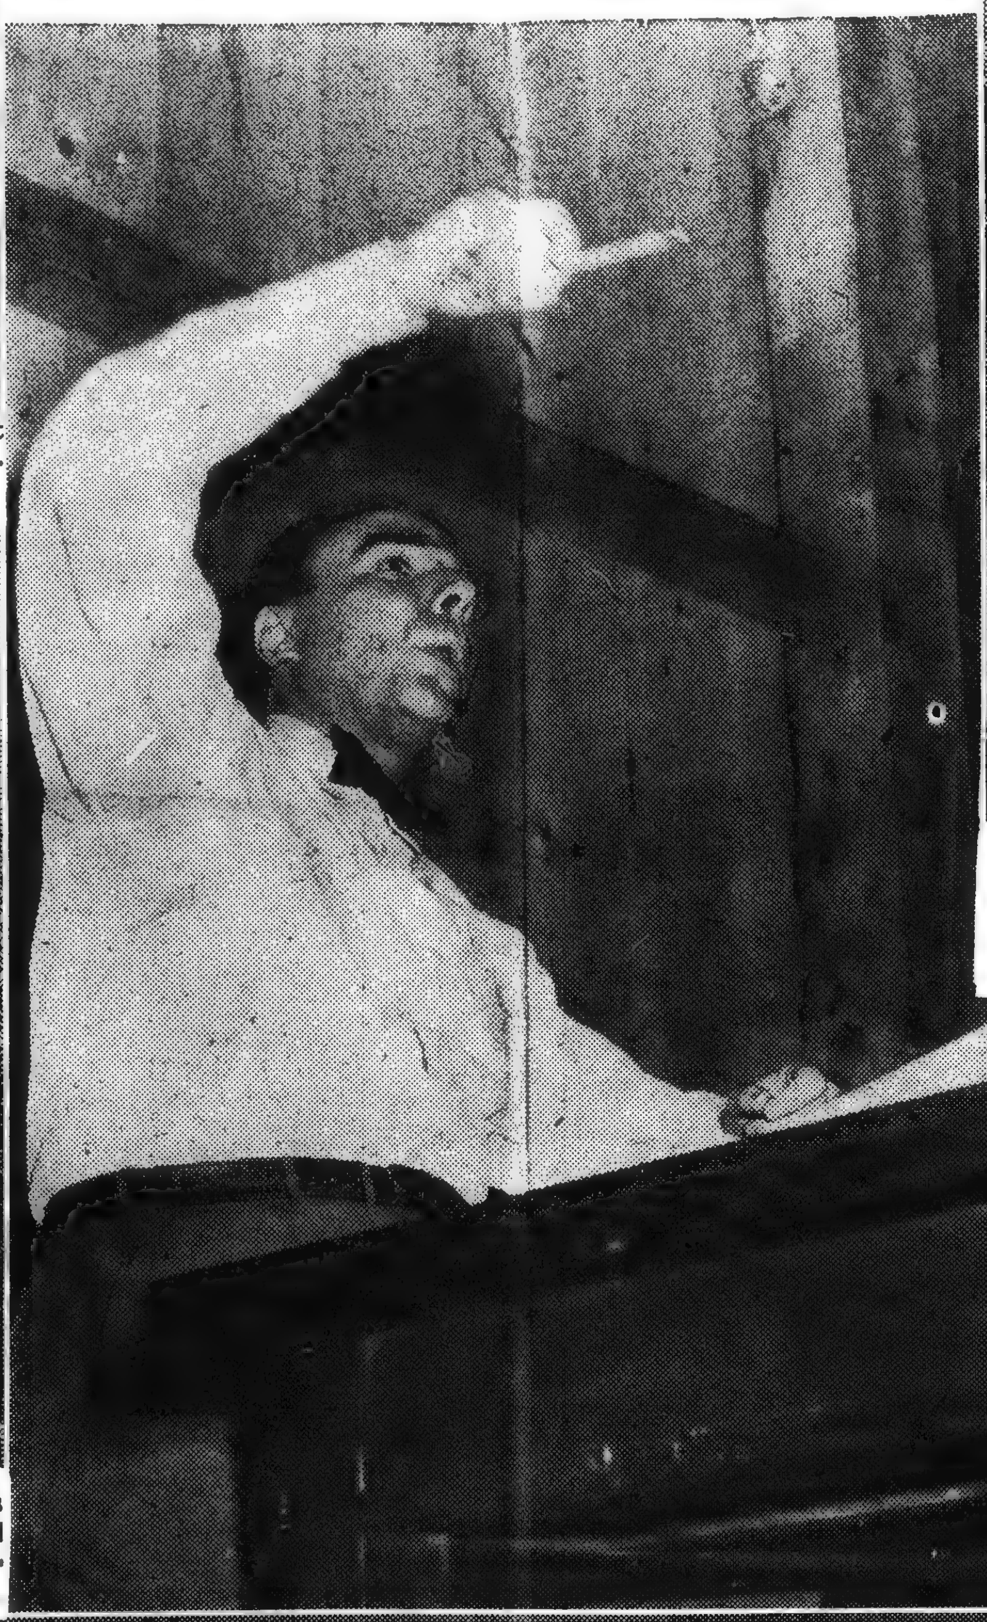
Tanglewood Adds a Page to History

On Monday, July 8, 1940, Tanglewood further strengthened its claim to be the heart of musical America with the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, the realization of a lifelong dream for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Center. On that day, 340 students from all over the country began a six-week period of intensive training under some of the most famous figures in contemporary music. Out of these classes, and out of those of ensuing years, it is hoped will come the great conductors, vocalists, instrumentalists and composers of tomorrow. On this page is a pictorial record of the Center as it began its significant first year.

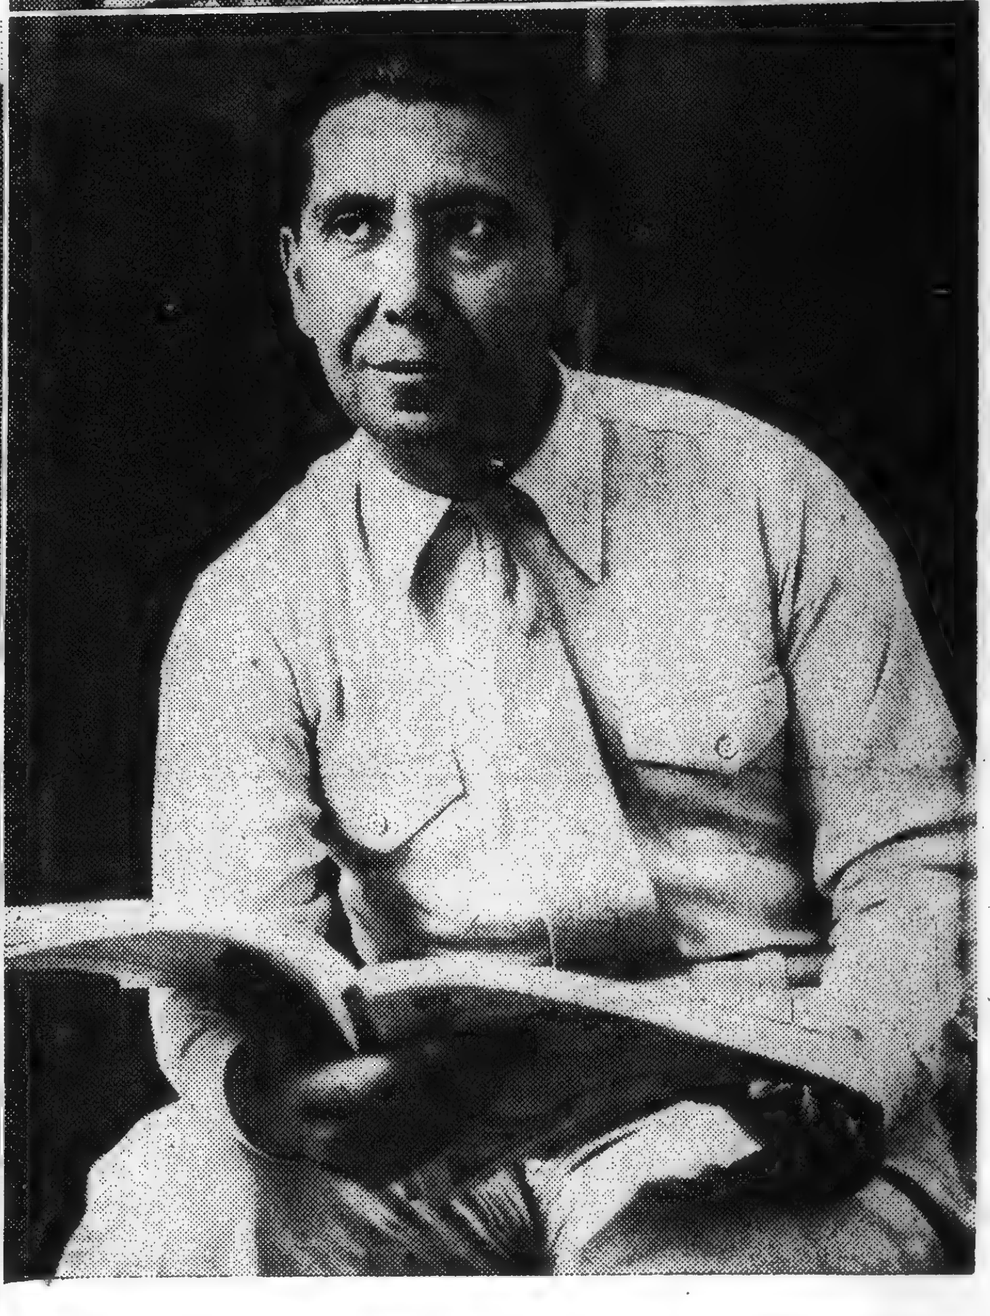


Berkshire's own Albert Spalding, outstanding American-born violinist, came from his home in Great Barrington to participate in the opening-day ceremonies as a trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Behind him is Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood's buildings, such as this barn, have been renovated and pressed into service as rehearsal halls.



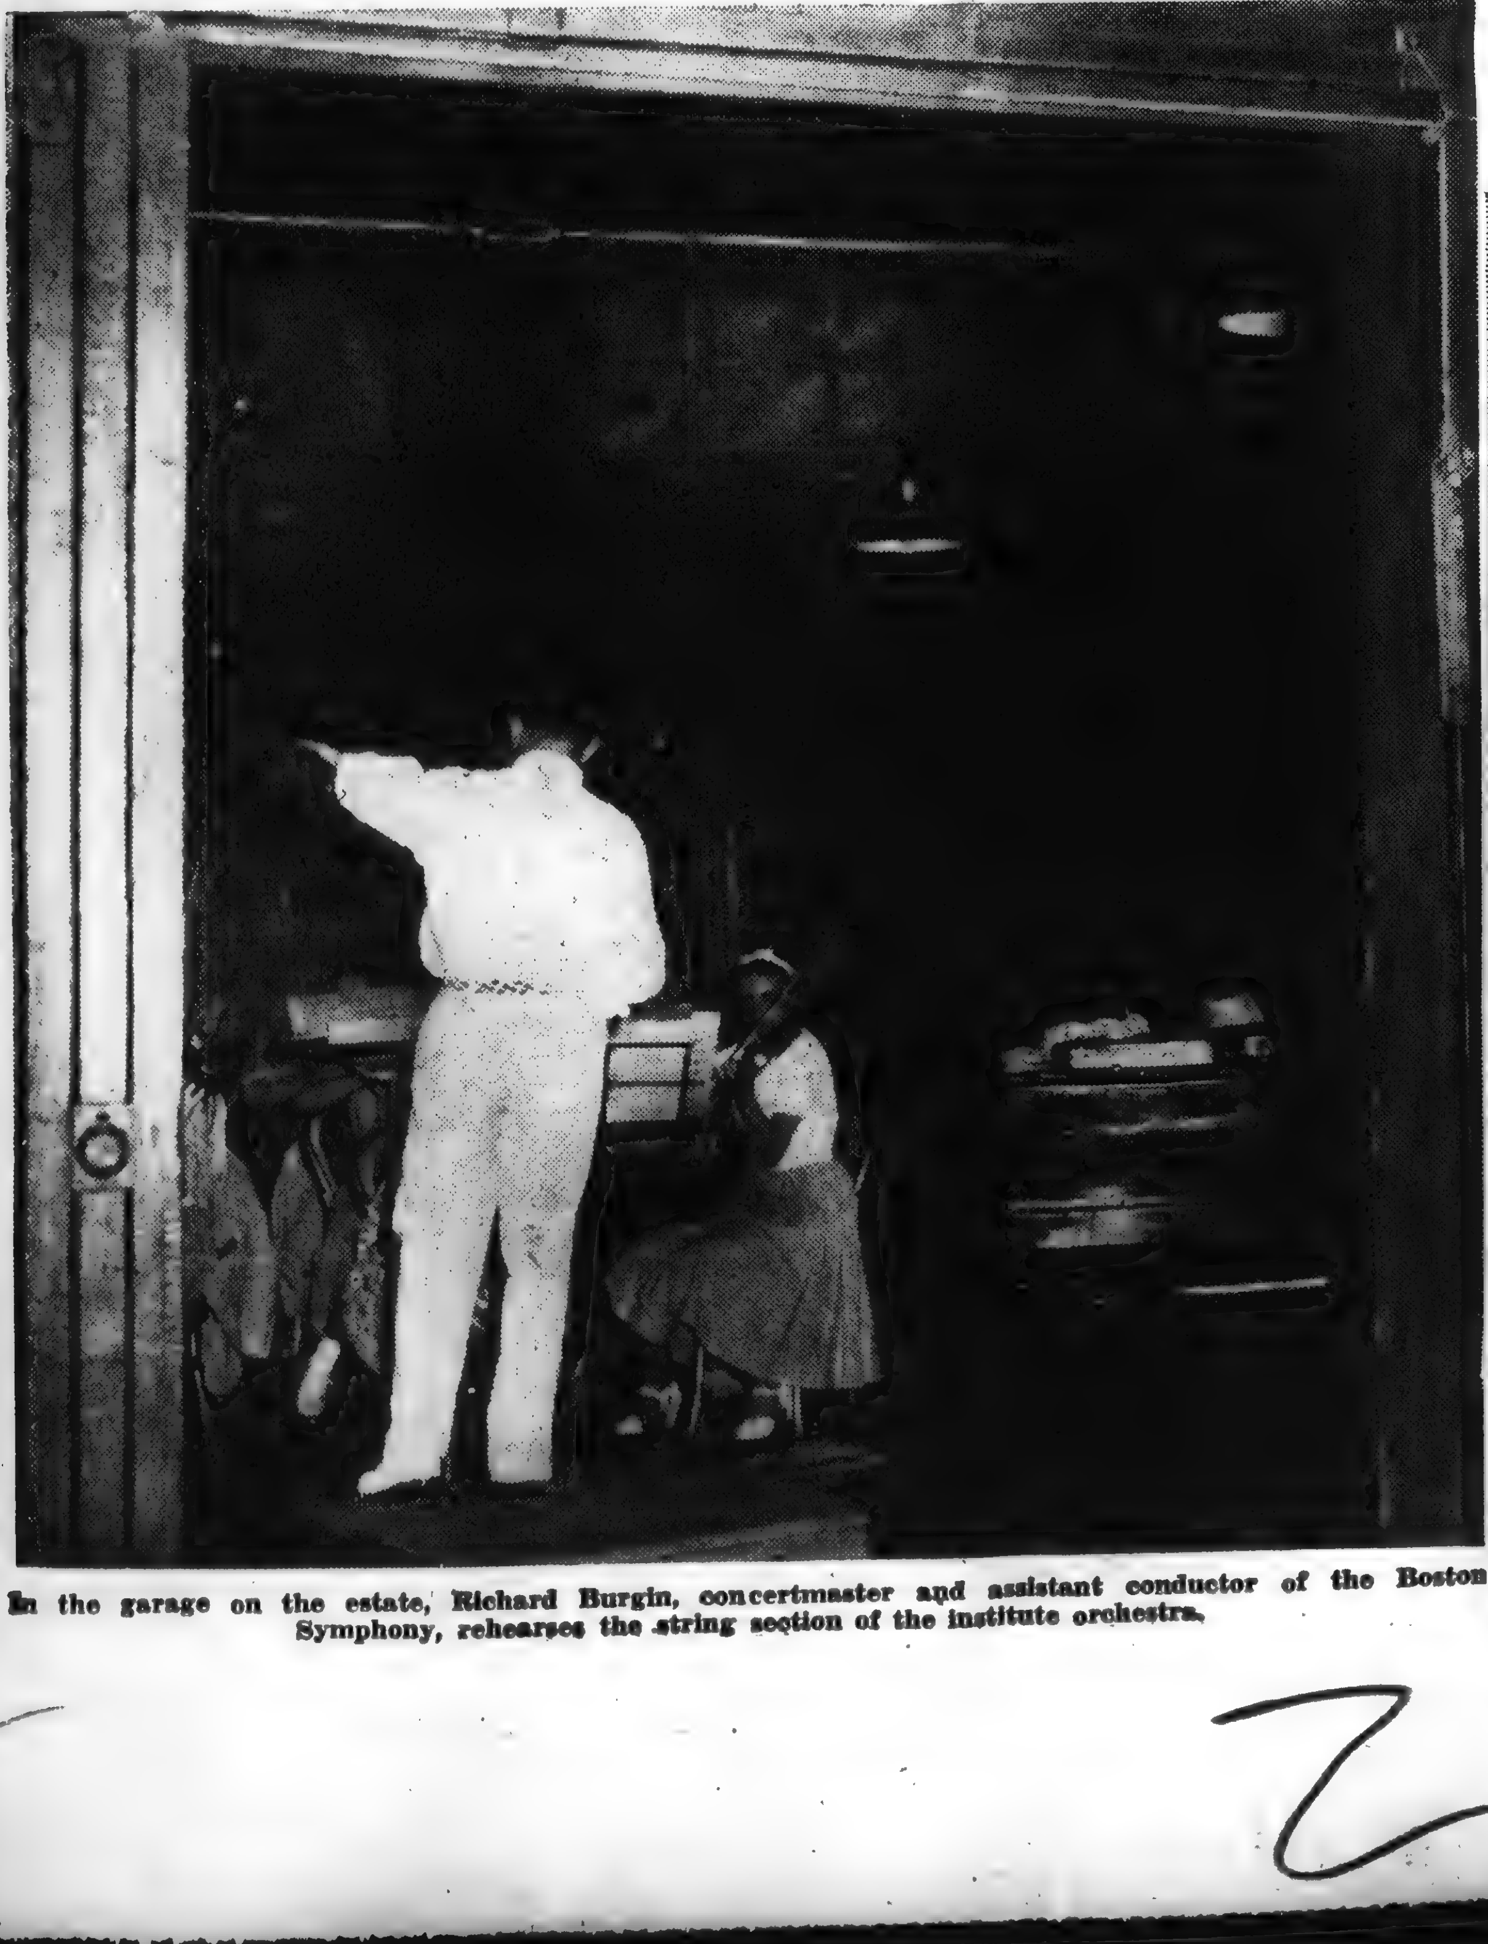
Harvard's G. Wallace Woodworth (left), assistant director of the Center, conducts his 200-voice chorus, shown at right as they rehearsed in the barn for the opening day.



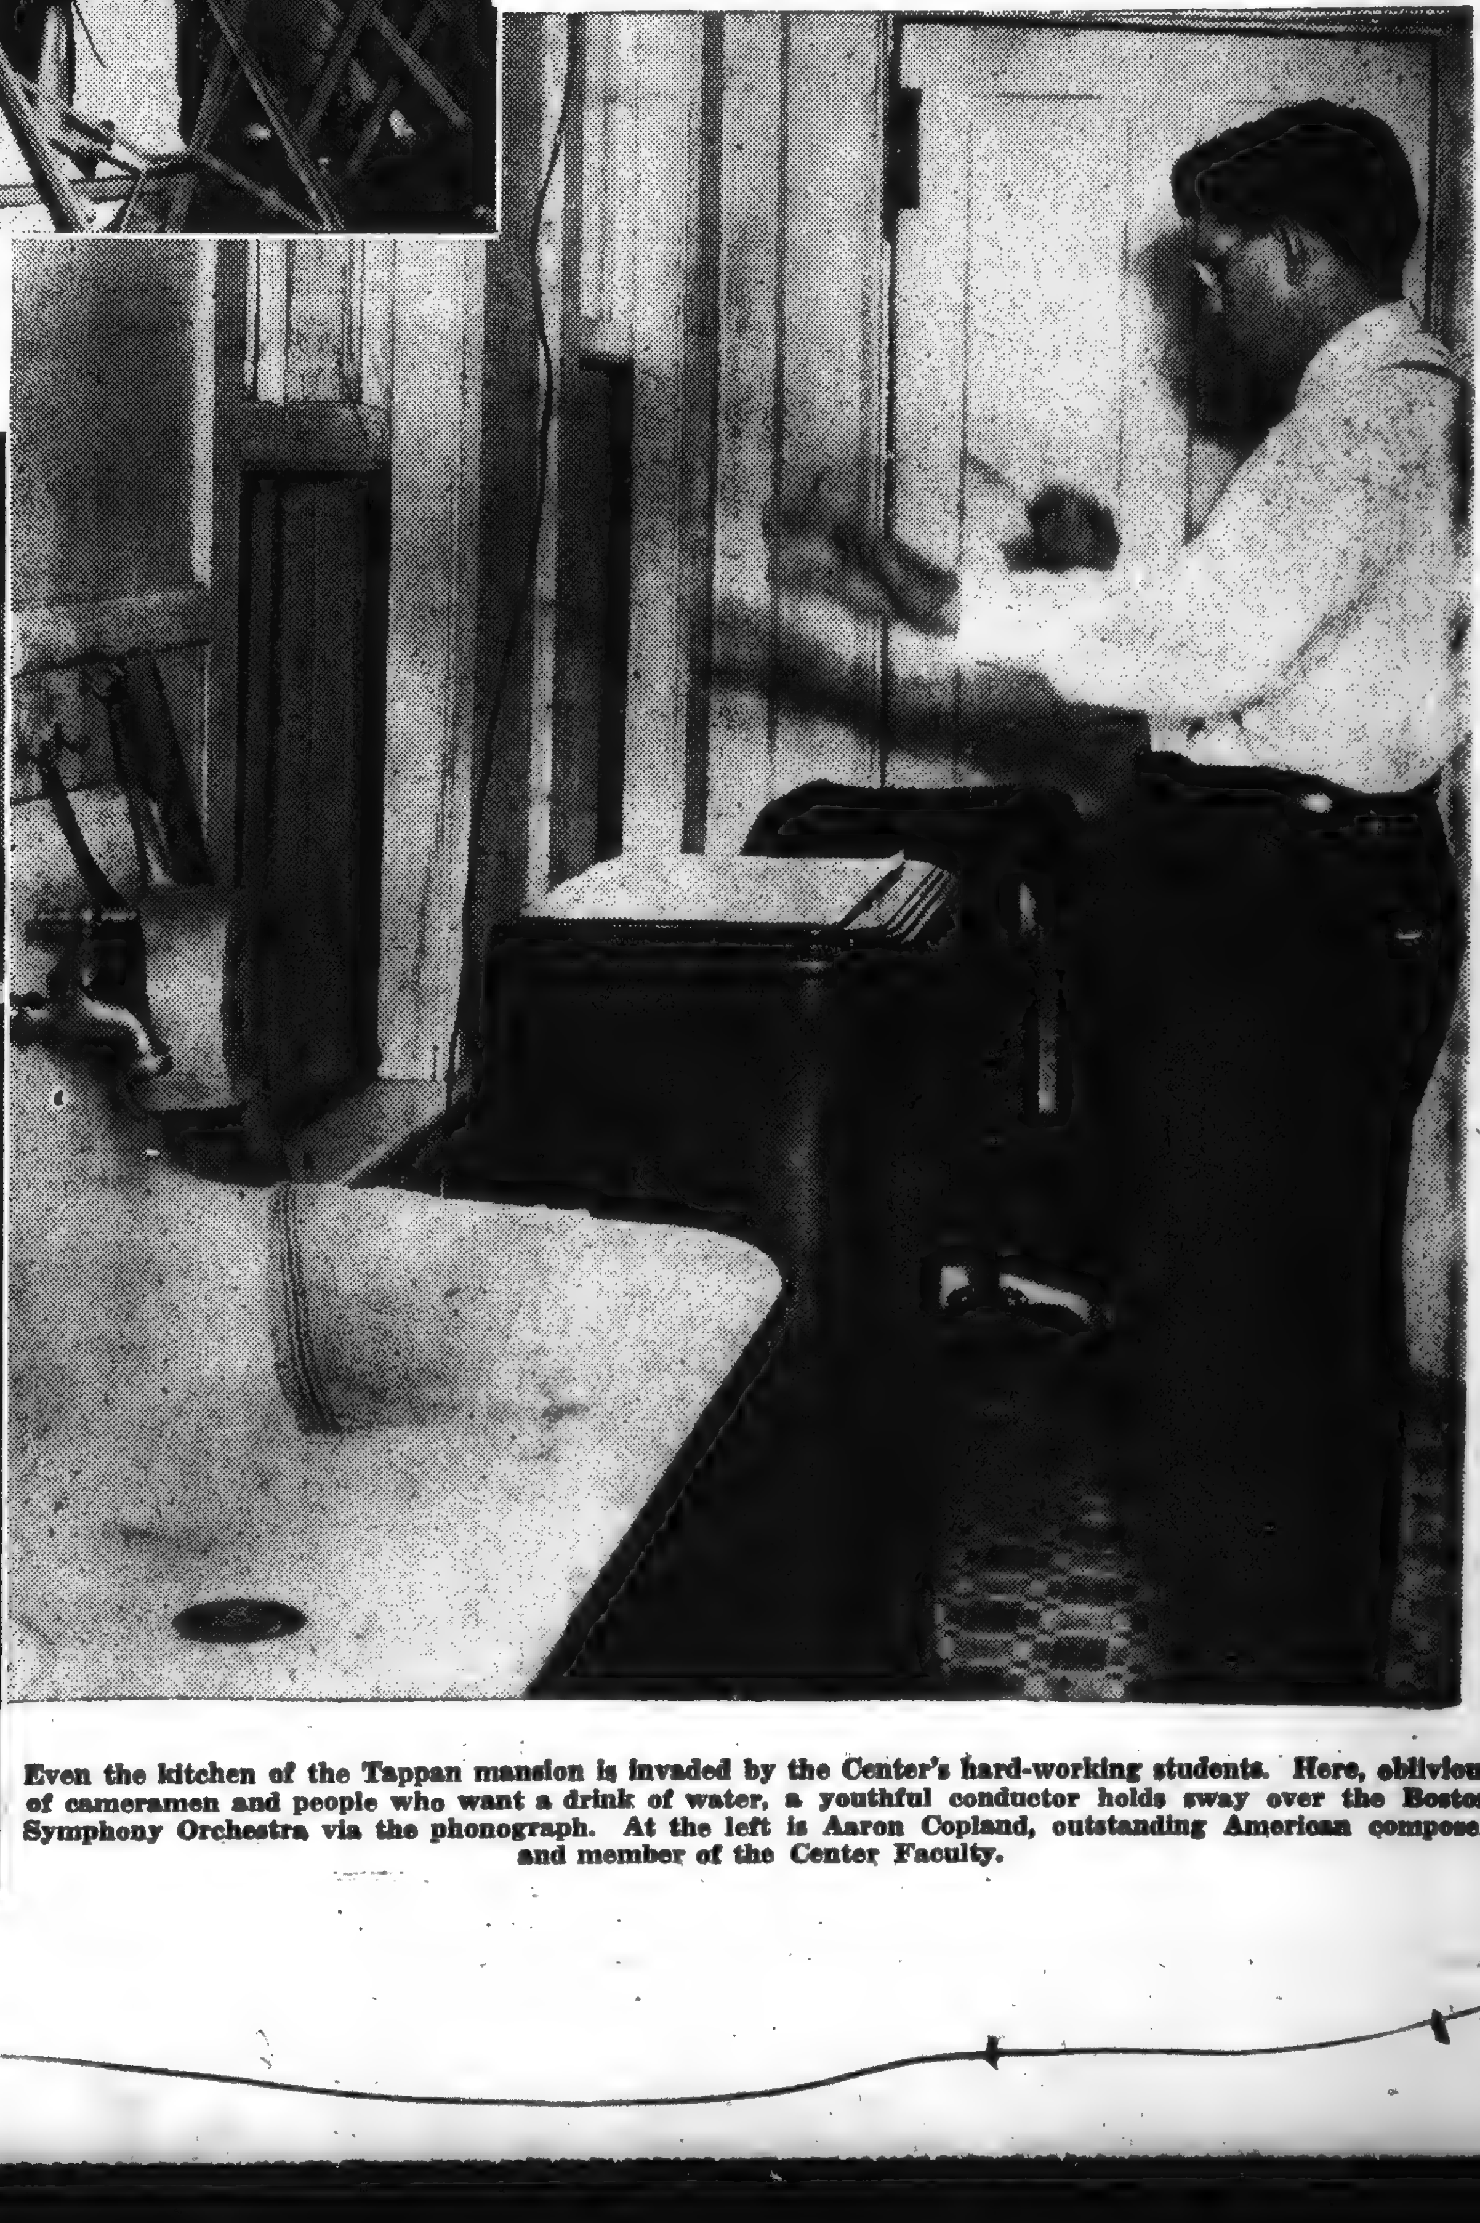
Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera, conducts classes in operatic interpretation at the Center. Headquarters for his classes is the new theatre, built expressly for this purpose and for ensemble work.

With smiling efficiency, Dr. Margaret Grant, secretary of the Center, handles organizational details from her office in the Tappan house.

From his conducting class, Dr. Koussevitzky promises "five great conductors in five years." Here, during a session with the institute orchestra, he discusses a passage with one of his students.



In the garage on the estate, Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, rehearses the string section of the institute orchestra.



Even the kitchen of the Tappan mansion is invaded by the Center's hard-working students. Here, oblivious of cameramen and people who want a drink of water, a youthful conductor holds sway over the Boston Symphony Orchestra via the phonograph. At the left is Aaron Copland, outstanding American composer and member of the Center Faculty.

2X

75

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 1 - 1940

You Can't Beat This Boston Band

Koussevitzky Symphony Orchestra Draws ~~10,000 to~~ Berkshire Music Festival

By Alice Hughes

Nature in one of her nastier moods was really responsible for the physical comfort and air of permanence that now mark the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens its 1940 Flow of Soul in the outskirts of Stockbridge, Mass., this evening.

ALICE HUGHES

In August, 1937, Maestro Serge Koussevitzky, the Toscanini of Beacon Hill, was whipping his great Boston orchestra through some wild Wagner when Heaven rebelled at this mortal opposition and showered down. A terrific wind and thunder storm blew up, with crashes matching every Wagnerian blare, the lightning playing about the maestro's devoted head. Though he battled imperiously to outplay this elemental symphony, he lost to Nature, which hauled off with a big blast and blew the tent down on him, his 110 fiddlers, tootlers and drummers and 5,000 listeners.

Warning

That was going a mite too far. Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, when things had calmed a bit, leaped up and announced that the whole thing was a dire warning from On High. That Koussevitzky and his artists must have a permanent, rainproof and acoustical shed for their performances.

Hands went to rain-drenched pockets and reticules. In the next six weeks nearly $100,000 came out of them. Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a well-heeled New England Brahmin, deeded her lovely estate, Tanglewood, to the Boston Symphony. It takes its name from the little red house on the grounds where Hawthorne spun his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of Seven Gables." A beautiful, terraced acreage, alternately wild and landscaped.

The shed was opened for the Festival of 1938. It holds 6,000. Usually another 1,000 buy tickets and sit or sprawl on the grass outside the unwalled building. Stockbridge and Lenox, near which Tanglewood lies, split a population total of 1,600. Lee and Great Barrington, nearby, are even smaller. But in August the area expands like a concertina. It shelters, feeds and entertains 10,000 during the three week ends, when Koussy and his Melody Boys give out Tchaikowsky for the Yankee hill-billies.

From Far and Near

From a radius of 50 miles, taking in Springfield, Hartford and Albany, music lovers pour in to soak up Sibelius and thrill to Beethoven. Easily the most important symphonic event in the East, Koussy and his cohorts are rapidly building it toward their dream of an American Salzburg.

Its growing success is a boon to the innkeepers, who for years have played host to ersatz Cabots and Lodges. Close but honest Yankees, their consciences forbid the kiting of rates.

terbugging or lifts his voice to swing "The Tennessee Fish Fry," these dowagers will live and let live.

A few modest night-spots coax the younger element to drink, shake a ribald shoe and take peeks at each other, but

Serge Koussevitzky is more than a stick-waver in these parts. He is a religion. All agree that this reformed bull fiddler is a magnificent conductor. In Boston he is a Grand Seigneur. Blue-blooded plutocrats roll over and play dead at his whim. The power behind his throne is the wise, ambitious Mme. Koussevitzky. She and the Conductor are members of Boston's exclusive Somerset Club, and have grown to be high priests among the socially annointed.

Both God and Devil

To his men, Koussevitzky is both God and Devil. A steel disciplinarian, he commands them with an iron wand, and sears them with burning irony. But they revere his fine musicianship; are proud of the band's excellence and prestige, and prize his rare but eloquent words of praise for fine playing.

Just a few days ago the Maestro had a birthday. Forgetful of the occasion, he came to rehearsal to conduct Phillip Emmanuel Bach's Concerto for Orchestra, and, as he lifted his baton for the opening chord, the band gave out "Happy Birthday to You." Apoplexy challenged pleasure at this break in discipline. Graciousness finally won.

This summer the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, offered a 6-week course in orchestral conducting, orchestra practice, opera dramatics and advanced composition, to begin three weeks before the Festival and ending with it.

Over 300 scholars were admitted, instructed by Herbert Graf, stage director of the New York Metropolitan Opera Co.; Aaron Copland, composer and author; Paul Hindemith, composer; G. Wallace Woodsworth, head of Harvard's music department; Abram Chasins, composer and pianist; Olin Downes, music critic for the New York Times; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, and others.

First Concert Tonight

The first concert, sounding off promptly at 8:30 this evening, includes three first symphonies by three great composers; Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. On Saturday, Aug. 3, American composer Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 will be heard. On Aug. 8, to commemorate the 100th anniversary of his birth, there will begin three successive days of Tschaikowsky's symphonies. On Aug. 17, Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano who made her debut as soloist at last year's Berkshire Festival, will sing again at the Maestro's behest, in Beethoven's "Adelaida."

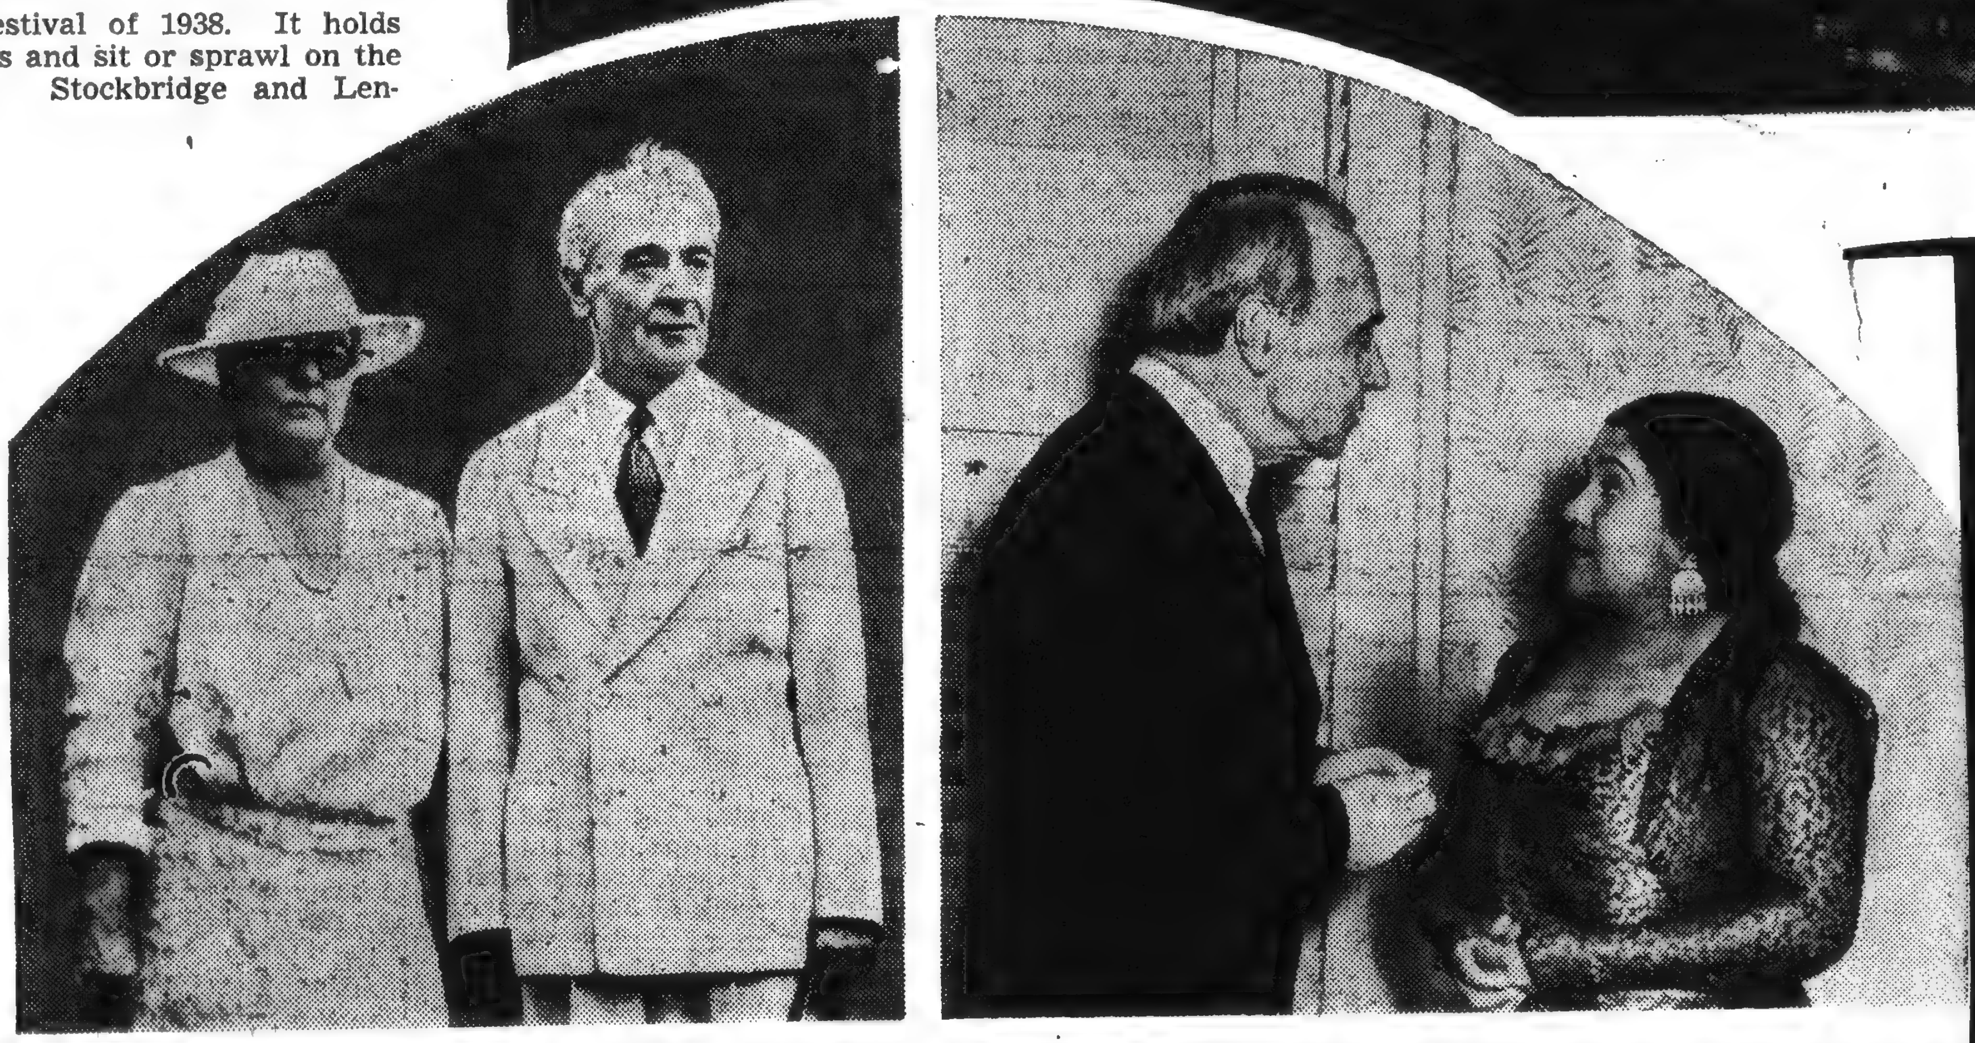
The performance music lovers await most joyously is on Aug. 15, when Bach's greatest B Minor Mass will be given, with the Berkshire Festival singers in full choral. Tickets for this feast for souls and ears ~~have~~ been sold out for weeks, but there's always sprawling room on the grassy terrain. The acoustical shed is huge. It extends for two city blocks from end to end. Most of the concerts sell out. Afternoon performances are often attended by classes of young children from nearby schools and camps.

No Hot Dogs?

"No hot dogs or hamburgers?" we asked Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, the Festival's president, mindful of the knackwurst and wurstchen, as characteristic of Salzburg as was its celestial Mozart. Also we recalled how pleased were England's King and Queen last summer over the frankfurters served at the President's and Mrs. Roosevelt's Hyde Park picnic.

"Hot dog? Indeed not!" she said sniffishly. "The Berkshire Symphonic Festival does not approve of hot dogs."

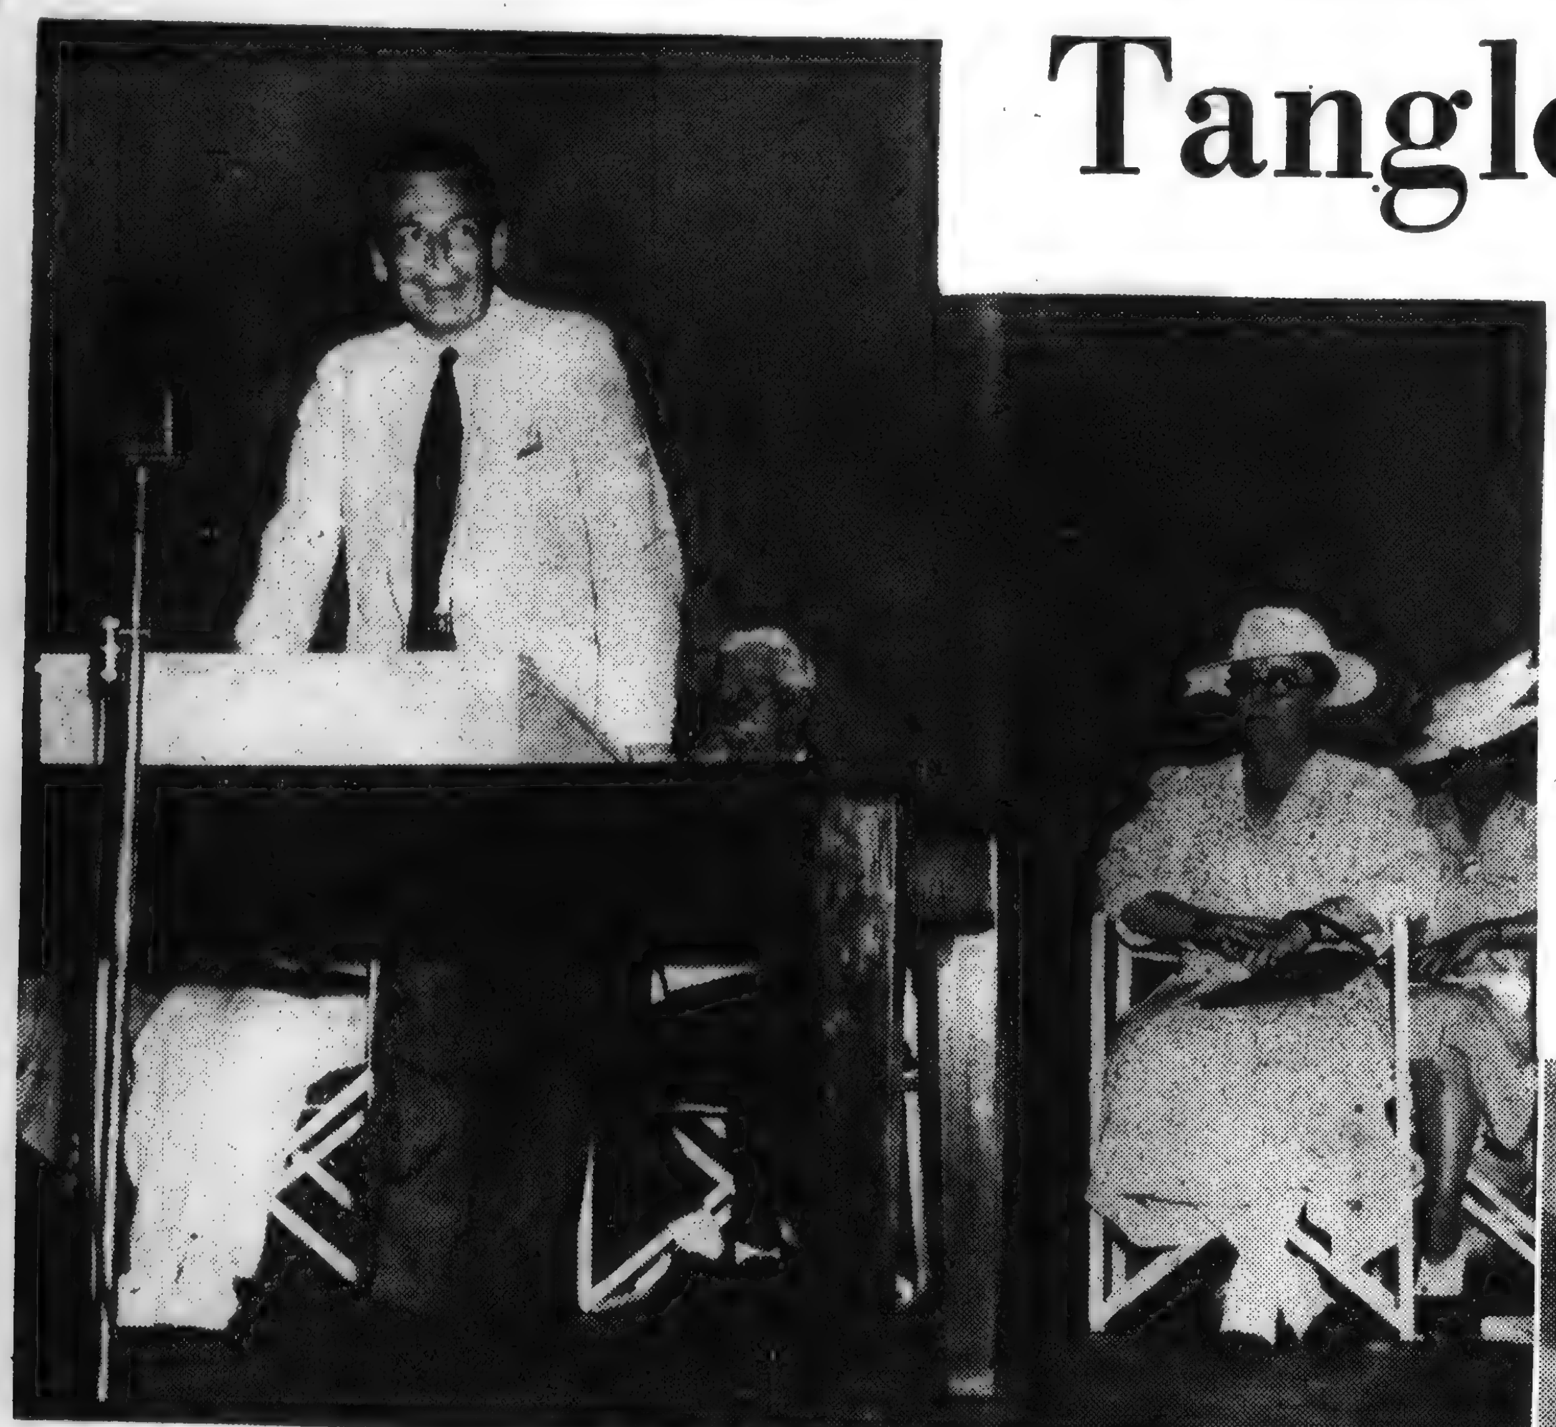
THE BUILDING which houses the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Stockbridge, Mass.



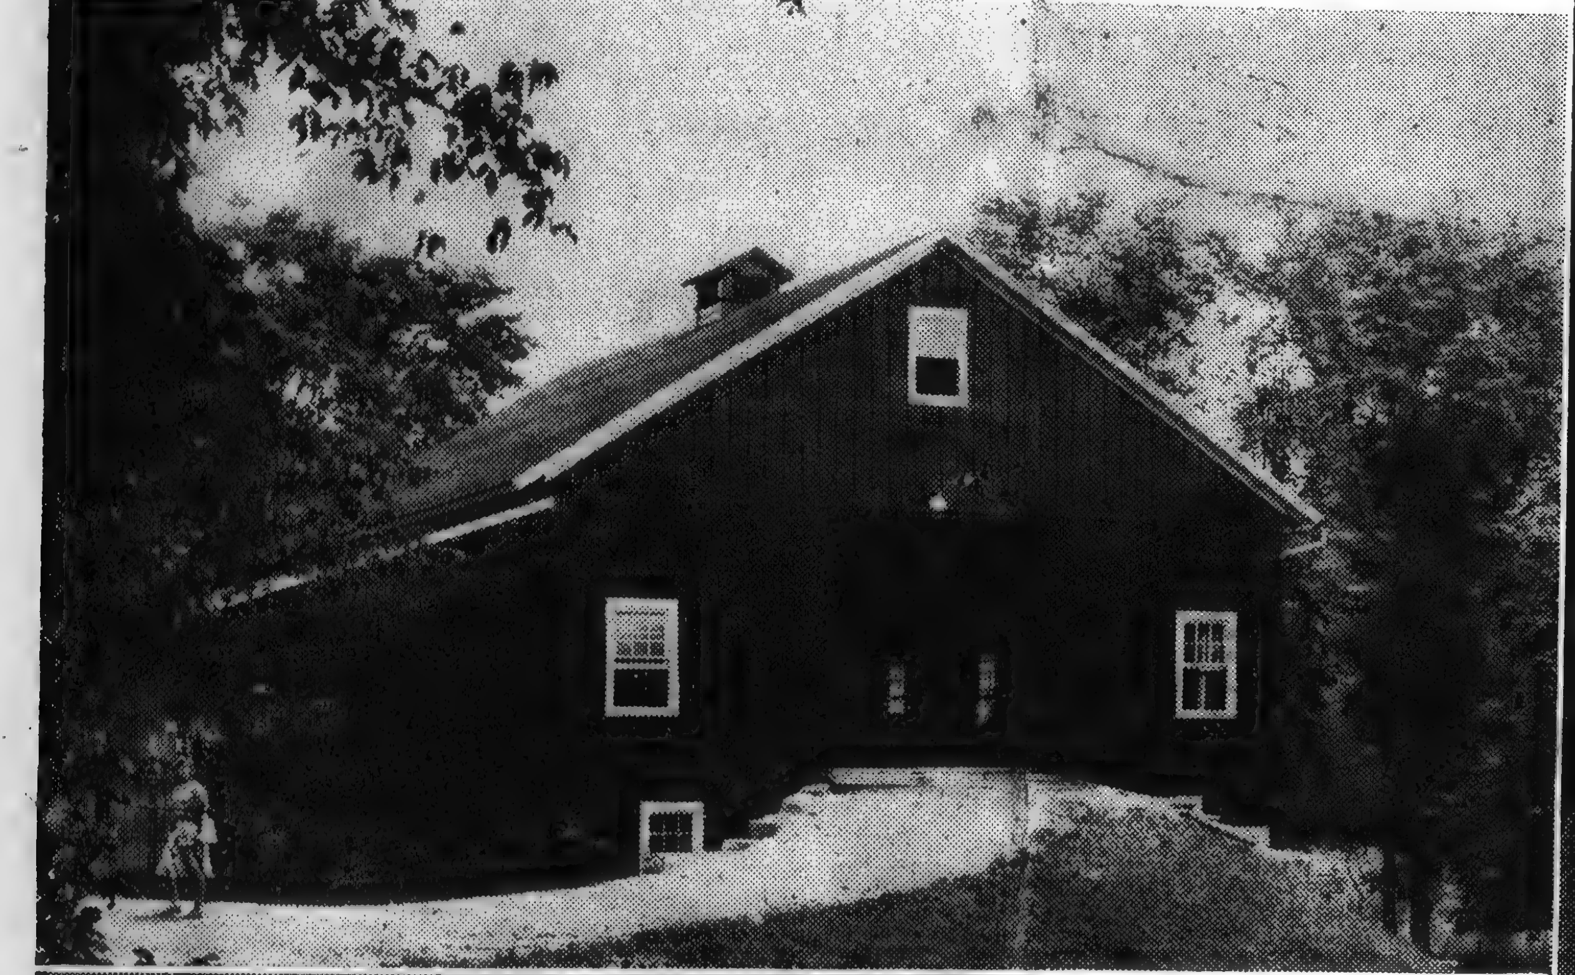
GERTRUDE ROBINSON-SMITH, left, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the conductor talking with Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who made her debut last year.

Tanglewood Adds a Page to History

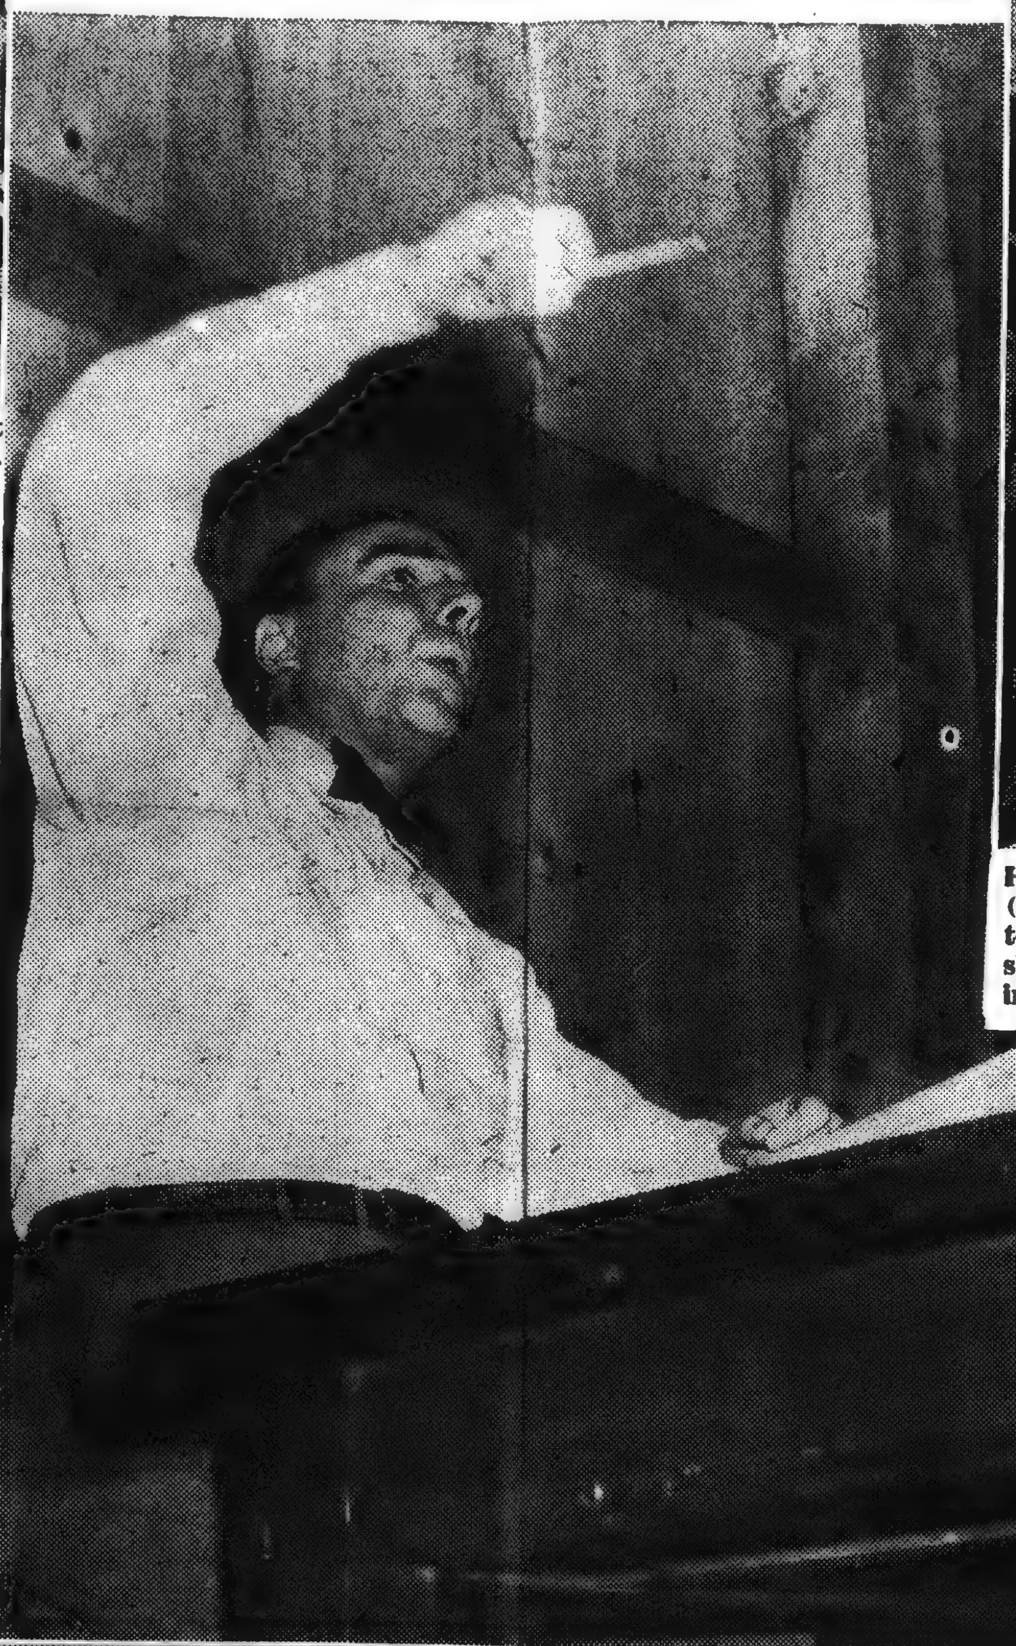
On Monday, July 8, 1940, Tanglewood further strengthened its claim to be the heart of musical America with the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, the realization of a lifelong dream for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Center. On that day, 340 students from all over the country began a six-week period of intensive training under some of the most famous figures in contemporary music. Out of these classes, and out of those of ensuing years, it is hoped will come the great conductors, vocalists, instrumentalists and composers of tomorrow. On this page is a pictorial record of the Center as it began its significant first year.

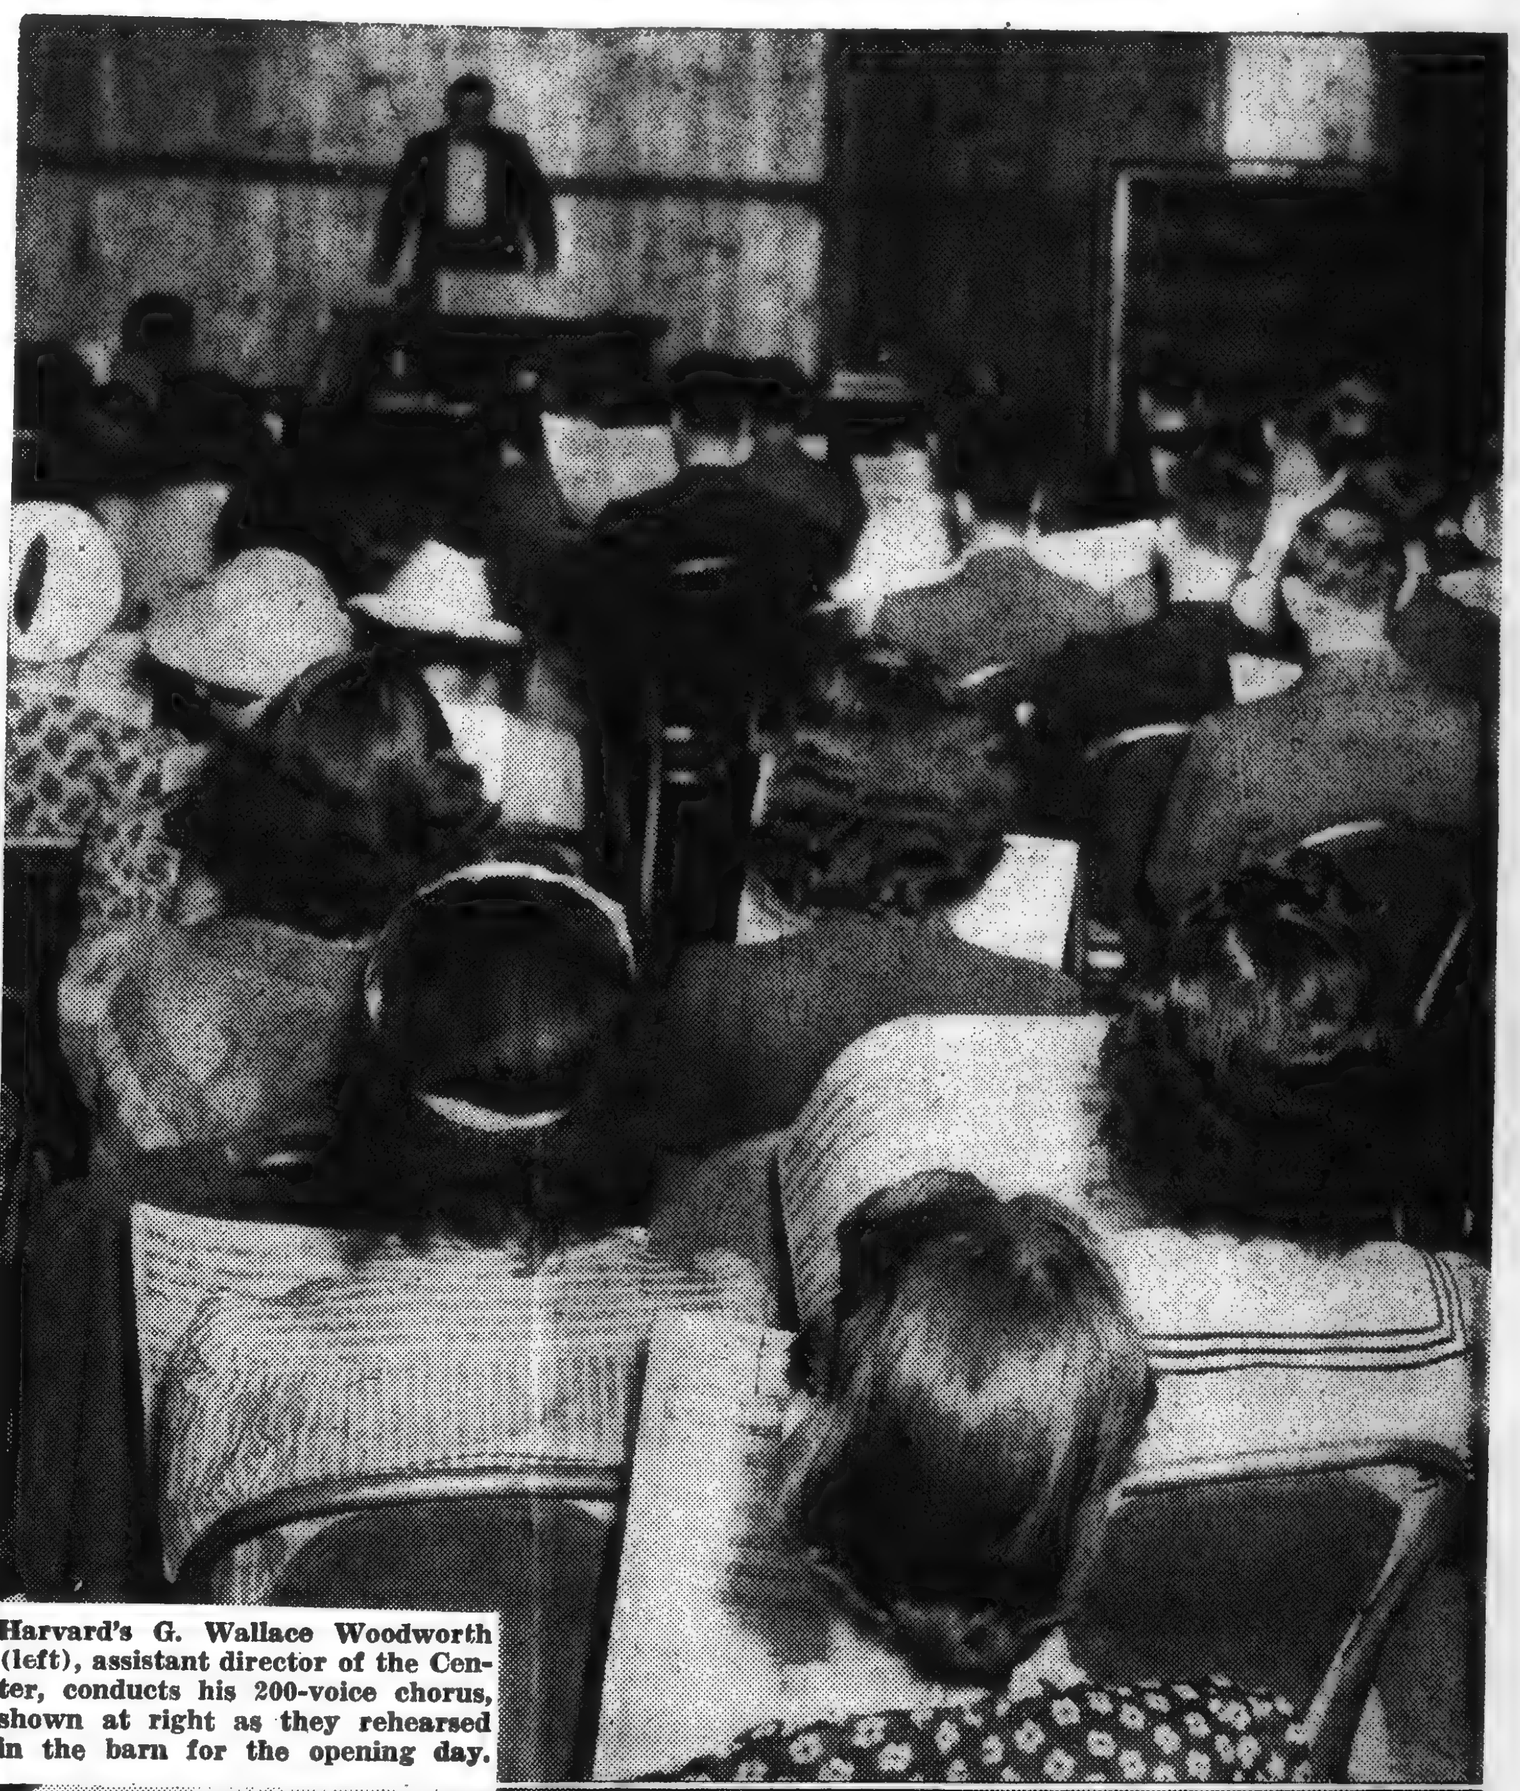


Berkshire's own Albert Spalding, outstanding American-born violinist, came from his home in Great Barrington to participate in the opening-day ceremonies as a trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Behind him is Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

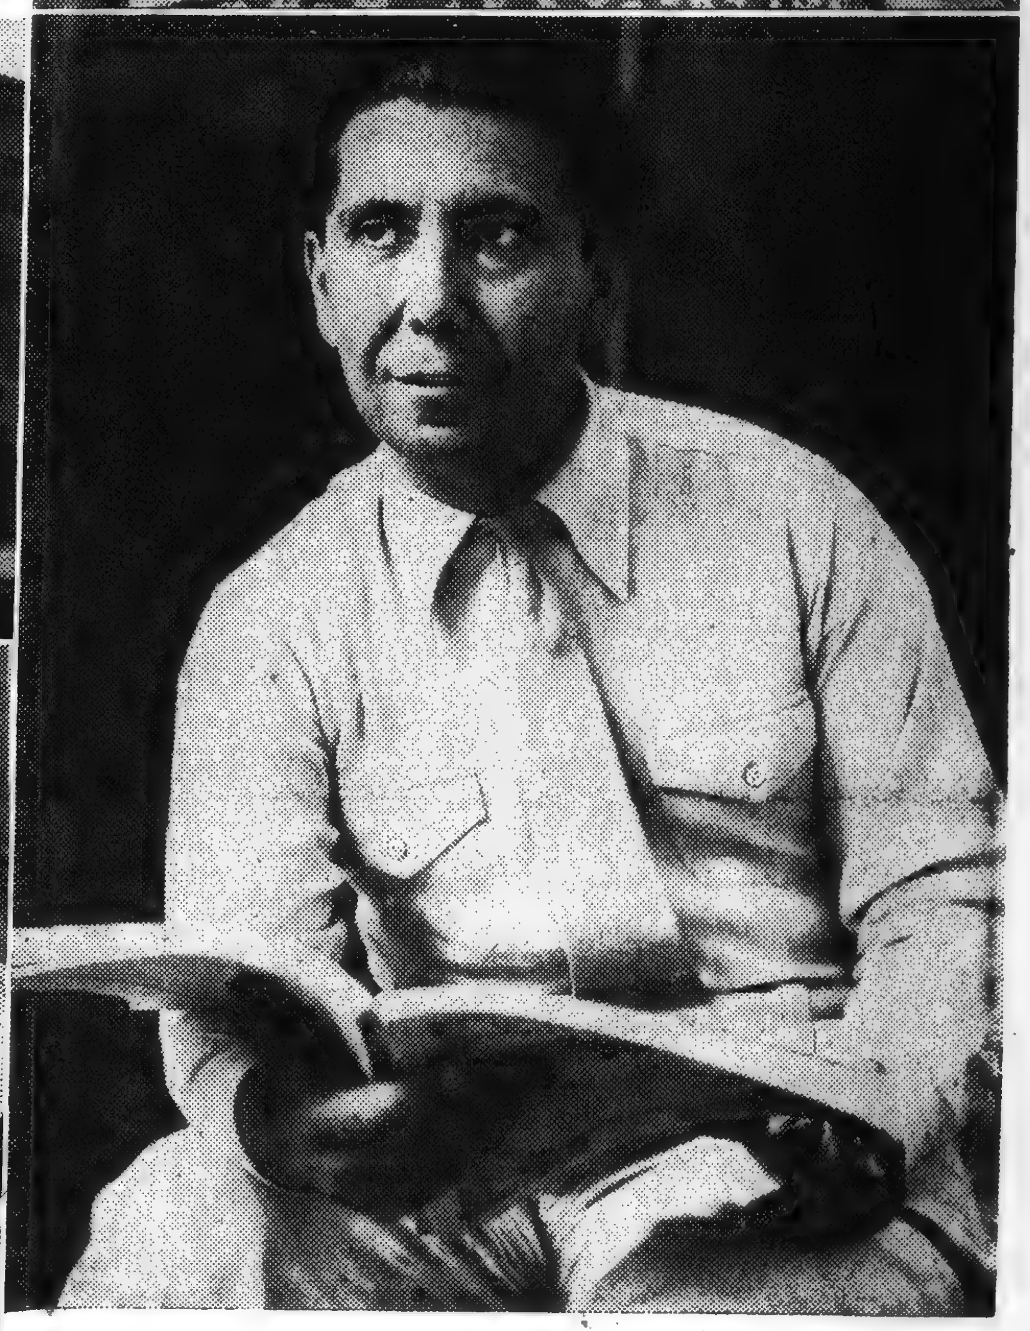


Tanglewood's buildings, such as this barn, have been renovated and pressed into service as rehearsal halls.

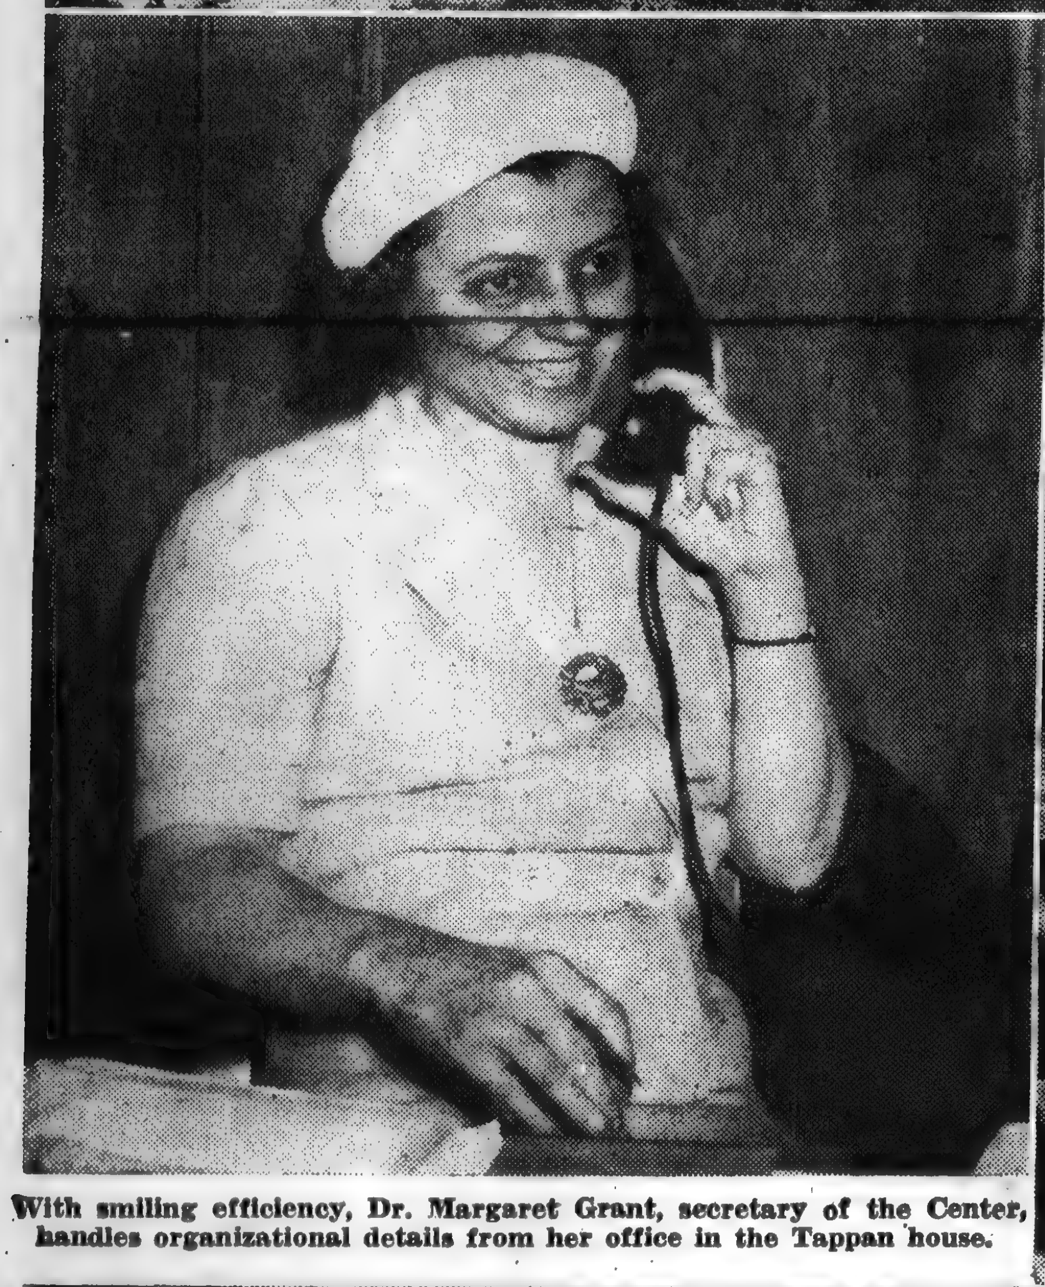




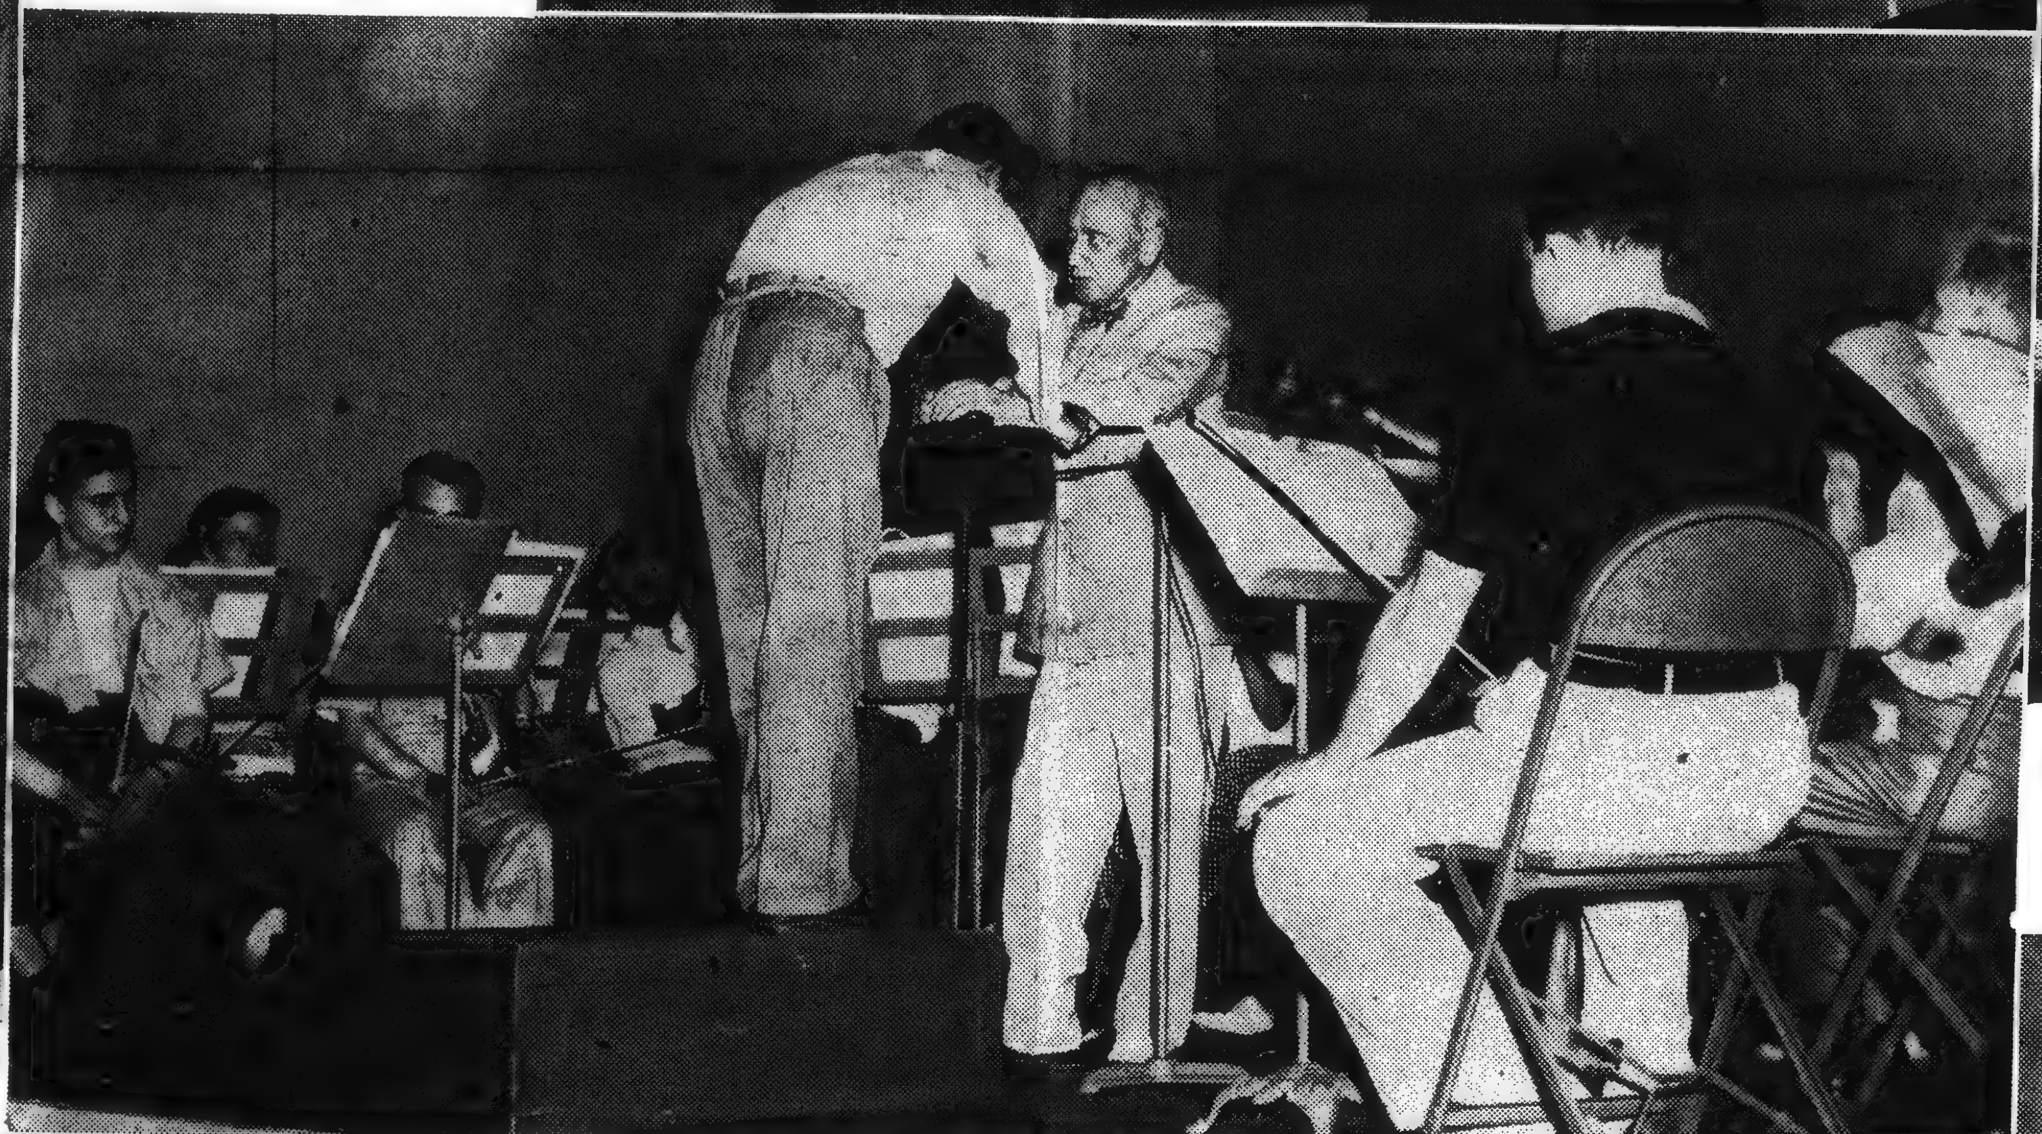
Harvard's G. Wallace Woodworth (left), assistant director of the Center, conducts his 200-voice chorus, shown at right as they rehearsed in the barn for the opening day.

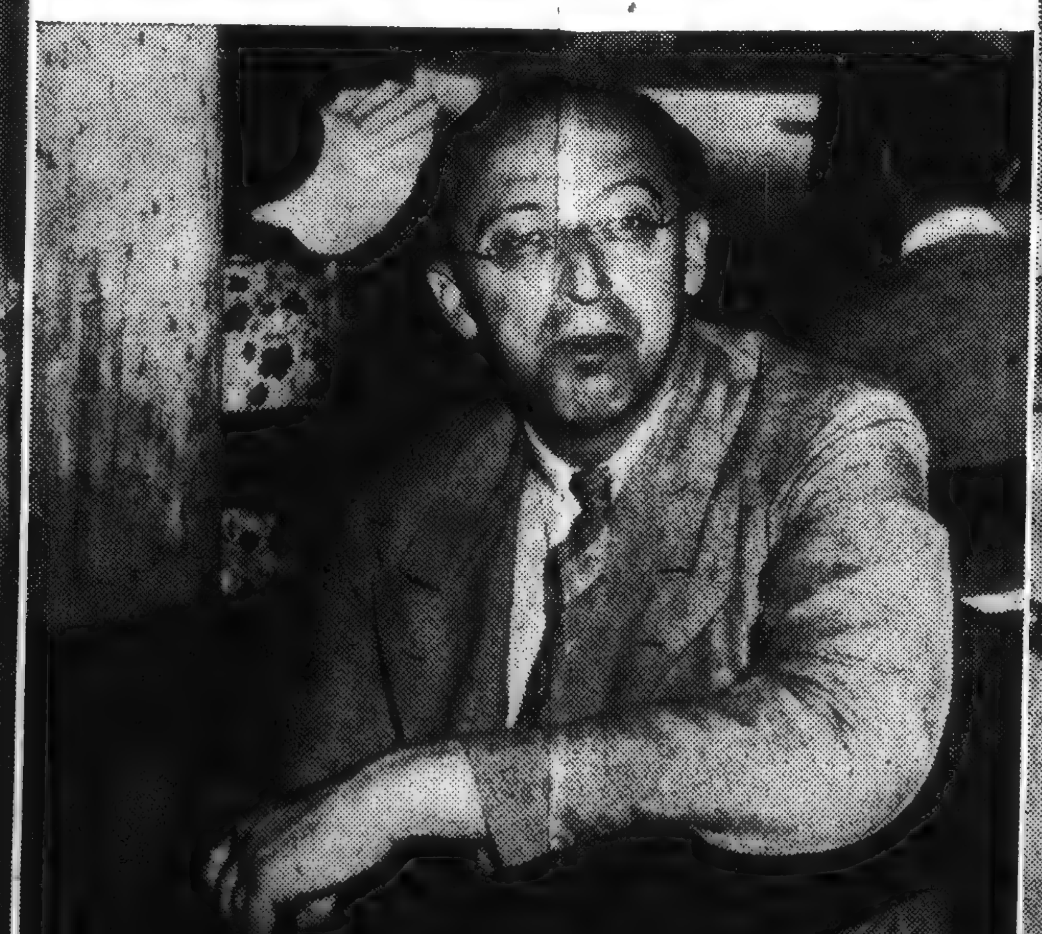


Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera, conducts classes in operatic interpretation at the Center. Headquarters for his classes is the new theatre, built expressly for this purpose and for ensemble work.

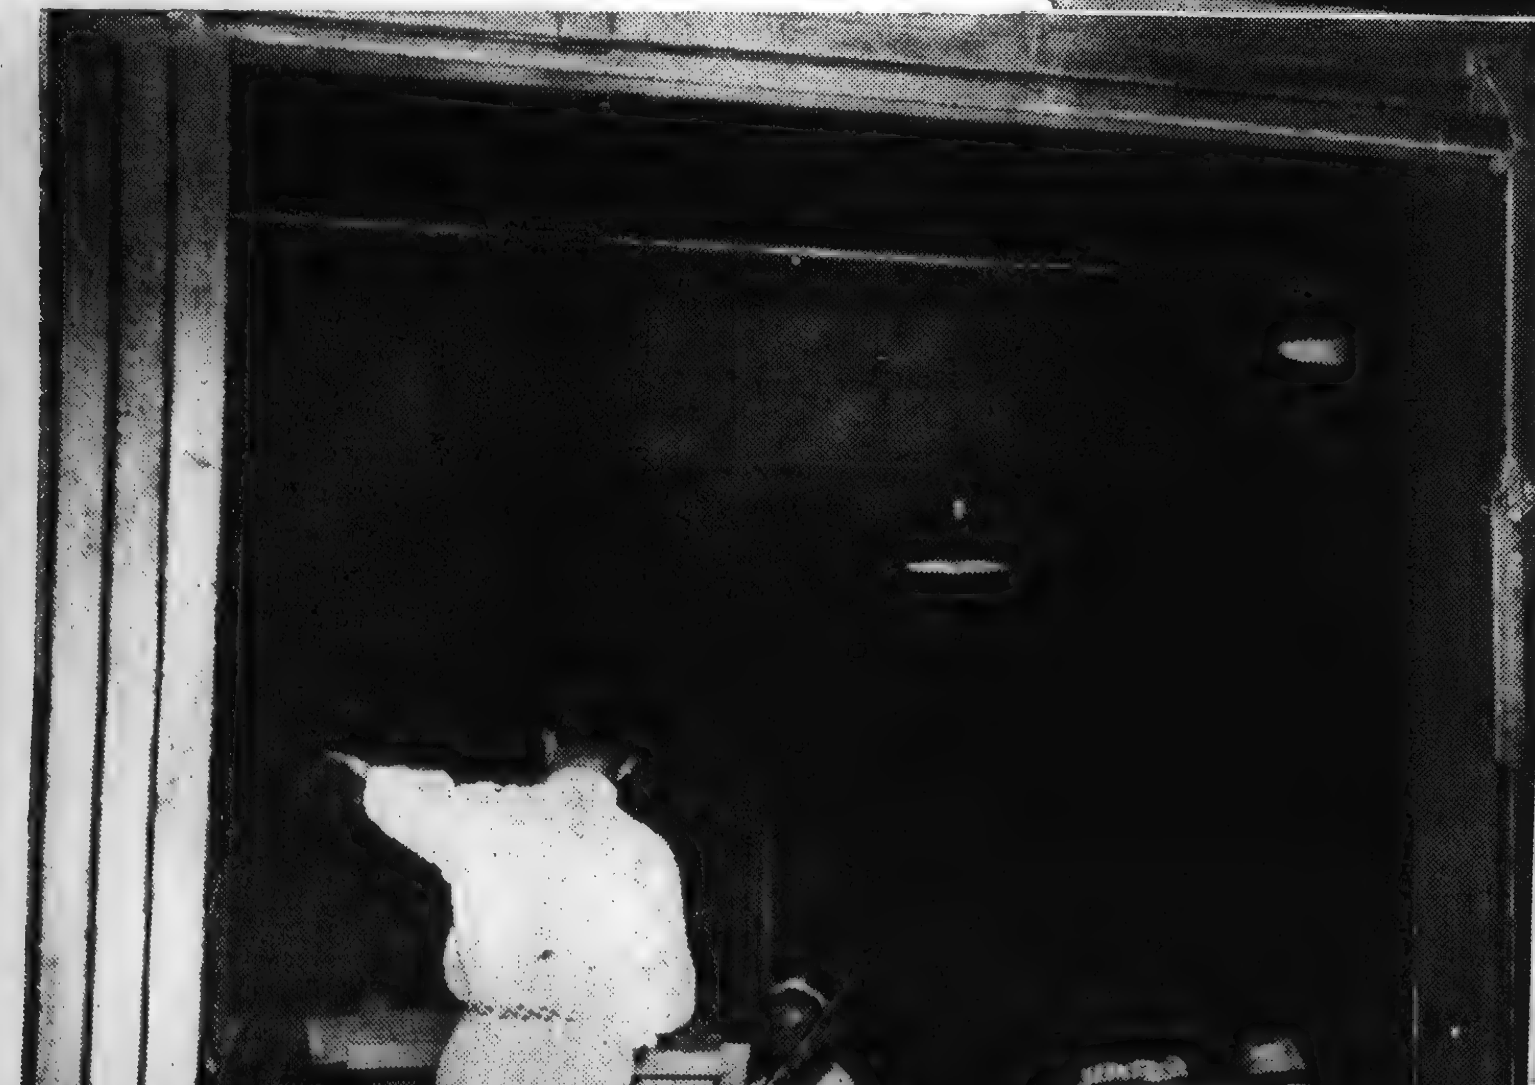


With smiling efficiency, Dr. Margaret Grant, secretary of the Center, handles organizational details from her office in the Tappan house.

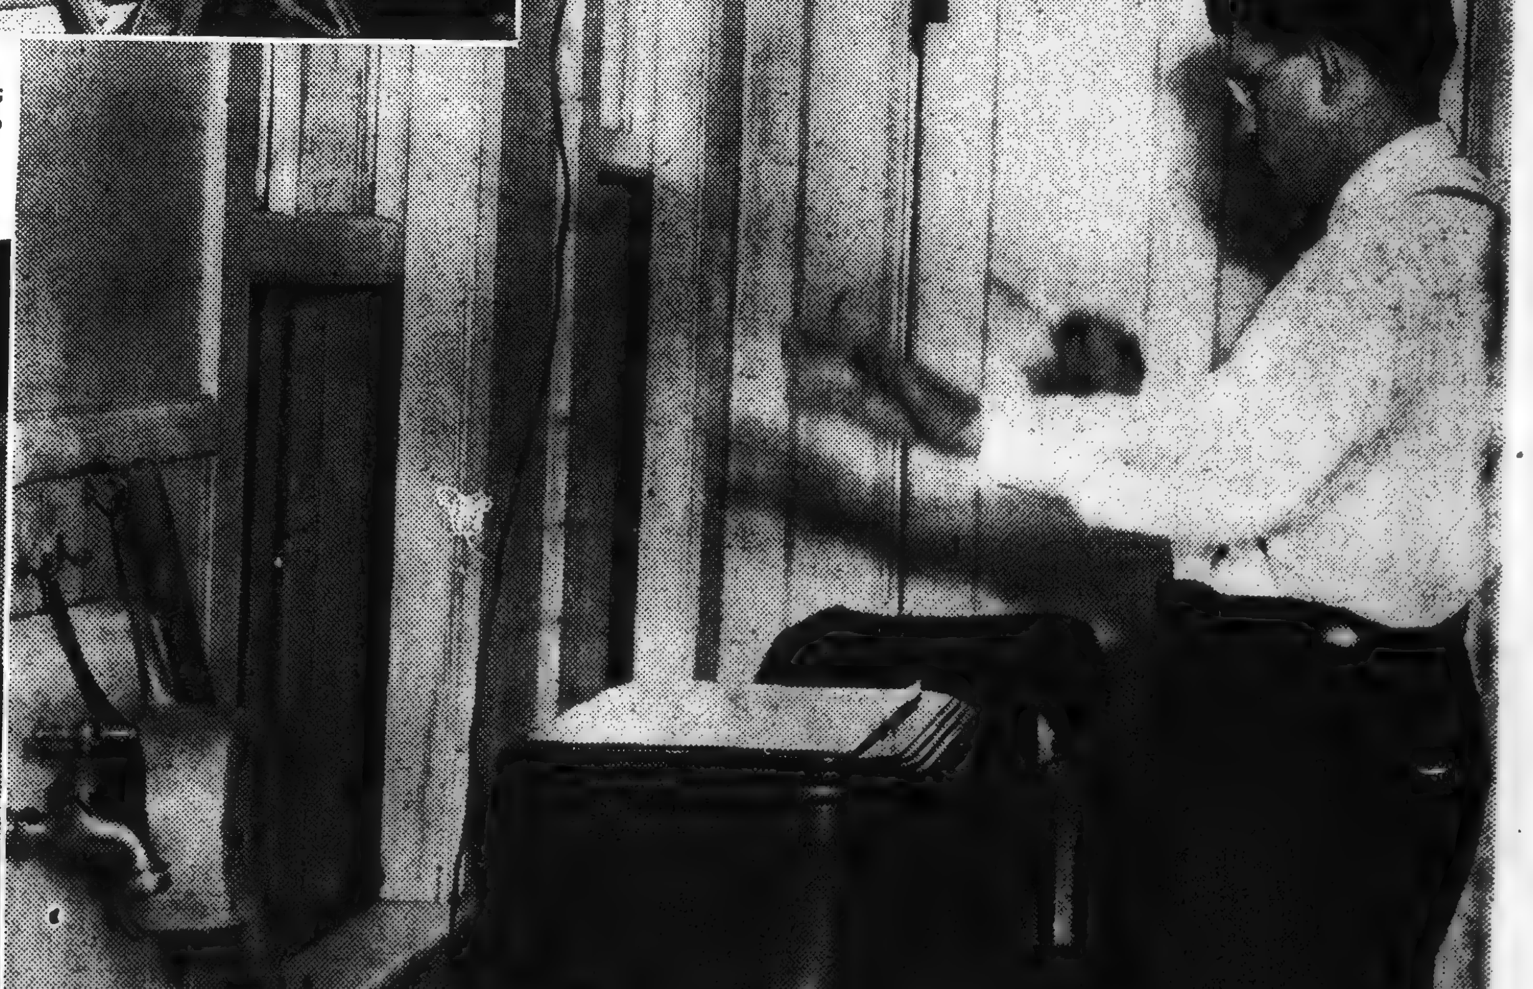




From his conducting class, Dr. Koussevitzky promises "five great conductors in five years." Here, during a session with the institute orchestra, he discusses a passage with one of his students.



In the garage on the estate, Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, rehearses the string section of the institute orchestra.



Even the kitchen of the Tappan mansion is invaded by the Center's hard-working students. Here, oblivious of cameramen and people who want a drink of water, a youthful conductor holds sway over the Boston Symphony Orchestra via the phonograph. At the left is Aaron Copland, outstanding American composer and member of the Center Faculty.

2X

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 1 - 1940

You Can't Beat This Boston Band

Koussevitzky Symphony Orchestra Draws ~~10,000~~ to Berkshire Music Festival

By Alice Hughes

Nature in one of her nastier moods was really responsible for the physical comfort and air of permanence that now mark the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens its 1940 Flow of Soul in the outskirts of Stockbridge, Mass., this evening.

ALICE HUGHES

In August, 1937, Maestro Serge Koussevitzky, the Toscanini of Beacon Hill, was whipping his great Boston orchestra through some wild Wagner when Heaven rebelled at this mortal opposition and showered down. A terrific wind and thunder storm blew up, with crashes matching every Wagnerian blare, the lightning playing about the maestro's devoted head. Though he battled imperiously to outplay this elemental symphony, he lost to Nature, which hauled off with a big blast and blew the tent down on him, his 110 fiddlers, tootlers and drummers and 5,000 listeners.

Warning

That was going a mite too far. Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Festival president, when things had calmed a bit, leaped up and announced that the whole thing was a dire warning from On High. That Koussevitzky and his artists must have a permanent, rainproof and acoustical shed for their performances.

Hands went to rain-drenched pockets and reticules. In the next six weeks nearly $100,000 came out of them. Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a well-heeled New England Brahmin, deeded her lovely estate, Tanglewood, to the Boston Symphony. It takes its name from the little red house on the grounds where Hawthorne spun his "Tanglewood Tales" and wrote "The House of Seven Gables." A beautiful, terraced acreage, alternately wild and landscaped.

The shed was opened for the Festival of 1938. It holds 6,000. Usually another 1,000 buy tickets and sit or sprawl on the grass outside the unwalled building. Stockbridge and Lenox, near which Tanglewood lies, split a population total of 1,600. Lee and Great Barrington, nearby, are even smaller. But in August the area expands like a concertina. It shelters, feeds and entertains 10,000 during the three week ends, when Koussy and his Melody Boys give out Tchaikowsky for the Yankee hill-billies.

From Far and Near

From a radius of 50 miles, taking in Springfield, Hartford and Albany, music lovers pour in to soak up Sibelius and thrill to Beethoven. Easily the most important symphonic event in the East, Koussy and his cohorts are rapidly building it toward their dream of an American Salzburg.

Its growing success is a boon to the innkeepers, who for years have played host to ersatz Cabots and Lodges. Close but honest Yankees, their consciences forbid the kiting of rates. terbugging or lifts his voice to swing "The Tennessee Fish Fry," these dowagers will live and let live.

A few modest night-spots coax the younger element to drink, shake a ribald shoe and take peeks at each other, but

Serge Koussevitzky is more than a stick-waver in these parts. He is a religion. All agree that this reformed bull fiddler is a magnificent conductor. In Boston he is a Grand Seigneur. Blue-blooded plutocrats roll over and play dead at his whim. The power behind his throne is the wise, ambitious Mme. Koussevitzky. She and the Conductor are members of Boston's exclusive Somerset Club, and have grown to be high priests among the socially annointed.

Both God and Devil

To his men, Koussevitzky is both God and Devil. A steel disciplinarian, he commands them with an iron wand, and sears them with burning irony. But they revere his fine musicianship; are proud of the band's excellence and prestige, and prize his rare but eloquent words of praise for fine playing.

Just a few days ago the Maestro had a birthday. Forgetful of the occasion, he came to rehearsal to conduct Phillip Emmanuel Bach's Concerto for Orchestra, and, as he lifted his baton for the opening chord, the band gave out "Happy Birthday to You." Apoplexy challenged pleasure at this break in discipline. Graciousness finally won.

This summer the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera, offered a 6-week course in orchestral conducting, orchestra practice, opera dramatics and advanced composition, to begin three weeks before the Festival and ending with it.

Over 300 scholars were admitted, instructed by Herbert Graf, stage director of the New York Metropolitan Opera Co.; Aaron Copland, composer and author; Paul Hindemith, composer; G. Wallace Woodsworth, head of Harvard's music department; Abram Chasins, composer and pianist; Olin Downes, music critic for the New York Times; Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, and others.

First Concert Tonight

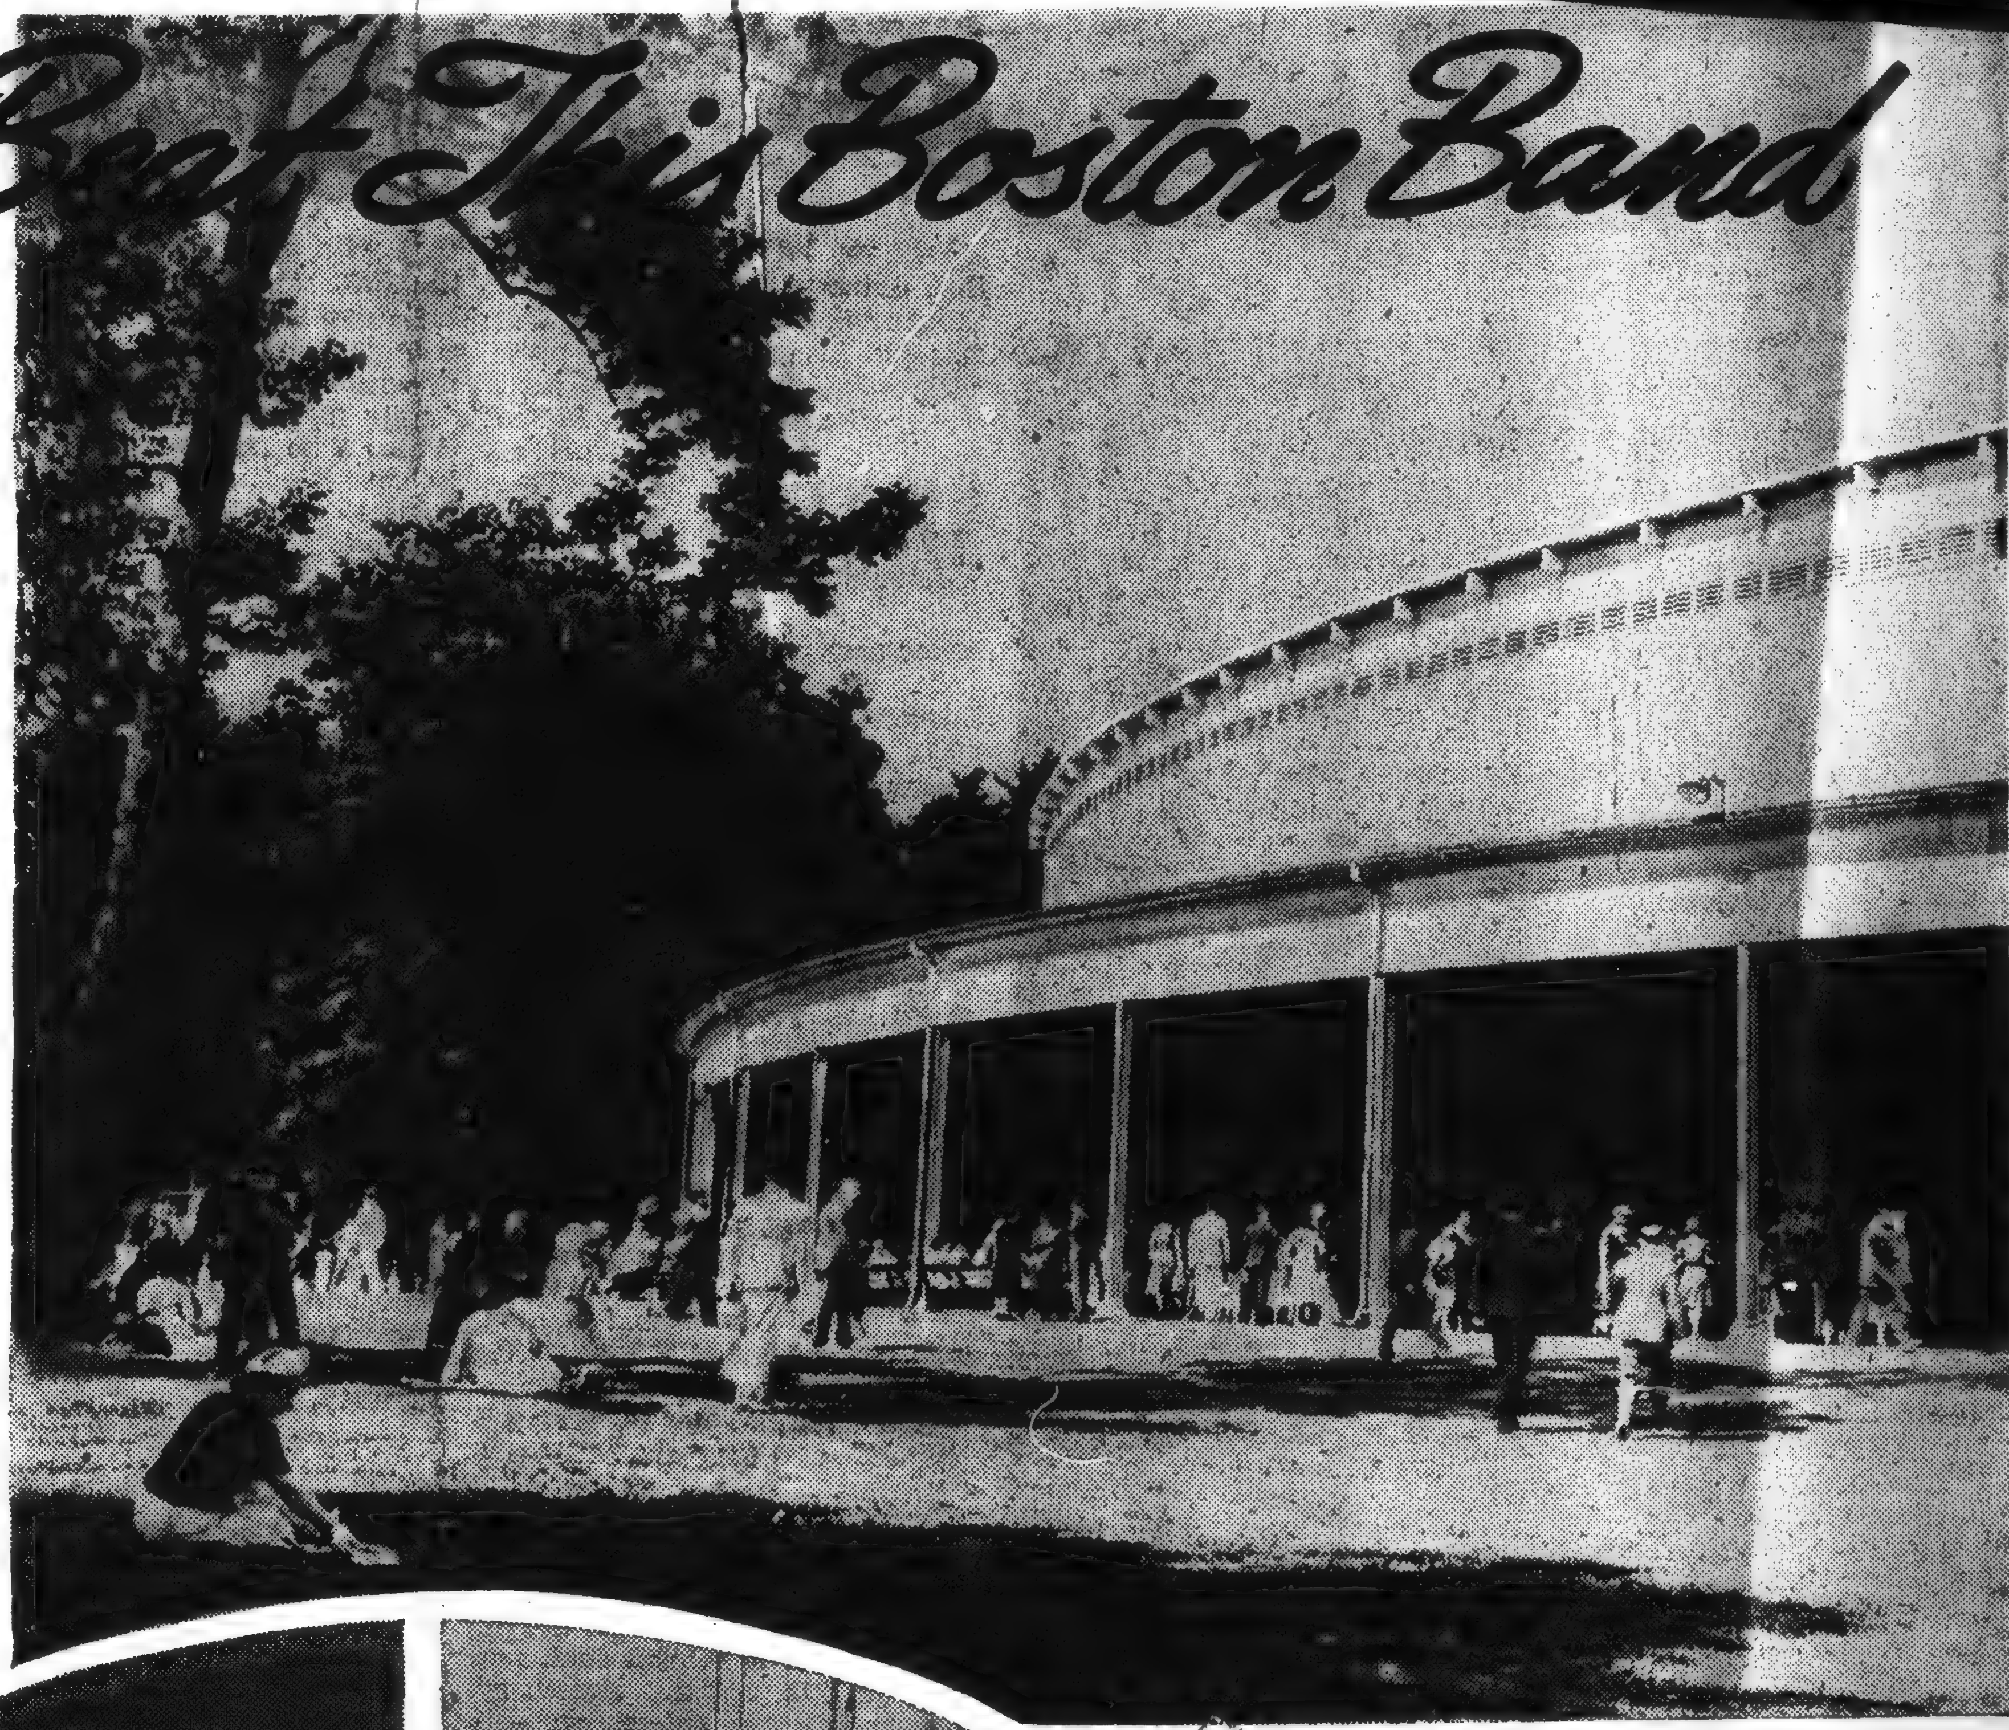
The first concert, sounding off promptly at 8:30 this evening, includes three first symphonies by three great composers; Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. On Saturday, Aug. 3, American composer Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 will be heard. On Aug. 8, to commemorate the 100th anniversary of his birth, there will begin three successive days of Tschaikowsky's symphonies. On Aug. 17, Dorothy Maynor, young Negro soprano who made her debut as soloist at last year's Berkshire Festival, will sing again at the Maestro's behest, in Beethoven's "Adelaida."

The performance music lovers await most joyously is on Aug. 15, when Bach's greatest B Minor Mass will be given, with the Berkshire Festival singers in full choral. Tickets for this feast for souls and ears have been sold out for weeks, but there's always sprawling room on the grassy terrain. The acoustical shed is huge. It extends for two city blocks from end to end. Most of the concerts sell out. Afternoon performances are often attended by classes of young children from nearby schools and camps.

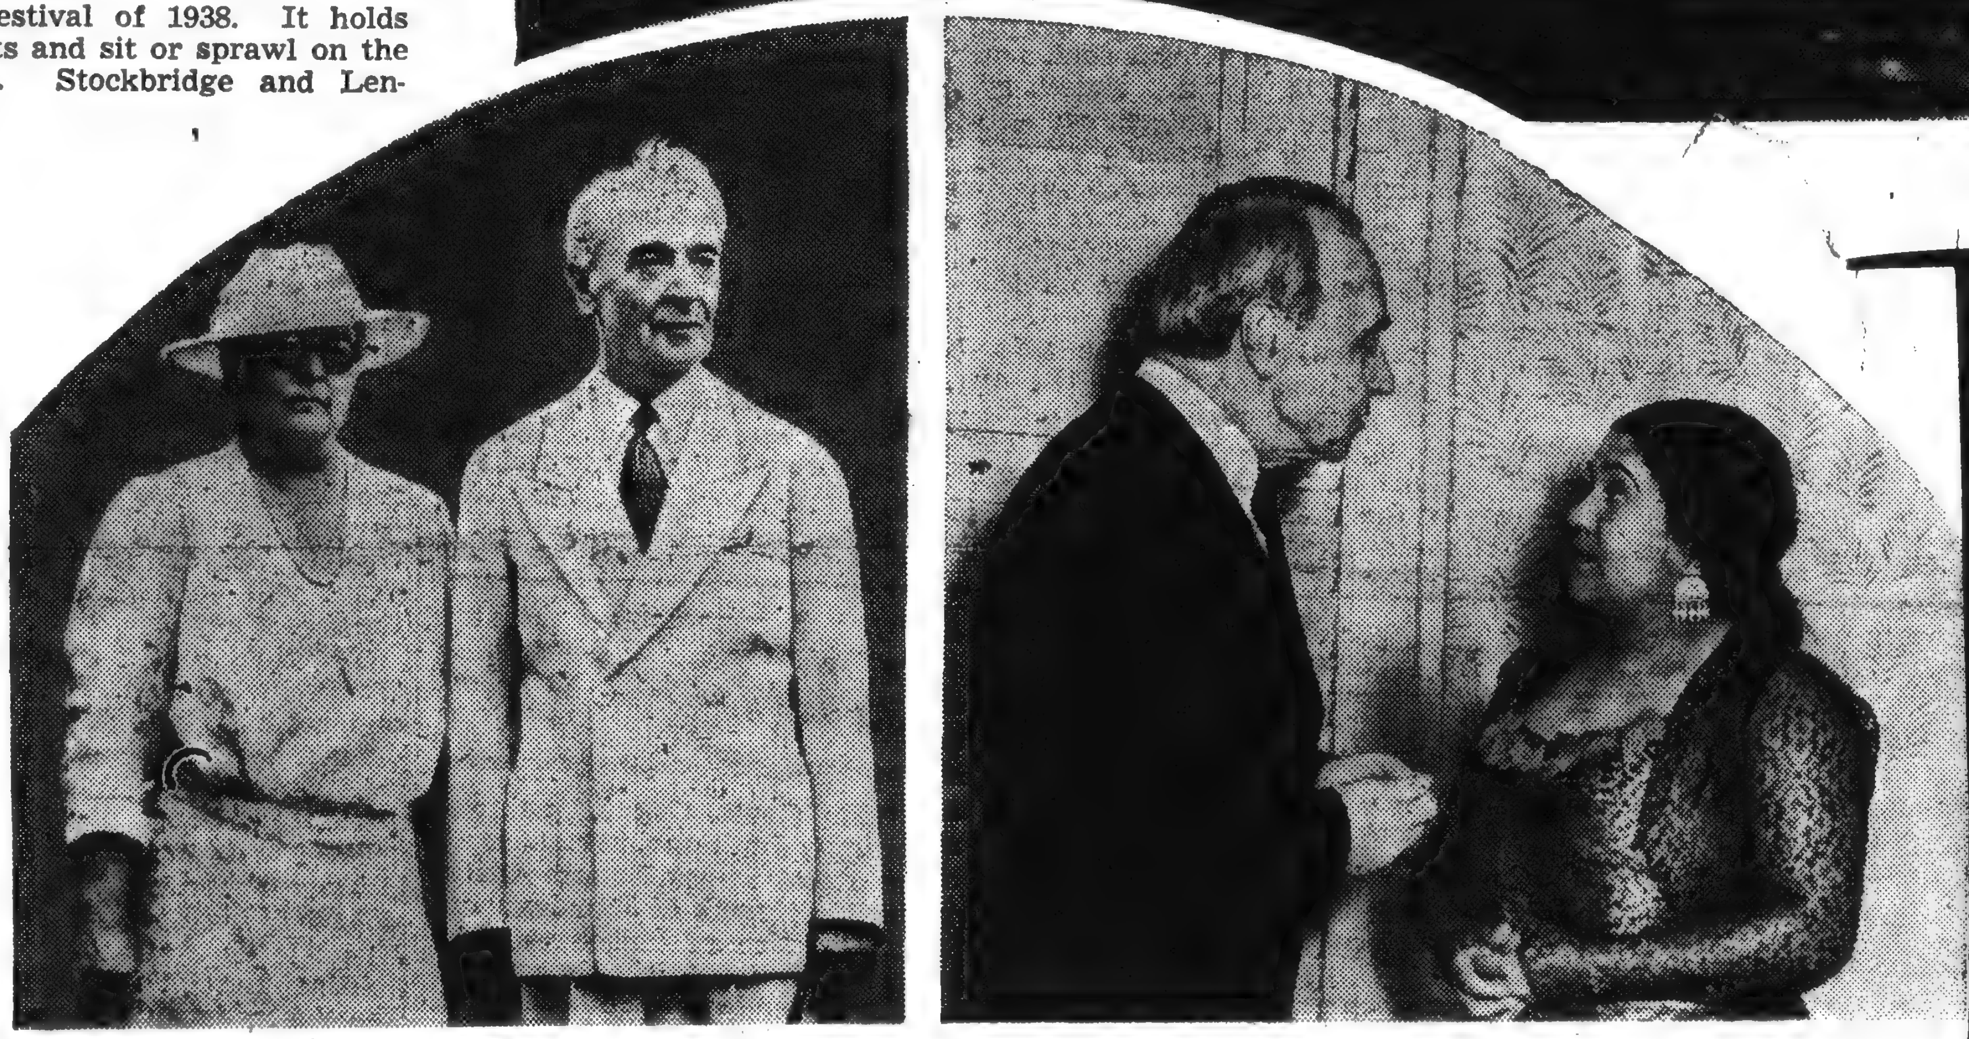
No Hot Dogs?

"No hot dogs or hamburgers?" we asked Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, the Festival's president, mindful of the knackwurst and wurstchen, as characteristic of Salzburg as was its celestial Mozart. Also we recalled how pleased were England's King and Queen last summer over the frankfurters served at the President's and Mrs. Roosevelt's Hyde Park picnic.

"Hot dog? Indeed not!" she said sniffishly. "The Berkshire Symphonic Festival does not approve of hot dogs."



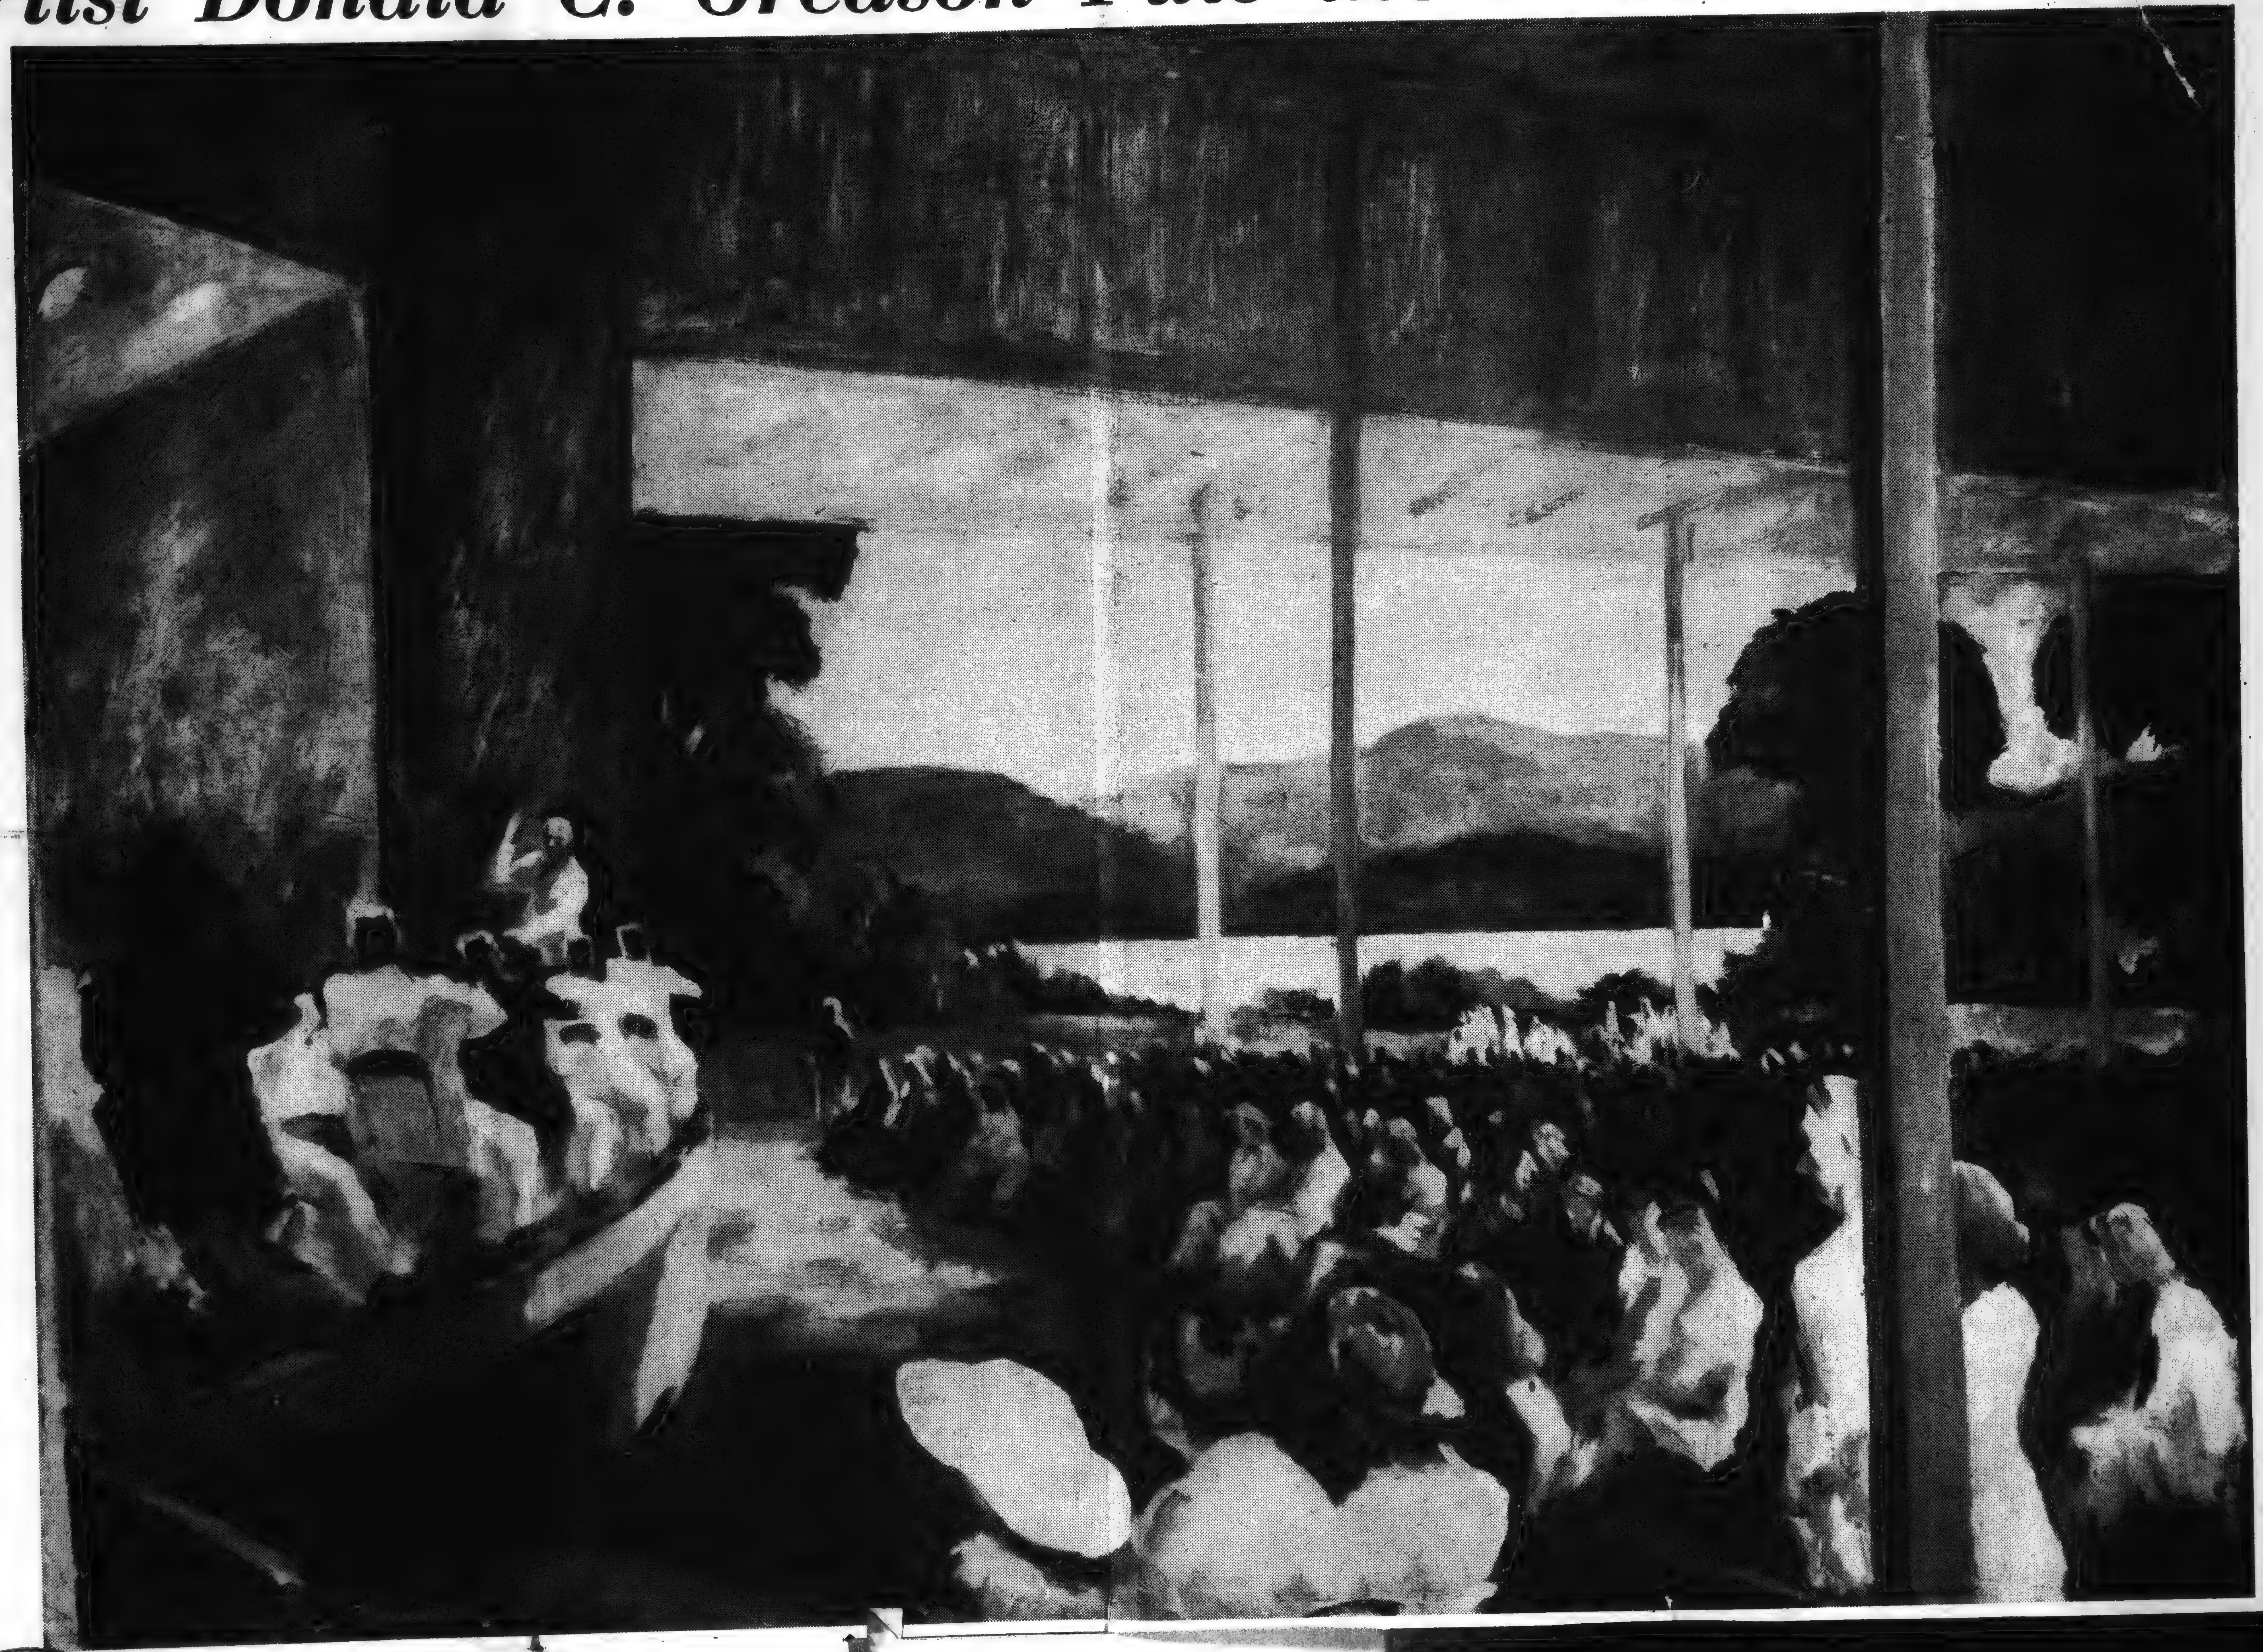
THE BUILDING which houses the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Stockbridge, Mass.



GERTRUDE ROBINSON-SMITH, left, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the conductor talking with Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who made her debut last year.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 1 - 1940

Artist Donald C. Greason Puts the Festival on Canvas



Orchestra Portrayed in Many Media

In oils and watercolors, with etching stylus, pencil and pen and ink, Donald C. Greason has pictured the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The results of his pleasant addiction to making pictures of the orchestra—as a whole and of its component parts—have been exhibited far and wide. His pen and wash sketches of orchestra members, and his equally noted portraits of the personnel, have been shown in Berkshire.

Perhaps his most widespread audience was won this June, when the First National Bank of Boston used the oil painting above in a full-page color advertisement recommending to vacationers throughout the country that they make the Festival a "highlight of your vacation in New England." The page received further distribution when it was made up into a folder, with Time's cover of last October carrying Conductor Serge Koussevitzky's picture and the conductor's now-famous admonition to a member of the orchestra during a rehearsal, "If you spik, I go home."

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Opens Simply as 6,000 Applaud

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 2 (AP)—With less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theater, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its seventh season last night before a colorful international audience of nearly 6,000 persons.

Although the festival association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which Summer symphonic music has yet reached in America.

There are even those who insist that the Berkshire Festival, as served by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the logical successor to the old Salzburg Festival, in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol. Salzburg is hardly more than a memory to most of the thousands who used to attend each Summer.

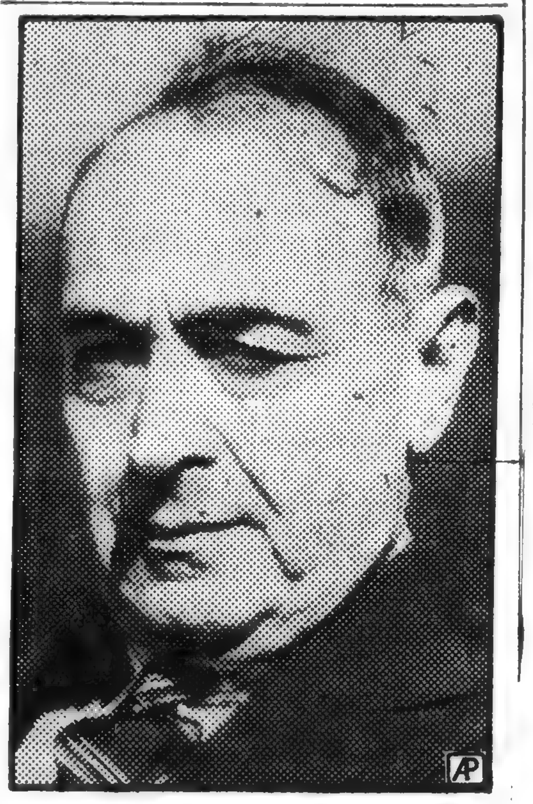
Fastidious Rehearsals

Serge Koussevitzky and his magnificent orchestra were heard last night by an audience from every corner of America, and from most European countries as well. As always at the festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the Winter in Boston's Symphony Hall, and the program was rehearsed with the same fastidious care.

Koussevitzky has firmly refused to lower performance standards for his Summer audience, and as a result the audience has grown beyond the extreme hopes of the original sponsors.

This year the festival is the climax of another venture, Koousse-vitzky's now famous Berkshire Music Center, in which more than 300 students are studying and living with through the months of July and August.

All yesterday the grounds of Tanglewood, home of the festival, were peppered with festival patrons wandering from building to building looking in on classes and rehearsals.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

In the formal garden they found a group of young men and women in shorts and skirts rehearsing an opera under Hubert Graf's direction, with only a pool of oversized goldfish for an audience.

In the big red barn, now furnished oddly with gold ballroom chairs and a piano, G. Wallace Woodworth was rehearsing Bach's B Minor Mass for a performance during the last week of the three-week festival.

Two student orchestras were rehearsing, and the central building was a miniature bedlam due to numerous chamber music rehearsals.

Last night's program was made up of three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. It was close to an ideal opening program and it was received with cheers by the audience.

Today is vacation day but the festival resumes tomorrow night and ends its first series with a concert Sunday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 2 - 1940

Unexpected Doesn't Happen Thereby Making Festival Opening Just an Opening

TANGLEWOOD.—There is a story which says that a newspaperman's nightmare consists of dreaming he is dead and sentenced to expiate his sins by residing in a spot where nothing ever happens—like Tanglewood.

For the past seven years, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, considerably against its will, has furnished reporters with considerable material of a non-musical nature. Thunderstorms have roared in from over the hills, quieting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drenching audiences, making the parking area a quagmire. Traffic jams have piled up cars for miles, water mains have burst; in short, there was tragedy, major and minor, on which to hang a story.

Gone Forever

But those days, apparently, are gone forever. Even the weather seems to have fallen into the rut of efficiency. Not even a whisper of thunder appeared at last night's opening concert to compete with the Messrs. Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Traffic flowed smoothly into the grounds from all directions. The Red Cross tent near the north entrance was uninhabited throughout the concert except for a gentleman with indigestion and a young lady with a pain in her side.

It was a highly depressing experience. At least one representative of the Fourth Estate might have been seen wandering glassy-eyed about the grounds in hopeless search of some little evidence of things going wrong. The press room presented a scene of complete mechanical peace. The teletypes were proceeding smoothly, the typewriters typed and there was plenty of paper. Nothing there.

An investigation was then made of the refreshment tent, presided over by the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington. The nearest approach to tragedy gleaned from here was that they had run out of sugar after the intermission. Otherwise business was fine. Not even a ham sandwich had been shoplifted and people were tossing empty bottles and cartons no farther away from the tent than usual. The soft-drink purveyors did confess it was a little chilly for their business, but they did nothing violent about it.

A Countess

Further investigation of other ramifications of the Festival produced additional non-catastrophic items. The clothes-checking department was the only one to produce anything of value. The staff, it was discovered, included Countess Ariadne Mouravieff. Unfortunately, since she did not identify herself to her customers, they came and went without appreciating the unique privilege of having their wraps checked by a countess.

After finding that most of the wheelchairs were being occupied by people who just wanted to sit down; that no cello or violin strings had broken at embarrassing moments; that Dr. Koussevitzky, as usual, changed his shirt during intermission; that the members of the orchestra whose presence was not needed during a number were not playing poker in the locker room, the journalist resigned himself to fate and went home. And he neither had a flat tire nor ran out of gas.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PATERSON, N. J.
CALL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1940

LENOX

Lenox, Aug. 1—High school students who wish to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra to be held at Tanglewood, Saturday morning are requested to notify Henry L. Smith, superintendent of schools. Mr Smith may be reached at the high school, tomorrow afternoon between 2 and 3. Busses will leave the high school Saturday morning at 9.30.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Six thousand people assembled under a typical Berkshire sky of tumbling clouds last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort and the now even more popular Sibelius' first—all dear to Koussevitzky's heart, and particularly those of Sibelius and Beethoven.

The audience was probably as distinguished a group of men and women in all fields as could be assembled for any summer event.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER
AUG 2 - 1940

6,000 Hear Symphonies

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—Six thousand people assembled Thursday night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius first.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
EVENING DISPATCH
AUG 2 - 1940

Many Westchester musicians attended the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., last night. Serge Koussevitsky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an "all-first" program, including the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius.

Trustees of the Festival will sponsor a benefit program on Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. Mr. Koussevitsky, assisted by Albert Spalding, will be chairman of the concert, and has announced that the program will be so extensive that will be necessary to begin at 6 P. M.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Season Opens

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—Mosquitoes, society and a cold, clear sky set the background for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Music Festival played by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra here at Tanglewood.

Last night's program consisted of three First Symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. More Beethoven with less Koussevtizky might have been preferred, but in the Schumann and Sibelius the orchestra sounded as only the Boston Symphony can. The acoustics were perfect—even better outside the music shed than within it.

Supplementing the ladies and gentlemen in 1940 finery and devotees soaked in the dew-forming sod were 325 students of the Berkshire Institute of Music.

—ARTHUR HEPNER—H. W. S.

78

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Draws 6000 At Tanglewood Opening

The seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival opened at Tanglewood last night before the usual $6000 enthusiasts, but with an entirely new atmosphere created by the presence of about 300 musical students. This year conductor Serge Koussevitzky's long-dreamed-of music center came into being, with an institute for professional and advanced students and an academy for amateurs.

Thus the festival sheds some of its society air and emerges as the climax of a six-week period of intense musical study, and the Berkshire audience appears as a group of fortunate guests rather than beneficent patrons. Judging from the enthusiasm of the students and from the industry which they have been putting into their studies, the music center has started out with great success.

For the opening program of this year's nine-concert series, Dr. Koussevitzky chose three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schumann, and Sibelius. It provided an interesting basis for comparison, but somehow lacked the balance that other Boston symphony programs have had. The Schumann symphony suffered undeservedly in comparison with the Beethoven and Sibelius works, both of which outweigh it.

But it is a delight to hear the Boston symphony orchestra play anything, and the concert last night was in no sense disappointing. The Beethoven symphony, censured in its day for an overdose of wind instruments, appears today as a delicate work offering full play to the finest of the strings. Its graceful second movement and bright minuetto particularly are charming reminders of the early Beethoven.

The Schumann symphony, for all its lyricism, appeared thin beside the closely woven texture of the Beethoven composition, and in retrospect its melodies faded against the brilliant originality of Sibelius. The color of modern music is combined with a classic understanding for form in the work of this modern master.

On Saturday evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will turn to a program in complete contrast with the one played last night. It will open with the overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz, and will include Strauss' "Don Quixote", with Piatigorski and Jean Lefranc as soloists; Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3; "Prelude a l'apres midi d'un faune", by Debussy; and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe".

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 2 - 1940

Symphonic Festival Is Under Way

Seventh Annual Event at Stockbridge With Koussevitzky, Boston Orchestra, Gets Fine Start

BY. T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 1 — Swathed in chiffon and sweaters, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened here at Tanglewood tonight.

But despite the fact that those who ordered their furs out of storage found they had taken the wise precautions against a chill night, the festival, often on the outs with the weather-man, had one of the most auspicious openings in the melodious summed history of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra.

It was one of the plushiest inaugurals on festival records. Swelling the customary phalanges of music fanciers, many of them veterans of the six preceding summers were hundreds of persons whose Lebensraum will not include Europe this season, together with a heavy infusion of escapists out to forget the general state of things. The festival management reports that the boxes have never been so solid with the country's best-butlered families, and that even members of the celluloid peerage, to whom music is usually only something to give a background to "strong" scenarios, have been happy box office contributors as seldom before.

The sum of the whole thing was to provide an atmosphere of enthusiasms and appearances not often rivalled here.

The scene was rife with reunions, halloo-ings, and tantivvyings, the photographers fired so heavily right and left that old-time long memoried patrons were apprehensive of thunderstorms and the custom was draped in sufficient silk to provide a full complement of parachutes for any conscripted army.

The audience showed its customary frenetic devotion to Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, local drugstores were open until late at night dispensing arnica for wrists disjointed by applauding and household remedies to cure voices strained in a night of bravo-ing.

Beethoven, Sibelius, Schumann.

The musical offering of the evening included symphony No. 1 in C major by Beethoven, symphony No. 1 in B flat by Schumann, and symphony No. 1 in E minor by Sibelius. As a program maker, Dr. Koussevitzky prepares his fare with all the piquancy of a chef expecting a visit from the escoffier society committee. His showmanship never fails him. Tonight was an example par excellence. Programming three first symphonies at once was a pretty, literary fillip. Playing them all on the first of August, made a state of affairs practically coy.

Whatever serious implications there were in this program arrangement, probably existed in bracketing the Beethoven and Sibelius, showing two of the supreme composers as disciples, rather than as rugged individualists. The inclusion of the Schumann could only have been for the sheer joy of so ebullient a work.

Dr. Koussevitzky's readings of the Beethoven work was one of the most lyric this courier had ever heard, especially in the first three movements. It had none of the brittleness which is often imputed to it owing to some similarity between this work and Haydn. It had the transparency which Dr. Koussevitzky can always find as the superlative interpreter of Haydn, but it was malleable rather than crystalline, and flowed rather than danced.

Superb Sibelius Reading.

Again, as the great apostle of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky and his mightily sonorous orchestra built up the symphony by that composer to overpowering heights of romantic might and deepened it with the marvelous "Storm and Stress" of which Sibelius is not the most Wertherian voice. Its color, its superk power, and the full rush of its emotion swept the audience into violent raptures. Dr. Koussevitzky enjoyed a Roman triumph for it and acknowledged it with the genial imperiousness which only drives the audience to further huzza-ing.

I still found the performance of the Schumann my favorite of the evening. Dr. Koussevitzky poured into it a bursting sap of ruddy, happy life. It was a "spring" when the buds fairly exploded on the trees. The orchestra sailed through it with brassy joys and colored up the last movement in particular with marvelous lushness and incredible vitality of rhythm.

There seemed to be a special rapport between Dr. Koussevitzky and the high-romantic, quixotic soul of Schumann, so much kindlier than Wagner, so prophetic of Brahms.

To play Schumann richly is good, but to make him piquant with fantastical rushes of spirit, is Koussevitzkian and about perfect.

The orchestra, after some circling around in the Beethoven before they could get together, burst out afire in the Schumann and played the Sibelius with burning majesty and dominion.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

Musical History Is Made At Tanglewood

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night opened the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival which runs to nine concerts. The grounds were crowded, the music of the high order that has come to be Tanglewood's standard. A review of the first concert by Carl E. Lindstrom, music critic of The Times, appears on Page 29.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

Koussetvitzky and Boston Orchestra Open Augmented Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times.

Lenox, Mass.—There are so few renewable and renewing delights in these tarnishing times that we cling rather desperately to those rare ones that keep their faith with us. And if one more rare than the rest, instead of merely remaining as it was, takes on new lustres with each passing year, we know then that dotage is upon us—or else we are at Tanglewood.

Another Berkshire Festival began last night. All the old beguilements are there, the charm of countryside and congenial congregation, music made of dream stuffs and this time dimpling weather. It is a more important festival than ever before, longer since it is now an affair of three weekends, and it has its roots in the Music Center, which comprises the Institute and Academy which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky visioned long years ago in silence, finally talked about and then truly realized. Which means that for weeks the grounds at Tanglewood have been crowded with artists, advanced students and cultured amateurs studying and rehearsing with masters in composition, conducting, opera, voice and all the instruments of the orchestra. The old house, the tuning shed, the auditorium and other quarters have sounded with the atonality of many musicians pursuing their instruments in ruggedly individual directions over the ground bass hum of discipleship. And while Koussevitzky's programs have never had about them the air of casualness or of pandering to an imagined popular demand for musical vichy water, a glance at the scheduled programs shows that, while there is neither the spirit of crusade nor academy, a purposefulness abides in the place. Koussevitzky proceeds on the patent assumption that nourishment is required in the summertime as well as diversion.

Three First Symphonies

He began with three symphonies, firsts all of them—Beethoven's in C, Schumann's in B flat and Sibelius' in E minor. But while they represented the initial efforts in the symphonic form by three masters, they have little else in common and seemed oddly mated when noted on the program. All are highly charged with the promise of greater things to come and fancy might make them symbolize a corresponding stage in the development of Tanglewood.

There is, though, so little need to find a reason for any music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Doubtless there was much about these three symphonies that the intellect could meditate upon but the assault of tonal loveliness upon the sensory and emotional perceptions was so direct and unremitting that the mind was somewhat numbed and surrendered.

Not Only Heard

It is not that Koussevitzky has become a voluptuary in sound; he was ascetic, too, and there was a splendid fibre running through all his interpretations. But the grain of his orchestral tone is so fine that it not only addresses the ear but fairly penetrates the skin by a magical process of sensory osmosis.

The unrivalled acoustics of the auditorium have much to do with this fabulous illusion. The music does not come to you from anywhere; you are swimming about in the midst of it. Its aches are of your body and its sweetness lies under the tongue. And that is why these concerts baffle recollection but each renewal renews its pristine surprise.

A Various Understanding

So what shall we tell each other about Beethoven's First except to exchange an understanding glance? Perhaps you will be thinking of the brio of the first movement and I of the limpid andante; while the leader who again and again faced fathomless applause may have been the most gratified that the glance he exchanged with his men produced the caprices of the finale.

He made Schumann's "Spring" Symphony splendidly orchestral. Its efflorescences which have such marked intimations of piano idioms were garlanded in symphonic colorings with fetching grace and spirit. Koussevitzky gave this work young life, young poignancy and yet he became a man who wrote it. How like Sibelius is the opening maestoso. Or is it because Koussevitzky is a virtuoso conductor of the brass?

Sun on the Granite

This choir in the Finnish symphony was tremendous, imponderable, awesome, like golden sunlight flooding a granite cliff. The Boston leader knows the way of Sibelius, a daring, enigmatic, wilful tossing about of disparate elements—color, thematic fragme[illegible]s, ambiguous figures of tonal sp[illegible] —then of gradually molding [illegible] shaping them into a fierce sani[illegible] The essence of Silbelius' cunning is that he would break your heart lest his own first show its wounds. Only he and Koussevitzky know this.

We can only guess about it for we are the victims of the emotional ordeal. We beat our hands and shout a bit, knowing that these experiences can come only at Tanglewood. Salzburg is a [illegible] in the Austrian Tyrol where [illegible] and Ribbentrop met [illegible] Balkan [illegible] a retreat where Hitler [illegible] ly witnesses "The [illegible] Gods."

Tanglewood—who knows what manner of history has crept upon us?

Weekend Programs At the Festival

SATURDAY

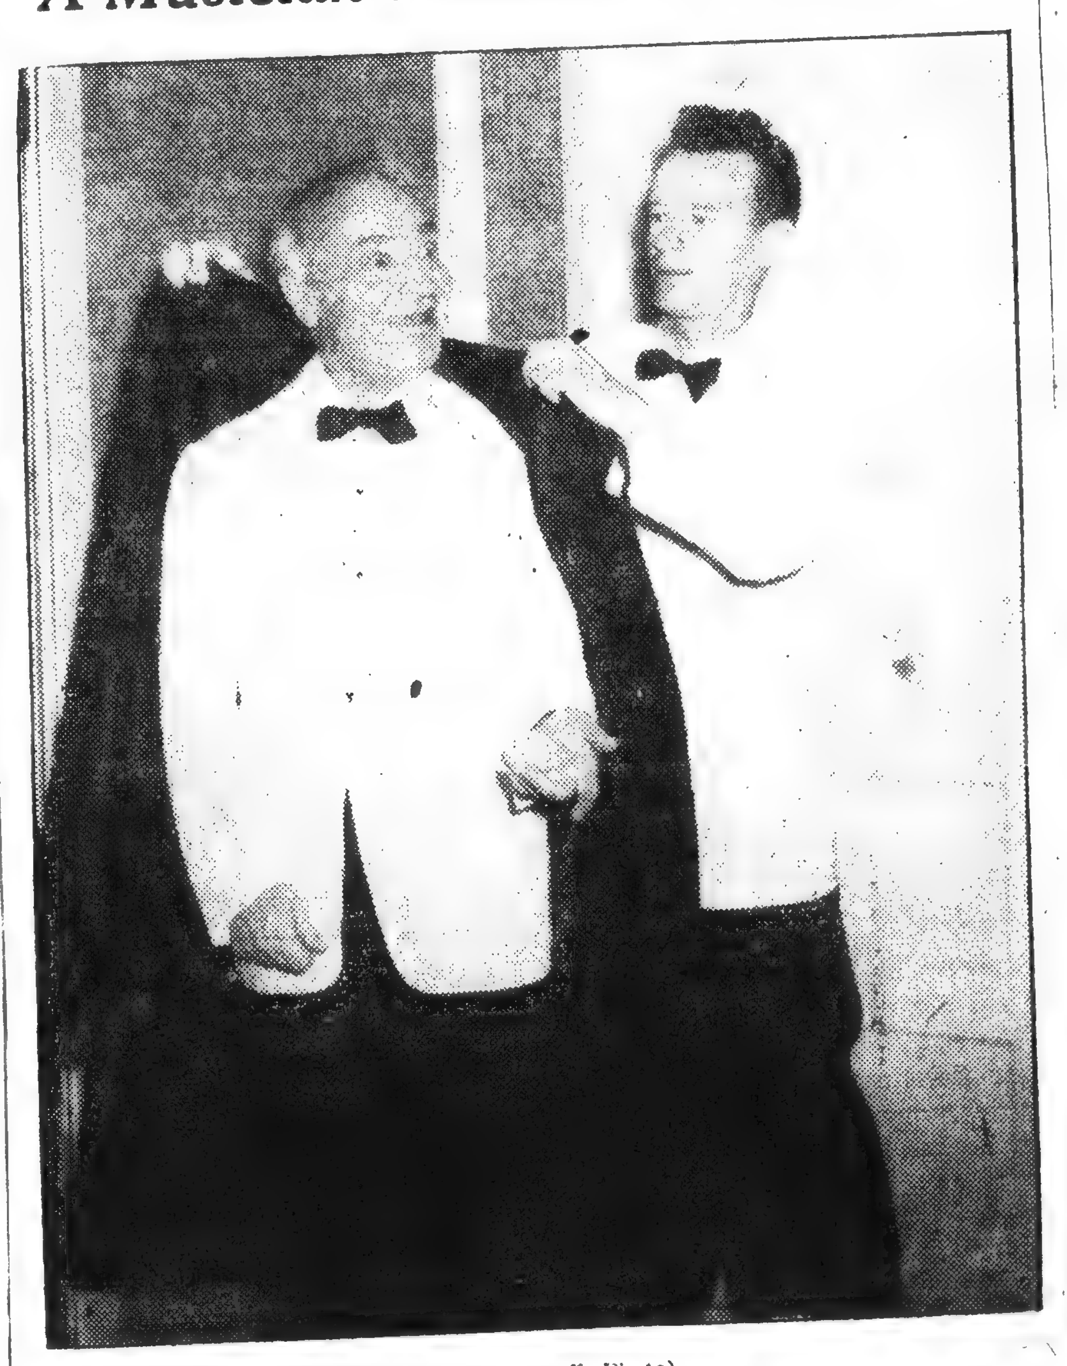
Overture to Benvenuto Cellini	Berlioz
Don Quixote	Strauss
Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky
Symphony No. 3	Harris
Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun	Debussy
Daphnis and Chloe, second suite	Ravel

SUNDAY

Symphony in E flat	Mozart
Capriccio for piano and orchestra	Stravinsky
Soloist, Jesus Maria	Sanroma
Symphony No. 2	Brahms

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1940

A Musician Tires of Formality



(Republican Staff Photo)

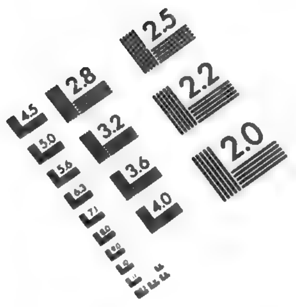
Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, got a little tried of formal poses for the news photographers who swarmed over Tanglewood estate at Lenox last night for the opening of the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival.

REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

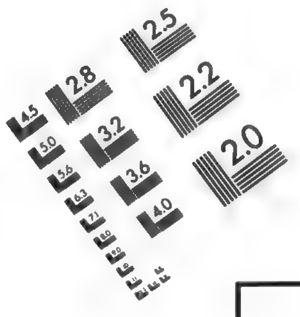
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

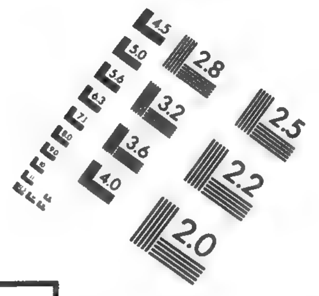
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

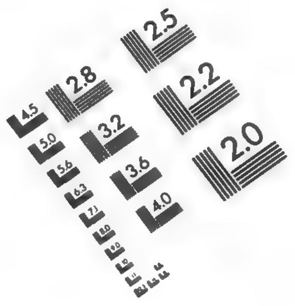
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

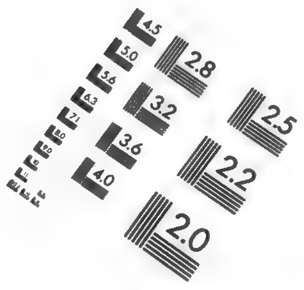


PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





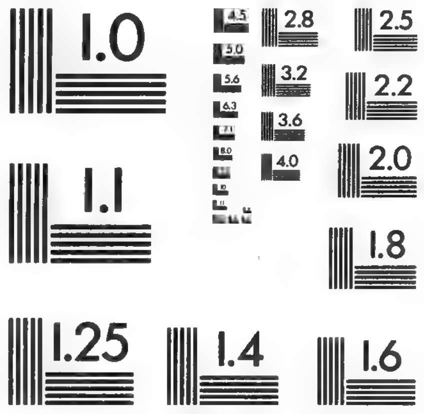




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



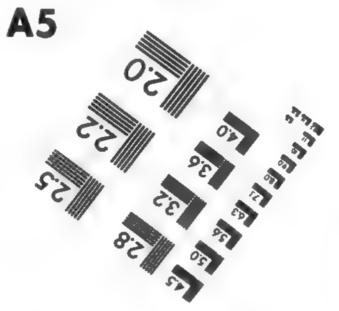
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

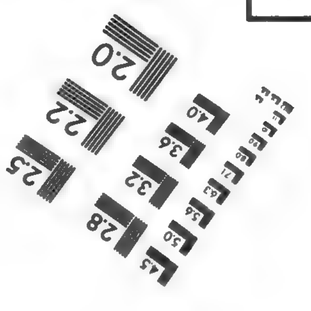
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5



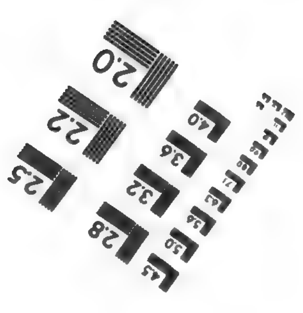
A4

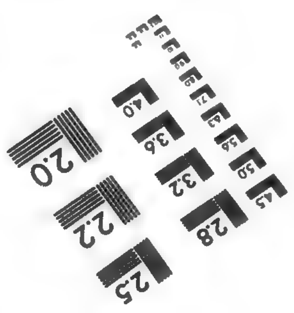
A3



PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119





4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 2 - 1940

Wild Ovation Greets Koussevitzky As Seventh Festival Opens

Three First Symphonies Make Exciting Program

Colorful Audience of Over 6,000 Gives Distinguished Conductor and His Musicians Thunderous Greeting on Return to Tanglewood—Compositions by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius Span Century—All Given Delightful Readings—Extended Season Continues Tomorrow—Many Distinguished Figures Present—Opening Favored by Fine Weather.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the podium at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night to start auspiciously the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the seventh year of its amazing growth while a deafening wave of applause from over 6,000 persons swept across the great music shed.

The demonstration honoring Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, who have contributed four seasons of unparalleled concerts, served as an acceptable substitute for the thunderstorms of past opening nights which while interrupting the programs now and then always gave the Festival board an opportunity to cite some vital physical need in Tanglewood's development as a great international center of music.

Lasts Three Weeks

Like each of the past six seasons the new one has a special significance. Embracing three weeks and nine concerts—the second of which comes tomorrow night—and with certain unusual program features, it gives promise of being the best patronized. It also comes during the year of the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a new school, which was long the dream of the distinguished conductor and a principal object in his mind back in 1936 when he accepted the board's invitation to take over, with his Boston Symphony orchestra, the work begun two years before by Henry Hadley.

Significant as it was in the history of Tanglewood and of symphonic music in America, the season opened without pomp or fuss. Dr. Koussevitzky merely walked to his place, smilingly bowed in acknowledgement of the applause, turned and got down to work. There was no ceremony; not even a plea for additional funds.

Symphonies All Firsts

The program was remarkable in that it was composed entirely of first symphonies—by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius—spanning musical thought and musical acceptance for a round century, from 1800 down to 1900. Koussevitzky made it plain that each and everyone of the three is exceedingly dear to his heart, and particularly those by Sibelius, the eminent Finn and of course, the only one of the trio now living, and Beethoven.

Those who, because of unfamiliarity with the program, speculated that the three first symphonies might make a heavy bill soon found that combined they merged into one of the most exciting performances in festival history and also that they themselves were part of one of Tanglewood's most excited audiences.

Weather at Finest

Berkshire weather, long famed for its tricks, hasn't always smiled on first nights at Tanglewood but last night it actually beamed. Heavy clouds that had tumbled about the sky as the throng gathered, quickly faded and by intermission time a typical crisp and cool Berkshire night, with every star in its place, greeted the audience as it walked about the grounds.

A more distinguished gathering than that which welcomed Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra of 110 men back to Stockbridge would be difficult to imagine, especially at a summer musical event. Hundreds of important names from all parts of American and Europe met under a common roof with the cream of the colonists who have been drawn to these pleasant Berkshire hills annually for decades and the butcher, baker and candlestick maker from every village and city within easy motoring distance of the down county town.

Keep Concert "Formal"

Dr. Koussevitzky stuck hard and fast to his rule against any deviation from high musical standards merely because the audience was not wearing tails and fur coats. As a performance the concert was as "formal" as any he will conduct in Boston and New York during the winter season. It will be remembered that even with the conductor in his shirtsleeves during last summer's sizzling weather, there was no change in the quality of the concerts.

The festival corporation has never made the claim but it is highly probable that the nine concerts comprising the current season—as against six last year—constitute the highest level which symphonic music has yet reached in America in the summer time.

More and more people have insisted on the festival has grown in stature, that the Tanglewood concerts, as given by the Boston Symphony, are a logical and worthy successor to the ancient Salzburg festival in the Austrian Tyrol. The scenic grandeur of the music shed's setting has also been compared to Salzburg, which is now one of the war-torn sections of Europe.

Begins With Beethoven

After bowing to the opening enthusiasm which was fully characteristic of a festival gathering, Dr. Koussevitzky immediately set out to unfold the seventh chapter in Tanglewood history with a delightful reading of the Beethoven First Symphony in C Major whose principal interest lay in its revelation of what was to come later from the pen of this mighty composer.

This and the two symphonies which followed, while familiar to fairly regular symphony patrons have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single program. Their presence together gave th audience an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of composition and to note how one composer's musical individuality had developed at the time he finished his first work.

The entire program gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards traditionally associated with the work of the Boston symphony which begins its 60th season in the fall.

Marked by a pervasive spirit, the interpretation of the three works also spoke well for the acoustics of the unique music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Koussevitzky Smiles

The Beethoven first, as read by Koussevitzky, was notable for its molodic clarity, nicely enhanced by a delicate preciseness and a complete lack of superfluities. Against the robust first movement was balanced the gracefulness of the slow movement. There was a wealth of slightly lively humor to the minuet and finale and Koussevitzky's easy smile flashed on several occasions as he coaxed his players.

Schumann's first was an even more robust piece in which the strings were not always the dominant instruments. This has been known for years as his "Spring" symphony and its buoyancy, overflowing joy and melodies such as only Schumann could write, made it a rich contribution to the evening. The orchestra played it with ravishing tone and exquisite grace and the conductor kept its finale above the frivolity and banality which constantly threatened to engulf it by taking recognition of Schumann's words: "I like to think of it as spring's farewell, and, therefore, I should not like it rendered frivolously."

Sibelius Ranks High

Sibelius has been represented on so many symphony programs, including those at Stockbridge, in recent years by his later works that it was something of a revelation to hear his First Symphony in E Minor. The perfection of the strings and woodwinds and the virtuosity of the brasses inspired wonder on every side as they sang the romantic and picturesque notes that are not so evident in the Finnish composer's more recent compositions.

Long recognized as one of the foremost interpreters of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought all the magic at his command to the reading of this lovely piece which seemed racial and heroic rather than personal in character. From the opening glorious song of the clarinet to the despair and tempest of the rather startling finale, his interpretation gripped and held the audience and the applause which followed was mighty.

Like their hearers, the men in the orchestra must have been fully aware that conditions for playing were ideal and they and their conductor certainly gave of their superlative best.

"Bravos" and Applause

Round upon round of applause and a smattering of "bravos" came after the Sibelius work and while Dr. Koussevitzy walked back and forth between his white-coated men several times to bow he held to another fast rule and did not contribute the encore which was being demanded by everybody.

Never Missed

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of this city who, with Mrs. Drysdale, has never missed a series of concerts since the Berkshire Festival first started seven years ago, snapped during intermission at 1940 opening at Stockbridge last night.

Scene Of Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Some of the more than 6000 music lovers who attended the opening concert of the 1940 series by the Boston Symphony orchestra last night at Tanglewood in Stockbridge shown strolling before the concert on the beautiful broad lawn which surrounds on three sides the mammoth and striking symphony shed.

Festival Notes

Many seasoned festival-goers were pleasantly surprised to find that things have been organized to the point where Berkshire county's largest parking area can be cleared in about 30 minutes flat. Although nearly 3,000 cars covered the field last night, only a few of them failed to make a get-away well within that period.

* * *

The music shed and the fine grounds surrounding it have changed only a little since last year. New seats have been installed in the forward sections with their colors corresponding to the color of the tickets issued for them. All are in red and blue. The benches used at the first Tanglewood concerts now stand immediately outside for use as overflow accommodations.

* * *

The first festival took place in 1934 under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley, who fathered the idea, and the presidency of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith who still holds that office.

* * *

Willard M. Clark of Williamstown attended the first night to review the concert for The Springfield Union which he serves as music critic.

* * *

Distributed with the program books were fliers announcing a unique concert at Tanglewood, Aug. 16 for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The bill will open "at the unusual hour of 6 p. m." and evidently continue indefinitely. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the forces of the new Berkshire Music Center and "famous" speakers and guest artists will contribute. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, are to be among the soloist and Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for The New York Herald Tribune will speak.

* * *

J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield, high sheriff of Berkshire county, and Fred N. Cummings form the Tanglewood committee for parking, a tremendous task. Down county Legionnaires, all of whom evidently are glad to donate their services, keep track of things once the cars are inside the grounds, taking over from a large corps of Massachusetts' "finest" who direct approaching cars to the entering gates.

* * *

The enterprising Western Union has parked a trailer office near the main house at Tanglewood for the convenience of festival aptrons who wish to send wires.

* * *

Coffee sold better than cold drinks at the refreshment tent operated by the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington. During intermission there was a grand rush toward the efficiently-arranged oasis.

* * *

"Now I know why they call it Tanglewood," confided an elderly man to his elderly companions as he hunted for his lost car on the parking area which was rapidly becoming deserted.

* * *

The program calls attention to the fact that the music shed, grand as it is right now, is not completed. Roll shutters to protect the audiences from sudden storms and to protect the building against winter are among the immediate needs and the program contains a blank on which to record donations.

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of the orchestra have been in Stockbridge since early last month to fulfill their duties as director and faculty of the new Berkshire Music center. There are 300 students in the school, equally divided as to sex, most of them youthful and of college age.

* * *

The clear, calm and cool weather served as a reminder of the sly editor of a Vermont weekly who in an advance recapitulation of 1940's weather made public during the July cold snap said: "The summer of 1940 was the shortest I ever did see." That was before late July's 12-day sizzler.

* * *

John N. Burk, author of a number of distniguished musical biographies, is again serving as program annotator for the festival.

* * *

Comely cigarette girls dressed in attractive gowns are among the festival innovations.

* * *

That the festival is very much a Berkshire institution so far as finances are concerned is indicated by the report that 82 per cent of the donations it has received came from people within a radius of 50 miles of Tanglewood.

* * *

The shed was designed by Eliel Saarinen, distinguished Finnish architect, and was first used in 1938.

* * *

Persons attending the concerts may unwittingly be receiving their programs from the hands of royalty. It is said that one of the attractive young women distributing them is a real and actual countess.

Koussevitzky, Leading Spirit Of The Festival

Shown, with members of his great orchestra, acknowledging the plaudits of the audience after the playing of Beethoven's First Symphony last night, is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Color

One figure which stood out in crowd of over 6000 persons at Tanglewood last night was that of Swami B. H. Bon of Calcutta, India, who attended concert as guest of Miss Mabel Choate. Swami Bon, wearing bright yellow turban and yellow costume, attracted much attention.

TO BROADCAST ON RARE INSTRUMENTS

Stradivarius Violins, Viola, 'Cello Will be Heard

A program of special interest to music lovers will be broadcast tomorrow afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock over radio stations WGY, WEAF and other stations of the Red network in the first of nine concerts of chamber music arranged by the Library of Congress.

These concerts will attract considerable attention as they not only will be played by the Budapest string quartet, one of the greatest ensembles in the history of chamber music, but the quartet will use, not its own instruments, but the priceless Stradivari violins, viola and cello presented to the Library of Congress four years ago by Mrs Gertrude Clarke Whittall.

Personal Paragraphs

Attorney and Mrs. Hugh P. Drysdale of Cherry street have as their guests Miss Ruth Dillon of Chambersburg, Pa., and Mrs. William R. Davison of Greencastle, Pa.

Thrilled By Music

Their faces plainly indicating their enjoyment of Berkshire's greatest musical event at Tanglewood last night, Mrs. Philip Attalla and Miss Eleanor Corsiglia of North Adams are caught by the cameraman. Miss Corsiglia is organist at St. Francis' church.

From Williamstown

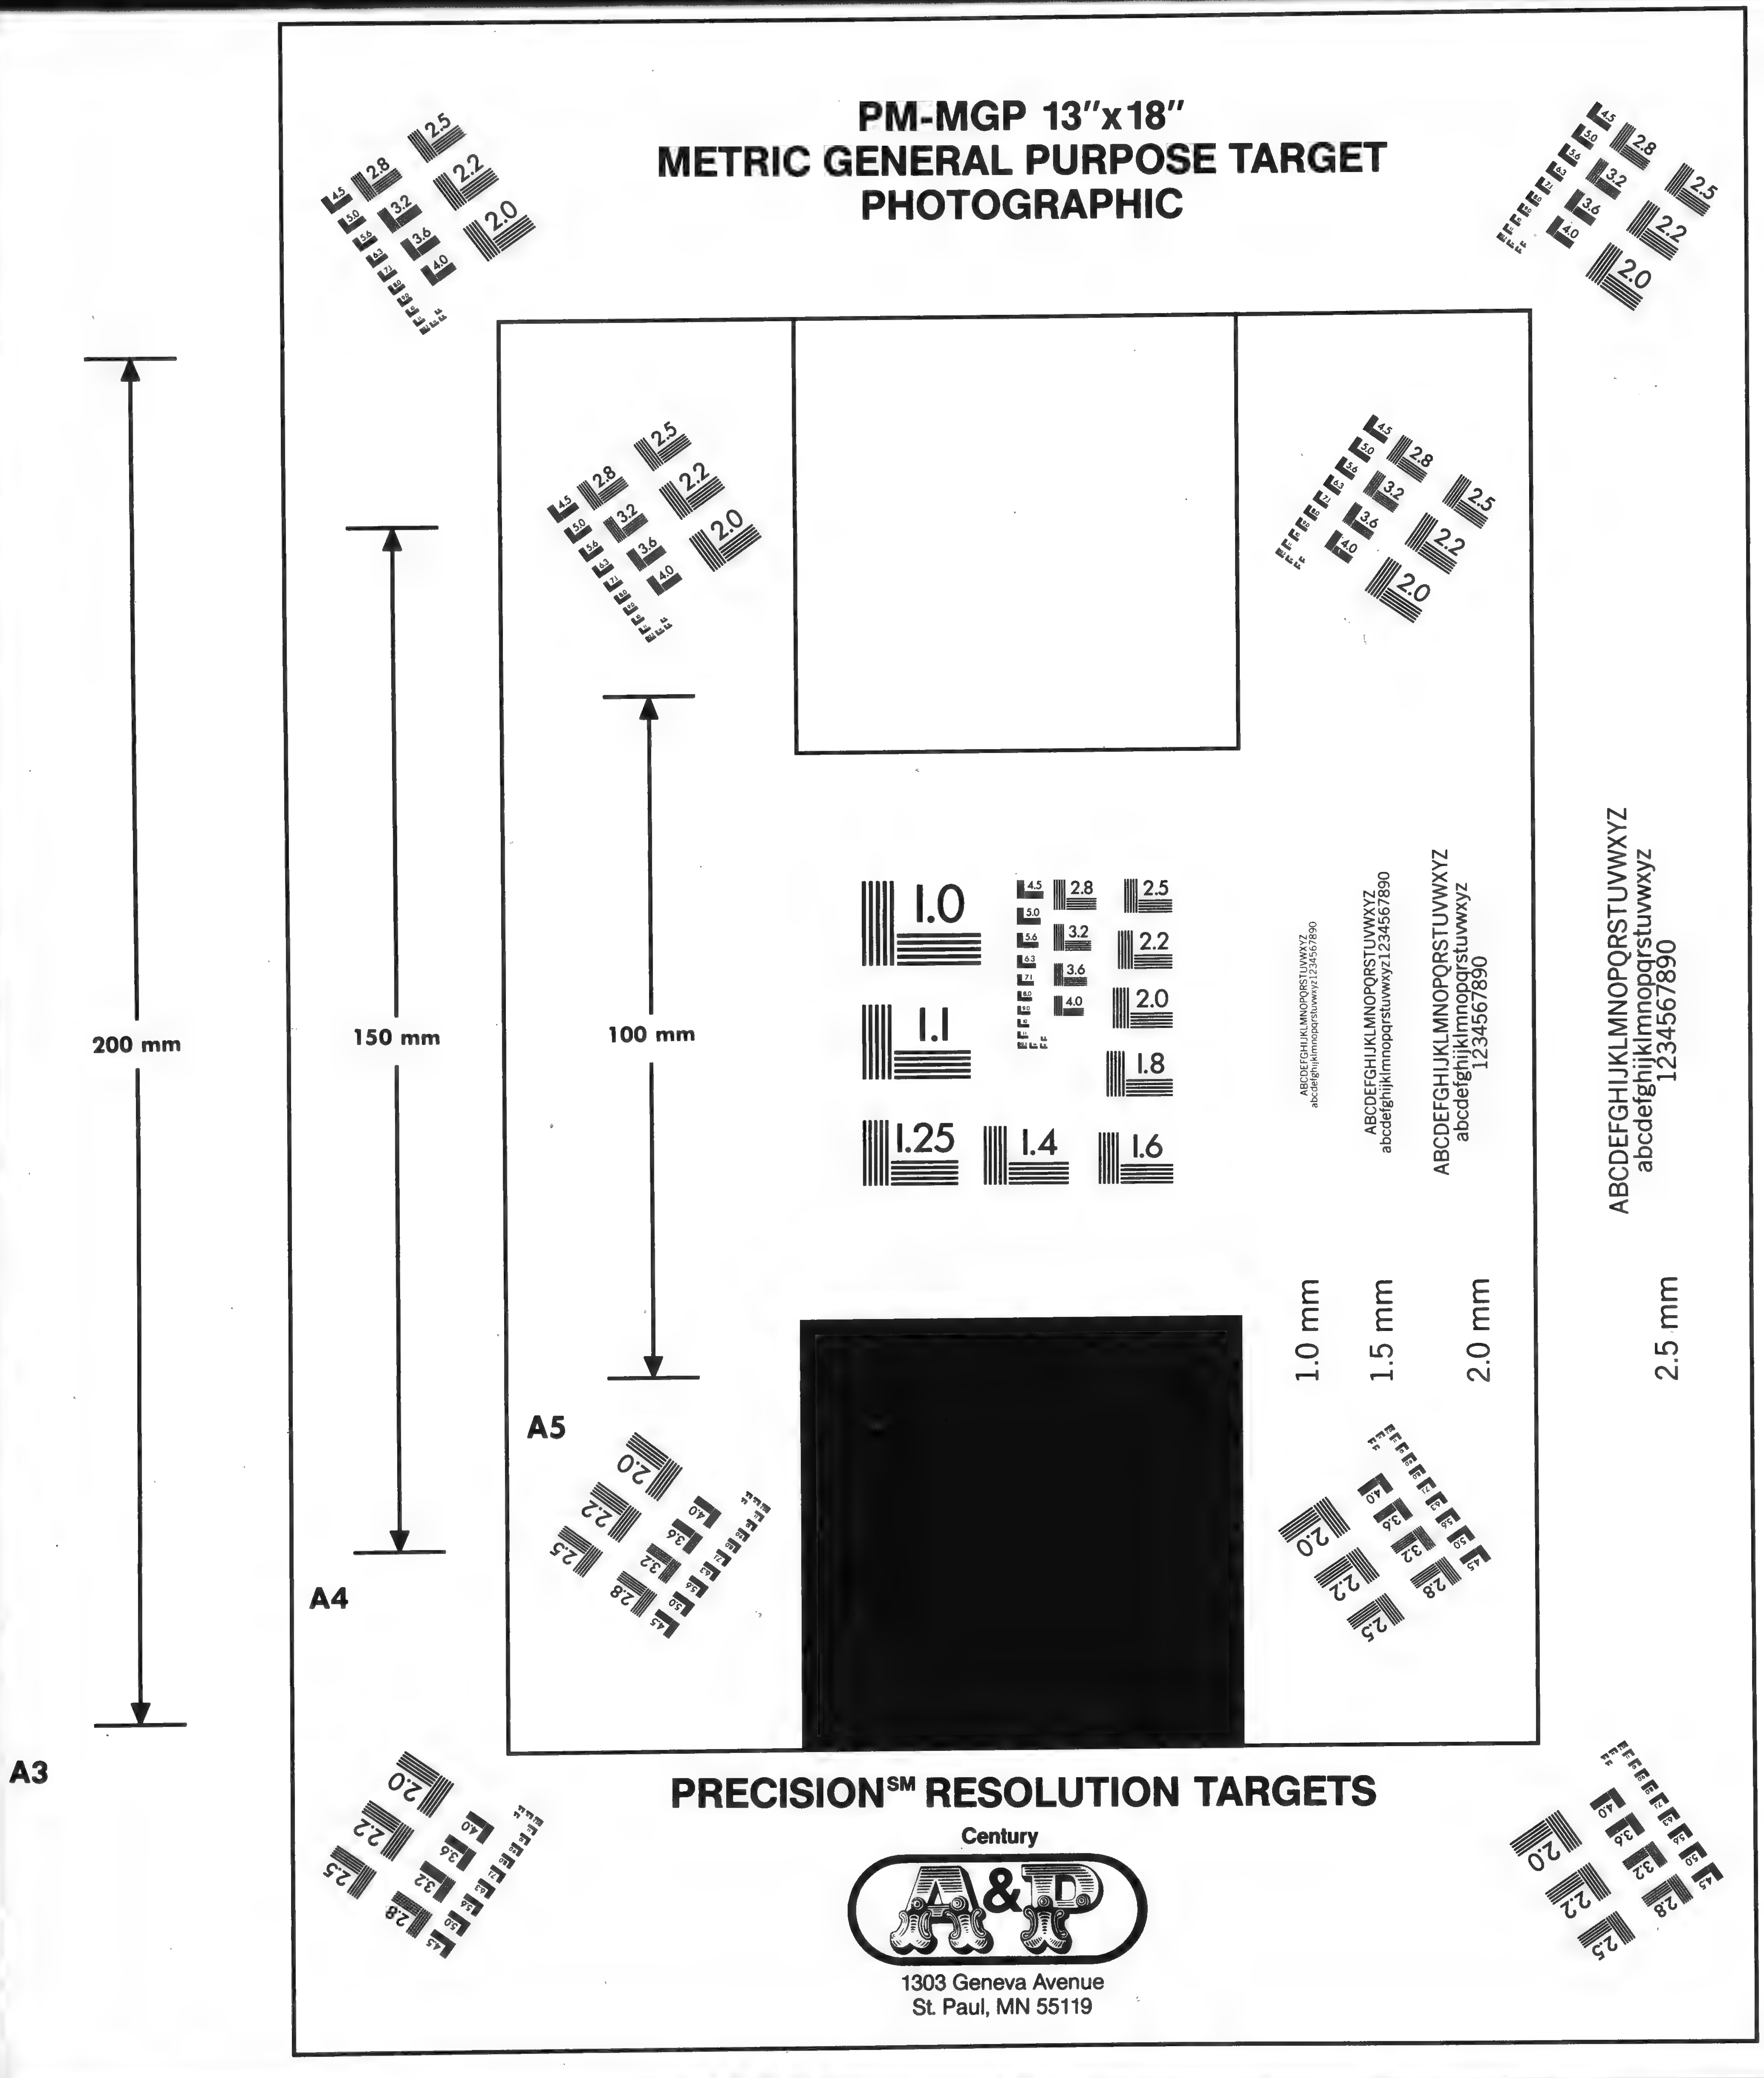
President James Phinney Baxter, 3rd, of Williams college, chats with Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown during intermission. Both are trustees of Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

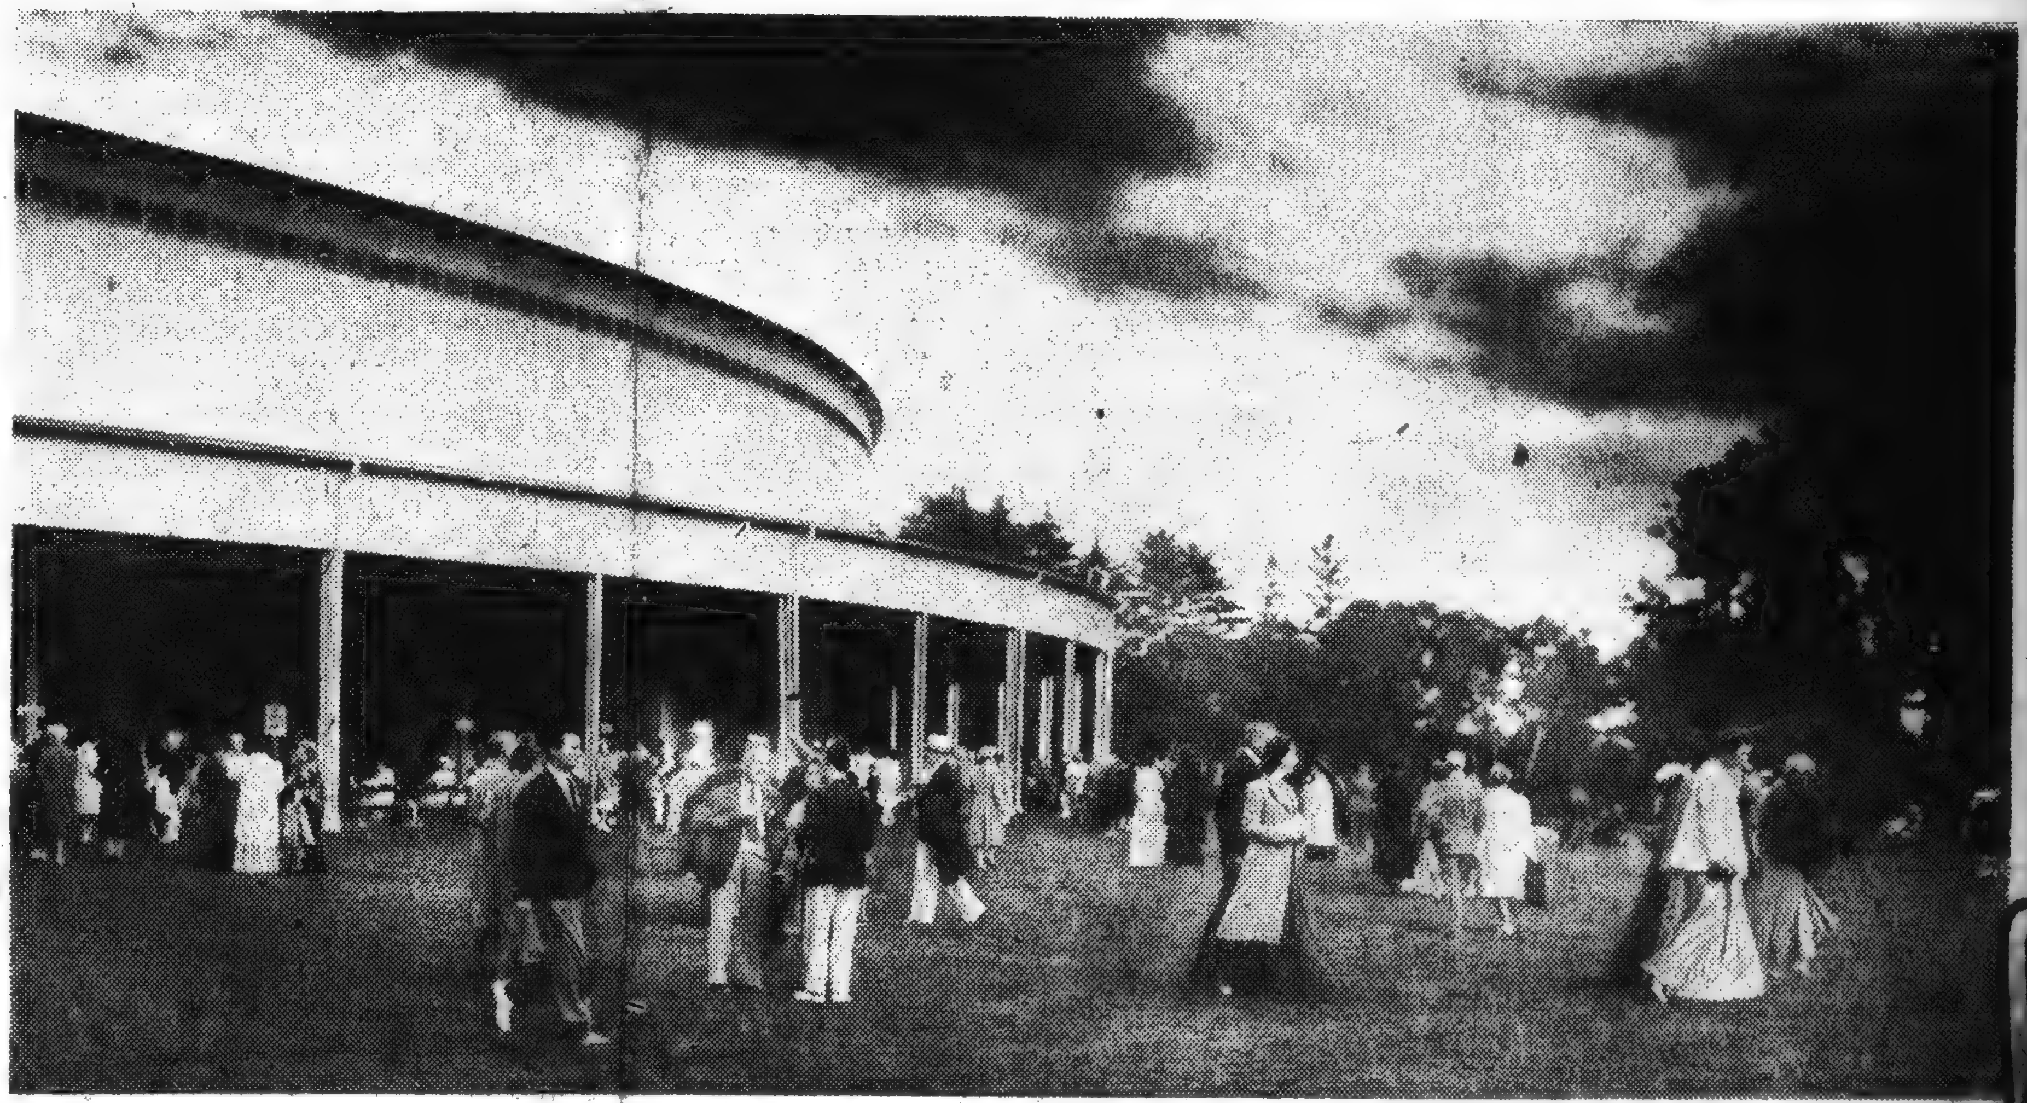
THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 2 - 1940

Wild Ovation Greets Koussevitzky As Seventh Festiva

Three First Symphonies Make Exciting Program

Colorful Audience of Over 6,000 Gives Distinguished Conductor and His Musicians Thunderous Greeting on Return to Tanglewood—Compositions by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius Span Century—All Given Delightful Readings—Extended Season Continues Tomorrow—Many Distinguished Figures Present—Opening Favored by Fine Weather.

Scene Of Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival



Some of the more than 6000 music lovers who attended the opening concert of the 1940 series by the Boston Symphony orchestra last night a Tanglewood in Stockbridge shown strolling before the concert on the beautiful broad lawn which surrounds on three sides the mammoth and striking symphony shed.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the podium at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night to start auspiciously the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the seventh year of its amazing growth while a deafening wave of applause from over 6,000 persons swept across the great music shed.

The demonstration honoring Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, who have contributed four seasons of unparalleled concerts, served as an acceptable substitute for the thunderstorms of past opening nights which while interrupting the programs now and then always gave the Festival board an opportunity to cite some vital physical need in Tanglewood's development as a great international center of music.

Lasts Three Weeks

Like each of the past six seasons the new one has a special significance. Embracing three weeks and nine concerts—the second of which comes tomorrow night—and with certain unusual program features, it gives promise of being the best patronized. It also comes during the year of the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a new school, which was long the dream of the distinguished conductor and a principal object in his mind back in 1936 when he accepted the board's invitation to take over, with his Boston Symphony orchestra, the work begun two years before by Henry Hadley.

Significant as it was in the history of Tanglewood and of symphonic music in America, the season opened without pomp or fuss. Dr. Koussevitzky merely walked to his place, smilingly bowed in acknowledgement of the applause, turned and got down to work. There was no ceremony; not even a plea for additional funds.

Symphonies All Firsts

The program was remarkable in that it was composed entirely of first symphonies—by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius—spanning musical thought and musical acceptance for a round century, from 1800 down to 1900. Koussevitzky made it plain that each and everyone of the three is exceedingly dear to his heart, and particularly those by Sibelius, the eminent Finn and of course, the only one of the trio now living, and Beethoven.

Those who, because of unfamiliarity with the program, speculated that the three first symphonies might make a heavy bill soon found that combined they merged into one of the most exciting performances in festival history and also that they themselves were part of one of Tanglewood's most excited audiences.

Weather at Finest

Berkshire weather, long famed for its tricks, hasn't always smiled on first nights at Tanglewood but last night it actually beamed. Heavy clouds that had tumbled about the sky as the throng gathered, quickly faded and by intermission time a typical crisp and cool Berkshire night, with every star in its place, greeted the audience as it walked about the grounds.

A more distinguished gathering than that which welcomed Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra of 110 men back to Stockbridge would be difficult to imagine, especially at a summer musical event. Hundreds of important names from all parts of American and Europe met under a common roof with the cream of the colonists who have been drawn to these pleasant Berkshire hills annually for decades and the butcher, baker and candlestick maker from every village and city within easy motoring distance of the down county town.

Keep Concert "Formal"

Dr. Koussevitzky stuck hard and fast to his rule against any deviation from high musical standards merely because the audience was not wearing tails and fur coats. As a performance the concert was as "for-

Never Missed

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of this city who, with Mrs. Drysdale, has never missed a series of concerts since the Berkshire Festival first started seven years ago, snapped during intermission at 1940 opening at Stockbridge last night.

veloped at the time he finished his first work.

The entire program gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards traditionally associated with the work of the Boston symphony which begins its 60th season in the fall.

Marked by a pervasive spirit, the interpretation of the three works also spoke well for the acoustics of the unique music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Koussevitzky Smiles

The Beethoven first, as read by Koussevitzky, was notable for its molodic clarity, nicely enhanced by a delicate preciseness and a complete lack of superfluities. Against the robust first movement was balanced the gracefulness of the slow movement. There was a wealth of slightly lively humor to the minuet and finale and Koussevitzky's easy smile flashed on several occasions as he coaxed his players.

Schumann's first was an even more robust piece in which the strings were not always the dominant instruments. This has been known for years as his "Spring" symphony and its buoyancy, overflowing joy and melodies such as only Schumann could write, made it a rich contribution to the evening. The orchestra played it with ravishing tone and exquisite grace and the conductor kept its finale above the frivolity and banality which constantly threatened to engulf it by taking recognition of Schumann's words: "I like to think of it as spring's farewell, and, therefore, I should not like it rendered frivolously."

Sibelius Ranks High

Sibelius has been represented on so many symphony programs, including those at Stockbridge, in recent years by his later works that it was something of a revelation to hear his First Symphony in E Minor. The perfection of the strings and woodwinds and the virtuosity of the brasses inspired wonder on every side as they sang the romantic and picturesque notes that are not so evident in the Finnish composer's more recent compositions.

Long recognized as one of the foremost interpreters of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought all the magic at his command to the reading of this lovely piece which seemed racial and heroic rather than personal in character. From the opening glorious song of the clarinet to the despair and tempest of the rather startling finale his interpretation gripped and held the audience and the applause which followed was mighty.

Like their hearers, the men in the orchestra must have been fully aware that conditions for playing were ideal and they and their conductor certainly gave of their superlative best.

"Bravos" and Applause

Round upon round of applause and a smattering of "bravos" came after the Sibelius work and while Dr. Koussevitzky walked back and forth between his white-coated men several times to bow he held to another fast rule and did not contribute the encore which was being demanded by everybody.

Koussevitzky, Leading Spirit Of The Festival

Shown, with members of his great orchestra, acknowledging the plaudits of the audience after the playing of Beethoven's First Symphony last night, is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Festival Notes

Many seasoned festival-goers were pleasantly surprised to find that things have been organized to the point where Berkshire county's largest parking area can be cleared in about 30 minutes flat. Although nearly 3,000 cars covered the field last night, only a few of them failed to make a get-away well within that period.

* * *

The music shed and the fine grounds surrounding it have changed only a little since last year. New seats have been installed in the forward sections with their colors corresponding to the color of the tickets issued for them. All are in red and blue. The benches used at the first Tanglewood concerts now stand immediately outside for use as overflow accommodations.

* * *

The first festival took place in 1934 under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley, who fathered the idea, and the presidency of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith who still holds that office.

* * *

Willard M. Clark of Williamstown attended the first night to review the concert for The Springfield Union which he serves as music critic.

* * *

Distributed with the program books were fliers announcing a unique concert at Tanglewood, Aug. 16 for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The bill will open "at the unusual hour of 6 p. m." and evidently continue indefinitely. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the forces of the new Berkshire Music Center and "famous" speakers and guest artists will contribute. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, are to be among the soloist and Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for The New York Herald Tribune will speak.

* * *

J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield, high sheriff of Berkshire county, and Fred N. Cummings form the Tan-tremendous task. Down county Legionnaires, all of whom evidently are glad to donate their services, keep track of things once the cars are inside the grounds, taking over from a large corps of Massachusetts' "finest" who direct approaching cars to the entering gates.

* * *

The enterprising Western Union has parked a trailer office near the main house at Tanglewood for the convenience of festival aptrons who wish to send wires.

* * *

Coffee sold better than cold drinks at the refreshment tent operated by the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington. During intermission there was a grand rush toward the efficiently-arranged oasis.

* * *

"Now I know why they call it Tanglewood," confided an elderly man to his elderly companions as he hunted for his lost car on the parking area which was rapidly becoming deserted.

* * *

The program calls attention to the fact that the music shed, grand as it is right now, is not completed. Roll shutters to protect the audiences from sudden storms and to protect the building against winter are among the immediate needs and the program contains a blank on which

Color

One figure which stood out in crowd of over 6000 persons at Tanglewood last night was that of Swami B. H. Bon of Calcutta, India, who attended concert as guest of Miss Mabel Choate. Swami Bon, wearing bright yellow turban and yel-

TO BROADCAST ON RARE INSTRUMENTS

Stradivarius Violins, Viola, 'Cello Will be Heard

A program of special interest to music lovers will be broadcast tomorrow afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock over radio stations WGY, WEAF and other stations of the Red network in the first of nine concerts of chamber music arranged by the Library of Congress.

These concerts will attract considerable attention as they not only will be played by the Budapest string quartet, one of the greatest ensembles in the history of chamber music, but the quartet will use, not its own instruments, but the priceless Stradivari violins, viola and cello presented to the Library of Congress four years ago by Mrs. Gertrude Clarke Whittall.

Personal Paragraphs

Attorney and Mrs. Hugh P. Drysdale of Cherry street have as their guests, Miss Ruth Dillon of Cham-

19

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 2 - 1940

Wild Ovation Greets Koussevitzky As Seventh Festival Opens

Three First Symphonies Make Exciting Program

Colorful Audience of Over 6,000 Gives Distinguished Conductor and His Musicians Thunderous Greeting on Return to Tanglewood—Compositions by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius Span Century—All Given Delightful Readings—Extended Season Continues Tomorrow—Many Distinguished Figures Present—Opening Favored by Fine Weather.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the podium at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night to start auspiciously the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the seventh year of its amazing growth while a deafening wave of applause from over 6,000 persons swept across the great music shed.

The demonstration honoring Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, who have contributed four seasons of unparalleled concerts, served as an acceptable substitute for the thunderstorms of past opening nights which while interrupting the programs now and then always gave the Festival board an opportunity to cite some vital physical need in Tanglewood's development as a great international center of music.

Lasts Three Weeks

Like each of the past six seasons the new one has a special significance. Embracing three weeks and nine concerts—the second of which comes tomorrow night—and with certain unusual program features, it gives promise of being the best patronized. It also comes during the year of the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a new school, which was long the dream of the distinguished conductor and a principal object in his mind back in 1936 when he accepted the board's invitation to take over, with his Boston Symphony orchestra, the work begun two years before by Henry Hadley.

Significant as it was in the history of Tanglewood and of symphonic music in America, the season opened without pomp or fuss. Dr. Koussevitzky merely walked to his place, smilingly bowed in acknowledgement of the applause, turned and got down to work. There was no ceremony; not even a plea for additional funds.

Symphonies All Firsts

The program was remarkable in that it was composed entirely of first symphonies—by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius—spanning musical thought and musical acceptance for a round century, from 1800 down to 1900. Koussevitzky made it plain that each and everyone of the three is exceedingly dear to his heart, and particularly those by Sibelius, the eminent Finn and of course, the only one of the trio now living, and Beethoven.

Those who, because of unfamiliarity with the program, speculated that the three first symphonies might make a heavy bill soon found that combined they merged into one of the most exciting performances in festival history and also that they themselves were part of one of Tanglewood's most excited audiences.

Weather at Finest

Berkshire weather, long famed for its tricks, hasn't always smiled on first nights at Tanglewood but last night it actually beamed. Heavy clouds that had tumbled about the sky as the throng gathered, quickly faded and by intermission time a typical crisp and cool Berkshire night, with every star in its place, greeted the audience as it walked about the grounds.

A more distinguished gathering than that which welcomed Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra of 110 men back to Stockbridge would be difficult to imagine, especially at a summer musical event. Hundreds of important names from all parts of American and Europe met under a common roof with the cream of the colonists who have been drawn to these pleasant Berkshire hills annually for decades and the butcher, baker and candlestick maker from every village and city within easy motoring distance of the down county town.

Keep Concert "Formal"

Dr. Koussevitzky stuck hard and fast to his rule against any deviation from high musical standards

Never Missed

Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of this city who, with Mrs. Drysdale, has never missed a series of concerts since the Berkshire Festival first started seven years ago, snapped during intermission at 1940 opening at Stockbridge last night.

veloped at the time he finished his first work.

The entire program gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards traditionally associated with the work of the Boston symphony which begins its 60th season in the fall.

Marked by a pervasive spirit, the interpretation of the three works also spoke well for the acoustics of the unique music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Koussevitzky Smiles

The Beethoven first, as read by Koussevitzky, was notable for its molodic clarity, nicely enhanced by a delicate preciseness and a complete lack of superfluities. Against the robust first movement was balanced the gracefulness of the slow movement. There was a wealth of slightly lively humor to the minuet and finale and Koussevitzky's easy smile flashed on several occasions as he coaxed his players.

Schumann's first was an even more robust piece in which the strings were not always the dominant instruments. This has been known for years as his "Spring" symphony and its buoyancy, overflowing joy and melodies such as only Schumann could write, made it a rich contribution to the evening. The orchestra played it with ravishing tone and exquisite grace and the conductor kept its finale above the frivolity and banality which constantly threatened to engulf it by taking recognition of Schumann's words: "I like to think of it as spring's farewell, and, therefore, I should not like it rendered frivolously."

Sibelius Ranks High

Sibelius has been represented on so many symphony programs, including those at Stockbridge, in recent years by his later works that it was something of a revelation to hear his First Symphony in E Minor. The perfection of the strings and woodwinds and the virtuosity of the brasses inspired wonder on every side as they sang the romantic and picturesque notes that are not so evident in the Finnish composer's more recent compositions.

Long recognized as one of the foremost interpreters of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought all the magic at his command to the reading of this lovely piece which seemed racial and heroic rather than personal in character. From the open-pretation gripped and held the audience and the applause which followed was mighty.

Like their hearers, the men in the orchestra must have been fully aware that conditions for playing were ideal and they and their conductor certainly gave of their superlative best.

"Bravos" and Applause

Round upon round of applause and a smattering of "bravos" came after the Sibelius work and while Dr. Koussevitzy walked back and forth between his white-coated men several times to bow he held to another fast rule and did not contribute the encore which was being demanded by everybody.

Scene Of Seventh Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Some of the more than 6000 music lovers who attended the opening concert of the 1940 series by the Boston Symphony orchestra last night at Tanglewood in Stockbridge shown strolling before the concert on the beautiful broad lawn which surrounds on three sides the mammoth and striking symphony shed.

Koussevitzky, Leading Spirit Of The Festival

Shown, with members of his great orchestra, acknowledging the plaudits of the audience after the playing of Beethoven's First Symphony last night, is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Festival Notes

Many seasoned festival-goers were pleasantly surprised to find that things have been organized to the point where Berkshire county's largest parking area can be cleared in about 30 minutes flat. Although nearly 3,000 cars covered the field last night, only a few of them failed to make a get-away well within that period.

* * *

The music shed and the fine grounds surrounding it have changed only a little since last year. New seats have been installed in the forward sections with their colors corresponding to the color of the tickets issued for them. All are in red and blue. The benches used at the first Tanglewood concerts now stand immediately outside for use as overflow accommodations.

* * *

The first festival took place in 1934 under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley, who fathered the idea, and the presidency of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith who still holds that office.

* * *

Willard M. Clark of Williamstown attended the first night to review the concert for The Springfield Union which he serves as music critic.

* * *

Distributed with the program books were fliers announcing a unique concert at Tanglewood, Aug. 16 for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The bill will open "at the unusual hour of 6 p. m." and evidently continue indefinitely. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the forces of the new Berkshire Music Center and "famous" speakers and guest artists will contribute. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, are to be among the soloist and Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for The New York Herald Tribune will speak.

* * *

J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield, tremendous task. Down county Legionnaires, all of whom evidently are glad to donate their services, keep track of things once the cars are inside the grounds, taking over from a large corps of Massachusetts' "finest" who direct approaching cars to the entering gates.

* * *

The enterprising Western Union has parked a trailer office near the main house at Tanglewood for the convenience of festival aptrons who wish to send wires.

* * *

Coffee sold better than cold drinks at the refreshment tent operated by the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington. During intermission there was a grand rush toward the efficiently-arranged oasis.

* * *

"Now I know why they call it Tanglewood," confided an elderly man to his elderly companions as he hunted for his lost car on the parking area which was rapidly becoming deserted.

* * *

The program calls attention to the fact that the music shed, grand as it is right now, is not completed. Roll shutters to protect the audiences from sudden storms and to protect the building against winter are

Color

One figure which stood out in crowd of over 6000 persons at Tanglewood last night was that of Swami B. H. Bon of Calcutta, India, who attended concert as guest of Miss Mabel Choate. Swami Bon, wear-

TO BROADCAST ON RARE INSTRUMENTS

Stradivarius Violins, Viola, 'Cello Will be Heard

A program of special interest to music lovers will be broadcast tomorrow afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock over radio stations WGY, WEAF and other stations of the Red network in the first of nine concerts of chamber music arranged by the Library of Congress.

These concerts will attract considerable attention as they not only will be played by the Budapest string quartet, one of the greatest ensembles in the history of chamber music, but the quartet will use, not its own instruments, but the priceless Stradivari violins, viola and cello presented to the Library of Congress four years ago by Mrs. Gertrude Clarke Whittall.

Personal Paragraphs

Attorney and Mrs. Hugh P. Drysdale of Cherry street have as their

Make Exciting Program

Colorful Audience of Over 6,000 Gives Distinguished Conductor and His Musicians Thunderous Greeting on Return to Tanglewood—Compositions by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius Span Century—All Given Delightful Readings—Extended Season Continues Tomorrow—Many Distinguished Figures Present—Opening Favored by Fine Weather.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky strode to the podium at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night to start auspiciously the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the seventh year of its amazing growth while a deafening wave of applause from over 6,000 persons swept across the great music shed.

The demonstration honoring Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, who have contributed four seasons of unparalleled concerts, served as an acceptable substitute for the thunderstorms of past opening nights which while interrupting the programs now and then always gave the Festival board an opportunity to cite some vital physical need in Tanglewood's development as a great international center of music.

Lasts Three Weeks

Like each of the past six seasons the new one has a special significance. Embracing three weeks and nine concerts—the second of which comes tomorrow night—and with certain unusual program features, it gives promise of being the best patronized. It also comes during the year of the opening of the Berkshire Music Center, a new school, which was long the dream of the distinguished conductor and a principal object in his mind back in 1936 when he accepted the board's invitation to take over, with his Boston Symphony orchestra, the work begun two years before by Henry Hadley.

Significant as it was in the history of Tanglewood and of symphonic music in America, the season opened without pomp or fuss. Dr. Koussevitzky merely walked to his place, smilingly bowed in acknowledgement of the applause, turned and got down to work. There was no ceremony; not even a plea for additional funds.

Symphonies All Firsts

The program was remarkable in that it was composed entirely of first symphonies—by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius—spanning musical thought and musical acceptance for a round century, from 1800 down to 1900. Koussevitzky made it plain that each and everyone of the three is exceedingly dear to his heart, and particularly those by Sibelius, the eminent Finn and of course, the only one of the trio now living, and Beethoven.

Those who, because of unfamiliarity with the program, speculated that the three first symphonies might make a heavy bill soon found that combined they merged into one of the most exciting performances in festival history and also that they themselves were part of one of Tanglewood's most excited audiences.

Weather at Finest

Berkshire weather, long famed for its tricks, hasn't always smiled on first nights at Tanglewood but last night it actually beamed. Heavy clouds that had tumbled about the sky as the throng gathered, quickly faded and by intermission time a typical crisp and cool Berkshire night, with every star in its place, greeted the audience as it walked about the grounds.

A more distinguished gathering than that which welcomed Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra of 110 men back to Stockbridge would be difficult to imagine, especially at a summer musical event. Hundreds of important names from all parts of American and Europe met under a common roof with the cream of the colonists who have been drawn to these pleasant Berkshire hills annually for decades and the butcher, baker and candlestick maker from every village and city within easy motoring distance of the down county town.

Keep Concert "Formal"

Dr. Koussevitzky stuck hard and fast to his rule against any deviation from high musical standards merely because the audience was not wearing tails and fur coats. As a performance the concert was as "formal" as any he will conduct in Boston and New York during the winter season. It will be remembered that even with the conductor in his shirtsleeves during last summer's sizzling weather, there was no change in the quality of the concerts.

The festival corporation has never made the claim but it is highly probable that the nine concerts comprising the current season—as against six last year—constitute the highest level which symphonic music has yet reached in America in the summer time.

More and more people have insisted on the festival has grown in stature, that the Tanglewood concerts, as given by the Boston Symphony, are a logical and worthy successor to the ancient Salzburg festival in the Austrian Tyrol. The scenic grandeur of the music shed's setting has also been compared to Salzburg, which is now one of the war-torn sections of Europe.

Begins With Beethoven

After bowing to the opening enthusiasm which was fully characteristic of a festival gathering, Dr. Koussevitzky immediately set out to unfold the seventh chapter in Tanglewood history with a delightful reading of the Beethoven First Symphony in C Major whose principal interest lay in its revelation of what was to come later from the pen of this mighty composer.

This and the two symphonies which followed, while familiar to fairly regular symphony patrons, have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single program. Their presence together gave th audience an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of composition and to note how one composer's musical individuality had developed at the time he finished his first work.

The entire program gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards traditionally associated with the work of the Boston symphony which begins its 60th season in the fall.

Marked by a pervasive spirit, the interpretation of the three works also spoke well for the acoustics of the unique music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Koussevitzky Smiles

The Beethoven first, as read by Koussevitzky, was notable for its molodic clarity, nicely enhanced by a delicate preciseness and a complete lack of superfluities. Against the robust first movement was balanced the gracefulness of the slow movement. There was a wealth of slightly lively humor to the minuet and finale and Koussevitzky's easy smile flashed on several occasions as he coaxed his players.

Schumann's first was an even more robust piece in which the strings were not always the dominant instruments. This has been known for years as his "Spring" symphony and its buoyancy, overflowing joy and melodies such as only Schumann could write, made it a rich contribution to the evening. The orchestra played it with ravishing tone and exquisite grace and the conductor kept its finale above the frivolity and banality which constantly threatened to engulf it by taking recognition of Schumann's words: "I like to think of it as spring's farewell, and, therefore, I should not like it rendered frivolously."

Sibelius Ranks High

Sibelius has been represented on so many symphony programs, including those at Stockbridge, in recent years by his later works that it was something of a revelation to hear his First Symphony in E Minor. The perfection of the strings and woodwinds and the virtuosity of the brasses inspired wonder on every side as they sang the romantic and picturesque notes that are not so evident in the Finnish composer's more recent compositions.

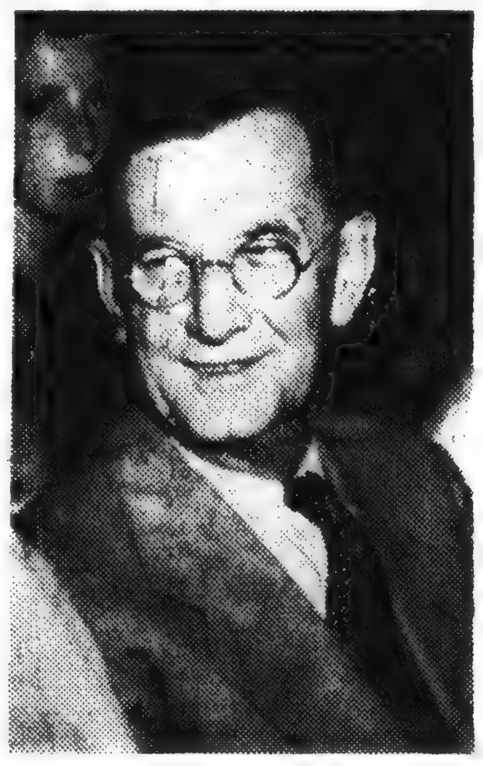
Long recognized as one of the foremost interpreters of Sibelius, Dr. Koussevitzky brought all the magic at his command to the reading of this lovely piece which seemed racial and heroic rather than personal in character. From the opening glorious song of the clarinet to the despair and tempest of the rather startling finale, his interpretation gripped and held the audience and the applause which followed was mighty.

Like their hearers, the men in the orchestra must have been fully aware that conditions for playing were ideal and they and their conductor certainly gave of their superlative best.

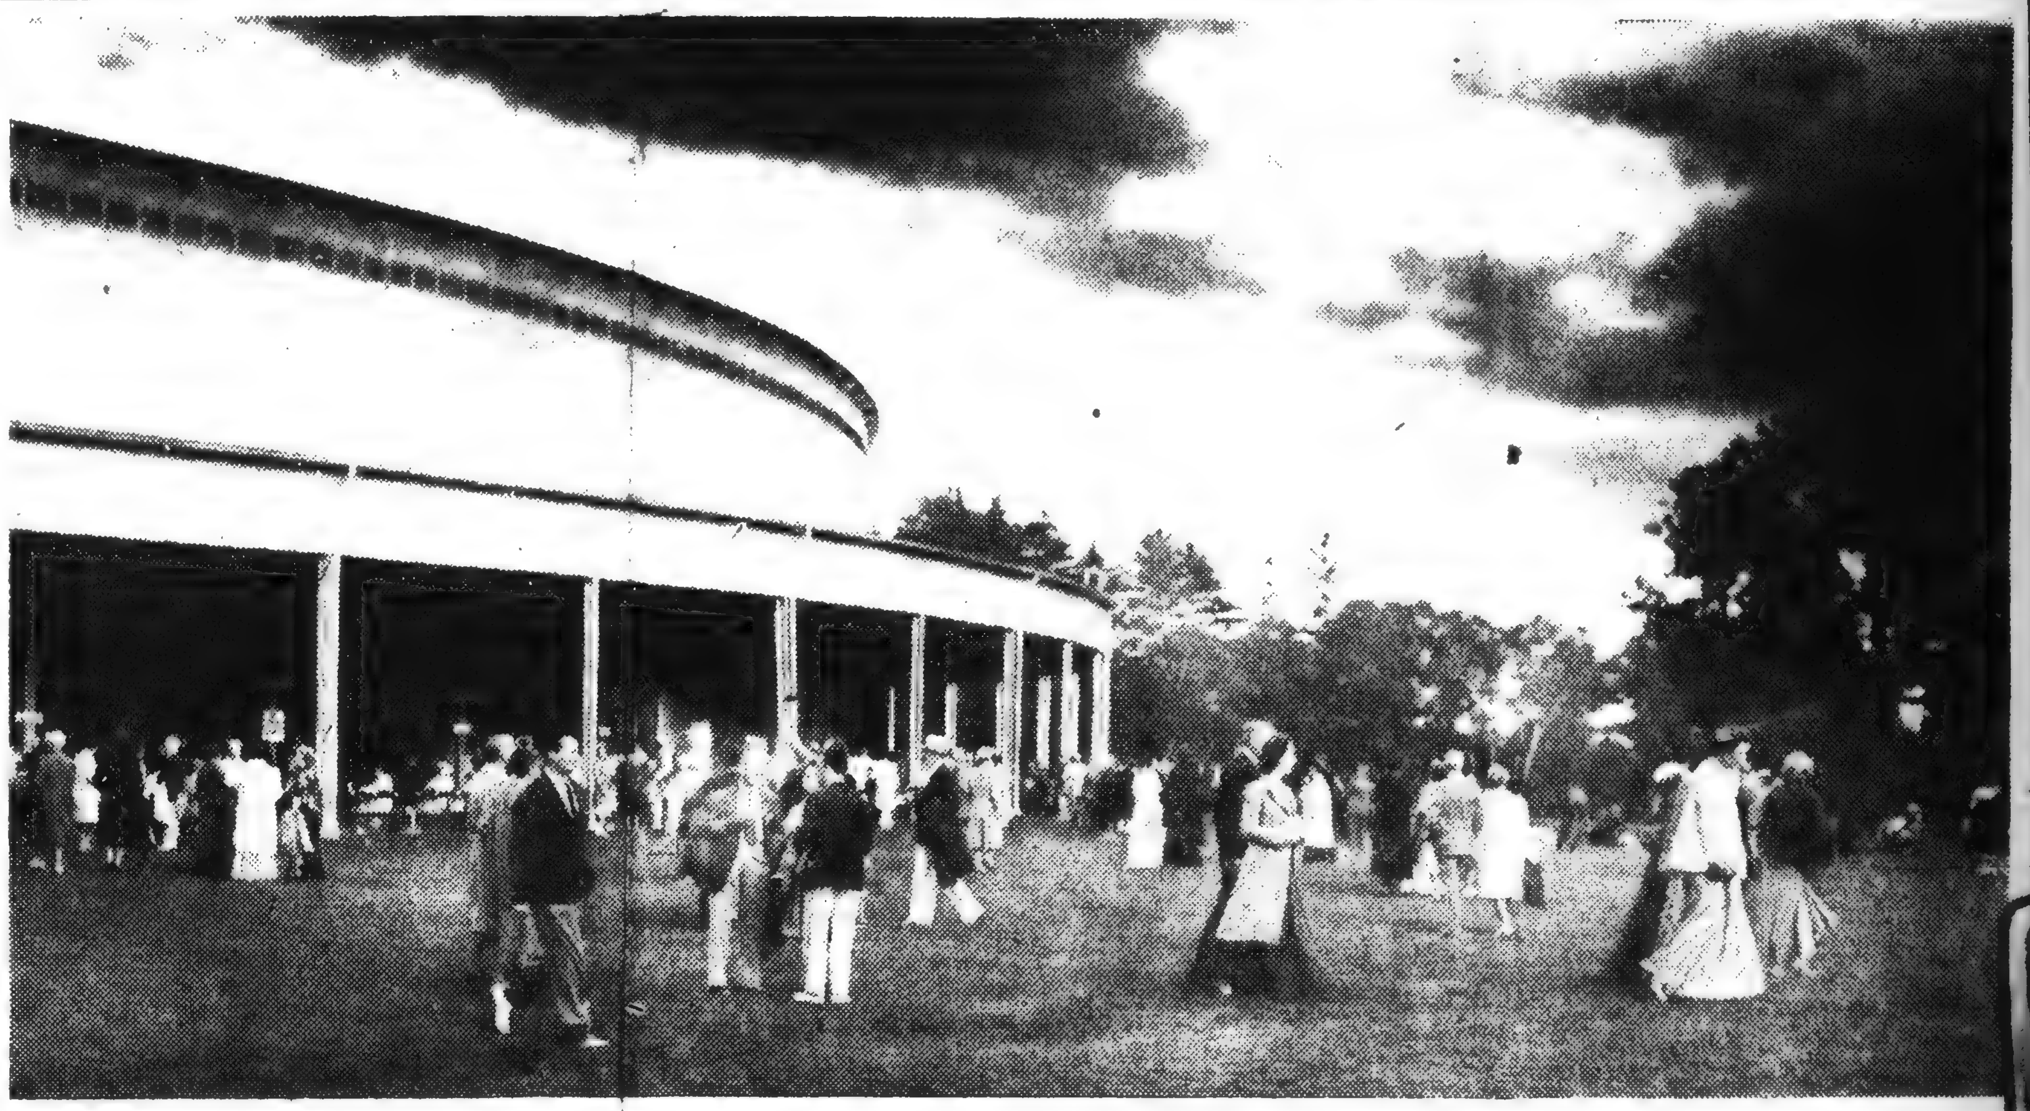
"Bravos" and Applause

Round upon round of applause and a smattering of "bravos" came after the Sibelius work and while Dr. Koussevitzy walked back and forth between his white-coated men several times to bow he held to another fast rule and did not contribute the encore which was being demanded by everybody.

Never Missed



Atty. Hugh P. Drysdale of this city who, with Mrs. Drysdale, has never missed a series of concerts since the Berkshire Festival first started seven years ago, snapped during intermission at 1940 opening at Stockbridge last night.



Some of the more than 6000 music lovers who attended the opening concert of the 1940 series by the Boston Symphony orchestra last night at Tanglewood in Stockbridge shown strolling before the concert on the beautiful broad lawn which surrounds on three sides the mammoth and striking symphony shed.

Festival Notes

Many seasoned festival-goers were pleasantly surprised to find that things have been organized to the point where Berkshire county's largest parking area can be cleared in about 30 minutes flat. Although nearly 3,000 cars covered the field last night, only a few of them failed to make a get-away well within that period.

* * *

The music shed and the fine grounds surrounding it have changed only a little since last year. New seats have been installed in the forward sections with their colors corresponding to the color of the tickets issued for them. All are in red and blue. The benches used at the first Tanglewood concerts now stand immediately outside for use as overflow accommodations.

* * *

The first festival took place in 1934 under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley, who fathered the idea, and the presidency of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith who still holds that office.

* * *

Willard M. Clark of Williamstown attended the first night to review the concert for The Springfield Union which he serves as music critic.

* * *

Distributed with the program books were fliers announcing a unique concert at Tanglewood, Aug. 16 for the benefit of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The bill will open "at the unusual hour of 6 p. m." and evidently continue indefinitely. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra, the forces of the new Berkshire Music Center and "famous" speakers and guest artists will contribute. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, are to be among the soloist and Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for The New York Herald Tribune will speak.

* * *

J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield, high sheriff of Berkshire county, and Fred N. Cummings form the Tanglewood committee for parking, a tremendous task. Down county Legionnaires, all of whom evidently are glad to donate their services, keep track of things once the cars are inside the grounds, taking over from a large corps of Massachusetts' "finest" who direct approaching cars to the entering gates.

* * *

The enterprising Western Union has parked a trailer office near the main house at Tanglewood for the convenience of festival aptrons who wish to send wires.

* * *

Coffee sold better than cold drinks at the refreshment tent operated by the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington. During intermission there was a grand rush toward the efficiently-arranged oasis.

* * *

"Now I know why they call it Tanglewood," confided an elderly man to his elderly companions as he hunted for his lost car on the parking area which was rapidly becoming deserted.

* * *

The program calls attention to the fact that the music shed, grand as it is right now, is not completed. Roll shutters to protect the audiences from sudden storms and to protect the building against winter are among the immediate needs and the program contains a blank on which to record donations.

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of the orchestra have been in Stockbridge since early last month to fulfill their duties as director and faculty of the new Berkshire Music center. There are 300 students in the school, equally divided as to sex, most of them youthful and of college age.

* * *

The clear, calm and cool weather served as a reminder of the sly editor of a Vermont weekly who in an advance recapitulation of 1940's weather made public during the July cold snap said: "The summer of 1940 was the shortest I ever did see." That was before late July's 12-day sizzler.

* * *

John N. Burk, author of a number of distniguished musical biographies, is again serving as program annotator for the festival.

* * *

Comely cigarette girls dressed in attractive gowns are among the festival innovations.

* * *

That the festival is very much a Berkshire institution so far as finances are concerned is indicated by the report that 82 per cent of the donations it has received came from people within a radius of 50 miles of Tanglewood.

* * *

The shed was designed by Eliel Saarinen, distinguished Finnish architect, and was first used in 1938.

* * *

Persons attending the concerts may unwittingly be receiving their programs from the hands of royalty. It is said that one of the attractive young women distributing them is a real and actual countess.

Koussevitzky, Leading Spirit Of The Festival

Shown, with members of his great orchestra, acknowledging the plaudits of the audience after the playing of Beethoven's First Symphony last night, is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Thrilled By Music

Their faces plainly indicating their enjoyment of Berkshire's greatest musical event at Tanglewood last night, Mrs. Philip Attalla and Miss Eleanor Corsiglia of North Adams are caught by the cameraman. Miss Corsiglia is organist at St. Francis' church.

Color

One figure which stood out in crowd of over 6000 persons at Tanglewood last night was that of Swami B. H. Bon of Calcutta, India, who attended concert as guest of Miss Mabel Choate. Swami Bon, wearing bright yellow turban and yellow costume, attracted much attention.

TO BROADCAST ON RARE INSTRUMENTS

Stradivarius Violins, Viola, 'Cello Will be Heard

A program of special interest to music lovers will be broadcast tomorrow afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock over radio stations WGY, WEAF and other stations of the Red network in the first of nine concerts of chamber music arranged by the Library of Congress.

These concerts will attract considerable attention as they not only will be played by the Budapest string quartet, one of the greatest ensembles in the history of chamber music, but the quartet will use, not its own instruments, but the priceless Stradivari violins, viola and cello presented to the Library of Congress four years ago by Mrs. Gertrude Clarke Whittall.

Personal Paragraphs

Attorney and Mrs. Hugh P. Drysdale of Cherry street have as their guests Miss Ruth Dillon of Chambersburg, Pa., and Mrs. William R. Davison of Greencastle, Pa.

From Williamstown

President James Phinney Baxter, 3rd, of Williams college, chats with Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown during intermission. Both are trustees of Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

80

Boston Transcript Aug. 2, 1940

MUSIC

Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky Open Three-Week Season in the Shed at 'Tanglewood'

By EDWARD DOWNES

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2—After a threatening heat of the morning, cool, almost cold breezes and a cloudless sky greeted the brilliant crowd of 5800 music lovers who gathered here last night for the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The first program consisted of three first symphonies, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

The vast lawn before the music shed was spotted with color as gay summer gowns, dinner jackets and white linen suits paraded the grounds of the Boston Symphony's estate, "Tanglewood," for an hour before the actual beginning of the concert. Just at twilight the crowd poured into the music shed and as evening deepened, the trees, which border the shed on two sides, darkened into silhouettes with a bright, starlit sky beyond.

Sharing an Ovation

As he entered the platform. Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted with a thunderous ovation which he insisted upon sharing with the orchestra. It took moments for ears accustomed to hearing music indoors to adjust themselves to the acoustics, which, though sensitive, are naturally less focused than in a completely closed concert hall. Perhaps it was the need for this adjustment which took some of the life out of the first movements of the Beethoven symphony, but the scherzo-like finale showed the orchestra in the delicate sheen and tonal glamour to which subscribers in Symphony Hall are accustomed. The introduction to Schumann's "Spring" Symphony unflooded a deliciously dreamy somnolence in response to the first clarion call of the trumpets. As the symphony developed, the strings sang with youthful fervor. The woodwinds responded to the vernal fancy of composer and conductor and the finale was a triumph of lightness and grace.

Sibelius's popular First Symphony brought this first program to a close of epic grandeur.

In General

The present season of three weeks is the longest in the history of the Berkshire Festival, and it promises to be the best patronized. The programs for remaining concerts include a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass, Tchaikovsky anniversary performances of the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Symphonies and solo appearances of Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano.

The chorus of the B Minor Mass will consist of students of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which was inaugurated this season in connection with the Festival, and which represents the fruition of a long cherished dream of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's distinguished conductor.

The chief physical improvement this year in the music shed lies in the 3000 comfortable chairs which now replace the benches of previous seasons. Built after the plans of the famous Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, the shed cost just under $100,000—all but $20,000 of which was contributed from within a radius of 50 miles of Stockbridge. The stage, like the rest of the auditorium, is extremely simple, but well lighted and equipped. The superb acoustics are still the shed's most attractive feature.

The green vistas of field and forest to the sides and back obviate all need for further decoration. Yet one of the most pressing practical needs for next season is of shutters which can, in an emergency, shut off this vista, and protect the audience against wind and rain. It would also be useful to be able to close the shed in winter.

THIS CLIPP

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1940

Society Turns Out for Festival

Washington, New York and Boston People Among Thousands at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 2—Before an audience of more than 6000, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave last night the first concert in the seventh annual Berkshire music festival. The eminent conductor was given an ovation. For the first time, the festival this year is to consist of nine concerts over three successive weekends.

In the distinguished audience last night, larger than the first night last year, were composers and professional men and women. For society it was one of the events of the season in Berkshire

In the box with Mrs Norman H. Davis, wife of the president of the National Red Cross was Mrs Woodrow Wilson of Washington, widow of the World war President.

Many Students Attend

Several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and officers of the festival organization, including Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president, occupied boxes. The concert was also heard by nearly 400 students attending the Tanglewood Summer School of Music, organized this summer by Dr Koussevitzky. Hundreds of music scholars from all over Western Massachusetts were present.

Many arrived early to stroll over the closely cropped lawns made verdant as in early spring by many showers. The gardens also were admired. They were laid out more than 40 years ago by the late Mr and Mrs Richard Dixey of Boston, parents of Mrs Gorham Brooks, who, with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave historic Tanglewood with its background and tradition of 80 years to the orchestra, Ward J. Gaston, Tanglewood superintendent, has worked night and day for months to make everything perfect.

No Trouble With Cars

Since last year all music benches have been eliminated and comfortable metal folding chairs have replaced them. Parking arrangements, directed by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre, were excellent. With plenty of room in the parking area for 3000 cars there was practically no delay coming or going. The sheriff was assisted by Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings and 45 members of the American Legion.

The large corps of ushers was in charge of Willard M. Sistare, and Miss Martha E. Hick directed a group of young women who gave out programs. Policemen Francis E. Dwyer and Thomas V. Broderick of Pittsfield, with two officers from Lenox, directed cars containing occupants of the boxes who entered the grounds from the south entrance on the Hawthorne avenue side. No other cars were allowed within the eight-foot wire fence which enclosed the grounds.

Highway traffic was well handled by 10 state patrolmen under command of Lieut John T. McLaughlin of Northampton. A corps of 90 newspapers and magazine writers were present tonight. Robert W. Tryon, manager of the Pittsfield office of the Western Union, had four special wires set up in the Tanglewood administration building to handle the press.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began the seventh chapter of its history tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of this summer's nine concerts in the music shed in the Tanglewood Estate. The addition of three programs to the quota of six offered in the last three seasons did not seem to have affected the patronage for each individual event. Last night's audience was estimated at more than 6,000, and still larger crowds, according to the estimate of advance sales, are expected for the concerts of next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky, welcomed on his first appearance of the evening with an enthusiasm characteristic of Berkshire festival gatherings, presented a program appropriate for an inaugural concert, consisting of the first symphonies of three eminent composers written at the beginning, the middle and the end of the nineteenth century, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. All three works are familiar to any fairly regular patrons of symphonic activities, but they have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single list. This juxtaposition gave their hearers an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of symphonic writing and to note how far each composer's musical individuality had developed at the time when he completed his first essay in this form.

This festival has attained its present status as one of the principal fixtures of the American musical calendar, its artistic prestige and individuality and widespread appeal, within a relatively short time. The late Henry Hadley conducted the first two series in 1934 and 1935 on the Hanna Farm. In 1936, the festival authorities engaged the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in an alliance which has proved to be permanent. The three concerts of that summer on the Holmwood Estate made the festival an established institution. The following season, of six concerts, was the first to be held t Tanglewood, given by its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent festival site. The summer of 1938 brought the opening of the music shed.

The large building, open at the sides, permits the music to be heard far beyond its borders, and has not substantially changed in appearance since last summer, but new seats have been installed in the forward sections. The color of the blue and red chairs corresponds to the color of the tickets. The benches of the first Tanglewood concerts serve now as a reserve for the seating of particularly large crowds. The new organ in the auditorium will be first played in the performance of Bach's B Minor mass on Aug. 15. The item on the list of projected improvements which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, considers most immediately desirable, is the installation of shutters which can be rolled down in the event of rain or to ward off chilly breezes.

Serge Koussevitzky

Who conducted the opening concert of this year's Berkshire Festival last night

Miss Robinson Smith also pointed out today that such shutters would be valuable in protecting the building from damage by severe weather during the winters, and should therefore be regarded as an investment.

So far as this evening was concerned, the weather offered not the slightest ground for complaint, proving to be clear, calm and cool, while the twilight lent added color to the general scene of the grounds, lawns trees and buildings as the crowd gathered before the concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of his orchestra have been here since early July to fill their duties as director and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, whose first session at Tanglewood culminates with the festival. The rest of the orchestra arrived on Monday and immediately began an intensive rehearsal schedule. The annual special rehearsal for Berkshire festival members will be held Saturday morning.

What with the journalistic timetable, detailed comment on the concert itself must await a later dispatch, but the performance of the Beethoven Symphony and of the first movement of the Schumann gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards customarily associated with the work of this admirable orchestra. The interpretation of these works, marked by a pervasive spirit, also spoke well for the acoustic conditions of the music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Full details have not yet been announced for the benefit concert to be held at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, but tonight's program books revealed that the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky and the musical forces of the Berkshire Music Center would take part in this unusual event. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be among the soloists. Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for the New York Herald Tribune, is to speak.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS

Koussevitzky Gives Trio of First Symphonies.

By IRVING KOLODIN.
Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—The one major musical festival of the day to which an audience still can listen with no glances aloft save to consider the weather, began its seventh season here last night under ideal conditions. These included an audience of nearly 6,000 and a blessedly cool evening as well as the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. Since this is the first year in which the festival will continue for three weeks, the size of this opening audience was regarded with especial satisfaction.

Apparently Mr. Koussevitzky is an earnest subscriber to the doctrine of "First things first," for his opening program was devoted to the initial symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

An ingenious as well as an interesting plan, it presented in succession perhaps the most original of first symphonies, the most mature of first symphonies, and well—at least the most Sibelian of such works. For those who were minded to consider such points it was also instructive to observe the increasing orchestral resources at the disposal of three men undertaking similar projects in three different eras, a point that this brilliant orchestra made with especial forcefulness.

If one could undertake a distinction among works and performances so uniformly arousing, it would be on behalf of the Schumann symphony, the least played of them and in many ways the most refreshing. Mr. Koussevitzky made a clarion call of the opening horn fanfare, and a true paean of joy of the whole work. Certainly one can imagine nothing more rapturously beautiful than the sound the strings produced in the larghetto.

The conductor entered amid a standing, applauding orchestra and received a welcome from the audience that was as fond as it was respectful.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE-SUN

AUG 2 - 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY RECEIVED

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (A.P.)—Six thousand assembled last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of there first symphonies.

Boston Transcript Aug. 2, 1940

MUSIC

Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky Open Three-Week Season in the Shed at 'Tanglewood'

By EDWARD DOWNES

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2—After a threatening heat of the morning, cool, almost cold breezes and a cloudless sky greeted the brilliant crowd of 5800 music lovers who gathered here last night for the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The first program consisted of three first symphonies, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

The vast lawn before the music shed was spotted with color as gay summer gowns, dinner jackets and white linen suits paraded the grounds of the Boston Symphony's estate, "Tanglewood," for an hour before the actual beginning of the concert. Just at twilight the crowd poured into the music shed and as evening deepened, the trees, which border the shed on two sides, darkened into silhouettes with a bright, starlit sky beyond.

Sharing an Ovation

As he entered the platform, Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted with a thunderous ovation which he insisted upon sharing with the orchestra. It took moments for ears accustomed to hearing music indoors to adjust themselves to the acoustics, which, though sensitive, are naturally less focused than in a completely closed concert hall. Perhaps it was the need for this adjustment which took some of the life out of the first movements of the Beethoven symphony, but the scherzo-like finale showed the orchestra in the delicate sheen and tonal glamour to which subscribers in Symphony Hall are accustomed. The introduction to Schumann's "Spring" Symphony unflooded a deliciously dreamy somnolence in response to the first clarion call of the trumpets. As the symphony developed, the strings sang with youthful fervor. The woodwinds responded to the vernal fancy of composer and conductor and the finale was a triumph of lightness and grace.

Sibelius's popular First Symphony brought this first program to a close of epic grandeur.

In General

The present season of three weeks is the longest in the history of the Berkshire Festival, and it promises to be the best patronized. The programs for remaining concerts include a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass, Tchaikovsky anniversary performances of the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Symphonies and solo appearances of Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano.

The chorus of the B Minor Mass will consist of students of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which was inaugurated this season in connection with the Festival, and which represents the fruition of a long cherished dream of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's distinguished conductor.

The chief physical improvement this year in the music shed lies in the 3000 comfortable chairs which now replace the benches of previous seasons. Built after the plans of the famous Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, the shed cost just under $100,000—all but $20,000 of which was contributed from within a radius of 50 miles of Stockbridge. The stage, like the rest of the auditorium, is extremely simple, but well lighted and equipped. The superb acoustics are still the shed's most attractive feature.

The green vistas of field and forest to the sides and back obviate all need for further decoration. Yet one of the most pressing practical needs for next season is of shutters which can, in an emergency, shut off this vista, and protect the audience against wind and rain. It would also be useful to be able to close the shed in winter.

THIS CLIPP
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

Society Turns Out for Festival

Washington, New York and Boston People Among Thousands at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 2—Before an audience of more than 6000, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave last night the first concert in the seventh annual Berkshire music festival. The eminent conductor was given an ovation. For the first time, the festival this year is to consist of nine concerts over three successive weekends.

In the distinguished audience last night, larger than the first night last year, were composers and professional men and women. For society it was one of the events of the season in Berkshire

In the box with Mrs Norman H. Davis, wife of the president of the National Red Cross was Mrs Woodrow Wilson of Washington, widow of the World war President.

Many Students Attend

Several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and officers of the festival organization, including Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president, occupied boxes. The concert was also heard by nearly 400 students attending the Tanglewood Summer School of Music, organized this summer by Dr Koussevitzky. Hundreds of music scholars from all over Western Massachusetts were present.

Many arrived early to stroll over the closely cropped lawns made verdant as in early spring by many showers. The gardens also were admired. They were laid out more than 40 years ago by the late Mr and Mrs Richard Dixey of Boston, parents of Mrs Gorham Brooks, who, with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave historic Tanglewood with its background and tradition of 80 years to the orchestra. Ward J. Gaston, Tanglewood superintendent, has worked night and day for months to make everything perfect.

No Trouble With Cars

Since last year all music benches have been eliminated and comfortable metal folding chairs have replaced them. Parking arrangements, directed by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre, were excellent. With plenty of room in the parking area for 3000 cars there was practically no delay coming or going. The sheriff was assisted by Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings and 45 members of the American Legion.

The large corps of ushers was in charge of Willard M. Sistare, and Miss Martha E. Hick directed a group of young women who gave out programs. Policemen Francis E. Dwyer and Thomas V. Broderick of Pittsfield, with two officers from Lenox, directed cars containing occupants of the boxes who entered the grounds from the south entrance on the Hawthorne avenue side. No other cars were allowed within the eight-foot wire fence which enclosed the grounds.

Highway traffic was well handled by 10 state patrolmen under command of Lieut John T. McLaughlin of Northampton. A corps of 90 newspapers and magazine writers were present tonight. Robert W. Tryon, manager of the Pittsfield office of the Western Union, had four special wires set up in the Tanglewood administration building to handle the press.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.— The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began the seventh chapter of its history tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of this summer's nine concerts in the music shed in the Tanglewood Estate. The addition of three programs to the quota of six offered in the last three seasons did not seem to have affected the patronage for each individual event. Last night's audience was estimated at more than 6,000, and still larger crowds, according to the estimate of advance sales, are expected for the concerts of next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

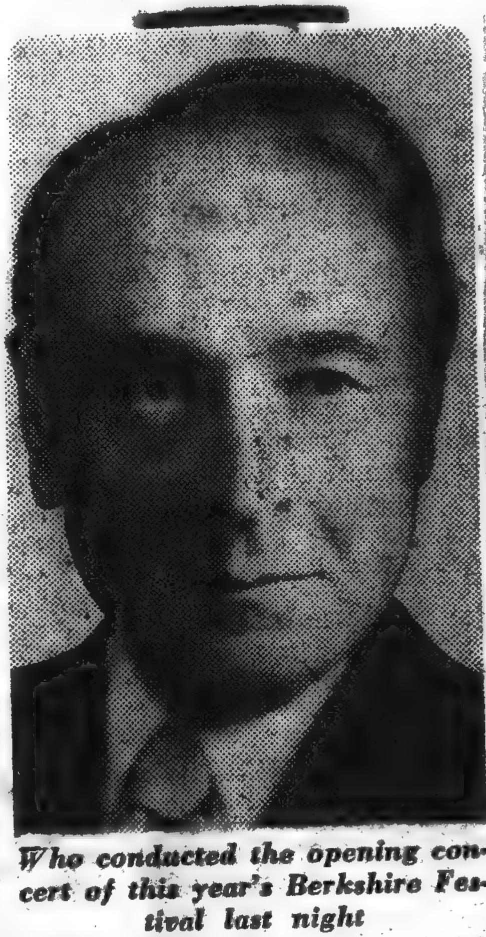
Dr. Koussevitzky, welcomed on his first appearance of the evening with an enthusiasm characteristic of Berkshire festival gatherings, presented a program appropriate for an inaugural concert, consisting of the first symphonies of three eminent composers written at the beginning, the middle and the end of the nineteenth century, those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. All three works are familiar to any fairly regular patrons of symphonic activities, but they have seldom, if ever, been presented before in a single list. This juxtaposition gave their hearers an unusual opportunity to compare three characteristic styles of symphonic writing and to note how far each composer's musical individuality had developed at the time when he completed his first essay in this form.

This festival has attained its present status as one of the principal fixtures of the American musical calendar, its artistic prestige and individuality and widespread appeal, within a relatively short time. The late Henry Hadley conducted the first two series in 1934 and 1935 on the Hanna Farm. In 1936, the festival authorities engaged the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in an alliance which has proved to be permanent. The three concerts of that summer on the Holmwood Estate made the festival an established institution. The following season, of six concerts, was the first to be held at Tanglewood, given by its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent festival site. The summer of 1938 brought the opening of the music shed.

The large building, open at the sides, permits the music to be heard far beyond its borders, and has not substantially changed in appearance since last summer, but new seats have been installed in the forward sections. The color of the blue and red chairs corresponds to the color of the tickets. The benches of the first Tanglewood concerts serve now as a reserve for the seating of particularly large crowds. The new organ in the auditorium will be first played in the performance of Bach's B Minor mass on Aug. 15. The item on the list of projected improvements which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, considers most immediately desirable, is the installation of shutters which can be rolled down in the event of rain or to ward off chilly breezes.

Miss Robinson Smith also pointed out today that such shutters would be valuable in protecting the building from damage by severe weather during the winters, and should therefore be regarded as an investment.

Serge Koussevitzky



Who conducted the opening concert of this year's Berkshire Festival last night

So far as this evening was concerned, the weather offered not the slightest ground for complaint, proving to be clear, calm and cool, while the twilight lent added color to the general scene of the grounds, lawns trees and buildings as the crowd gathered before the concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky and several members of his orchestra have been here since early July to fill their duties as director and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center, whose first session at Tanglewood culminates with the festival. The rest of the orchestra arrived on Monday and immediately began an intensive rehearsal schedule. The annual special rehearsal for Berkshire festival members will be held Saturday morning.

What with the journalistic timetable, detailed comment on the concert itself must await a later dispatch, but the performance of the Beethoven Symphony and of the first movement of the Schumann gave evidence of the careful preparation and high instrumental standards customarily associated with the work of this admirable orchestra. The interpretation of these works, marked by a pervasive spirit, also spoke well for the acoustic conditions of the music shed in the clarity of detail with which the music reached its listeners.

Full details have not yet been announced for the benefit concert to be held at Tanglewood on Friday evening, Aug. 16, for the Allied Relief Fund, but tonight's program books revealed that the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitsky and the musical forces of the Berkshire Music Center would take part in this unusual event. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will be among the soloists. Miss Dorothy Thompson, special writer for the New York Herald Tribune, is to speak.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS

Koussevitzsky Gives Trio of First Symphonies.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—The one major musical festival of the day to which an audience still can listen with no glances aloft save to consider the weather, began its seventh season here last night under ideal conditions. These included an audience of nearly 6,000 and a blessedly cool evening as well as the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. Since this is the first year in which the festival will continue for three weeks, the size of this opening audience was regarded with especial satisfaction.

Apparently Mr. Koussevitzky is an earnest subscriber to the doctrine of "First things first," for his opening program was devoted to the initial symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

An ingenious as well as an interesting plan, it presented in succession perhaps the most original of first symphonies, the most mature of first symphonies, and well—at least the most Sibelian of such works. For those who were minded to consider such points it was also instructive to observe the increasing orchestral resources at the disposal of three men undertaking similar projects in three different eras, a point that this brilliant orchestra made with especial forcefulness.

If one could undertake a distinction among works and performances so uniformly arousing, it would be on behalf of the Schumann symphony, the least played of them and in many ways the most refreshing. Mr. Koussevitzky made a clarion call of the opening horn fanfare, and a true paean of joy of the whole work. Certainly one can imagine nothing more rapturously beautiful than the sound the strings produced in the larghetto.

The conductor entered amid a standing, applauding orchestra and received a welcome from the audience that was as fond as it was respectful.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE-SUN

AUG 2 - 1940

KOUSSEVITZKY RECEIVED

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (A.P.)—Six thousand assembled last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of there first symphonies.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 2 - 1940

8

First Night at America's Salzburg

(Republican Staff Photo)

One of the boxes at the gala opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, last night. In the the front row are Mr and Mrs Kentish and Miss Ruth Posselt, musicians, and in back are Mrs Franklin Hobbs of Boston, Rand Smith, opera student at the music center, and Mrs Alvan T. Fuller, wife of the former governor of Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

6,000 Hear Koussevitzky Open Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—Six thousand people assembled under a typical Berkshire sky of tumbling clouds last night to hear Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius First—all dear to Koussevitsky's heart, and particularly those by Sibelius and Beethoven.

There have been few more exciting performances in the history of the festival, and for that matter few more excited audiences. Koussevitsky's invariable rule against slacking his standards because his audience wears summer flannels instead of tails and fur coats was proved once again.

For that matter, the audience was probably as distinguished a group of men and women in all fields as could be assembled for any summer event—since Lenox and Stockbridge, between which lies the magnificent Tanglewood estate on which the orchestra plays, have been for decades a summer haven for many important people. And hundreds of others, from all parts of America and Europe, are added each August to festival audiences.

This summer there is an added attraction in Dr. Koussevitsky's astonishing new "music center." This is an unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about what once were garages and barns, and of course, the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways — a smaller professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitsky himself and containing many members of the Boston Symphony and a larger group of people who wish to widen their musical horizons without thought of professional careers.

6000 Hear First Concert Of Seventh Music Festival

Society Event Fills Music Shed

Nine Programs This Year for First Time — Mrs Woodrow Wilson Attends

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 1—Before an audience of more than 6000, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave tonight the first concert in the seventh annual Berkshire music festival. The eminent conductor was given an ovation. For the first time, the festival this year is to consist of nine concerts over three successive weekends.

In the distinguished audience tonight, larger than the first night last year, were composers and professional men and women. For society it was one of the events of the season in Berkshire.

In the box with Mrs Norman H. Davis, wife of the president of the National Red Cross, was Mrs Woodrow Wilson of Washington, widow of the World war President.

Many Students Attend

Several trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and officers of the festival organization, including Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president, occupied boxes. The concert was also heard by nearly 400 students attending the Tanglewood Summer School of Music, organized this summer by Dr Koussevitzky. Hundreds of music scholars from all over Western Massachusetts were present.

(Continued on Second Page)

Many arrived early to stroll over the closely cropped lawns made verdant as in early spring by many showers. The gardens also were admired. They were laid out more than 40 years ago by the late Mr and Mrs Richard Dixey of Boston, parents of Mrs Gorham Brooks, who, with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave historic Tanglewood with its background and tradition of 80 years to the orchestra. Ward J. Gaston, Tanglewood superintendent, has worked night and day for months to make everything perfect.

No Trouble With Cars

Since last year all music benches have been eliminated and comfortable metal folding chairs have replaced them. Parking arrangements, directed by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre, were excellent. With plenty of room in the parking area for 3000 cars there was practically no delay coming or going. The sheriff was assisted by Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings and 45 members of the American Legion.

The large corps of ushers was in charge of Willard M. Sistare, and Miss Martha E. Hick directed a group of young women who gave out programs. Policemen Francis E. Dwyer and Thomas V. Broderick of Pittsfield, with two officers from Lenox, directed cars containing occupants of the boxes who entered the grounds from the south entrance on the Hawthorne avenue side. No other cars were allowed within the eight-foot wire fence which enclosed the grounds.

Highway traffic was well handled by 10 state patrolmen under command of Lieut John T. McLaughlin of Northampton. A corps of 90 newspapers and magazine writers were present tonight. Robert W. Tryon, manager of the Pittsfield office of the Western Union, had four special wires set up in the Tanglewood administration building to handle the press.

Season Started Without Furore

First Symphonies of Great Composers Selected by Serge Koussevitzky

By FRANCIS REGAL

The seventh of the Berkshire Symphonic festivals given by the Boston Symphony orchestra opened tonight at the orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood, under ideal conditions for semi-open air concerts. It makes a difference even to enthusiasts, and most of all it makes a difference to the orchestral musicians, who have a standard of impeccability to maintain regardless of the weather.

Less fortunate, during the past week or two, have been the musicians from all parts of the country who have been taking part in the activities of the Tanglewood music center, but they have, no doubt, been too deeply absorbed in their work to give heed to heat or humidity. This is the first year that this long-projected music center has been functioning, and the visitor to the festival proper, which began tonight, notices the difference which it makes in the musical atmosphere. It is like entering a theater when the curtain rises for the second act.

"Inner Circle" at Music Center

The varied work of the music center is creating an intimate inner circle the existence of which the transient visitor quickly feels and finds interesting even when looking in from outside. It gives a new solidity to the festival, a firm inner core of professional sincerity and amateur devotion which is making Tanglewood one of the world's chief meeting places for musicians and musical enthusiasts.

(Continued on Second Page)

In this stimulating atmosphere sensationalism would be out of place, and no effort was made tonight to open the festival with pomp and circumstance. On the contrary, Dr Koussevitzky chose for his first program three symphonies which had in common simply the fact that they were the first symphonies of three great composers—Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

In a way this is an arbitrary principle of selection, and to carry it very far would hardly be worth-while. Yet because of the unique and dominant place held by the symphonic form in orchestral music the first venture of a gifted composer in this field is usually of interest, and the collocation of these three beautiful works by musicians widely different in period and in type proved highly instructive and provocative of thought.

Beethoven was probably chiefly to blame for the anxious worry with which later composers addressed themselves to the task of producing a symphony. To Haydn or Mozart it was no such formidable affair, and their works are as charming and as beloved as ever. But the titanic genius of Beethoven created the tradition that a symphony must be grand and profound as well as beautiful, and even his relapse into a lighter vein in the symphonies bearing even numbers has not lightened the burden of his successors. An 18th-century composer might turn [illegible] symphonies by scores or hundreds; the modern, feeling that each time he must "round St Peter's dome," sweats and struggles to produce even his symphonic No 1.

The cult of grandeur, which the genius of Beethoven imposed on the symphony, has at times depressed unjustly the fresh and delightful work which opened tonight's program. Aside from historical "cycles" it used to be unduly neglected and sometimes left to the ministrations of amateurs just promoted from the "Surprise" symphony. Fortunately, this patronizing view of the symphony in C major is passing, and Dr Koussevitzky, who did much to revive it, showed once more in his interpretation tonight that it is no mere echo of the 18th century but genuine Beethoven, a young lion but already roaring a little.

Tonight the roaring was fairly loud, and might have shocked the Vienna critic who wrote of this symphony after its first performance that "Unfortunately there was too much use of the wind instruments, so that the music sounded more as if written for wind band than for orchestra." However, this robustness of style tonight did not interfere with exquisite delicacy in the many beautiful light passages for the strings.

Three more different first ventures into the symphonic field would not be easy to find. Sibelius, the greatest symphonist of our time, had not fully found himself in his No 1, but his inexperience appears chiefly in a surplus of material. Later he learned how to secure greater results by greater economy and by cumulative effect.

Schumann, on the other hand, was hardly a symphonist at all, and the extraordinary beauty of this "Spring" symphony is due mainly to a subliminal rush of musical feeling. Neither form nor orchestration came easily to this poetic composer, but when inspiration was running high its flow filled and made glorious any form. He acquired more skill later, but did not often recapture the exultant buoyancy of this first symphony.

Old Salzburg Tradition Carried On in America

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Art Editor

Stockbridge, Aug. 1—(AP) — With less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theater, the Berkshire Symphonic festival began its seventh season tonight before a colorful international audience of nearly 6000 persons.

Although the festival association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which summer symphonic music has yet reached in America.

There are even those who insist that the Berkshire festival, as served by the great Boston Symphony orchestra, is the logical successor to the old Salzburg festival, in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol. Salzburg is hardly more than a memory to most of the thousands who used to attend each summer.

Serge Koussevitzky and his magnificent orchestra were heard tonight by an audience from every corner of America, and from most European countries as well. As always at the festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the winter in Boston's Symphony hall, and the program was rehearsed with the same fastidious care.

Koussevitzky has firmly refused to lower performance standards for his summer audience, and as a result the audience has grown beyond the extreme hopes of the original sponsors.

Tonight's program was made up of three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schuman and Sibelius. It was close to an ideal opening program and it was received with cheers by the audience. Tomorrow is vacation day but the festival resumes Saturday night and ends its first series with a concert Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

6000 Hear Boston Symphony.

By ROBERT BAGAR.

BERKSHIRE, Mass., Aug. 2.—With all the eclat, the pomp and the circumstance of an event of events, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, seventh annual version, opened here last night.

Robert Bagar.

Serge Koussevitzky, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, which is the regular festival organization, took his place before the white-coated men, shook hands with his concertmaster and plunged without further ado into the work at hand.

The Berkshire Festival is a unique one in that it comprises a series of symphonic concerts, thus differing from the historic music festivals of Salzburg and Florence of fond memory which supply the commodity in practically all of its have bee [illegible] certs, for if ever there was a neutral habitat for open-air music performance, Tanglewood is it.

The shed, shaped like a triangle, is completely covered above. The weather can get in, but it has no entree by way of the roof—a comforting idea.

It is situated in a cluster of tall trees.

The pilgrims come from far and near to this musical Mecca. Cars by the hundred choke up the avenues just before concert time and in general there is a healthy whoop-de-doo about the whole matter. They take their music seriously in the Berkshires.

As to the quality of the performance last night, the only word to describe it succinctly and completely is superior. Mr. Koussevitzky was in excellent fettle. He led his musicians through readings of the works that had all the authority, finish and expressiveness in the world.

* * *

Incomparable Playing.

One never ceases to wonder at the incomparable playing ability of the Bostonians, how they respond to the conductor's slightest wish, their complete co-operation.

The listener's attention seldom strays from what is going on musically. Runaway thoughts have little room to scamper in when the Boston Symphony plays. There was a blue note hit by one of the horns, however, in the last movement of the Schumann whose very abruptness brought into ocuus. If excitement was lacking in the performances of the first two works, that lack was attributed only to the music itself. While an entity in respect to numbering, the program was one of many contrasts and these were well revealed in the Koussevitzky interpretations.

Neverteless, it was the surge—the lulls and striking climaxes of the Sibelius work—that one remembers. The precise Beethoven and the oh, so happy Schumann that had gone before are to be recalled only with effort.

On Friday evening, August 16, the orchestra is to be joined by noted speakers and entertainers, fireworks and dancing for the benefit of the Allied relief fund. The program, it was announced last evening, is to begin at 6 and continue until late at night.

The second regular program, Saturday evening, includes the overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz, Strauss' "Don Quixotte" variations with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, and Jean Le Franc, viola, as soloists, Roy Harris' third symphony, the "Prelude to the afternoon of a faun" by Debussy and Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite

D. H. W.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—This summer there is an added attraction here in Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's new "Music Center." This is a unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about onetime garages and barns and the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways—a professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitzky and containing many members of the Boston Symphony, and a larger group who don't plan professional careers.

The last group has a large chorus for its central activity, and this will be heard in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass on the last Thursday of the festival.

Visitors yesterday and today heard also the two school orchestras rehearsing, and innumerable chamber music groups.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

AUG 2 - 1940

6,000 Hear Koussevitzky Open Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—Six thousand people assembled under a typical Berkshire sky of tumbling clouds last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius First—all dear to Koussevitzky's heart, and particularly those by Sibelius and Beethoven.

There have been few more exciting performances in the history of the festival, and for that matter few more excited audiences. Koussevitzky's invariable rule against slacking his standards because his audience wears summer flannels instead of tails and fur coats was proved once again.

For that matter, the audience was probably as distinguished a group of men and women in all fields as could be assembled for any summer event—since Lenox and Stockbridge, between which lies the magnificent Tanglewood estate on which the orchestra plays, have been for decades a summer haven for many important people. And hundreds of others, from all parts of America and Europe, are added each August to festival audiences.

This summer there is an added attraction in Dr. Koussevitzky's astonishing new "music center." This is an unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about what once were garages and barns, and of course, the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways — a smaller professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitsky himself and containing many members of the Boston Symphony and a larger group of people who wish to widen their musical horizons without thought of professional careers.

---

alzburg

Symphonic festival at Tangle- Miss Ruth Posselt, musicians, ent at the music center, and assachusetts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

6000 Hear Boston Symphony.

By ROBERT BAGAR.

BERKSHIRE, Mass., Aug. 2.—With all the eclat, the pomp and the circumstance of an event of events, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, seventh annual version, opened here last night.

Serge Koussevitzky, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, which is the regular festival organization, took his place before the white-coated men, shook hands with his concertmaster and plunged without further ado into the work at hand.

Robert Bagar.

The Berkshire Festival is a unique one in that it comprises a series of symphonic concerts, thus differing from the historic music festivals of Salzburg and Florence of fond memory which supply the commodity in practically all of its n air vith-t the ic in never have bee[illegible] erts, for if ever there was a neutral habitat for open-air music performance, Tanglewood is it.

The shed, shaped like a triangle, is completely covered above. The weather can get in, but it has no entree by way of the roof—a comforting idea.

It is situated in a cluster of tall trees.

The pilgrims come from far and near to this musical Mecca. Cars by the hundred choke up the avenues just before concert time and in general there is a healthy whoop-de-doo about the whole matter. They take their music seriously in the Berkshires.

As to the quality of the performance last night, the only word to describe it succinctly and completely is superior. Mr. Koussevitzky was in excellent fettle. He led his musicians through readings of the works that had all the authority, finish and expressiveness in the world.

* * *

Incomparable Playing.

One never ceases to wonder at the incomparable playing ability of the Bostonians, how they respond to the conductor's slightest wish, their complete co-operation.

The listener's attention seldom strays from what is going on musically. Runaway thoughts have little room to scamper in when the Boston Symphony plays. There was a blue note hit by one of the horns, however, in the last movement of the Schumann whose very abruptness brought into ocu-uito an's

One rob-
the call it in con-
the

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—This summer there is an added attraction here in Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's new "Music Center." This is a unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about one-time garages and barns and the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways—a professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitzky and containing many members of the Boston Symphony, and a larger group who don't plan professional careers.

The last group has a large chorus for its central activity, and this will be heard in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass on the last Thursday of the festival.

Visitors yesterday and today heard also the two school orchestras rehearsing, and innumerable chamber music groups.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Is Opened Again

Six Thousand People Hear Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony in Unusual Program

More than 6,000 people chilled to the weather and thrilled to Sibelius last evening as the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic festival opened at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, with all the attending excitement that has come to be associated with this great musical event.

The crowd arriving slowly and in ever-increasing numbers, finally to fill the huge shed and scatter over the lawn. The excited buzz of anticipation as the concert hour arrives. Serge Koussevitzky, the leader, the dramatist, making his practiced and familiar entrance when silence falls upon orchestra and audience. The first sweep of applause and the shouts of "bravo."

Then the music—now lovely and restful, now shimmering, now stirring, thunderous. The Boston Symphony orchestra expressing the worthier thoughts of man.

This first program comprised three first symphonies: Those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. If excitement was lacking in the performances of the first two works, that lack was attributed only to the music itself. While an entity in respect to numbering, the program was one of many contrasts and these were well revealed in the Koussevitzky interpretations.

Neverteless, it was the surge—the lulls and striking climaxes of the Sibelius work—that one remembers. The precise Beethoven and the oh, so happy Schumann that had gone before are to be recalled only with effort.

On Friday evening, August 16, the orchestra is to be joined by noted speakers and entertainers, fireworks and dancing for the benefit of the Allied relief fund. The program, it was announced last evening, is to begin at 6 and continue until late at night.

The second regular program, Saturday evening, includes the overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz, Strauss' "Don Quixotte" variations with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, and Jean Le Franc, viola, as soloists, Roy Harris' third symphony, the "Prelude to the afternoon of a faun" by Debussy and Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite

D. H. W.

alzburg

ymphonic festival at Tangle-
Miss Ruth Posselt, musicians, ent at the music center, and assachusetts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

AUG 2 - 1940

6,000 Hear Koussevitzky Open Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2 (AP)—Six thousand people assembled under a typical Berkshire sky of tumbling clouds last night to hear Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius First—all dear to Koussevitsky's heart, and particularly those by Sibelius and Beethoven.

There have been few more exciting performances in the history of the festival, and for that matter few more excited audiences. Koussevitsky's invariable rule against slacking his standards because his audience wears summer flannels instead of tails and fur coats was proved once again.

For that matter, the audience was probably as distinguished a group of men and women in all fields as could be assembled for any summer event—since Lenox and Stockbridge, between which lies the magnificent Tanglewood estate on which the orchestra plays, have been for decades a summer haven for many important people. And hundreds of others, from all parts of America and Europe, are added each August to festival audiences.

This summer there is an added attraction in Dr. Koussevitsky's astonishing new "music center." This is an unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about what once were garages and barns, and of course, the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways — a smaller professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitsky himself and containing many members of the Boston Symphony and a larger group of people who wish to widen their musical horizons without thought of professional careers.

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

6000 Hear Boston Symphony.

By ROBERT BAGAR.

BERKSHIRE, Mass., Aug. 2.—With all the eclat, the pomp and the circumstance of an event of events, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, seventh annual version, opened here last night.

Serge Koussevitzky, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, which is the regular festival organization, took his place before the white - coated men, shook hands with his concertmaster and plunged without further ado into the work at hand.

Robert Bagar.

The Berkshire Festival is a unique one in that it comprises a series of symphonic concerts, thus differing from the historic music festivals of Salzburg and Florence of fond memory which supply the commodity in practically all of its forms—operas, chamber concerts and, in some cases, even recitals.

* * *

6000 Hear Program.

Some six thousand persons gathered in the huge shed at Tanglewood heard a program of symphonic firsts; that is, the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

Mr. Koussevitzky naturally had his reasons for the selections but, whatever they were, the arrangement proved miraculous, open air and summer weather notwithstanding.

There are those who rail at the mere thought of serious music in al fresco surroundings.

Such carpers, however, never have been to Berkshire concerts, for if ever there was a neutral habitat for open-air music performance, Tanglewood is it.

The shed, shaped like a triangle, is completely covered above. The weather can get in, but it has no entree by way of the roof—a comforting idea.

It is situated in a cluster of tall trees.

The pilgrims come from far and near to this musical Mecca. Cars by the hundred choke up the avenues just before concert time and in general there is a healthy whoop-de-doo about the whole matter. They take their music seriously in the Berkshires.

As to the quality of the performance last night, the only word to describe it succinctly and completely is superior. Mr. Koussevitzky was in excellent fettle. He led his musicians through readings of the works that had all the authority, finish and expressiveness in the world.

* * *

Incomparable Playing.

One never ceases to wonder at the incomparable playing ability of the Bostonians, how they respond to the conductor's slightest wish, their complete co-operation.

The listener's attention seldom strays from what is going on musically. Runaway thoughts have little room to scamper in when the Boston Symphony plays. There was a blue note hit by one of the horns, however, in the last movement of the Schumann whose very abruptness brought into ocular focus a huge mosquito poised gracefully over the man's head several rows ahead. One was told later that this was probably the only mosquito in the Berkshires, Granddaddy, they call him, and he never fails to put in an appearance at the opening concert. There are wits even in the mountains.

* * *

Koussevitzky Has Unique Music School.

By the Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—This summer there is an added attraction here in Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's new "Music Center." This is a unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about one-time garages and barns and the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways — a professional group of about 100 which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitzky and containing many members of the Boston Symphony, and a larger group who don't plan professional careers.

The last group has a large chorus for its central activity, and this will be heard in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass on the last Thursday of the festival.

Visitors yesterday and today heard also the two school orchestras rehearsing, and innumerable chamber music groups.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1940

More than 6,000 people chill to the weather and thrilled Sibelius last evening as the 19 Berkshire Symphonic festiv opened at Tanglewood, Stoc bridge, with all the attending e citement that has come to be

50 Years on Main Street

WEEK-END CANDY SPECIALS:

Molasses Kisses	29c lb.	Mint Cuts	29c lb.
Jelly Sandwiches	39c lb.	Hard Candy	39c lb.
Turkish Paste	39c lb.	Mol. Chiplets	39c lb.
Old Fashions	49c lb.	Dingbats	49c lb.
Variety Trays	49c lb.	Jelly Pastilles	49c lb.
Sliced Nut Roll	59c lb.	Double Dipped Choc.	49c lb.

CANDY MAILED

WEEK-END BAKERY SPECIALS:

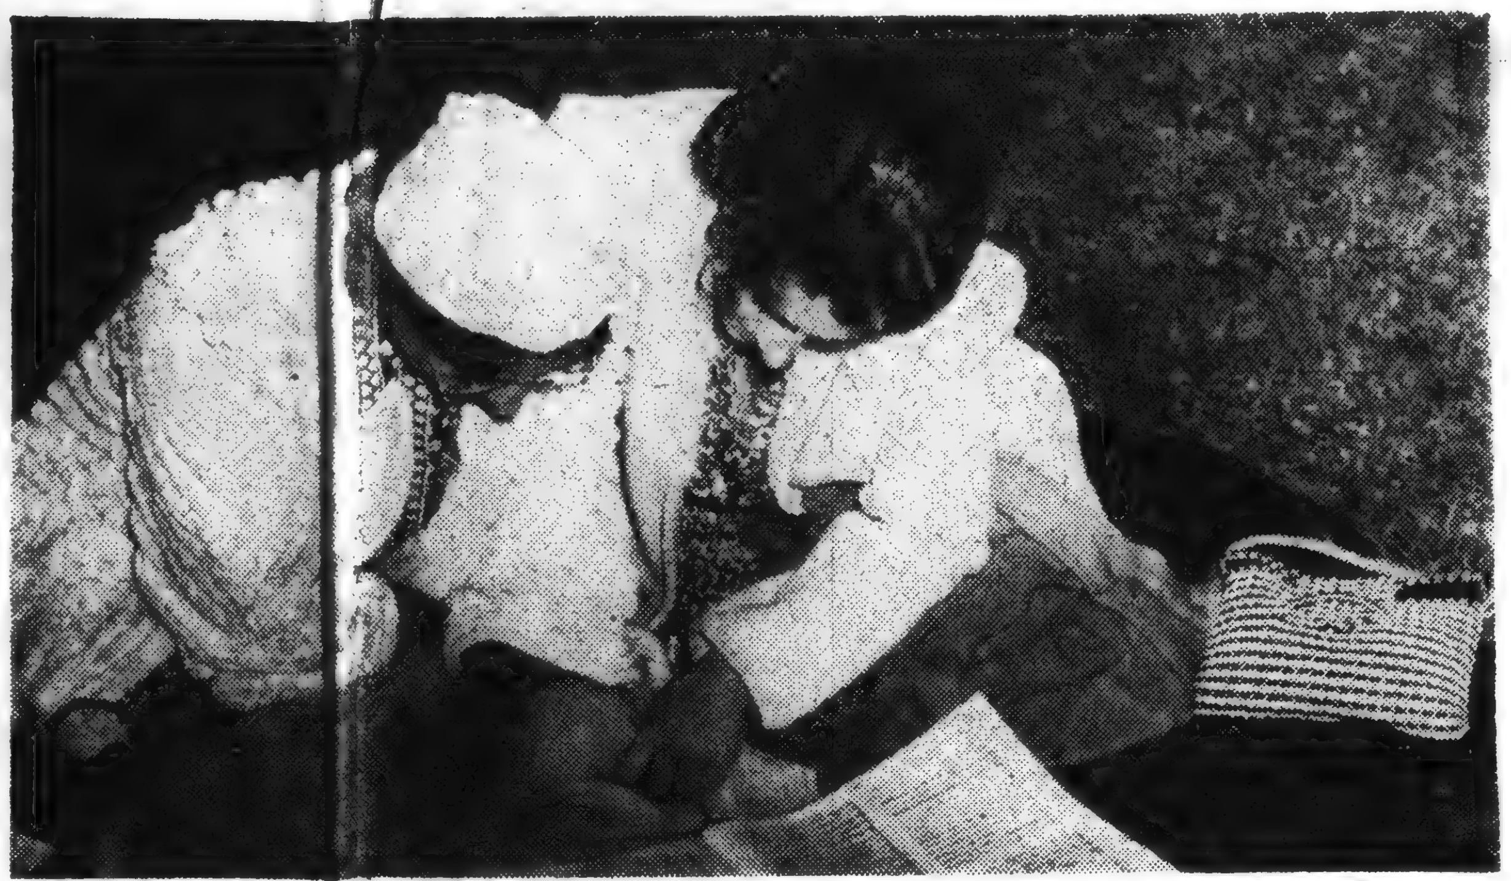
Mint Fudge Layer	30c
Date Nut Layer	30c
Orange Sponge	30c
Fudge Squares	5c
Open Blueberry Cake	35c
Asst. Cup Cakes	30c doz.
Coffee Rings	10c-25c
Brown Bread	15c

ALL OCCASIONS

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
G 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPI
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
AUG 2 - 1940

The Seventh Annual Festival Is Opened



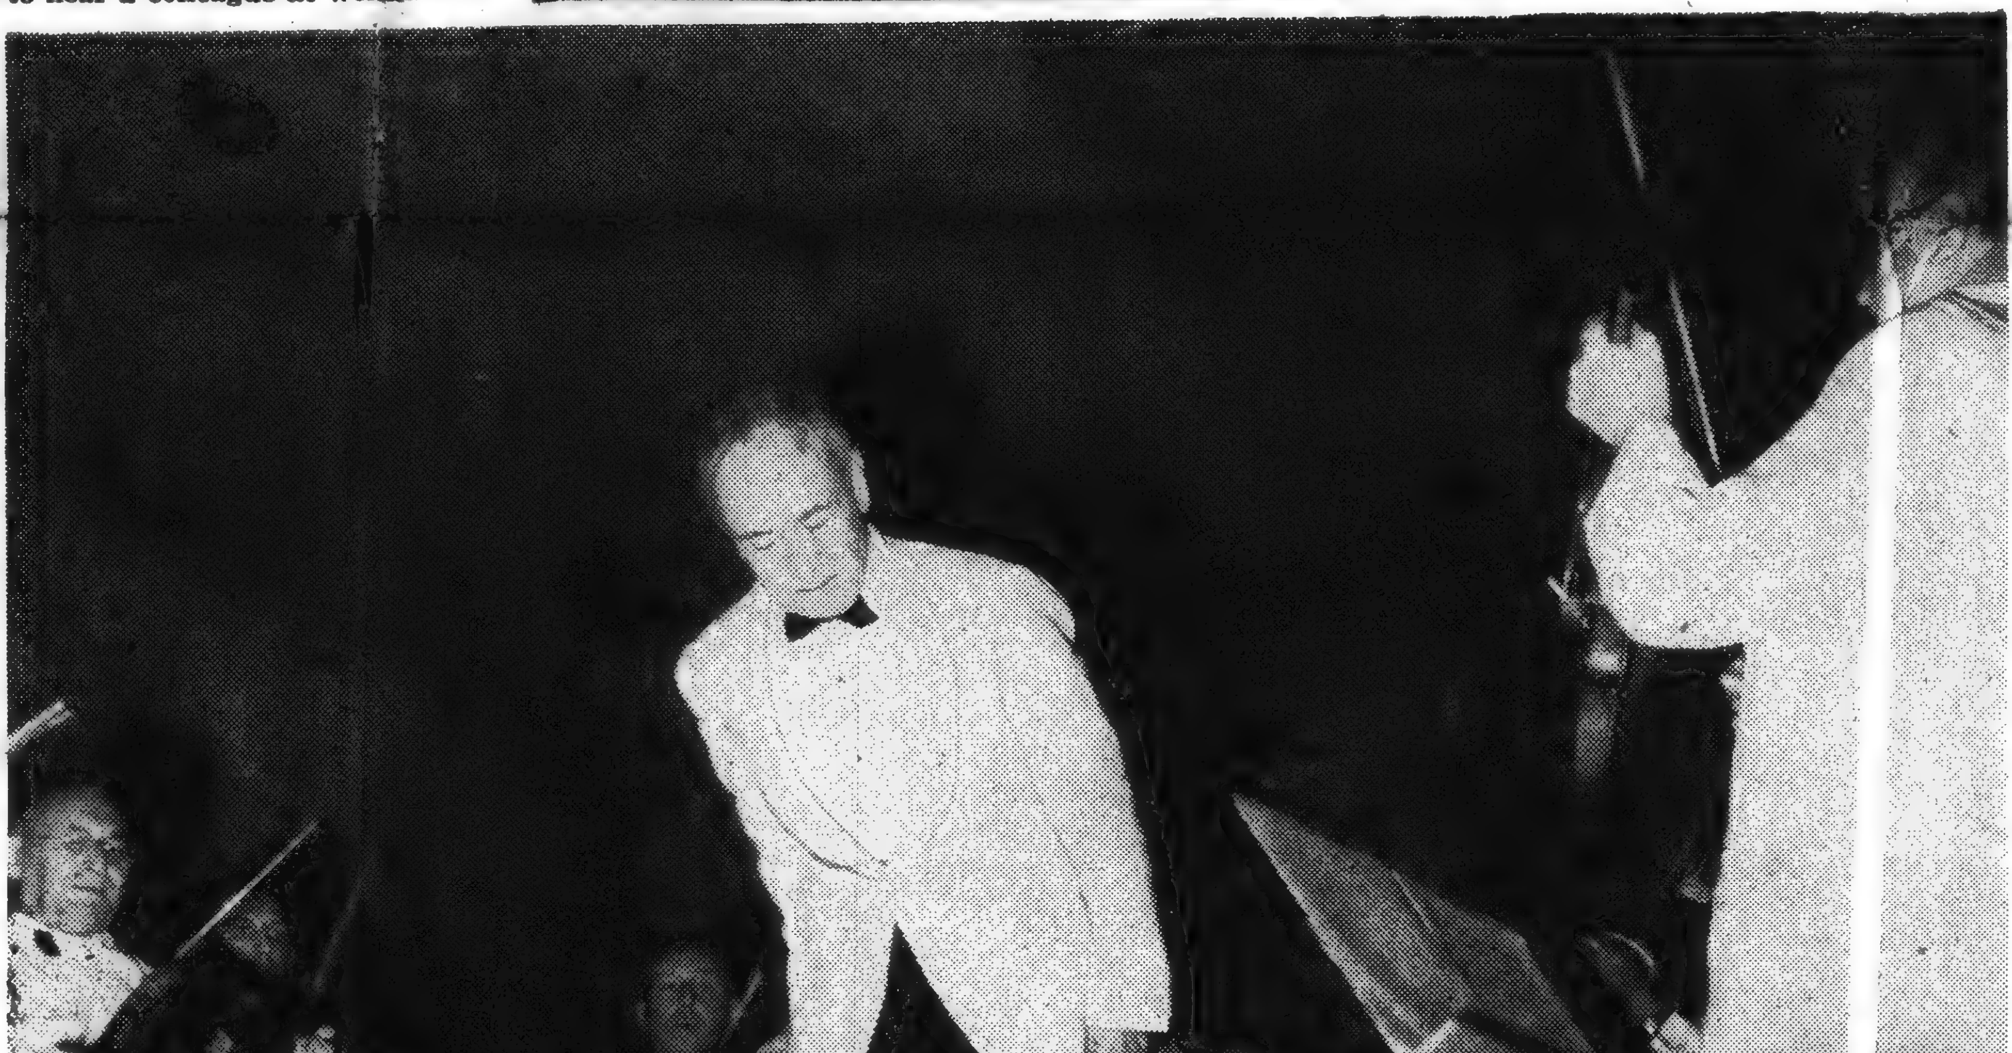
At the left Mrs. Cole Porter, wife of the famed composer of popular music, chats with a classicist, Lucrezia Bori, equally famed soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Above us, two enthusiastic lawn-listeners check on Dr. Koussevitzky's version of the Beethoven first by means of a score.

Albert Sterner of Richmond, noted artist, arrives (at left) with Mrs. Sterner at the box entrance.

Alanson B. Houghton of Washington, former United States ambassador to Great Britain, chats with Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown. At the right, Conductor Artur Rodzinski of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra arrives from his Stockbridge home to hear a colleague at work.

The refreshment tent, shining through the Tanglewood trees with all the brilliance of a carnival, presents a deceptive emptiness as the staff, under the supervision of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, prepares for the huge intermission rush.

John Shepard Jr., of Lenox, in beret and mauve evening coat, arrives at the box entrance with Mrs. William Huntley of Buffalo, N. Y. and Palm Beach, Fla.



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky bows to the plaudits of the opening-night audience of 6000 as he comes on stage to mark the formal opening of the seventh annual Festival.

A chauffeur puts his ear to Tanglewood's new wire fencing, the better to hear the strains of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Giraud Foster of Lenox and his box-guests provide a new note for the box entrance by arriving in a station wagon from Mr. Foster's estate, Bellefontaine.

One of the evening's most distinguished guests was Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, here shown as she chatted with friends in the box of Mrs. Norman H. Davis. At left, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas hear the concert from the blue section.

82

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1940

st Leg of Semi-Final Se

aners Win
Tie for t Place

als Top Hashim's
B To Gain First ce Deadlock

CITY LEAGUE STANDING

	Won	Lost	Pct.
e	11	4	.733
ners	11	4	.733
	8	8	.500
afe	8	9	.471
	7	9	.438
CC	1	12	.077

ST NIGHT'S RESULTS
aners 14, Hashim's 8.

GAME TONIGHT
vs. Nation-Wide.

TOMORROW AFTERNOON
s. Mooney's Cafe.

oyal Cleaners drove their a first place tie with Nain the Shire City League t with a late rally that m a 14 to 8 victory over in a free hitting game at ark. The Cleaners pulled the last half of the fifth shim's had staged a thrill-
-run rally in the top half ning to tie the score. Bob lasted the distance for the win his eighth triumph eason but he was shelled Hashim's batters who col-hits, two more than the were able to get off the offerings of Francis d Ralph Coty, who came fourth and was charged loss.

t Nation-Wide will at-gain an advantage of half efore Sunday's crucial en-with the Cleaners. The vill have their chance at whom they have beaten nes this year. Tomorrow the Plastics and Mooney's face each other at 2.30.
tolino's men are by no t of the race and a victory would give them an exhance of gaining on the Sunday's battle between ide and the Royal will start at 2.30 also.

Go In Front

's sent Lefty Guiles to d last night in an effort e Royals but the big fel-into trouble immediately. had opened the game
un when Ray Gifford Freddie Holden who had nd taken second on Lou sacrifice. A double by , Londo Froio's single, on rdon Turner played with long enough to allow go to second and Con-
gle produced two runs.
ners went out in order in d but scored four times in and twice in the fourth.
aston's men went to work
y in the fifth and rattled nsecutive base hits includ-
ng triple by Ray Gifford

The Referee's Sporting Chat

By JOHN M. FLYNN

Buddy Knox will fight Tommy Tucker in the next main bout at the Hawkins Stadium, Albany. Tucker won the decision in 10 rounds over Henry Cooper of the Bronx Tuesday night before a crowd of about 3000. They are heavyweights.

Pittsfield Horse Show

The 14th annual horse show of the Pittsfield Riding and Polo Club opened at Holmesdale today and will continue through tomorrow. As usual an excellent list of entries has been received. Lovers of horses, that step gracefully, will enjoy the show here. The competition should be interesting.

Series of Tournaments

The Wyantenuck Country Club's annual golf tournament opens today and continues through Sunday.

The Country Club of Pittsfield's annual invitation golf tourney will start Friday of next week and last three days. The North Adams Country Club's tournament will be held the following week end and the Greenock Country Club of Lee has fixed Sunday, Aug. 25 as the date of their annual open amateur tournament, a medal play event.

City League Games

Franco-Americans and Pittsfield Milk Exchange are to meet in a City League baseball game at Dorothy Deming Field tomorrow afternoon at 2.30. Polish-Americans and Wine AC are to play Sunday afternoon at 2.30.

Because of the fact that Pittsfield and Milford will meet in a semifinal contest in the Massachusetts championship competition of the American Legion Junior League at Dorothy Deming Field this evening the City League contest carded for tonight between the Polish-Americans and Mohawk Beverages was postponed.

Legion Team Keeps Winning

The Pittsfield team of the American Legion Junior Baseball League appears headed for a place in the finals of the Massachusetts championship. Coach Timmy Ryan's nine won 7-6 at Milford yesterday in the first game of the semifinal series. The second contest is slated for 5.15 this evening at Dorothy Deming Field. If a third game is necessary it will be put on here tomorrow afternoon.

The winner of the Pittsfield-Milford set will oppose Revere or Lynn in a series for the state honors. If Pittsfield beats Milford the first game of the Massachusetts finals will be played in this city Monday.

North Adams Bouts Tonight

An attractive boxing program has been arranged for tonight at the Meadowbrook Arena, North Adams. The main event between Jackie Jones of this city and Danny Buckley of Holyoke should be a merry struggle as both are good fighters. This scrap was scheduled three times for North Adams operate minor league teams such as is being done in Hartford by the Boston Bees.

It is Kamm's opinion that Pittsfield again will be in a baseball league comprised principally of New England cities. He says that there was more interest in the old Connecticut League and also in the Eastern League of 15 years ago than there is in the present Eastern League. Hartford is not a natural rival of teams in Pennsylvania. There always was much rivalry between Hartford and Springfield, Hartford and New Haven, Waterbury, Bridgeport or New Britain. Pittsfield-Albany rivalry is known and also the interest in meetings of Pittsfield and Springfield teams. The fact that 660 persons went from this city to Boston on the Elks' excursion to see the Red Sox meet Cleveland in a doubleheader is evidence that league baseball still is very popular with large numbers in this section.

Pete Wilson, a left-hander, who used to pitch in the Connecticut League, now operates a gas station in Bridgeport but is to return to his old trade, a toolmaker.

Al informed me that the benefit at Hartford for Hugh Rorty, former Eastern League umpire, netted $1085 but Hugh is so ill that he hardly realized what was done for him.

Did You Know That—

The Cincinnati Reds have spent $200,000 since 1937 trying to get a satisfactory left fielder. The latest man on the list is Mike Dejan, bought from Chattanooga for $30,000. Before the advent of Dejan there was Dusty Cooke who had a price tag of $15,000. Nino Bongiovanni was acquired in the draft for $7500 and Al Simmons had a try at the waiver price of $7500. The cost of Vince DiMaggio was in the higher brackets, $40,000. Frenchy Bordagaray joined the Reds in an even swap for Cooke and another trade sent Alex Kampouris, who cost $30,000, to the Giants in exchange for Wally Berger. Bud Hafey carried a $20,000 price tag. John Rizzo was landed in an even trade for DiMaggio but when the Reds later traded Rizzo to the Phils for Moris Arnovich they put up an extra $10,000. Dick West cost $25,000. He was an all-around player and is now being trained as a catcher at Indianapolis. Mike McCormick meant an outlay of $20,000. Whatever happens to Dejan, Joe Engel, the head man of the Chattanooga club, is already well satisfied. Engel, who used to scout for Washington, picked up Dejan for $750 when he was pitching for Wenatchee, Wash., a Yankee farm. Engel made him an outfielder and then sold him at a profit of $29,250 . . . When Rip Radcliff of the Browns, now leading American League hitter, came up to the Athletics in 1934, Connie Mack was looking for a catcher. Radcliff

N Bo

Jo
M In

NOR of Pit of Hol bout o
Adams
Meadow
Seven
The sh
Buck on pre ways g himself
Brand dleweig called Jones,
Berksh ledo, O middlew
Fiore
Charlie semifin Fiore donning mer an old tim
Fran Tommy four ro
Bennin
Auburn liminar see Edd
ing Jo
Dave D
Bud L
Sonny with G

Hil
Sen

To M Ti

Crossin second city a round softbal the Ad
Genera
The wi
The Barber eral E with th
Display on the noon a Gus basketb for th and th of Tra only fo der of hit a T

THIS CLIPP
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 2 - 1940

6,000 Gather At Tanglewood As Berkshire Festival Opens

Koussevitzky, Orchestra, Program Combine To Make A Perfect Night, Mr. Vreeland Says

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, saw the opening of the seventh and longest season of one of the world's great annual musical occasions last night when 6,000 people from nearly all States arrived at the spacious grounds to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. There will be 9 concerts this year, instead of 6.

The great white, fan-shaped shed here once more gleamed in its emerald setting for the thousands who hold Tanglewood their musical paradise.

SYMPHONIC FIRSTS

Tanglewood could never have been more glorious than during the hour or so before the concert. Lake Mackenac lay to the south in queenly placidness, and even after the concert began, the tall straight hemlocks were silhouetted against a faintly light sky, their lower boughs swaying in the breeze.

After about 45 seconds of applause as conductor Koussevitzky bowed before this first audience of the season (the orchestra joined in the applause), the Doctor pleasantly cut the demonstration short as he turned to his men, baton raised. A great concert began.

It was a program of symphonic firsts—Beethoven, Schumann, Sibelius. Appreciation was most deeply impressed by the opening bars of the Beethoven Symphony—because it was first. I was led to believe that my ears had grown calloused. Music out of doors, unamplified, sounding — I pause — perfect.

If brass ever sounded rich and flawless, it did so at the opening of the Schumann symphony — and so was its blending with the strings. If Beethoven was an impatient classicist, already bursting shackles. already freeing music, Schumann was already one of the emancipated, a he-man-artist in poetic ecstasy, and bending a little backwards in his freedom. Schumann, one of God's true priests, spoke. We knew he had died in Hell before he went to Heaven, that he had lived and loved and kept a diary. Last night we were drawn into world dreamed by a man of a past century. Beauty —the word lacks synonyms.

TANGLEWOOD ACOUSTICS

Sibelius spoke throughout the second half. That little-talked-of man in spotlighted Finland had messages for the whole world to hear; and if more people had listened longer, the world might suffer less.

The orchestra was at its best. Desired effects seem to be accomplished with no strain or effort. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were in the same mood, their music seemed to flow from a single source.

The much-publicized shed, dedicated in 1938, was from the standpoint of acoustics, a scientific enterprise, and a practical one. Much was written of its success that year and last. Last night it thrilled anew by the resonant and faithful reflection of tones.

SIDELIGHTS

It's curious how at this place (not during the concert, of course) everyone is interested in everybody else. You can see this by the way people look at each other. The crowd is motley to a limited extent and thick with celebrities. It would take a column to list them all. Arthur Rodzinski was prominent in a box in the center of the shed. There was Albert Spalding, cordial as ever, Hindemith, and so on.

* * *

Koussevitzky didn't like a cameraman who at the end of the first half pointed his camera and bulb at him from about 10 feet. He shooed him away impatiently—the flash didn't go off.

* * *

Sorry I'm not a fashion writer. But I think there's definite improvement in feminine formal attire over last summer.

* * *

Tomorrow night's program: "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Berlioz; "Don Quixote", fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character, Strauss—Gregor Piatigorsky, cello soloist, and Jean Lefranc, viola soloist; Symphony No. 3 (1 movement), Harris; prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun, Debussy; orchestral excerpts from "Daphnis et Chloe", Ravel.

Sunday afternoon it will be Symphony in E flat No. 39, Mozart; capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo, Stravinsky (Jesus Maria Sanroma, soloist); and Brahms' Second Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OWENSBORO, KY.
INQUIRER

AUG 2 - 1940

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL OPENS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2. (AP)—Six thousand people assembled last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire Symphonic festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies. These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius first.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLBURN, N.J
SHORT HILLS ITEM
8/2/40

Berkshire Music Festival

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America are now headed for Tanglewood for the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

The Festival will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and there will be concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The second series of concerts opening August8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist will appear as soloist the opening night.

The final series of concerts opening August 8, will commem- B. Minor Mass. The Festival Chorus made up of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard in this classic. The new organ will also be dedicated at this time.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano will be heard at the concert August 17. The Festival will close August 18 with Brahms Symphony No. 1 as the closing number.

★

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley W. Kagan of 22 Edgewood terrace, have been the recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Clark of Sea Girt.

★

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens 7th Season Brilliantly

Another enraptured first night audience nearly raised the lofty roof of the music shell at Tanglewood in Stockbridge last night as Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival. The 6000 seats within the shell were taken and the audience overflowed onto the spacious lawn where blankets, pillows, deck chairs and other summer furniture offered listeners not only protection from the damp grass but a star-studded ceiling.

It was a perfect night in every respect, none of the prosaic features connected with such an ambitious project detracting from the effectiveness of the musical program. It was a night for "firsts." Dr Koussevitzky had chosen to open this year's festival with the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. The performance, naturally, was first class, while the weather, still an important factor despite the permanent shell, was a great relief from the heat wave which has plagued this section of the country during the past week. Parking has been so expedited that there were no serious tie-ups coming or going and there were new shiny, metal seats to add the final touch of comfort. Backers of and boosters for the festival can well be proud of what has been done since the canvas "big top" was the stuffy and sometimes leaky protection against the weather. Evidence of the worth of the music school started this summer, awaits its test Thursday, the 15th, in the Bach mass.

On paper, the choice of the three "firsts" might seem a bit arbitrary, but in performance the historic interest was completely subordinated to the musical value. Though they represent different periods in musical development, all three have in common a romanticism which wells from youthful inspiration.

Beethoven, though he found his early critics unkind, owed a slight debt to Haydn when he made his first excursion into the symphonic form. Schumann, brimming over with happiness in the year which followed his happy marriage, was brimming over also with ideas and his "Spring" symphony emerged an important contribution to the field in which he did not display his greatest aptitude. Sibelius, too, was profligate with his themes and this symphony, heard less often than its more rugged successors, was generally believed to be based upon folk tunes until a succession of symphonies proved the great Finn a master of eloquent and strong melody.

There is no compromise either in the quality of the programs or in their performance. A glance through the nine programs reveals as high a standard for the summer series as Koussevitzky demands for his winter programs. The light, airy atmosphere is evident enough in the Berkshire weather without its being carried over into the music, in the Koussevitzky view.

Some critics have found the programs almost too austere and have objected to the inclusion of selections which are regularly programmed throughout the year. The size of last night's audience, however, indicates that the objection is surely not a popular one and the ovation it gave the conductor and his men was a tribute not only to Koussevitzky as a director but as a program builder. Only those who can afford the finest of recordings and phonographs hear these symphonies often enough and there is something about the admirable acoustics of the orchestra's summer home which mechanical invention cannot impress on wax. For those who must have their musical froth, there are several light items programmed during the remaining concerts.

Saturday night the program will be more varied than that of last night, with the Berlioz overture to "Benevenuto Cellini," the Strauss "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, as soloist; Roy Harris' third symphony; the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the second suite of Ravel's setting for "Daphnis and Chloe."

J. D. D.

Opening of Music Festival Brings Many to the Berkshires

For Berkshire society the opening of the music festival at Tanglewood last evening was an event of first importance. All boxes had been sold months in advance, every one of the 5000 seats was occupied and hundreds with general admission tickets camped out upon the lawn. The acoustics of the stage are so perfect that the lowest note of a violin can be heard outside the music shed.

In the box with Miss Mabel Choate were Mrs. John S. Ames of Commonwealth avenue, Mrs. John C. Phillips of Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. Randal Morgan of Philadelphia, Mr. Fletcher Steele of Boston, Swami B. Hbon, Hindu author and philosopher and Prof. Martin Mower of Cambridge.

In the box with Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and her daughter, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who is president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., were Arturo Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland symphony orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Mrs. Corning Townsend of Buffalo, N. Y.; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mr. Carleton Smith, Count Robert De Calry and Count Roman Michalowski. Miss Smith and her mother entertained at dinner at the Dugway Stockbridge before the concert.

Box guests of Mrs. Norman H. Davis were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Norman P. Davis, Mrs. John Clarkson Potter and Mrs. Robert Whiton Stuart.

With Princess Diane R. Eristavi were Mr. and Mrs. Reginald L. M. McVitty of Sylvan Cottage, Tivoli, N. Y.; Mrs. Nina L. Duryea and Mr. John D. Archbold of Washington. The Princess had a dinner party at the Lenox Club.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., were Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Dow, and Mr. and Mrs. William Huntley of Palm Beach. For the second series of concerts Mr. and Mrs. Shepard expect Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Howes and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander M. Hadden of New York. For the third series their guests will be Archduke and Archduchess Franz Josef, formerly of Vienna, who have been visiting friends recently at Bar Harbor and Newport; also Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Homer, who are passing the summer at Lake George.

With Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt of Colt road, Pittsfield, as box guests last night were Mr. Colt's sister, Mrs. Clement S. Houghton, his sister-in-law, Mrs. James D. Colt, both of Chestnut Hill, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles James Kittredge of Dalton. Mr. and Mrs. Colt are having as Sunday concert guests Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Cass of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly of "Glen Crannie Farm," Richmond, had in their box Mr. Alfred Lawrence Ripley and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sweeney of Andover. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt (Eileen Kelly), who have been at "Glen Crannie Farm" returned to Simsbury, Ct., yesterday.

Mrs. William Stuart Forbes (Gertrude Potter) of Hamilton and Countess Giovanni Cardelli of Chicago are to be the honored guests at a dinner Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett are to give Sunday at "Sky Farm," North Egremont. Their week-end guests also include Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., and Mrs. David H. Crompton of Wilton, N. H.

Mrs. Charles Bruen Perkins of Jamaica Plain and her son, Mr. Francis D. Perkins, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edward N. Perkins at Glencote, Tyringham.

Mr. Alanson Bigelow Houghton of Washington, one-time ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and Mrs. Houghton are at Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield, for the first series of concerts. Among others there are Mr. and Mrs. S. Kempton Race and Mrs. Alexander Steinert of Brookline, Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Forbes of Worcester.

The annual Pittsfield Horse Show ball will be held at the Country Club tonight. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Winnetka, Ill., is to have a luncheon party tomorrow at Court Hill, Pittsfield, in honor of the Horse Show judges. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neil Cowham and Mr. Arthur G. Cable of Lake Forest, Ill., are at Court Hill.

Another luncheon host today at Pittsfield will be Mr. Gardner S. Morse who is entertaining during the Horse Show Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Robinson of Summit, N. J. Mr. Robinson is judge of saddle horses.

Mrs. John Maurice Hastings and two younger children of Basing-Stoke, Hants, England, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry K. White of Beacon street at their cottage at Annisquam. Mrs. Hastings is the former Miss Rosemary Crane, sister of Mr. Frederick Goodrich Crane and with her four children is spending the summer at Model Farm, Dalton home of Mr. and Mrs. Crane, who at present are at Wianno.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1940

7TH SEASON OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitsky Starts Berkshire Festival on Youthful Note With 3 First Symphonies

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its seventh annual season, which has been enlarged this year to three weeks at Tanglewood, tonight, and in conjunction with the festival, a new music center has been born. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra ma[illegible] night's inaugural program one of youth. It contained three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

An audience of 6,000 persons was present for the beginning of the festival. The listeners responded with delight to the fresh joyousness of these works.

With tonight's concert the Berkshire festival was reaching out for new achievements. The festival has already established itself as the foremost in the country. Now that Europe's significant artistic gatherings are almost all dead, the Berkshire festival is in a position to assume leadership. It is moving rapidly to do just that.

Nine Concerts Scheduled

This season the festival proper will consist of nine concerts distributed over three long week-ends. But the Berkshire Music Center has been holding its sessions for more than three weeks. Additional events at Pittsfield, Mass.; Bennington, Vt.; Falls Village, Conn., and in other communities within the Berkshire orbit have been planned within the festival period. The result is that a fine efflorescence of work in the arts has developed in this part of New England.

It is confined to New England only in its setting. The audience that attends the concerts comes from all over the nation. Moreover, the students at the center are from all parts of the land. Thus the Berkshire festival and music center are leaders and guides for musical America in the Summer.

The proof that the festival is following the laws of its natural growth is to be had in the advance ticket sale. The subscription sale was ended on July 1, this year, earlier than in any previous season. The single-ticket sale has been brisk. The demand for tickets for the added week of concerts has been in proportion to the sale for the established two weeks.

New Equipment Installed

Early arrivals tonight were able to stroll over the green, fragrant lawns and to observe the sunset glow of the hills of Berkshire. They also had an opportunity to observe the additions to the festival equipment—the new fence,t he thousands of new chairs, the new organ in the music shed, which was made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Foundation, and the new stage and wings for the threatre which is to go up next season. The stage was built with funds obtained through a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The program announced a benefit for war relief funds. It will take place at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 16, "at the unusual hour of 6 P. M." There will be a program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. With the forces of the Berkshire Music Center taking part, among the soloists will be Albert Spalding and Gregor Paitigorsky and at least one of the speakers will be Dorothy Thompson.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 2 - 1940

Countess and Maestro at Music Festival Opening

Don Jose Browning Photos

Notables at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which began its seventh season at Tanglewood last night. Photo on left shows the Countess Acriana Mouravieff, center, as she receives instructions for the distribution of programs for the concert. From left to right are: Natalie Hefter, Marion Otis, the countess, Martha Hick,who had charge of programs, and Olga Garborino. Photo on right shows Maestro Koussevitzky as he arrived for the opening concert, Assisting him is Victor Sakharoff, who has been with Dr. Koussevitzky for more than nine years.

THIS CLIPPING F

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens 7th Season Brilliantly

Another enraptured first night audience nearly raised the lofty roof of the music shell at Tanglewood in Stockbridge last night as Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the seventh annual Berkshire symphonic festival. The 6000 seats within the shell were taken and the audience overflowed onto the spacious lawn where blankets, pillows, deck chairs and other summer furniture offered listeners not only protection from the damp grass but a star-studded ceiling.

It was a perfect night in every respect, none of the prosaic features connected with such an ambitious project detracting from the effectiveness of the musical program. It was a night for "firsts." Dr Koussevitzky had chosen to open this year's festival with the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. The performance, naturally, was first class, while the weather, still an important factor despite the permanent shell, was a great relief from the heat wave which has plagued this section of the country during the past week. Parking has been so expedited that there were no serious tie-ups coming or going and there were new shiny, metal seats to add the final touch of comfort. Backers of and boosters for the festival can well be proud of what has been done since the canvas "big top" was the stuffy and sometimes leaky protection against the weather. Evidence of the worth of the music school started this summer, awaits its test Thursday, the 15th, in the Bach mass.

On paper, the choice of the three "firsts" might seem a bit arbitrary, but in performance the historic interest was completely subordinated to the musical value. Though they represent different periods in musical development, all three have in common a romanticism which wells from youthful inspiration.

Beethoven, though he found his early critics unkind, owed a slight debt to Haydn when he made his first excursion into the symphonic form. Schumann, brimming over with happiness in the year which followed his happy marriage, was brimming over also with ideas and his "Spring" symphony emerged an important contribution to the field in which he did not display his greatest aptitude. Sibelius, too, was profligate with his themes and this symphony, heard less often than its more rugged successors, was generally believed to be based upon folk tunes until a succession of symphonies proved the great Finn a master of eloquent and strong melody.

There is no compromise either in the quality of the programs or in their performance. A glance through the nine programs reveals as high a standard for the summer series as Koussevitzky demands for his winter programs. The light, airy atmosphere is evident enough in the Berkshire weather without its being carried over into the music, in the Koussevitzky view.

Some critics have found the programs almost too austere and have objected to the inclusion of selections which are regularly programmed throughout the year. The size of last night's audience, however, indicates that the objection is surely not a popular one and the ovation it gave the conductor and his men was a tribute not only to Koussevitzky as a director but as a program builder. Only those who can afford the finest of recordings and phonographs hear these symphonies often enough and there is something about the admirable acoustics of the orchestra's summer home which mechanical invention cannot impress on wax. For those who must have their musical froth, there are several light items programmed during the remaining concerts.

Saturday night the program will be more varied than that of last night, with the Berlioz overture to "Benevenuto Cellini," the Strauss "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello, as soloist; Roy Harris' third symphony; the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the second suite of Ravel's setting for "Daphnis and Chloe."

J. D. D.

Opening of Music Festival Brings Many to the Berkshires

For Berkshire society the opening of the music festival at Tanglewood last evening was an event of first importance. All boxes had been sold months in advance, every one of the 5000 seats was occupied and hundreds with general admission tickets camped out upon the lawn. The acoustics of the stage are so perfect that the lowest note of a violin can be heard outside the music shed.

In the box with Miss Mabel Choate were Mrs. John S. Ames of Commonwealth avenue, Mrs. John C. Phillips of Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. Randal Morgan of Philadelphia, Mr. Fletcher Steele of Boston, Swami B. Hbon, Hindu author and philosopher and Prof. Martin Mower of Cambridge.

In the box with Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and her daughter, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who is president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., were Arturo Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland symphony orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Mrs. Corning Townsend of Buffalo, N. Y.; Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mr. Carleton Smith, Count Robert De Calry and Count Roman Michalowski. Miss Smith and her mother entertained at dinner at the Dugway Stockbridge before the concert.

Box guests of Mrs. Norman H. Davis were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Norman P. Davis, Mrs. John Clarkson Potter and Mrs. Robert Whiton Stuart.

With Princess Diane R. Eristavi were Mr. and Mrs. Reginald L. M. McVitty of Sylvan Cottage, Tivoli, N. Y.; Mrs. Nina L. Duryea and Mr. John D. Archbold of Washington. The Princess had a dinner party at the Lenox Club.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., were Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Dow, and Mr. and Mrs. William Huntley of Palm Beach. For the second series of concerts Mr. and Mrs. Shepard expect Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Howes and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander M. Hadden of New York. For the third series their guests will be Archduke and Archduchess Franz Josef, formerly of Vienna, who have been visiting friends recently at Bar Harbor and Newport; also Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Homer, who are passing the summer at Lake George.

With Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt of Colt road, Pittsfield, as box guests last night were Mr. Colt's sister, Mrs. Clement S. Houghton, his sister-in-law, Mrs. James D. Colt, both of Chestnut Hill, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles James Kittredge of Dalton. Mr. and Mrs. Colt are having as Sunday concert guests Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Cass of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly of "Glen Crannie Farm," Richmond, had in their box Mr. Alfred Lawrence Ripley and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sweeney of Andover. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt (Eileen Kelly), who have been at "Glen Crannie Farm" returned to Simsbury, Ct., yesterday.

Mrs. William Stuart Forbes (Gertrude Potter) of Hamilton and Countess Giovanni Cardelli of Chicago are to be the honored guests at a dinner Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett are to give Sunday at "Sky Farm," North Egremont. Their week-end guests also include Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., and Mrs. David H. Crompton of Wilton, N. H.

Mrs. Charles Bruen Perkins of Jamaica Plain and her son, Mr. Francis D. Perkins, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edward N. Perkins at Glencote, Tyringham.

Mr. Alanson Bigelow Houghton of Washington, one-time ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and Mrs. Houghton are at Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield, for the first series of concerts. Among others there are Mr. and Mrs. S. Kempton Race and Mrs. Alexander Steinert of Brookline, Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Forbes of Worcester.

The annual Pittsfield Horse Show ball will be held at the Country Club tonight. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Winnetka, Ill., is to have a luncheon party tomorrow at Court Hill, Pittsfield, in honor of the Horse Show judges. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neil Cowham and Mr. Arthur G. Cable of Lake Forest, Ill., are at Court Hill.

Another luncheon host today at Pittsfield will be Mr. Gardner S. Morse who is entertaining during the Horse Show Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Robinson of Summit, N. J. Mr. Robinson is judge of saddle horses.

Mrs. John Maurice Hastings and two younger children of Basing-Stoke, Hants, England, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry K. White of Beacon street at their cottage at Annisquam. Mrs. Hastings is the former Miss Rosemary Crane, sister of Mr. Frederick Goodrich Crane and with her four children is spending the summer at Model Farm, Dalton home of Mr. and Mrs. Crane, who at present are at Wianno.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 2 - 1940

Countess and Maestro at Music Festival Opening

Don Jose Browning Photos

Notables at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which began its seventh season at Tanglewood last night. Photo on left shows the Countess Acriana Mouravieff, center, as she receives instructions for the distribution of programs for the concert. From left to right are: Natalie Hefter, Marion Otis, the countess, Martha Hick,who had charge of programs, and Olga Garborino. Photo on right shows Maestro Koussevitzky as he arrived for the opening concert. Assisting him is Victor Sakharoff, who has been with Dr. Koussevitzky for more than nine years.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1940

7TH SEASON OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Starts Berkshire Festival on Youthful Note With 3 First Symphonies

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its seventh annual season, which has been enlarged this year to three weeks at Tanglewood, tonight, and in conjunction with the festival, a new music center has been born. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra ma[illegible] night's inaugural program one of youth. It contained three first symphonies—those of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

An audience of 6,000 persons was present for the beginning of the festival. The listeners responded with delight to the fresh joyousness of these works.

With tonight's concert the Berkshire festival was reaching out for new achievements. The festival has already established itself as the foremost in the country. Now that Europe's significant artistic gatherings are almost all dead, the Berkshire festival is in a position to assume leadership. It is moving rapidly to do just that.

Nine Concerts Scheduled

This season the festival proper will consist of nine concerts distributed over three long week-ends. But the Berkshire Music Center has been holding its sessions for more than three weeks. Additional events at Pittsfield, Mass.; Bennington, Vt.; Falls Village, Conn., and in other communities within the Berkshire orbit have been planned within the festival period. The result is that a fine efflorescence of work in the arts has developed in this part of New England.

It is confined to New England only in its setting. The audience that attends the concerts comes from all over the nation. Moreover, the students at the center are from all parts of the land. Thus the Berkshire festival and music center are leaders and guides for musical America in the Summer.

The proof that the festival is following the laws of its natural growth is to be had in the advance ticket sale. The subscription sale was ended on July 1, this year, earlier than in any previous season. The single-ticket sale has been brisk. The demand for tickets for the added week of concerts has been in proportion to the sale for the established two weeks.

New Equipment Installed

Early arrivals tonight were able to stroll over the green, fragrant lawns and to observe the sunset glow of the hills of Berkshire. They also had an opportunity to observe the additions to the festival equipment—the new fence,t he thousands of new chairs, the new organ in the music shed, which was made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Foundation. and the new stage and wings for the threatre which is to go up next season. The stage was built with funds obtained through a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The program announced a benefit for war relief funds. It will take place at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 16, "at the unusual hour of 6 P. M." There will be a program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. With the forces of the Berkshire Music Center taking part, among the soloists will be Albert Spalding and Gregor Paitigorsky and at least one of the speakers will be Dorothy Thompson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
Observer Dispatch
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1940

Koussevitzky Attracts 6,000 as Festival Opens

Three First Symphonies Feature Initial Boston Symphony Concert at Tanglewood, Berkshires

By John Selby

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—Six thousand people assembled under a typical Berkshire sky of tumbling clouds last night to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony open the seventh Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a somewhat unusual program of three first symphonies.

These were the first of the nine Beethoven symphonies, Schumann's initial effort, and the now even more popular Sibelius first—all dear to Koussevitzky's heart, particularly those by Sibelius and Beethoven.

There have been few more exciting performances in the history of the Festival, and for that matter few more excited audiences. Koussevitzky's invariable rule against slacking his standards because his audience wears summer flannels instead of tails and fur coats was proved once again.

Audience Distinguished, Too

For that matter, the audience was probably as distinguished a group of men and women in all fields as could be assembled for any summer event—since Lenox and Stockbridge, between which lies the magnificent Tanglewood estate on which the orchestra plays, has been for decades a summer haven for many important people. And hundreds of others, from all parts of America and Europe, are added each August to Festival audiences.

This summer there is an added attraction in Dr. Koussevitzky's astonishing new "music centre." This is a unique school in which more than 300 people, mostly young, have been living and working with music since July 8. Classrooms are scattered about what once were garages and barns, and about, of course, the "music shed" which houses the festival.

The student body is divided two ways—a smaller professional group of about 100, which studies intensively under a distinguished faculty headed by Dr. Koussevitzky himself and containing many members of the Boston Symphony; and a larger group of people who wish to widen their musical horizons without thought of professional careers.

Chorus to Sing Mass

The last group has a large chorus for its central activity, and this will be heard in a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass on the last Thursday of the Festival.

Visitors yesterday and today heard also two school orchestras rehearsing, and innumerable chamber music groups.

Last night found Dr. Koussevitzky's orchestra at the top of its form. It is probable that no summer music venture in the world is able to provide playing of a higher standard than this one.

The Festival resumes tomorrow night with a mixed program, the feature of which will be Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote." with the 'Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist. Sunday closes the first third of the Festival with a program of Brahms, Mozart and Stravinsky. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist in Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BOWLING GREEN. KY.
PARK CITY NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIDDEFORD, ME.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR-JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
AUG 2 - 1940

This Clipping From HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS
AUG 2 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 2 - 1940

REDUCTION

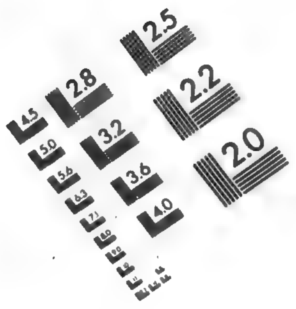
RATIO

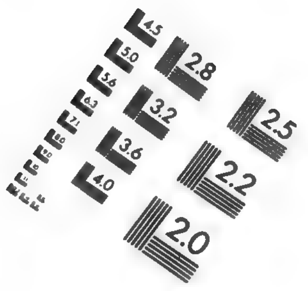
16x

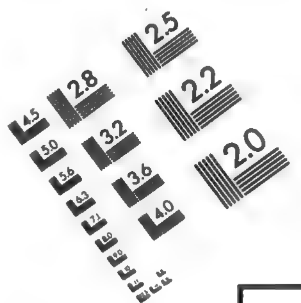
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

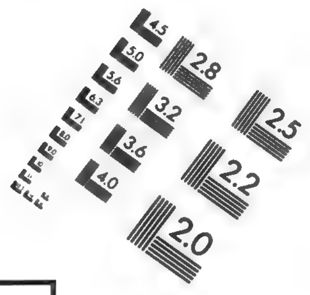
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

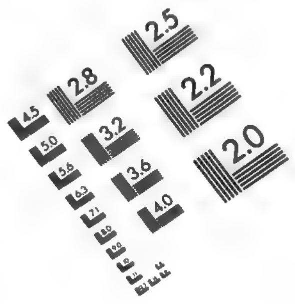


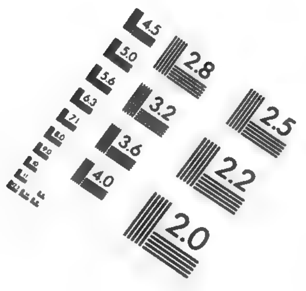




PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



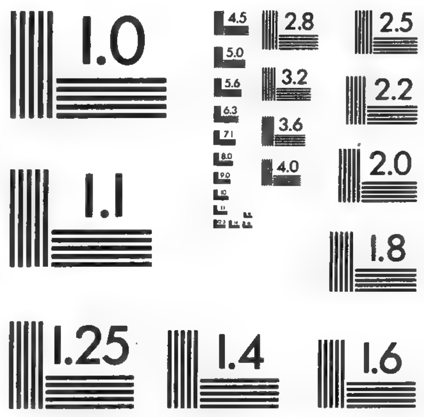




200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



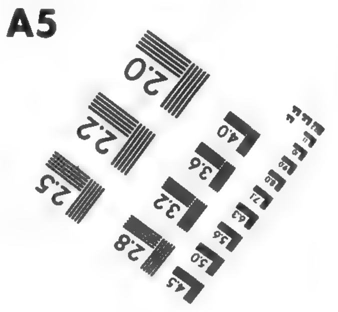
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

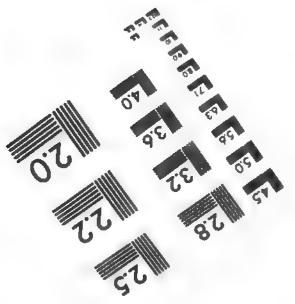
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

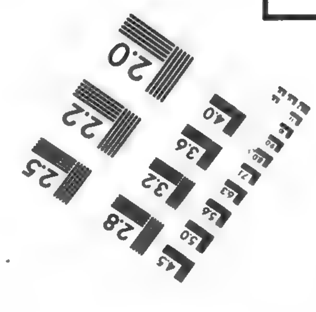
A5

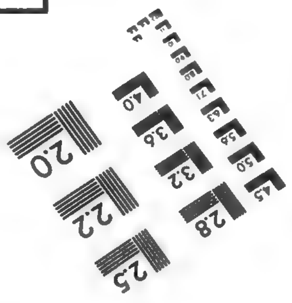




A4

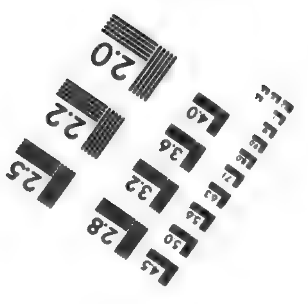
A3

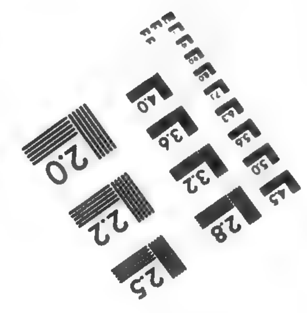




PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119





4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Festival

5800 at Opening of Music Season at Stockbridge

Dr. Koussevitzky Directs Brilliant Performance of Splendid Program

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1—An audience of 5800 persons attended the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight. They heard Serge Koussevitzky conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a familiar and delightful program, the first Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

In contrast to the heat or drenching thunderstorms which have prevailed at other festivals openings, the weather tonight was perfect—a practically cloudless sky, with a breeze that kept the temperature within reasonable limits. Perhaps the low-cut evening gowns—or rather their wearers, of which there were many—found it a bit too cool.

School Now In Progress

As many have noted on other occasions, the playing of the Boston Symphony, reassembled after an interval of a few months, is not noticeably different from their top form of mid-season at Symphony Hall. The first symphony of Beethoven shone like the facets of a jewel; the romanticism of Schumann, which never seems to become dimmed, was just as utterly beautiful and moving as it always has been. Of Sibelius one need only say that the E Minor Symphony was as its creator must have imagined in his mind when putting notes on paper—a vast Nordic poem of sound. If here and there an instrument stood out too prominently for a moment, or a chord did not have quite that crystal transparency you hear in Symphony Hall, what of it?

The Berkshire Festival continues to progress. Two years ago there was the dedication of the new music shed, last season improvements to the shed and adjacent grounds. This Summer has seen the fruition of an ideal close to Mr. Koussevitzky's heart for many years; the opening of a school. For nearly a month, now, some 300 students of varying age who came from widely separated parts of the country, have been working under the guidance of such eminent musicians as Paul Hindemith, G. Wallace Woodworth, Aaron Copland, Dr. Herbert Graf, and first desk men of the Boston Symphony.

The Berkshire Music Center, as it is called, offers unique surroundings in which to study music. Just how devotedly the center students are carrying on was made evident to this writer at the end of the afternoon when he visited a rehearsal room—the upper barn—to look in upon choral practise of Bach's B Minor Mass, which will be presented Aug. 15. They were working hard, but obviously enjoying it.

Unobserved—and it is to be hoped, unheard—one crept in back of the basses and lifted up a crow's voice for a few pages of the sanctus.

Another innovation has been the installation of an organ approximating the instruments of Bach's own time, which will be used in the coming performances of the Mass.

The war has not gone unnoted here in the Berkshires. For Friday, Aug. 16, "a full evening of entertainment" has been planned that will benefit the Allied Relief Fund. Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra, the forces of the music center and a list of speakers and guest artists will all be heard from in the course of a program that will begin at 6 p. m.

The second concert of the festival will be given tomorrow evening, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote."

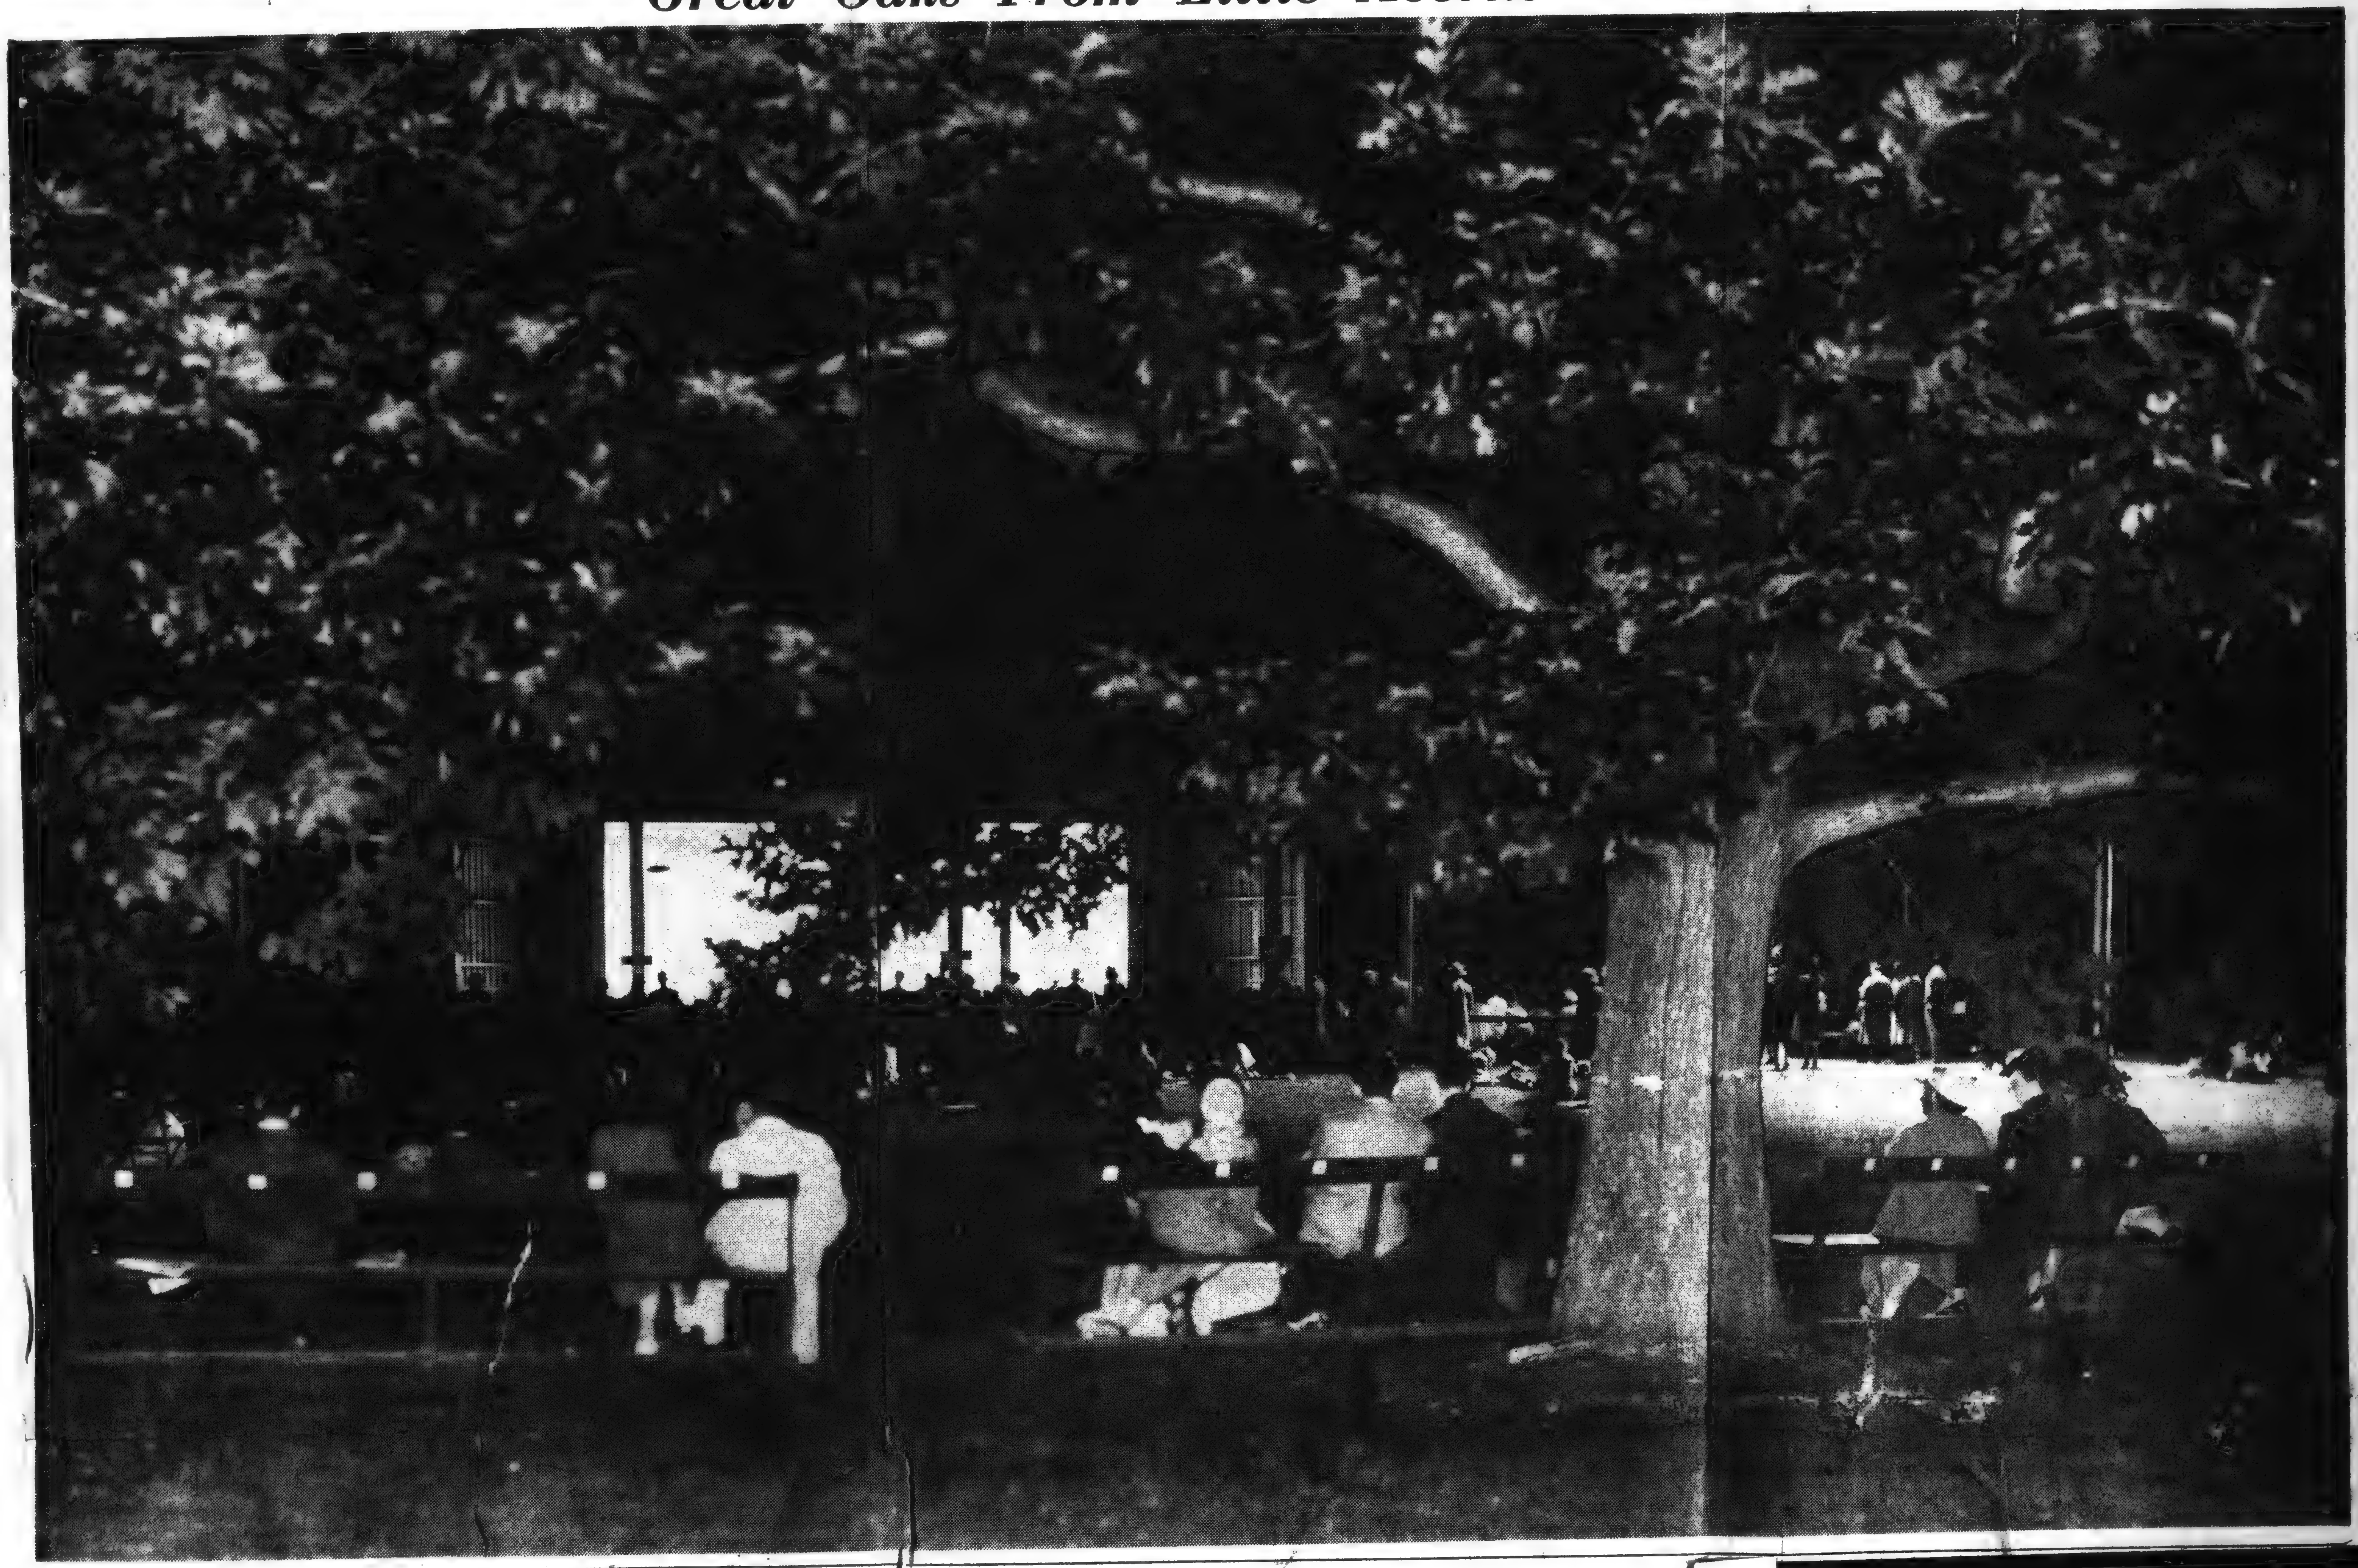
C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1940

Volume 49—No. 63 Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 2, 1940. 20 Pages— Price Three Cents

"Great Oaks From Little Acorns Grow"



Brilliant Music and Setting Mark Seventh Festival Season Opening

Crowd of 6000 Pours Into Tanglewood Shed To Hear Koussevitzky and Orchestra

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Under a night as brilliant as the music and the audience which listened to it, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last evening in the huge Shed which sits in simple dignity on the heights of Tanglewood overlooking the quiet water of Stockbridge Bowl.

First Three-Week Season

From almost every state in the Union and from across the seas came the thousands who helped to inaugurate the Festival's first three-week season and to provide a fitting climax for the first season of the Berkshire Music Center, many of whose 300-odd students heard for the first time their teachers play as members of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Old-timers may have noted the minor changes and improvements of details about the grounds and the great hangar-like shed. They did not attempt to disguise from the neophytes under an air blase their continuing amazement at the colorful crowds, the huge buildings, the vast terrain with its grand views, all of which combine to make this an event of unsurpassed glamour.

Crowd Arrives Early

The huge crowd, estimated at 6000, started arriving at the Festival grounds early, and well before the time announced for the beginning of the concert, the great parade ground between the Shed and old mansion, now used as a school building for the newly organized institute, was thickly sprinkled with gaily dressed groups sauntering or just standing to enjoy the clear, cool, Berkshire evening. The weather, which always

Festival
Continued on Second Page

War Briefs

More Canadians Arrive in Britain

OTTAWA, Ont. (AP)—Defense Minister Ralston announced in the House of Commons today the safe arrival in Britain of "another large contingent of the Canadian active service force."

Beaverbrook for Churchill Cabinet

LONDON (UP)—It was reported here today that Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft production, would join Prime Minister Winston Churchill's inner war cabinet.

Italians Advance Through Africa

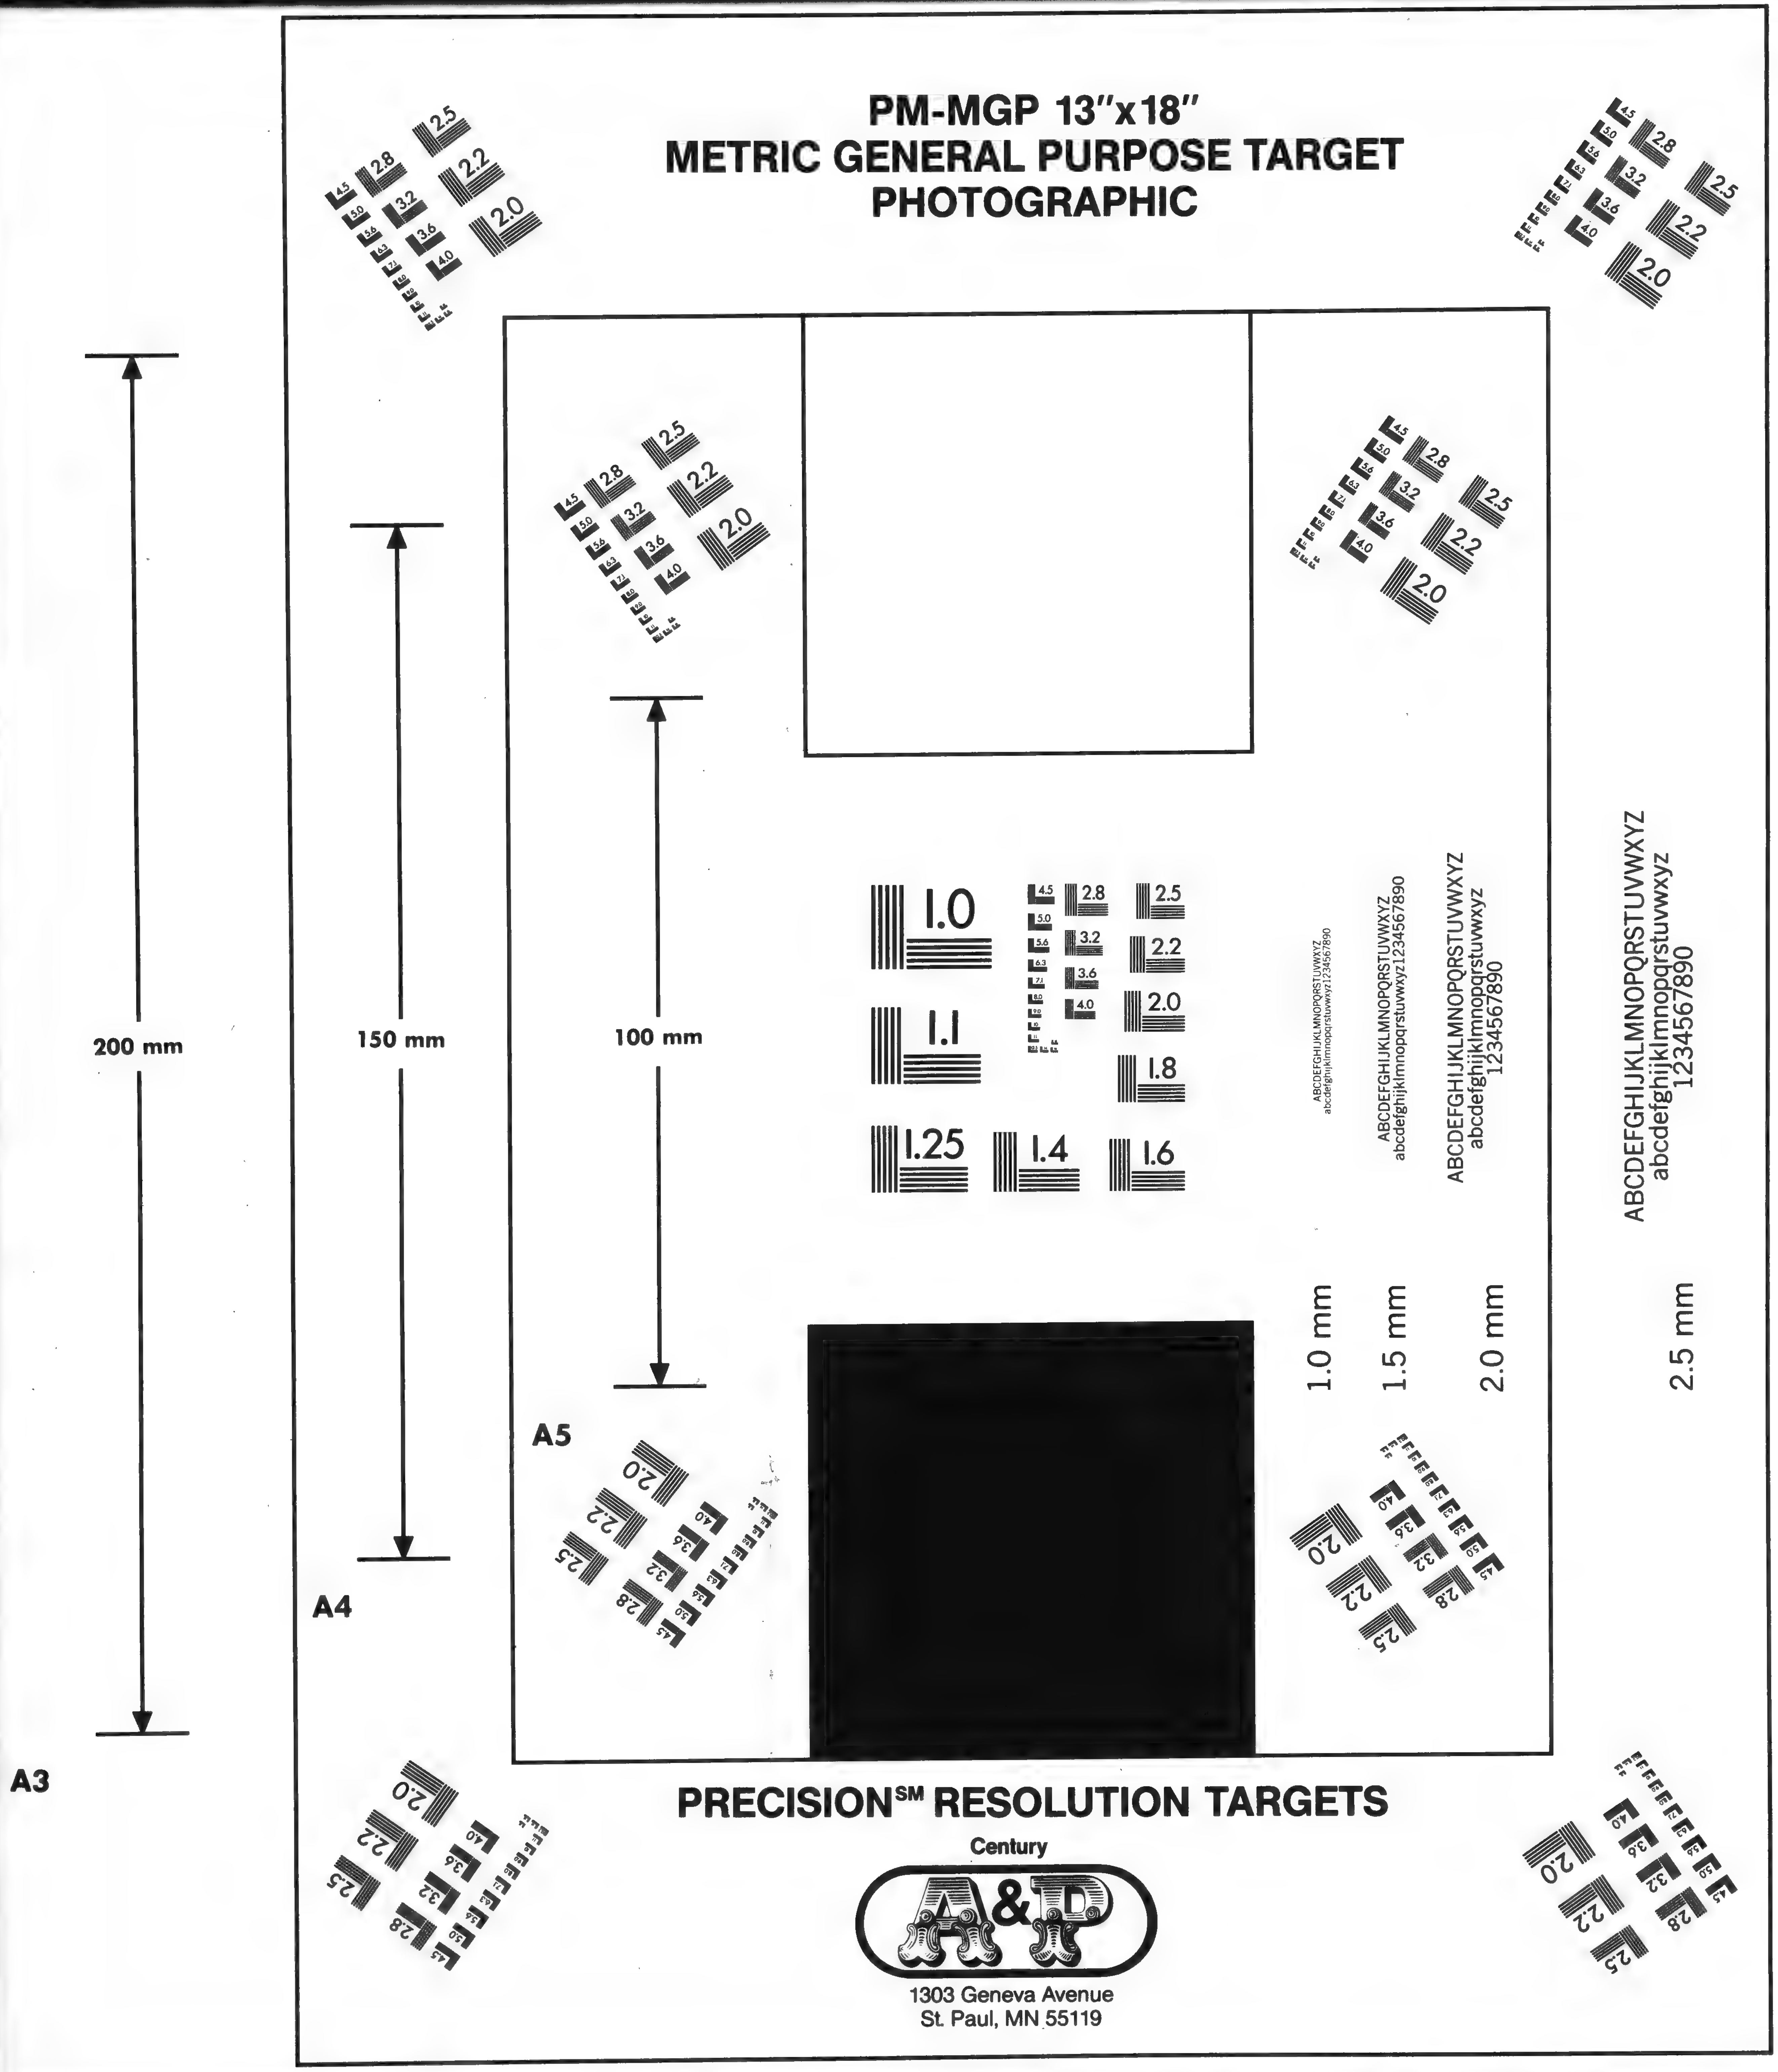
LONDON (UP)—A considerable force of Italian troops is concentrated at the northern end of the Libyan frontier, possibly foreshadowing a large scale Italian offensive in North Africa, it was said authoritatively here today. This force was described as "gradually advancing towards the Egyptian frontier, taking careful protective steps as they go with tanks and field artillery."

Steamer Reports Submarine Attack

NEW YORK (UP)—An unidentified ship reported in a message picked up by Mackay radio that she had been torpedoed off the southwest coast of Ireland last night several hours after the

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Festival

5800 at Opening of Music Season at Stockbridge

Dr. Koussevitzky Directs Brilliant Performance of Splendid Program

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1—An audience of 5800 persons attended the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight. They heard Serge Koussevitzky conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a familiar and delightful program, the first Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

In contrast to the heat or drenching thunderstorms which have prevailed at other festivals openings, the weather tonight was perfect—a practically cloudless sky, with a breeze that kept the temperature within reasonable limits. Perhaps the low-cut evening gowns—or rather their wearers, of which there were many—found it a bit too cool.

School Now In Progress

As many have noted on other occasions, the playing of the Boston Symphony, reassembled after an interval of a few months, is not noticeably different from their top form of mid-season at Symphony Hall. The first symphony of Beethoven shone like the facets of a jewel; the romanticism of Schumann, which never seems to become dimmed, was just as utterly beautiful and moving as it always has been. Of Sibelius one need only say that the E Minor Symphony was as its creator must have imagined in his mind when putting notes on paper—a vast Nordic poem of sound. If here and there an instrument stood out too prominently for a moment, or a chord did not have quite that crystal transparency you hear in Symphony Hall, what of it?

The Berkshire Festival continues to progress. Two years ago there was the dedication of the new music shed, last season improvements to the shed and adjacent grounds. This Summer has seen the fruition of an ideal close to Mr. Koussevitzky's heart for many years; the opening of a school. For nearly a month, now, some 300 students of varying age who came from widely separated parts of the country, have been working under the guidance of such eminent musicians as Paul Hindemith, G. Wallace Woodworth, Aaron Copland, Dr. Herbert Graf, and first desk men of the Boston Symphony.

The Berkshire Music Center, as it is called, offers unique surroundings in which to study music. Just how devotedly the center students are carrying on was made evident to this writer at the end of the afternoon when he visited a rehearsal room—the upper barn—to look in upon choral practise of Bach's B Minor Mass, which will be presented Aug. 15. They were working hard, but obviously enjoying it.

Unobserved—and it is to be hoped, unheard—one crept in back of the basses and lifted up a crow's voice for a few pages of the sanctus.

Another innovation has been the installation of an organ approximating the instruments of Bach's own time, which will be used in the coming performances of the Mass.

The war has not gone unnoted here in the Berkshires. For Friday, Aug. 16, "a full evening of entertainment" has been planned that will benefit the Allied Relief Fund. Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra, the forces of the music center and a list of speakers and guest artists will all be heard from in the course of a program that will begin at 6 p. m.

The second concert of the festival will be given tomorrow evening, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote."

C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 2 - 1940

Volume 49—No. 63
Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 2, 1940.

"Great Oaks From Little Acorns Grow"

Brilliant Music and Setting Mark Seventh Festival Season Opening

Crowd of 6000 Pours Into Tanglewood Shed To Hear Koussevitzky and Orchestra

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Under a night as brilliant as the music and the audience which listened to it, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last evening in the huge Shed which sits in simple dignity on the heights of Tanglewood overlooking the quiet water of Stockbridge Bowl.

First Three-Week Season

From almost every state in the Union and from across the seas came the thousands who helped to inaugurate the Festival's first three-week season and to provide a fitting climax for the first season of the Berkshire Music Center, many of whose 300-odd students heard for the first time their teachers play as members of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Old-timers may have noted the minor changes and improvements of details about the grounds and the great hangar-like shed. They did not attempt to disguise from the neophytes under an air blase their continuing amazement at the colorful crowds, the huge buildings, the vast terrain with its grand views, all of which combine to make this an event of unsurpassed glamour.

Crowd Arrives Early

The huge crowd, estimated at 6000, started arriving at the Festival grounds early, and well before the time announced for the beginning of the concert, the great parade ground between the Shed and old mansion, now used as a school building for the newly organized institute, was thickly sprinkled with gaily dressed groups sauntering or just standing to enjoy the clear, cool, Berkshire evening. The weather, which always

Festival
Continued on Second Page

War Briefs

More Canadians Arrive in Britain

OTTAWA, Ont. (AP)—Defense Minister Ralston announced in the House of Commons today the safe arrival in Britain of "another large contingent of the Canadian active service force."

Beaverbrook for Churchill Cabinet

LONDON (UP)—It was reported here today that Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft production, would join Prime Minister Winston Churchill's inner war cabinet.

Italians Advance Through Africa

LONDON (UP)—A considerable force of Italian troops is concentrated at the northern end of the Libyan frontier, possibly foreshadowing a large scale Italian offensive in North Africa, it was said authoritatively here today. This force was described as "gradually advancing towards the Egyptian frontier, taking careful protective steps as they go with tanks and field artillery."

Steamer Reports Submarine Attack

NEW YORK (UP)—An unidentified ship reported in a message picked up by Mackay radio that she had been torpedoed off the southwest coast of Ireland last night several hours after the

CLIPPING FROM TSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
2 - 1940

49—No. 63 Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 2, 1940. 20 Pages— Price Three Cents

"Great Oaks From Little Acorns Grow"

Brilliant Music and Setting Mark Seventh Festival Season Opening

Crowd of 6000 Pours Into Tanglewood Shed To Hear Koussevitzky and Orchestra

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Under a night as brilliant as the music and the audience which listened to it, the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last evening in the huge Shed which sits in simple dignity on the heights of Tanglewood overlooking the quiet water of Stockbridge Bowl.

First Three-Week Season

From almost every state in the Union and from across the seas came the thousands who helped to inaugurate the Festival's first three-week season and to provide a fitting climax for the first season of the Berkshire Music Center, many of whose 300-odd students heard for the first time their teachers play as members of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Old-timers may have noted the minor changes and improvements of details about the grounds and the great hangar-like shed. They did not attempt to disguise from the neophytes under an air blase their continuing amazement at the colorful crowds, the huge buildings, the vast terrain with its grand views, all of which combine to make this an event of unsurpassed glamour.

Crowd Arrives Early

The huge crowd, estimated at 6000, started arriving at the Festival grounds early, and well before the time announced for the beginning of the concert, the great parade ground between the Shed and old mansion, now used as a school building for the newly organized institute, was thickly sprinkled with gaily dressed groups sauntering or just standing to enjoy the clear, cool, Berkshire evening. The weather, which always

Festival
Continued on Second Page

War Briefs

More Canadians Arrive in Britain

OTTAWA, Ont. (AP)—Defense Minister Ralston announced in the House of Commons today the safe arrival in Britain of "another large contingent of the Canadian active service force."

Beaverbrook for Churchill Cabinet

LONDON (UP)—It was reported here today that Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft production, would join Prime Minister Winston Churchill's inner war cabinet.

Italians Advance Through Africa

LONDON (UP)—A considerable force of Italian troops is concentrated at the northern end of the Libyan frontier, possibly foreshadowing a large scale Italian offensive in North Africa, it was said authoritatively here today. This force was described as "gradually advancing towards the Egyptian frontier, taking careful protective steps as they go with tanks and field artillery."

Steamer Reports Submarine Attack

NEW YORK (UP)—An unidentified ship reported in a message picked up by Mackay radio that she had been torpedoed off the southwest coast of Ireland last night several hours after the

86

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1940

Wife of Boston Publisher Expresses Enchantment With Berkshire Festival Concerts

By SYLVIA G. DREYFUS

The following essay written after last year's Festival by Mrs. Dreyfus, wife of Carl Dreyfus, Boston publisher, is published here for the first time.—Ed.

And Ring From All the Trees

A cat may look at a king. From somewhere in the moonlit meadow beyond the Shed comes a toad to look at Koussevitzky. Then, with rhythmic, noiseless dignity, he retreats, andante, down the long middle aisle and vanishes into the night. A few amused glances follow him; here and there a filmy skirt is raised over apprehensive ankles. A mouse in a concert hall may throw the whole balcony into a panic, but a toad at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is just one minute friendly part of the Nature which surrounds us and of which the music is also a part. We settle again into the intense quiet of an audience absorbed in Haydn.

There is something infinitely moving about music performed out of doors. Perhaps we are all born with a platonic recollection of the music of the spheres and come nearer to experiencing it again in this life when we listen, close to nature, to man-made harmony. "Man-made," did I say? The adjective can scarcely be applied to Debussy's "La Mer," heard in all its translucent beauty in the open air. A performance of "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" on a hot sunny afternoon evokes a magic far removed from the usual effect indoors. You are bwitched. You may be the drowsy, amorous faun, you may be the elusive maiden, but certainly you are not your everyday self. And it is fortunate that the music stops before you vanish, ballet-fashion, in a flash of bare legs and leopard-skin, among the trees of Tanglewood.

While such sensuous and color-drenched music seems virtually to emanate from the encircling woods and fields, music of quite different type is equally at one with the verdant setting. Gay modern pieces like "Lt. Kije" take on a spontaneous air, straightforward and guileless as folk music, losing, perhaps, a touch of their satirical import yet no less charming for their heightened simplicity. But the real music of the spheres—if you imagine it in the grand style and not as ballet or tone-poem—surely finds an approximation in the great classical works. The clean-cut counterpoint of Bach is at home in the clarity of country air. Once I heard a rehearsal of the Pastoral Symphony on a summer morning in the Berkshires; the gentle murmur of not-too-near lawnmowers, the muted voices of the gardeners as they raked the grass and clipped the hedges, the occasional far-off bark of a dog, all these natural, usual sounds mingled with the melodies of Beethoven in a harmony not to be forgotten.

My son tells me that one reaches the height of musical enjoyment lying on one's back in the grass and listening to the Schumann D minor Symphony. I have not yet experienced this supine bliss, but I find that, even to a listener sitting quite straight on a rather hard chair, the noble chords of Sibelius ring forth through the trees as the very expression of nature's grandeur.

It cannot be that all this effect is due to superlative performance or to different accoustical properties or to the potent romanticism of a luxuriant country-side. Partly, I think, it comes about through the sharpened perceptions of the listener. To concerts like those of the Berkshire Festival come several thousand human beings in highly receptive mood. They have freed themselves from their ordinary obligations, they have put aside their worries and their problems. (It would be an interesting experiment to persuade a few of those tired-business-men who find concerts wearisome to take a week off at the Festival. They might be amazed at their enjoyment of music in this holiday atmosphere. At least they would agree with a puzzled, unmusical acquaintance of ours who admitted, grudgingly, as he watched the hordes of people pouring into the Shed on a Sunday afternoon, "Well, there must be something in it!") But certainly that care-free attitude and the sense of well-being engendered by beautiful surroundings put one in the ideal state for listening to music. There is no resisting the great wave of enjoyment that sweeps over an eager audience.

What an extraordinary experience it is, in these days of conflict and dismay to find oneself part of an enormous throng of people gathered not for discussion, not for material gain, but simply in the pursuit of beauty. And a festival in the hills indicates actual pursuit, for these crowds really travel. No brief trip, this, on the 77th Street bus to Carnegie; no short walk across Massachusetts Avenue to Symphony Hall; no mere dash in a taxi down Broad Street to the Academy; but a journey, planned for vacation time and long anticipated, a 40-mile jaunt from Albany a thousand-mile trek from New Orleans—in short, a pilgrimage And no less a pilgrimage because the pilgrims wear sport clothes and carry candid cameras instead of Tannhauser's brown sacking and tall crooked staff.

They have a common cause, these people from everywhere. Differences fade away. Antagonisms, social and philosophical, weaken. (Not so their musical disagreements, which wax fierce according to the programs.) The New Dealer and the hidebound Republican sit side by side, and both applaud extravagantly that entrancing composition from Soviet Russia, "Peter and the Wolf." No anti-Hitler bias can dim the brilliant, undying spell of Beethoven and Brahms. It is true, however, that this year, during an intermission, Philippe Cotnareaun of "Le Figaro" overheard one remark with faintly political implications: "Jim, who is Sibelius?" "Sibelius, my dear, is the greatest composer of the only country in Europe that pays its war debt." In the bar of the Curtis Hotel after the concerts the fate of nations may, perhaps, be settled nightly, but these mundane arguments seem singularly unimportant where music holds full sway.

Seven thousand people, free and friendly, listen together and forget recial, social, religious prejudices in their mutual enjoyment. Surely there is a lesson in this practical demonstration of amity, a Sermon on the Mount to the accompaniment of a great orchestra. Let music swell the breeze . . .

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
AUG 3 - 1940

The three-week Symphonic Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky opened this week-end in the Music Shed at Stockbridge, Mass., on the estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented to the Boston orchestra in 1936.

The remaining six concerts of the Festival will be given on Aug. 8, 10, 11, 15, 17 and 18, Bach's Mass in B Minor being performed in two parts Thursday evening, Aug. 15. An additional concert will be given on Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1940

Music At Stockbridge

Something is happening here in Massachusetts this year that has a very great significance in our cultural life and also in the relationship of Western Massachusetts to the rest of the nation. The highest note of what is going on is sounded in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. To say that the beautiful town of Stockbridge has become the Salzburg of America is true enough. It has not arrived at what Salzburg used to be as a mecca for music-loving pilgrims and at the same time one of the outstanding places for the great in wealth and political life and art and literature to assemble, but it is growing into some of the same standing.

It is different. Salzburg could never command any greater perfection than the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky attains. But Salzburg derived one phase of its distinction from the fact that music lovers and the elite of the world of power and culture came there from every nation on earth. You might be sitting between a music lover from Alexandria and one from the Argentine. Behind you they might be talking French and in front of you they would surely be speaking in German. Blonde Scandinavians would be promenading between numbers alongside dark Latin race people.

Salzburg during the music festival was the world's most elegant center of cosmopolitanism. A reading of the distinguished guests in the boxes for the opening night of this year's festival shows that music lovers from all parts of the world were gathered in a great music shed on a Massachusetts hillside at the foot of great mountains. However in the main the throngs that fill the shed with anywhere between six and ten thousand people are Americans and a great many of them are Massachusetts folk. Boston has made possible the symphony orchestra that bears its name. And the orchestra under its great leader is thrilled to have become the core of the Berkshire Festival.

It took generations to work up Salzburg, alas, where there is no festival this year. Salzburg had a definite effect upon the life of all Austria. But this Berkshire Festival has been only seven years in the making. The earlier festvials were marred by great storms that drove the audience out of the frail tent. Music critics threw up their hands. Henry Hadley's brave attempt to start what is now such a success was perhaps the better advertised because of the adverse conditions—even if an orchestra couldn't outplay a thunder storm. When the Boston Symphony orchestra came in 1936,the setting was still too primitive in a part of the world where it will rain in August if it so happens. But here was something to the taste of Serge Koussevitz. He determined to make the Berkshire Festival permanent and to give it all that his superb orchestra could create.

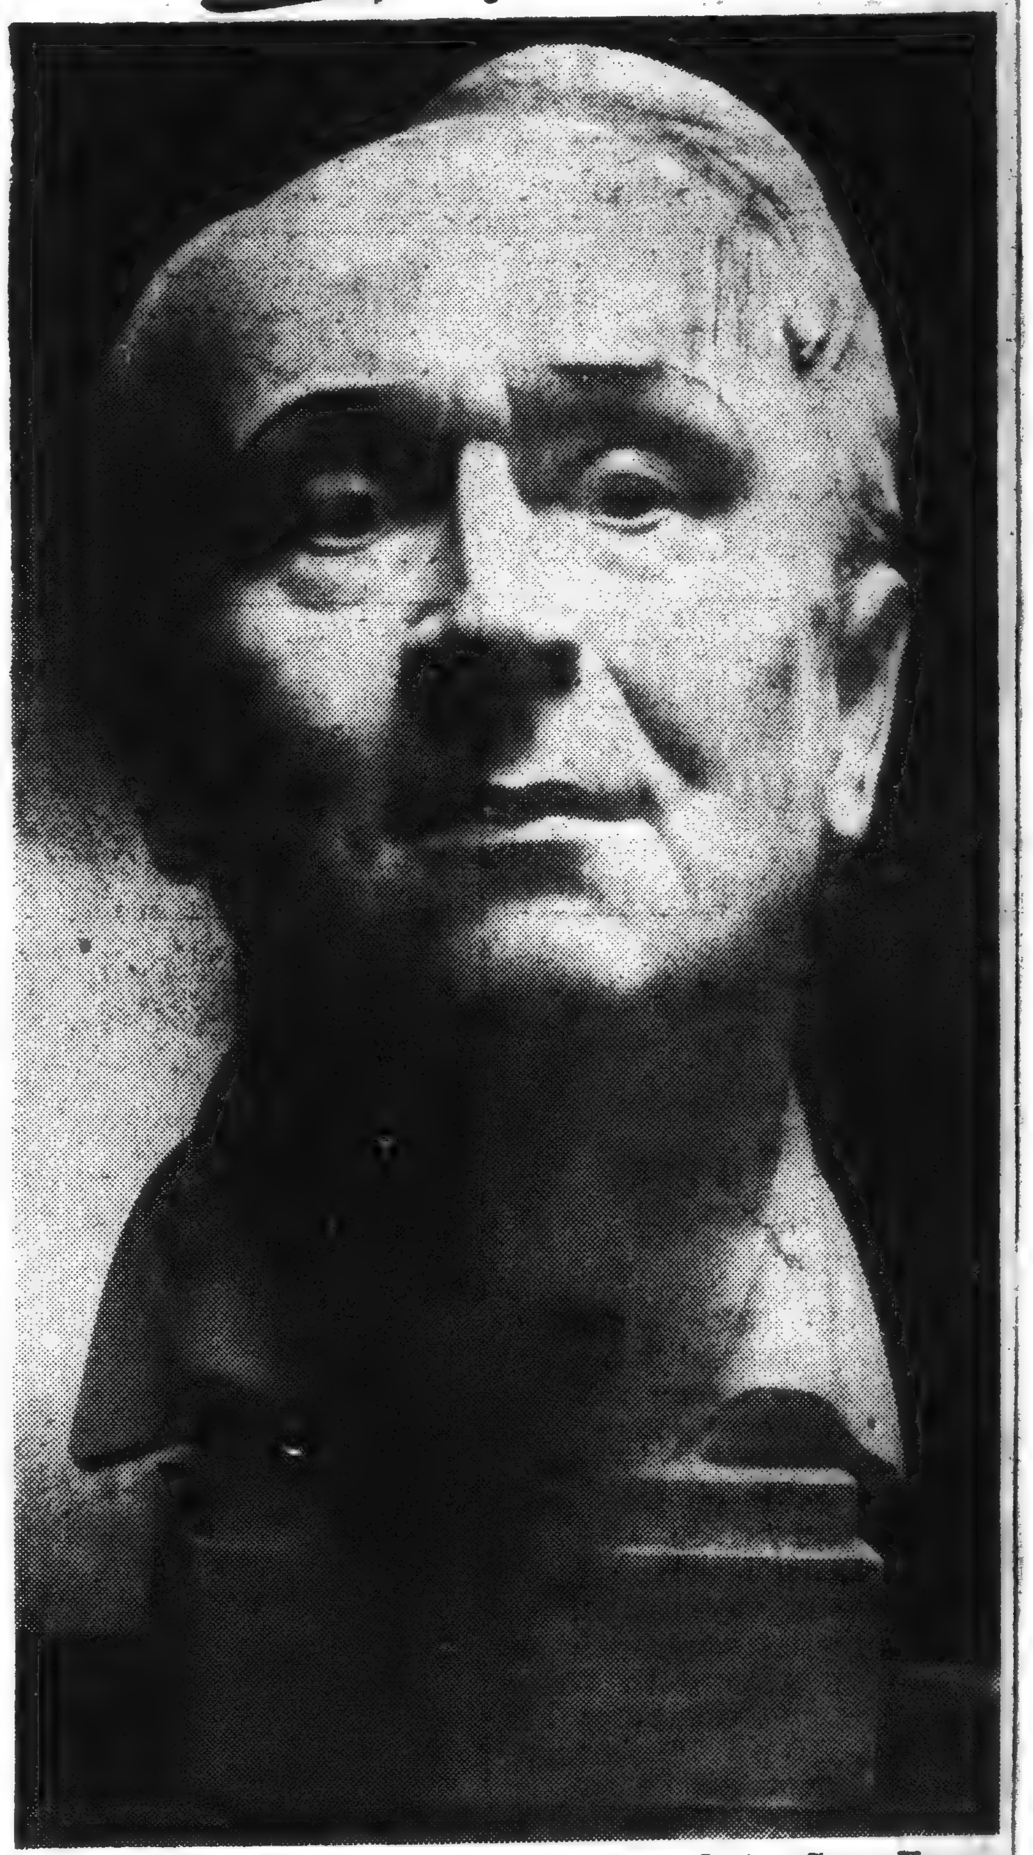
That made a challenge to a music loving group that had been growing in the Berkshires under the sponsorship of Mrs. Coolidge, one of America's most distinguished patrons of music. From the first it was an undertaking dared by, led, and worked for by a small group of women. Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave the choice Tanglewood site for the festival. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith set to work to raise the funds for an adequate music shed that would have the best possible acoustics and be in the simple manner of the out of door music festival.

And now for the third season the Music Festival is in its permanent home. It has a program of nine concerts where six concerts were the maximum in the years past. For each of these concerts there are as many tickets sold as for the smaller number last year. Besides for a full month Dr. Koussevitzky and his Boston men have been conducting the Berkshire Music Center. Among other things they have trained a chorus to sing the Bach Mass in B Minor which is becoming almost a household work now in the music centers of this country. No one can tell what future there is for any cultural movement anywhere today. But for this present year we can rejoice that Western Massachusetts has created one of the highest expressions of what the summer vacation period can possibly give.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1940

Koussevitzky in Marble



This marble head of the Boston Symphony's conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, is the creation of George Aarons, Boston sculptor, whose work has been exhibited at the Pennsylvania Academy, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Whitney Museum in New York. He is also currently exhibiting in the international show at Philadelphia. The Koussevitzky head now is on view in the lobby of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 3 - 1940

The Seventh Festival

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening at Tanglewood Thursday night was a beautiful reminder that America is still free to pursue her delights in spite of wars and rumors of wars. It was in striking contrast to the silence of Salzburg this year.

The festival has really grown up physically; esthetically it has been mature since its inception. The Boston Symphony's fifth season at the Tanglewood shed opened most auspiciously and not the least of the good omens was the matriculation day of the new music school in which young and ambitious musicians may study under the solicitous tutelage of Serge Koussevitzky. This school has long been Dr. Koussevitzky's dream and, in emerging into reality, it bespeaks continued growth for the Berkshire festival.

In its informality and size, in its attraction for sincere appreciators of the best in music, the event has attained ranking with the great music festivals of the world. Berkshire is now truly, and we hope for all time, the Salzburg of America.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1940

Society Members Remaining In City Have Gala Plans

By IDA TAYLOR

AUGUST, which usually brings a social lull to Toledo, finds the city gayer than ever, with many members of society in town and numerous guests here for the week end.

Among the many dinner parties that will be given this evening is one which Mr. and Mrs. O. E. M. Keller will give in their home in Eagle Point colony. The attractive affair will compliment Mrs. Richard Lennihan, who is returning to Martha's Vineyard, where she and the children are spending the summer. Mrs. Lennihan has been in the city for a week, and will be joined later this month in the east by Mr. Lennihan.

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister and her sister, Miss Olive Colton, who are spending the summer at the Curtis house, in Lenox, Mass., were among the throngs attending the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky gave an all first program the opening night. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius were played.

Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes will be Mrs. Hollister's guests in her box for several of the concerts.

The Toledo Times, Saturday, Aug

Will Attend Music Festival

MRS. FREDERICK KOUNTZ and Mr. Kountz will leave Wednesday for Lenox, Mass., to attend the Berkshire music festival. They will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Boston. Mr. Sawyer is president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. En route to Lenox they will stop at Chautauqua, N. Y., to attend several symphony concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1940

* * *

THE second program of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be presented at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight with Gregor Piatigorsky, cello soloist, playing in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote." The festival opened auspiciously Thursday with an audience of 6,000 hearing Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1940

SECOND FESTIVAL CONCERT TONIGHT

Gregor Piatigorsky Soloist With Boston Symphony

CENTER ACTIVE

Dr. Koussevitzky Also to Conduct American Symphony—Brahms at Tomorrow's Matinee.

Gregor Piatigorsky will be the 'cello soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" at the second concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight at 8.30 o'clock in the music shed at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will also conduct an American work, Roy Harris' Third Symphony, which he introduced last year. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe" complete the program.

Tanglewood, where over 6,000 men and women heard Koussevitzky open the new season Thursday with the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, offered no public performances yesterday but there was much activity. The Boston Symphony, which is playing at the festival for the fifth time, rehearsed Brahms' Second Symphony in preparation for the first afternoon concert, tomorrow at 3.30 o'clock, while in the new Berkshire Music center's rehearsal theater, Dr. Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, supervised the opera dramatic class in a scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin." Nearby, in a former garage, a chamber orchestra was concentrating on Haydn while in the main building Roy Harris was lecturing before the orchestra-conductor class.

Yesterday afternoon many of Thursday's festival patrons heard the South Mountain String quartet in a weekly concert sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in her Temple of Music on South mountain, Pittsfield. The ensemble was composed of Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violins; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello.

Program Tonight, Sunday

The programs for the remainder of the first week of the three-week festival season are:

Tonight at 8.30

Berlioz, Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss, "Don Quixote," violincello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky, viola solo, Jean LeFranc; Harris, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," suite of Daphnis and Chloe."

Tomorrow at 3.30

Mozart, Symphony in E Flat; Stravinsky, Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo by Jesus Maria Sanroma; Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER

AUG 3 - 1940

THE seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on Aug. 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of Aug. 17. The festival will end on Aug. 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1940

Roy Harris' Symphony At Stockbridge Tonight

Roy Harris, whose Third Symphony is to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight, is the husband of Johanna Harris, pianist, who presented a series of lecture-recitals at Williams college during the past winter season.

Mr. Harris composed the symphony in 1938 and it had its first performance Feb. 24, 1939, when it was played by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.

AUG 3 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Concerts begin promptly at 8:30 p.m.

Thurs. Aug. 1—Beethoven, Symphony No. 1 in C (Opus 21); Schumann, Symphony No. 1 in B flat (Opus 38); Sibelius, Symphony No. 1 in E minor (Opus 39).

Sat. Aug. 3—Berlioz, overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"; Strauss, tone-poem, "Don Quixote" (Jean Lefranc, viola; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello); Harris, Symphony No. 3 (one movement); Debussy, "Prélude à L'Aprè Midi d'une Faune"; Ravel, orchestral excerpts from music to the ballet, "Daphnis et Chloé".

Sun. Aug. 4- Mozart, Symphony No. 3 in E flat (Koechel 543); Stravinsky, Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo (Jesus Maria Sanroma); Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D (Opus 73).

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1940

Society Members Remaining In City Have Gala Plans

By IDA TAYLOR

AUGUST, which usually brings a social lull to Toledo, finds the city gayer than ever, with many members of society in town and numerous guests here for the week end.

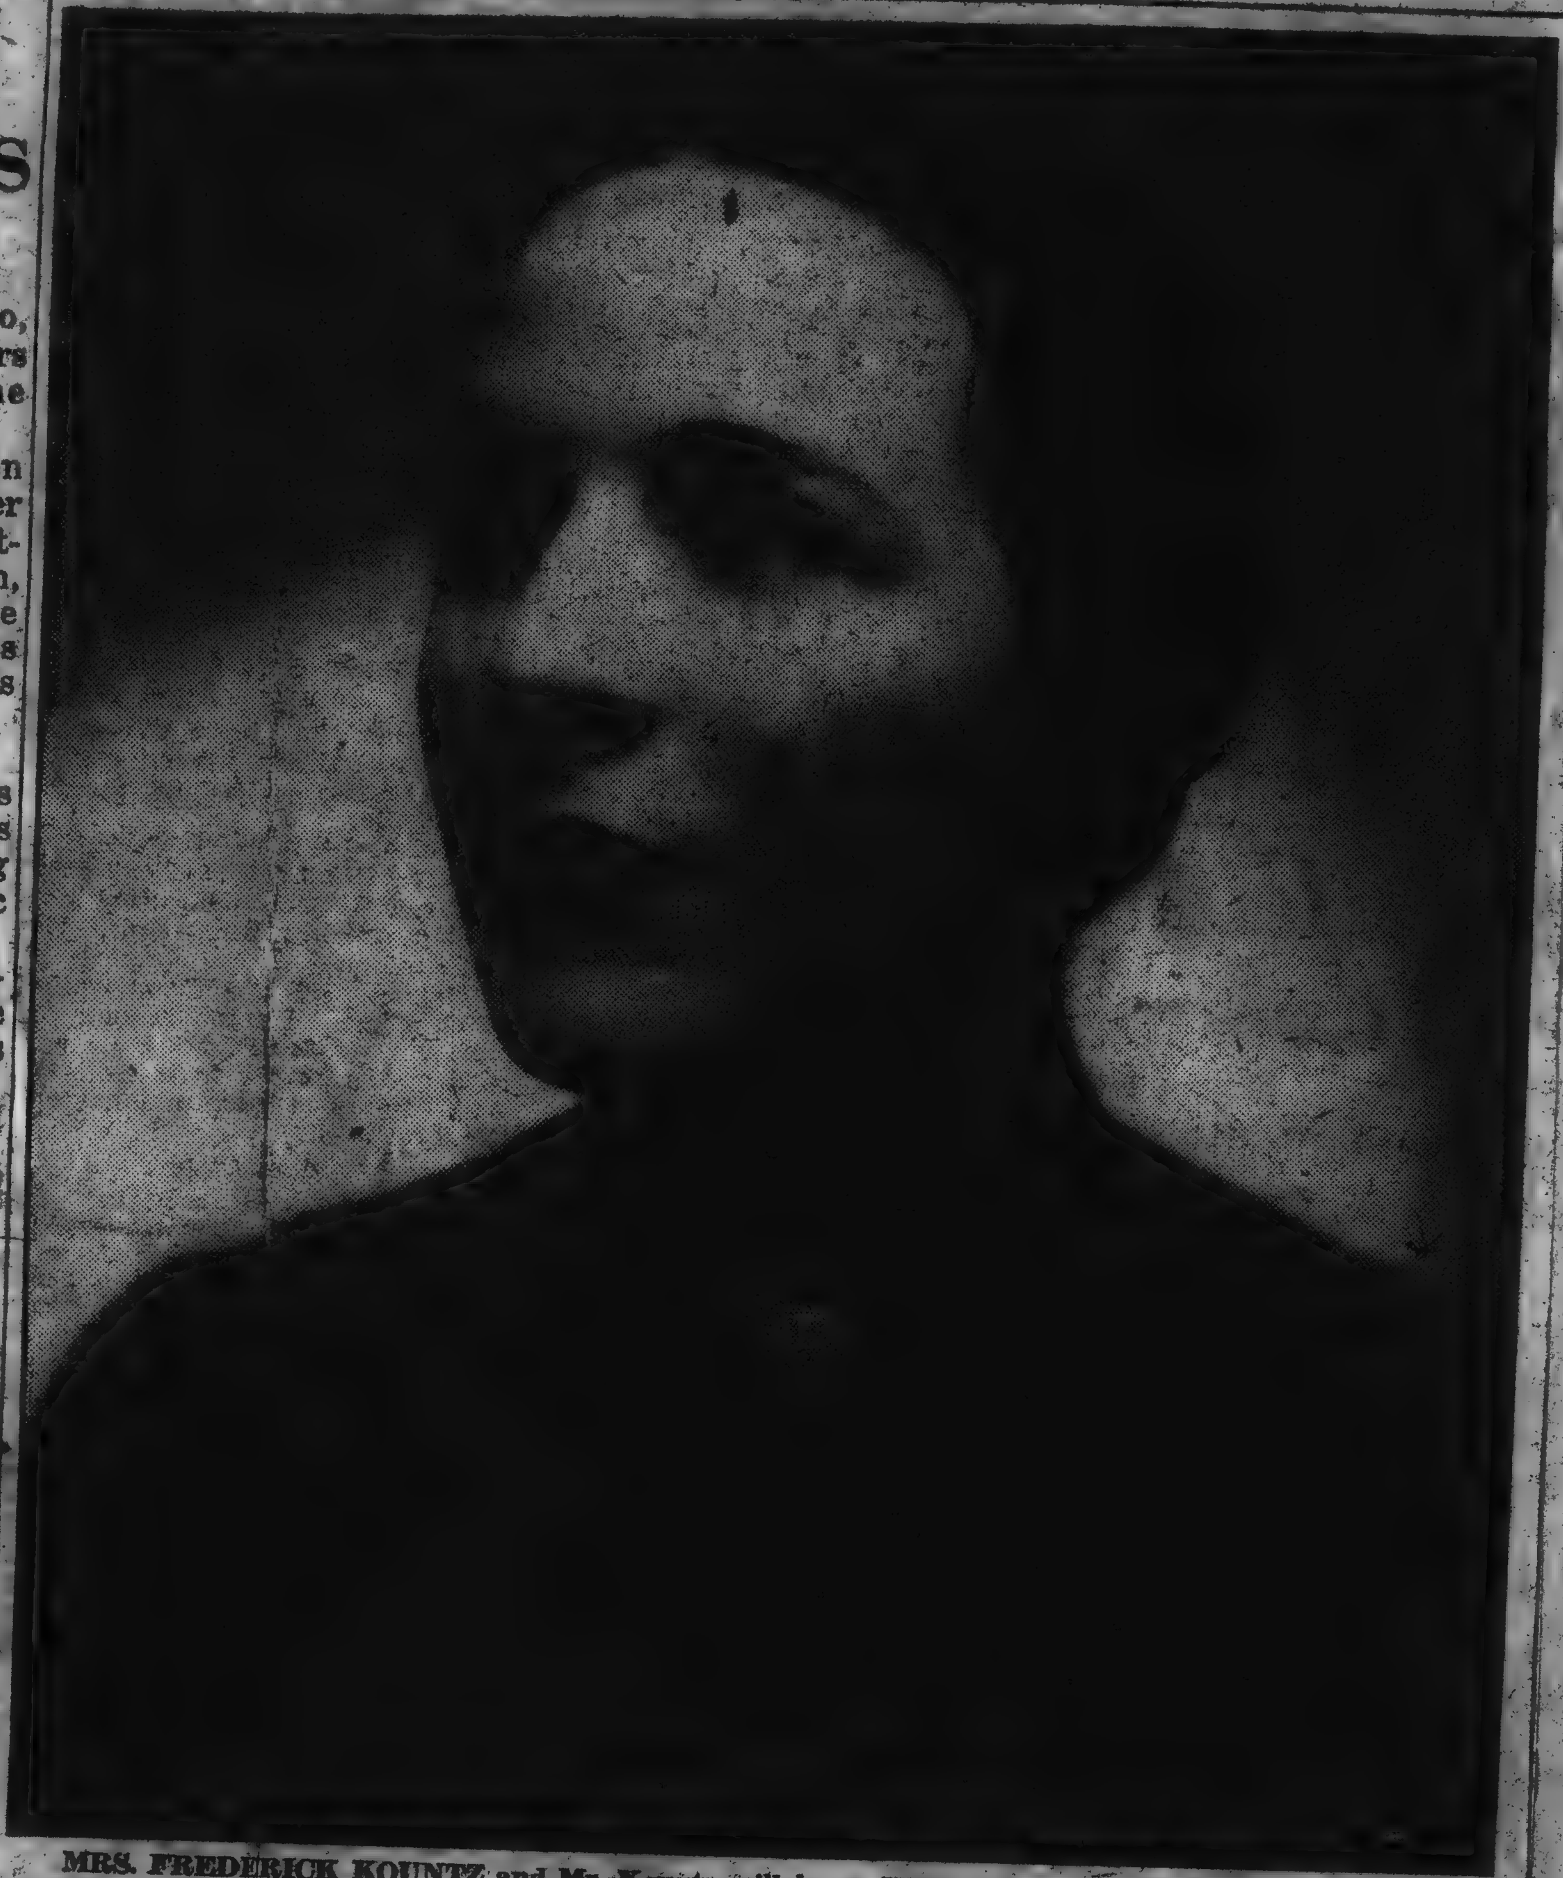
Among the many dinner parties that will be given this evening is one which Mr. and Mrs. O. E. M. Keller will give in their home in Eagle Point colony. The attractive affair will compliment Mrs. Richard Lennihan, who is returning to Martha's Vineyard, where she and the children are spending the summer. Mrs. Lennihan has been in the city for a week, and will be joined later this month in the east by Mr. Lennihan.

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister and her sister, Miss Olive Colton, who are spending the summer at the Curtis house, in Lenox, Mass., were among the throngs attending the opening of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky gave an all first program the opening night. The first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius were played.

Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes will be Mrs. Hollister's guests in her box for several of the concerts.

Will Attend Music Festival



MRS. FREDERICK KOUNTZ and Mr. Kountz will leave Wednesday for Lenox, Mass., to attend the Berkshire music festival. They will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Boston. Mr. Sawyer is president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. En route to Lenox they will stop at Chautauqua, N. Y., to attend several symphony concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1940

THE second program of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be presented at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight with Gregor Piatigorsky, cello soloist, playing in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote." The festival opened auspiciously Thursday with an audience of 6,000 hearing Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1940

SECOND FESTIVAL CONCERT TONIGHT

Gregor Piatigorsky Soloist With Boston Symphony

CENTER ACTIVE

Dr. Koussevitzky Also to Conduct American Symphony—Brahms at Tomorrow's Matinee.

Gregor Piatigorsky will be the 'cello soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" at the second concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight at 8.30 o'clock in the music shed at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will also conduct an American work, Roy Harris' Third Symphony, which he introduced last year. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe" complete the program.

Tanglewood, where over 6,000 men and women heard Koussevitzky open the new season Thursday with the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, offered no public performances yesterday but there was much activity. The Boston Symphony, which is playing at the festival for the fifth time, rehearsed Brahms' Second Symphony in preparation for the first afternoon concert, tomorrow at 3.30 o'clock, while in the new Berkshire Music center's rehearsal theater, Dr. Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, supervised the opera dramatic class in a scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin." Nearby, in a former garage, a chamber orchestra was concentrating on Haydn while in the main building Roy Harris was lecturing before the orchestra-conductor class.

Yesterday afternoon many of Thursday's festival patrons heard the South Mountain String quartet in a weekly concert sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in her Temple of Music on South mountain, Pittsfield. The ensemble was composed of Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violins; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello.

Program Tonight, Sunday

The programs for the remainder of the first week of the three-week festival season are:

Tonight at 8.30

Berlioz, Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini;" Strauss, "Don Quixote," violincello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky, viola solo, Jean LeFranc; Harris, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," suite of Daphnis and Chloe."

Tomorrow at 3.30

Mozart, Symphony in E Flat; with piano solo by Jesus Maria Stravinsky, Capriccio for orchestra Sanroma; Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER

AUG 3 - 1940

THE seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on Aug. 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of Aug. 17. The festival will end on Aug. 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1940

Roy Harris' Symphony At Stockbridge Tonight

Roy Harris, whose Third Symphony is to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic festival tonight, is the husband of Johanna Harris, pianist, who presented a series of lecture-recitals at Williams college during the past winter season.

Mr. Harris composed the symphony in 1938 and it had its first performance Feb. 24, 1939, when it was played by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.

AUG 3 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Concerts begin promptly at 8:30 p.m.

Thurs. Aug. 1—Beethoven, Symphony No. 1 in C (Opus 21); Schumann, Symphony No. 1 in B flat (Opus 38); Sibelius, Symphony No. 1 in E minor (Opus 39).

Sat. Aug. 3—Berlioz, overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"; Strauss, tone-poem, "Don Quixote" (Jean Lefranc, viola; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello); Harris, Symphony No. 3 (one movement); Debussy, "Prélude à L'Aprè Midi d'une Faune"; Ravel, orchestral excerpts from music to the ballet, "Daphnis et Chloé".

Sun. Aug. 4—Mozart, Symphony No. 3 in E flat (Koechel 543); Stravinsky, Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo (Jesus Maria Sanroma); Brahms, Symphony No. 2 in D (Opus 73).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1940

'Living and Working in Music'

Koussevitsky's Dream Realized In Berkshires

330 Students Toil for Greater Glory of Cause

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—It isn't all vacation and music in the Berkshires. The Symphonic Festival is the major attraction, of course, but with the inaugural of the Berkshire Music Center this season the idealistic dreamings of one man have at last found almost full reality. That man is Serge Koussevitsky. And here at the Center some 350 students from all over the country toil unremittingly day after day for the greater glory of the cause of music—both personal and universal.

The Berkshire Music Center really consists of two principal divisions—the institute and the academy. The institute is dedicated to the function of providing advanced teaching to talented pupils. All of those accepted by the board have had to show considerable ability and promise in their special line.

The institute offers courses in conducting — either under Mr. Koussevitsky's personal supervision or under that of principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — composition, opera dramatics and orchestral playing.

* * *

The Academy Courses.

The academy presents a slightly different picture. The courses it offers are open to all "possessing an intelligent interest in music, together with some experience in singing and playing." Its aims are "the constant participation in musical performance by every member of the school."

The Festival chorus, whose membership is drawn from the academy choral students, will sing in the Bach B Minor Mass, the piece de resistance for the last week of the Symphonic Festival.

Strolling through the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one is struck by the enthusiasm and camaraderie existing among pupils, teachers, functionaries, major and minor, and others.

I had an opportunity to listen to Abram Chasins deliver a lecture on the Bach Mass. Everything about the situation was revealing — the comfortable surroundings, the earnestness of the students. Some of them can be earnest and do their knitting—literally—at the same time.

* * *

Truisms Plus Anecdotes.

Mr. Chasins, a glib and entertaining lecturer, punctuated his truisms with many a delightful anecdote. Later Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, spoke with much feeling and conviction on the topic of The Integrity of the Critic. He, too, found it not averse to punch a point with a well-chosen mot.

Up to now an utterance of Mr. Koussevitsky's concerning the Center seems well on the way to realization, "Living and Working in Music."

Perhaps it is much too early to make predictions, but somewhere in the scheme of things is the promise that one day the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have to change its name to the Berkshire Music Festival, offering not only symphonic concerts to its devoted following but also operas, chamber concerts and, possibly, even recitals featuring great artists. All the signs point to it.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and guiding genius of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh successive season at Stockbridge, Mass.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 3 - 1940

Attends Symphony School

Michael Ficocelli

Michael Ficocelli (above), co-conductor of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, has left for the Berkshire Mountains to join his brother, Carmine, at a summer school for conductors and for the study of symphony orchestra technique. Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Jacques Gordon, assistant conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, are in charge of the school.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1940

Music Capital

America is rapidly becoming the musical capital of the world.

Driven from country after country, musicians have been gravitating to the United States in such numbers as to assure that the immediate future of music will be written here.

Add together these names: Artur Schnabel, pianist; Igor Stravinski, Paul Hindemith, and Kurt Weill, composers; Lotte Lehmann and Kirsten Flagsted, singers, and Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter, conductors. It is as bright a galaxy as may be seen in the world of music. All have come to the United States because of the impossible state of Europe. Many of them are in the Berkshires now. Some are on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, while others are here for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts.

We hope they will stay and that they will find conditions in America such as to produce a flowering of great music and great musicians. Already at Tanglewood, there has been a tremendous beginning which can be judged only a number of years hence.

Anyone who has been to Tanglewood during the sessions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra school or attended Festival concerts must be impressed by the feeling everywhere that here someth[illegible]cant is taking place.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 3 - 1940

Music and Musicians

Dr. Koussevitzky Sees a Dream Come True—About the Berkshire Music Center.

By WILLIAM G. KING.

Up in the Berkshires, Serge Koussevitzky is watching a dream that he has held to for a quarter-century develop into reality. Twice before it has come close to materialization, but a revolution in the one instance and a world-wide economic depression in the other interfered.

Josef Hofmann

Soloist in Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto at the Lewisohn Stadium next Monday night.

Perhaps there's truth in the old saying that "the third time's a charm;" or perhaps those mysterious currents which direct the course of culture have merely brought together the right ideas, ideals and persons for the service of an art, at the exact time such service is most urgently needed. At any rate, the Music Center which Dr. Koussevitzky first visioned in pre-revolutionary Moscow is now an established thing, here in our own Berkshire Hills, and no one who has seen it in action can doubt that it will play an increasingly important part in our musical life, come what may. In the pungent idiom of our democracy, the whole scheme "makes sense," and the spirit which pervades it is something that does not die easily.

I wish that all those who fear for the future of music because of the barbarism which has swept over so much of the world, might spend a few days at "Tanglewood," the Boston Symphony Orchestra's estate near Stockbridge, Mass., where the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival is given, and where the Center has been established. They would, I feel sure, come away with the conviction that young America is not only willing but splendidly able to keep burning any cultural fires which have been extinguished in Europe.

Gathered there are more than three hundred young men and women from all parts of the country, working together under the guidance of some of the ablest musicians of the day. And one has only to talk with them, to watch them in the classes, and to hear them in rehearsal and concert, to realize that Dr. Koussevitzky and his aids do not exaggerate when they tell you that these three hundred are but the first small tapping of what is probably the greatest reservoir of musical talent the world has ever known. There have been other developments of late besides those resulting from the establishment of the Center—notably the astonishing achievements of Leopold Stokowski's All-American Youth Orchestra—to emphasize the potential greatness of America's musical future. But what has already been accomplished and what is being planned for the coming years at "Tanglewood" seem to me to offer the most definite assurance that that future will not fail of its promise. Already the cause of music in America and of American music is deeply in the debt of Serge Koussevitzky, but it is altogether possible that his most valuable contribution to our culture will prove to be that which he is now making at the Berkshire Music Center.

Perennial Pioneer.

Koussevitzky has always been a pioneer. In his early days, he expanded the field of his chosen instrument, the double-bass (he's still probably the greatest virtuoso of that huge brother of the violin). Later, he organized his own orchestra to tour Russia, and founded his own publishing firm to help in popularizing the "new music" of such composers as Stravinsky, Scriabin, Medtner and Rachmaninoff. Since he came to America in 1924 as conductor of the Boston Symphony, he has done more than any other one man to bring to rightful prominence the composers of his adopted country. Although there have been highly gifted composers of American birth in the past, our own generation is the first to produce a recognized group which is definitely American in spirit. That this is so is due in no small measure to Koussevitzky's persistent encouragement and championship of such men as Copland, Piston, Harris, Sowerby and Sessions. And at the age of 66 (I hap[illegible] to spend the afternoon of [illegible] with him last week) [illegible] who have achieved [illegible] position as he [illegible] content to [illegible] others, [illegible] of the younge[illegible] by it.

He is touch[illegible] organizations which [illegible] sible the realization o[illegible] of a Music Center through [illegible] "we older musicians can fulfill our duty to hand on the treasures of musical culture to American youth." He repeats, with almost boyish pride, what Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony, said to him after he'd outlined his plans for the Center at a meeting of the board of trustees: "Go ahead. We can't afford to lose that idea!"

The terrace of "Seranak," the home on a hilltop near Stockbridge which he bought earlier this year, overlooks the Music Shed of "Tanglewood," where his orchestra plays the Berkshire Festival concerts, and the buildings in which the Music Center is housed, and as we talked the other afternoon, his eyes kept turning toward these material evidences that his dream has become a reality. Bemol, his black spaniel, sitting beside him on the exact spot at which soothing fingers could most conveniently reach his ears, looked more and more reproachful as his master, warming to his subject, found other uses for the hand that had been petting him. Finally he sighed and deserted us.

Our Gifted Youth.

"You have felt the spirit of this place," said Dr. Koussevitzky. "You have seen how those young people are so enthusiastic, so earnest. Do you wonder that I am so happy to work with them? How could a real musician fail to be inspired by such response? I assure you I have the greatest satisfaction from our first season of the Center, because we have attracted a group of such talented young musicians in all classes—not only composers and conductors and soloists, but also fine orchestral players. They are wonderful, these young instrumentalists. I think America did not know she had such a group.

"And conductors? You have heard a few of them. I will say that in five years, this country will produce no less than five of the very first rank, no less than twenty who are very fine. I have found at least one in our present group who, believe me, has real genius. We will also have a group of very sound young composers. The talent has been here for a long time, but the trouble has been that those who possessed it have sometimes not been able to find the way to use the rich material about them to the best advantage. Those who come under the guidance of Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith at our Center, I feel, will discover the way."

We had just come from a concert by the student orchestra, and I mentioned the finish and verve with which it had played.

"That is another of our purposes," he said, "to develop as many first-class American orchestra-players as we can. Perhaps you do not know how difficult it has been in the past to find American-trained first-desk men. It has not been because there were no gifted players here, but because it was so hard for these talented ones to obtain the experience to fit them for such important posts.

"Our method of teaching at the Center is absolutely different. Those young people you heard a little while ago in those very complicated modern scores, had had only four ensemble rehearsals. They were able to acquit themselves so well because each of them—from the first violinist right down to the third clarinetist—had rehearsed his own part, even though it might be only a phrase or two, with his individual teacher, and had rehearsed it as thoroughly as if it were the solo part in a concerto.

"One must never forget that in an orchestral performance there are no parts of 'third' importance. For me, if the little phrase that is the third clarinet's only contribution is badly played, it spoils the whole."

Under the Center system, the members of the orchestra shift desks for almost every composition on their concert-programs, so that the concert-master for one number may find himself among the last of the second violins for the next. Instructors in the orchestral instruments are outstanding members of the Boston Symphony. Naturally, with each student receiving private as well as class instruction, the student-body must be strictly limited. Only the exceptionally talented can gain admission to the "participating" classes, although the Center has made provision for a number of "auditors," who are free to attend all lectures, rehearsals, &c. That so many were able to meet the rigid standards of the [illegible] (and many more eligibles [illegible] turned away) is proof [illegible] and quality of the [illegible] America today.

[illegible] Work.

[illegible] America [illegible] Koussev[illegible] are the young [illegible] The composers, [illegible] players?' And they [illegible] there weren't any. I would [illegible] lieve. I said that it was not [illegible] sible for a country of 130,000,000 people to have fewer than fifty really fine young musical talents, and after a while, I found out there was a Copland, a Piston and others. So I sent for them. I said to Piston, 'Why do you not compose for orchestra?' and he replied, 'Why? No one will play such work.' I said that if he'd compose a good thing, I would play it. Four months later, he brought me a suite for orchestra—very interesting. Then a year later, he gave me a really fine suite, and after that a concerto. It was the same with others. It was my great joy to give these men the hearings they deserved. And when I believed in a work, I played it again and again.

"I am very pleased that nowadays so many conductors and orchestras are eager to play the new works of these composers, that there is wide recognition of the fact that there is so much good music of every kind by Americans. Five years ago I said, 'Today the American composer is the most interesting in the world.' Every one says so now. It makes me a little proud. . . .

"I have this great faith—so long as culture and art exist, there is hope for humanity, and they do exist in America. I think we are just beginning to realize how rich we are in artistic resources. In music, at least, I am convinced that our American young people are finding themselves gloriously. It is our privilege to help them do so."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1940

'Living and Working in Music'

Koussevitsky's Dream Realized In Berkshires

330 Students Toil for Greater Glory of Cause

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—It isn't all vacation and music in the Berkshires. The Symphonic Festival is the major attraction, of course, but with the inaugural of the Berkshire Music Center this season the idealistic dreamings of one man have at last found almost full reality. That man is Serge Koussevitsky. And here at the Center some 350 students from all over the country toil unremittingly day after day for the greater glory of the cause of music—both personal and universal.

The Berkshire Music Center really consists of two principal divisions—the institute and the academy. The institute is dedicated to the function of providing advanced teaching to talented pupils. All of those accepted by the board have had to show considerable ability and promise in their special line.

The institute offers courses in conducting — either under Mr. Koussevitsky's personal supervision or under that of principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — composition, opera dramatics and orchestral playing.

* * *

The Academy Courses.

The academy presents a slightly different picture. The courses it offers are open to all "possessing an intelligent interest in music, together with some experience in singing and playing." Its aims are "the constant participation in musical performance by every member of the school."

The Festival chorus, whose membership is drawn from the academy choral students, will sing in the Bach B Minor Mass, the piece de resistance for the last week of the Symphonic Festival.

Strolling through the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one is struck by the enthusiasm and camaraderie existing among pupils, teachers, functionaries, major and minor, and others.

I had an opportunity to listen to Abram Chasins deliver a lecture on the Bach Mass. Everything about the situation was revealing — the comfortable surroundings, the earnestness of the students. Some of them can be earnest and do their knitting—literally—at the same time.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor and guiding genius of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh successive season at Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

Truisms Plus Anecdotes.

Mr. Chasins, a glib and entertaining lecturer, punctuated his truisms with many a delightful anecdote. Later Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, spoke with much feeling and conviction on the topic of The Integrity of the Critic. He, too, found it not averse to punch a point with a well-chosen mot.

Up to now an utterance of Mr. Koussevitsky's concerning the Center seems well on the way to realization, "Living and Working in Music."

Perhaps it is much too early to make predictions, but somewhere in the scheme of things is the promise that one day the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have to change its name to the Berkshire Music Festival, offering not only symphonic concerts to its devoted following but also operas, chamber concerts and, possibly, even recitals featuring great artists. All the signs point to it.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1940

Music Capital

America is rapidly becoming the musical capital of the world.

Driven from country after country, musicians have been gravitating to the United States in such numbers as to assure that the immediate future of music will be written here.

Add together these names: Artur Schnabel, pianist; Igor Stravinski, Paul Hindemith, and Kurt Weill, composers; Lotte Lehmann and Kirsten Flagsted, singers, and Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter, conductors. It is as bright a galaxy as may be seen in the world of music. All have come to the United States because of the impossible state of Europe. Many of them are in the Berkshires now. Some are on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, while others are here for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts.

We hope they will stay and that they will find conditions in America such as to produce a flowering of great music and great musicians. Already at Tanglewood, there has been a tremendous beginning which can be judged only a number of years hence.

Anyone who has been to Tanglewood during the sessions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra school or attended Festival concerts must be impressed by the feeling everywhere that here someth[illegible] cant is taking place.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 3 - 1940

Attends Symphony School

Michael Ficocelli

Michael Ficocelli (above), co-conductor of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra, has left for the Berkshire Mountains to join his brother, Carmine, at a summer school for conductors and for the study of symphony orchestra technique. Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Jacques Gordon, assistant conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, are in charge of the school.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 3 - 1940

ies and West Highland whites; Joseph Birch, bulldogs, and Mrs. William B. Long Jr., the novice and Joseph W. Beatman the open and utility obedience.

Alaska, the "Geographic Dictionary of Alaska" says: "This word is the corruption of some native word or phrase, the meaning of which is uncertain."

Pets and Kennels

Published Every Saturday

PEDIGREED DOGS

BEDLINGTON TERRIERS, males-females, champion stock. VARNEY, 440 6th st., Bklyn. STerling 8-2655.

BOSTON Terrier puppies, champion stock, excellent pedigree, $25 and up. NEvins 8-9457.

BOSTONS—Quality puppies, grown males, females. Champion strain. Reasonable. HREN, SEdgwick 3-5969.

BOSTON TERRIER pups. Best blood lines. MORTON, 24 Hall av., Tuckahoe, N. Y.

BOXER PUPPIES—Champion stock; companions and protectors. W. LIPPERT—New Rochelle 4579.

BOXER PUPPIES; fawn color; pedigreed. JOSEPH F. DILLON, 2020 Hay Terrace, Easton, Penna.

BULL TERRIERS, 5 puppies, 8 weeks. Call after 6 p. m. or all day Sunday. 414 Midwood st., Brooklyn.

CHESAPEAKE BAY RETRIEVER, male, 3 years, registered; reasonable. Phone FLushing 3-6329.

COCKER SPANIEL PUPPIES
THREE SUPERB DARK REDS OF TOP QUALITY BREEDING
9 WEEKS OLD
Specially priced if taken [illegible]
GANZ
711 Fifth Ave. 11th Flo[illegible]
(Week[illegible])

COCKER SPA[illegible] sonable; [illegible] CARDO[illegible]

[illegible] reasonably [illegible] KENNELS, Hegeman's [illegible] Phone Brook-

[illegible] (English)—Outstanding puppies [illegible] stock, various colors. A. G. [illegible]OAR, Elwood Road, Huntington, [illegible] Northport 1375.

COLLIES—Beautifully marked sable and white puppies; Bellhaven breeding; reasonable. R. SIMMONS, Route 31 Hamburg, N.J.

DOBERMAN PINSCHER PUPPIES, Sire: Int. Ch. Moritz v. Rodeltal. Dam: Donna, Ex Tri-Int. Ch. Carol v. Oevanes. CONLON, corner Route 4 and Teaneck Road, New Jersey. Call TEaneck 7-2972.

DOBERMAN PINSCHER. Registered male, 3 years old, gentle pet and guardian. Very reasonable. 340 Sylvan Ave., Leonia, N. J.

DOBERMAN PINSCHER pups, 6 weeks old. Best stock. Call INdependence 3-6769.

GERMAN Shepherd female puppies, pedigreed, Champion blood lines, black, by Champion Carlo V. Bar-Orch, C. D. Whelped May 12, $50. Excellent watch dogs. ANTHONY FOKKER, Plains Rd., Milford, Conn.

IRISH SETTER PUPPIES—Among most beautiful and companionable of sporting dogs. Sire, Champion Milson's Topnotcher —grand Sire, Champion Milson's O'boy. WAlker 5-0625.

IRISH SETTER puppies; champion strains. MRS. EDWARD MINER, Powell Lane, Westbury, L. I.

IRISH TERRIERS, unusual companions, champion stock, puppies. MARADON KENNELS, Boonton, N. J. Tel. 8-0526. New York office VAnderbilt 6-4567.

IRISH TERRIER pups, champion bred. Dogs boarded, trained and conditioned. INDIAN GRASS KENNELS. Stockton. N. J. Lambertville 945-J2.

IRISH TERRIER puppies and grown stock. DENBROOK KENNELS, Jericho. L. I. Hicksville 1294.

IRISH TERRIER PUPPIES of champion stock, 2 months old. Call PARROTT, New Canaan 1309 or MUrray Hill 2-6525.

IRISH TERRIERS, pedigreed, puppies and grown, low price. ROULSTON, 2162 Madison av.

NEWFOUNDLANDS, COCKERS, Registered. CAMAYER, Albany Post Road, Ossining, N. Y. Telephone 2210.

NORWEGIAN ELKHOUND female pups, eight weeks. Father and mother imported. Fine pedigrees. Grandfather Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish Champion. References. $50 to $75 each. KNUT OLSEN, 580 Fifth Ave. LO. 3-2858.

PEKINGESE puppies. 2 darlings. Red with black mask; will sacrifice. REgent 4-3067.

SAMOYEDE. Beautiful puppies. Reasonable registered, 9 weeks old. FLushing 9-0613M. Call evenings.

SAMOYEDES and Shetland [illegible] registered, pedigreed puppies [illegible] SHERIDAN, Mount Si[illegible]

SCOTTIES—Wires, beautiful [illegible] highly pedigreed [illegible] kennels, MAY[illegible]

[illegible] puppies, [illegible] rare type, white [illegible] unusual for pets, breeding [illegible] KENNELS, 17 Over[illegible] N. J. Montclair [illegible]

[illegible] TERRIER Puppies. Grown stock. Best bloodlines. RAYBROOK, 340 Tuckahoe Road, Yonkers.

DOGS

DOBERMAN PINSCHER, 7 weeks, female, champion blood, perfect markings; reasonable. STuyvesant 9-5710.

ENGLISH SETTER, thoroughbred puppies, 9 weeks old. Cokefair, 265 Rugby Road, Brooklyn.

BOARD AND TRAIN

VACATION your dogs at the Canine Country Club. 30 acres, excellent buildings. Obedience training, housemanners. Dogs called for. HERMAN STEIN, Roslyn, L. I. (Roslyn 655.)

DOGS BOARDED

A HOME for Dogs in the Country. Individual care. Only healthy dogs accepted. Dogs called for. MR. & MRS. JOHN MORSE, Jac-A-Leen Kennels, Gillette, N. J. Millington 256M.

ALL PETS; day, week, month; country, city; call, delivery. O'MARA BROOK KENNELS, 1016 Lexington ave. (73d). RHinelander 4-7134.

GIVE your dog a summer vacation; private home taking a limited number of dogs; expert care. Scarsdale 4566.

CATS

MANX KITTENS. Very rare, ideal pets, housebroken. Pedigreed. Reasonable. STILLMAN, 430 Carol Place, Pelham Manor, N. Y. Pelham 2288.

ROYAL SIAMESE KITTENS, finest pedigreed, females, $8; also beautiful pair grown cats. Very reasonable. Good home. WAdsworth 3-0738.

FOR ADOPTION

DO YOU want a lovable pet in your home? Visit Bide-a-Wee, 410 East 38th st., also Wantagh, L. I. Beautiful animal cemetery.

Only dogs eligible for registration in recognized stud books acceptable under "PEDIGREED DOGS."

This Clipping From
SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN

AUG 3 - 1940

Of interest to Saratogians was the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the seventh chapter of its history, when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of this summer's nine concerts in the music shed in the Tanglewood Estate.

Dr. Koussevitzky, welcomed on his first appearance of the evening with an enthusiasm characteristic of Berkshire festival gatherings, presented a program appropriate for an inaugural concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky occupied the residence of Mr. and Mrs. James J. Riley during July and has been a "cure" cottager here each summer for several years.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
AUG 3 - 1940

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FETE WINS PRAISE

Clevelanders Hear Opening of Symphony Program

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)

BY HERBERT ELWELL
Plain Dealer Music Critic

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, opened its three-week Berkshire symphonic festival tonight before an enthusiastic crowd of 6,000 persons at Tanglewood, the beautiful summer home of the orchestra near Stockbridge.

Music lovers from a wide area, including many Clevelanders, have come here to enjoy this famous orchestra in a spot which bids fair to become one of the world's most important summer music centers. Celebrities by the dozen may be seen here tonight.

In the audience were Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski, who have a farm near by. Also present were Richard Rychtarik and Boris Goldovsky, who are active in the opera school connected with the festival.

Exceptional for summer music fare was the program of three symphonies offered by Koussevitzky to his admiring crowd, which ranged from high-caste Bostonians and doughty dowagers to humble music students.

Conditions Ideal

The symphonies were the firsts of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. Though this would be a heavy sea for the average summer music public to navigate, it was smooth going here.

The truth is it would be a pity to waste this marvelous orchestra on anything less.

The precision and control of this group are always exceptional, but I have never heard it to better advantage, nor under such ideal conditions. Special thrills came with electrifying dash of the finale to the Beethoven first and the broad, romantic warmth of the Schumann symphony, while the superb rendering of the Sibelius made the music shed ring with a thundering ovation.

Those who are here to attend the rest of the festival are in for a rare treat, and I for one am not sorry I came. Big things are planned for the future, and it is interesting to be here to watch them grow.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PATERSON, N. J.
CALL
AUG 3 - 1940

Boston Symphony Opens Stockbride Festival

Seventh Season Starts Under Serge Koussevitzky, Director

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2 — The one major musical festival of the day to which an audience still can listen with no glances aloft save to consider the weather, began its seventh season here last night under ideal conditions. These included an audience of nearly 6,000 and a blessedly cool evening as well as the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. Since this is the first year in which the festival will continue for three weeks, the size of this opening audience was regarded with especial satisfaction.

Apparently Mr. Koussevitzky is an earnest subscriber to the doctrine of "First things first," for his opening program was devoted to the initial symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius.

An ingenious as well as an interesting plan, it presented in succession perhaps the most original of first symphonies, and well — at least the most Sibelian of such works. For those who were minded to consider such points it was also instructive to observe the increasing orchestral resources at the disposal of three men undertaking similar projects in three different eras, a point that this brilliant orchestra made with especial forcefulness.

If one could undertake a distinction among works and performances so uniformly arousing, it would be on behalf of the Schumann symphony, the least played of them and in many ways the most refreshing. Mr. Koussevitzky made a clarion call of the opening horn fanfare, and a true paean of joy of the whole work. Certainly one can imagine nothing more rapturously beautiful than the sound the strings produced in the larghetto.

The conductor entered amid a standing, applauding orchestra and received a welcome from the audience that was fond as it was respectful.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 3 - 1940

MUSIC

In Albany

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

America's greatest summer musical event, the Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood,' Stockbridge, received a most auspicious opening Thursday night, when the Boston Symphony orchestra of 110 members, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, presented the first of a series on nine concerts before an audience of over 6,000 music lovers from every state in the Union. A clear star-studded night made light wraps necessary and the absence of humidity, fatal to the string section of any orchestra, resulted in a brilliant performance by the men.

Ever a fine program builder, Dr. Koussevitzky chose three "firsts" for his opening presentation; symphonies No. 1 of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius respectively. Representing three schools of symphonic composition, the orchestras, under the inspiration of its virile conductor was never heard to better advantage than during last night's offering of the best in symphonic literature by one of the great, if not the greatest orchestra in the world. One does not analyze or criticize the Boston conductor's readings of the scores. The complete musical patterns and their dramatic colorings are to be enjoyed as an instrumental entity and the listener feels that he has been a close observer of musical perfection.

The line of boxes which bisects the great music shed like a section of a huge layer cake was filled with beautifully dressed women and immaculately attired escorts, representing a cross-section of the families which have made America what it is today, and who are, in great measure, responsible for the amazing success of the Berkshire musical project. Every seat in the great shed was occupied with the overflow seated on requisitioned benches at either side of the auditorium. Many listened, while not being conscious of the mechanics of the music offered, from the lawns behind the shed on which blankets had been strewn, where the music came to them in its purest form. The second concert of Series A will take place this evening, when the orchestra will offer a miscellaneous program from the works of Berlioz, Strauss, Debussy, Ravel and Symphony No. 3 by the American composer, Roy Harris. The concert will begin promptly at 8:30 p. m.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Second Berkshire Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate will be given tomorrow night, when Gregor Piatigorsky will be the cello soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra i[redacted] Strauss's "Don Quixote." Serge Koussevitzky will also conduct an American work, Roy Harris's third symphony, which he introduced to New York last year; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chole" suite.

Although today offered no public performances in the music shed, Tanglewood was the secen of much musical activity between 9:30 o'clock in the morning and the corresponding hour of the evening.

Just before noon, for instance, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were closing rehearsal of Brahm's second symphony, while in the Berkshire music center's rehearsal theater Dr. Herbert Graf, Metropolitan Opera stage director, was supervising the center's opera dramatic class in a scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," devoting special attention to vocal inflection and clarity of enunciation. Hard by, in the garage, a chamber orchestra was studying a work by Haydn, while in the main building Roy Harris was lecturing for the orchestra-conducting class. The general atmosphere was one of informality combined with enthusiastic devotion and concentration upon the musical tasks in hand.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who is director of the center, is very pleased with the results achieved thus far by its first session.

His special advanced class for conductors has about a dozen members, mostly directors of established orchestras in small and larger cities. Apart from the rehearsal stage, the two divisions of the center, the institute and the academy, have not required any new construction but make use of existing buildings on the estate. The total enrollment is 309. About 120 are in the institute, the more advanced of the two divisions.

* * *

Last night's concert, the first of the series, found the orchestra in its normal excellent form in a program devoted to the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius. One feature common to all three works was the substantially similar ages of their composers at the time of their completion. Beethoven was twenty-nine when he finished his first symphony, Schumann was thirty and Sibelius thirty. The Schumann symphony, among these three, is the most representative of the composer's matured individual style, but the fact that Beethoven's symphony in C looks back from time to time to the style of Beethoven's immediate predecessors and that the Sibelius symphony in E minor is relatively traditional in form while not in content does not deny the distinct individuality of either work.

The Sibelius symphony gains on repeated hearings; one becomes more conscious of its stature and eloquence, less of influence, other than those which have been made a part of the composer's musical personality. Its performance made what was probably the strongest impression of the evening, although great enthusiasm was bestowed upon the clear-spirited and buoyant interpretation of the Beethoven work and the expressive proclamation of Schumann's Spring symphony.

Here the conductor's reading of the introduction was considerably broader than usual. This deliberation of pace seemed slightly overemphasized, but the opening measures possessed exceptional mass and dignity. The atmosphere implied by the vernal title sometimes associated with the work generally pervaded its interpretation.

In the Sibelius work, a few points of tempo, such as the conservative pace adopted for the scherzo, might not have been matters of complete agreement, but the interpretation as a whole gave a particularly memorable sense of expressive intentness and conviction, of spaciousness and communicated emotion. The broad chant of the latter part of the finale, as it gradually swelled in volume, suggested the conclusion of an epic.

* * *

Many of last night's festival patrons were in this afternoon's audience for the South Mountain String Quartet in a concert of the weekly series sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in the Temple of [redacted] Mountain near Pittsfield. The members of the ensemble—Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violins; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, cello—had the distinguished pianistic cooperation of Harold Bauer in a program including Schumann's piano quartet in E flat and Brahms's piano quartet in A major, Op. 26. The laudably played Schumann quartet is seldom heard in New York's public concerts, but merits revival.

The novelty of the afternoon was a string quartet in D minor, Op. 8, by Alan Hovaness, a young American composer. This made a very favorable impression due not only to its conciseness of expression but also to the melodic nature of its musical ideas. All the movements were short, with long-breathed tunes of elegiac atmosphere dominating the first and third parts, and another single theme, more vivacious, prevailing through the second. The closing fugue, not apparently strict in character, was not marked by the exacting austerity which characterizes quite a little of the fugal writing in contemporary chamber music. There was both constructive ingenuity and lyricism. The performance of the two piano quartets was also warmly applauded by the audience, which filled the hall, and the contingent of listeners which preferred seats on the grass outside.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
AUG 3 - 1940

SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN MUCH PRAISE

Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock, Serge Koussevitzky once again raised his baton, the Boston Symphony Orchestra broke into Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival started on its third year in the outdoor music shed at Tanglewood, Nathaiel Hawthorne's old home, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

Each summer since 1938, when the shed was built, Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted the Boston Symphonic orchestra and there is a series of concerts during the month of August . For true music lovers, the music shed at Tanglewood is an ideal place in which to listen to the music of the great composers, and though there is seating room for only 5000, there are always about 6000 to 7000 in the audiences.

Thursday evening was perfect as an opening night. Outside it was clear and cool, so that the crowd seated inside, though packed closely together, was cool and comfortable. It was a little cooler for those seated on the grass outside, but many blankets were in use, and not many left the concert because of the weather.

The program chosen for the first performance of the year consisted of Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-flat, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E Minor. Generous applause greeted Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra at the close of each of these, but the audience clapped especially long and loudly after the Orchestra had completed the poignant Sibelius.

The accoustics in the Tanglewood music shed are excellent. The slightest strumming of the harp, or the most meticulous plucking of a violin can be heard at the farthest corner, and it is possible for those outside to hear equally as well as those within. Thursday night there were 6000 people there, and, though the seats are varied in price, no one person could hear better than another. The only advantage that some may receive from such a democratic music hall is that of being able to see the orchestra more clearly, with Mr. Koussevitzky leading, in his snowy white hair and coat.

Many states were represented at the opening concert. Among the automobile licenses that were observed in the the parking field were Wisconsin, Missouri, Iowa and California. Several music lovers from Bennington had taken the trouble to drive over to Tanglewood and among the celebrities present were Lucrezia Bori and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
AUG 4 - 1940

* * *

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festical by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Cerge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on August 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The first series of concerts will open on August 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of August 17. The festival will end on August 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE
AUG 4 - 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on August 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on August 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music center will be heard.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1940

MUSIC

Stoky Has Sizzling Hepcats, Vet Tooter in His Youth Symphony

BY ELMORE BACON

WHEN is a youth symphony not a youth symphony, is a question that might have been asked of Leopold Stokowsky when he was here with Rudolph Ringwall a couple of months ago auditioning applicants for places in the youth orchestra he is taking on a tour of South America.

While applicants chosen here were all youthtful students of serious music, it seems that a number of sizzling hepcats and at least one veteran orchestral player are numbered on the Youth Symphony list.

The Atlantic City correspondent for Billboard reports that Stoky's severely classical group rehearsing there was found to harbor four hepcats considered really "hot" by the jazz and jive cognoscenti.

All four had the rug cutters licking their chops at an Atlantic City nitery—one beat the skin, another beat a piano, a third scratched a fiddle, and the fourth was the jazz maestro himself. The foursome failed to reveal their identity when they joined the longhairs.

And further investigation showed that one of the horn tooters in the Youth Symphony was taken from the Philadelphia Orchestra list. And before appearing with the youth group had to shave off a luxuriant handlebar cookie duster and a neat Parisian beard to satisfy the Stoky demand for youth.

Berkshire

A former Cleveland woman adds an interesting feature to the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opened this week at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra between Pittsfield and Stockbridge, Mass.

In commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Tschaikowsky, the solo drama, "Nadejda," will be given Friday night in the Berkshire Art Museum at Pittsfield. It is the story of the unique romance between the great Russian composer and Madejka Von Meck, who was the inspiration of much of his music, but whom he never met.

The drama was written by Mrs. Virginia Balinger, former Clevelander, now of Grosse Pointe, Mich., and will be enacted by Lillian Beall Hicks, Michigan singer-actress.

By the way, many Clevelanders are attending the Berkshire festival which Director Serge Koussevitzky is conducting at Tanglewood. Tonight's program has Cellist Piatigorsky as star. Tomorrow afternoon the Brahms Second Symphony is featured.

Next Thursday evening Albert Spalding plays the Beethoven Concerto for Violin in D and the Tschaikowsky Fourth is featured. The Beethoven and Tschaikowsky sixth symphoneis are Saturday, August 10, features, with the Tschaikowsky Fifth programmed for August 11.

Final week of the Festival Concerts include the Bach B Minor Mass, August 15, Dorothy Maynor as soloist August 17, and Haydn, Sibelius and Brahms symphonies Aug. 18.

An unusual concert will be given August 16 as a benefit for the Allied relief fund.

Cain Park

Dr. Charles D. Dawe and his Cain Park Chorus inspire the Cleveland Heights Community Hour audience to more vocal endeavors tomorrow evening at the park open air theater. He directs the community singing of "Jeannie With the Light Brown Hair," "Beautiful Dreamer," "Swanee River," "Home On the Range," "God Bless America" and others.

Emma Chapel, soprano, as soloist, sings "Morning Hymn," "The Janitor's Boy," and "Ecstasy." Two male chorus numbers, "Your Land and My Land," and "Stout Hearted Men," are programmed. The Rev. John M. Powers, of St. Ann's Catholic Church, speaks on "Religion and Patriotism."

Contests

Student musicians and young artists have been invited to participate in music contests by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

State auditions of the two classes will be held in Cleveland, April 14, next year, with cash prizes. District auditions, comprising Ohio, Michigan and Indiana, will be held in Indianapolis May 10, student musicians being given opportunities to appear on club programs, and the young artist winner getting cash for traveling expenses to appear in the finals at the biennial convention of the federation in Los Angeles June 19.

Prizes there are $1,000 each for first place in piano, voice and violin. Besides, there are memorial awards of solo spots with the New York Philharmonic and Philadelphia Symphony orchestras.

Mrs. R. A. Herbruck, 3225 Ridgeway Road, Dayton, O., is in charge of contest applications.

The Piano

A most comprehensive work on the history, makers, players and the music of the piano has been written by Albert E. Weir and is off the presses of Longmans, Green and Company, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York and listed at $3.50.

It is most informative for either music student or teacher and is particularly suitable as a music teacher's prize or a graduation gift. It is virtually dictionary, biographical encyclopedia and compendium of information all in one.

"The Piano" contains chapters on the history and construction of the piano, development of piano music, piano teaching, technique, and interpretation, a list of ensemble music, discussion of two-piano playing, recorded piano music and a biography of pianists.

Premiere

Dr. Artur Rodzinski and the Cleveland Orchestra will offer the world premiere of the Jaromir Weinberger "Lincoln Symphony" the coming season at Severance Hall. The Czech composer, now resident in this country, has finished the work and is busy scoring it. The orchestra featured the Weinberger variations, "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," last winter and recorded it for Columbia.

ILONA HERMAN (above), contralto, will appear dressed in the colorful Hungarian costume when she sings on the All-Hungarian program to be presented Wednesday night in the civic "Music Under the Stars" concert at Edgewater Park.

Carabella Johnson is among the Clevelanders at the Berkshire Music Center, where she is assisting Dr. Herbert Graf of the Met Opera . . . she writes of cool nights, delightful gardens, plashing pools, perfect surroundings for producing romantic music . . . Singers Club brings two soloists new to Cleveland, the coming season . . . Suzanne Sten, Viennese soprano, Dec. 3, and Lansing Hatfield, baritone, April 1 . . . New York Philharmonic comes close to town on its tour next season, but not close enough . . . concert dates are scheduled in Cincinnati, November 28, Columbus, November 29, and Pittsburgh, November 30.

90

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 3 - 1940

NEW WORK PLAYED IN THE BERKSHIRES

Quartet by Alan Havaness Is Offered by South Mountain Group of Pittsfield

ACTIVITY AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Conducts First Symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—Because the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival had no concert today, musical interest shifted to South Mountain, Pittsfield, where the South Mountain String Quartet gave an afternoon program and introduced a new quartet by Alan Havaness, young Scotsman. This was the fifth concert in the series of eight on South Mountain.

The programs are presented usually on Sunday afternoons, but they have been shifted to Friday for the three weeks of the festival so that visitors may not be conf[illegible] with two conflicting events occurring simultaneously eight miles apart.

Harold Bauer Assists

The South Mountain quartet, consisting of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, had Harold Bauer, the pianist, as assisting artist this afternoon. He joined with Miss Parlow, Mr. Held and Mr. Willeke in Schumann's E flat Major Quartet, Op. 47, and in Brahms's A Major Quartet, Op. 26. The four string players were heard in the Havaness première.

The new quartet is in D minor and is the composer's opus 8. It is written with a flair for the strings and there are no startling innovations in the scoring. There are moments in the prelude and in the andante lamentando that evoke mood and feeling. The closing fugue, however, is reared on an unpromising theme which does not flower and grow richer in the course of the movement. The total impression of the work is that the composer writes honestly and forthrightly, but without sustained power.

Nevertheless, the South Mountain String Quartet is to be commended for giving contemporary music a place on its programs. The ensemble is trying to include at least one work of our time on each program. It is an excellent procedure.

There was an overflow audience at this afternoon's concert. The seats in the Temple of Music were filled and many listeners sat on the lawn outside the hall where they could hear the concert through the screen doors and windows. The performances were accomplished, and the applause was correspondingly cordial.

Sibelius Symphony Heard

Now to return to the festival. Of last night's performance of the First symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius, which opened the festival, critical comment must consist largely of superlatives. The most resplendent superlatives must be reserved for the playing of the Sibelius First symphony. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are Sibelius specialists, seldom have done this work with more passion and eloquence. Nor has the orchestra often achieved the glorious tone and the incisive ensemble that were mustered forth in this interpretation.

The entire performance went with an impact and a spaciousness that sit well on Sibelius. The rich bardic splendor of the score was chanted forth with unerring rightness of line and color. Dr. Koussevitzky appreciates that this is an early Sibelius score. He does not try to tame it. He lets it sing in full-bodied fervor. What if the work has a close affinity to Tchaikovsky? What if the melodies seem rash and headlong? That is the way of a young composer who feels the strength and tension in his muscles.

Interpretation Is Praised

For Schumann there was another kind of reading—tender, delicate, suffused with a romantic glow. The symphony will be a hundred years old come next Winter, but it sounded fresh and verdant as if it were singing of the last Spring—well, the Spring of 1939, anyway. And the Beethoven symphony had lightness and buoyancy, although one might have wished for just a bit more of a classic line.

Today was an off-day at Tanglewood, beautiful festival grounds, as far as the festival was concerned. But the music center, which is in its first season, made Tanglewood hum with excitement—and music. A visitor at the grounds noted the following activities: a rehearsal by the institute orchestra, a workout by the opera-dramatics division of the center; a class in orchestral conducting, a general session of the academy; lectures by Roy Harris, Abram Chasins and Olin Downes; a class in folk dancing, a chamber music concert and a rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Tonight the festival proceeds with the second concert. The soloist will be Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," the other works will be Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Roy Harris's Third symphony, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloë Suite."

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
AUG 4 - 1940

New Haven Runs Coach Specials to Berkshire Festival

Sunday Tours Permit Brooklynites to Attend Matinee, Return at Night

Music lovers will welcome the announcement that the New Haven Railroad will operate reduced-fare "Coach Specials" whereby they may enjoy Sunday matinees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood at low travel cost.

By taking advantage of the low fare, round-trip Sunday excursion, with option of returning from Stockbridge on a convenient evening train, devotees of the festival may avail themselves of the special low fare on Sundays—Aug. 11 and 18.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, is an annual musical event of nation-wide importance. It is held at Tanglewood, situated between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The excursion train leaves Grand Central Terminal at 6:55 a.m. Sunady, and 125th St. at 7:05 a.m., due Stockbridge, 10:38 a.m. Those attending the festival matinee may return on the train leaving Stockbridge at 6:57 p.m. (EST), due 125th St., 10:16 p.m., and Grand Central Terminal 10:27 p.m.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 4 - 1940

Koussevitzky Conducts Seventh Music Festival

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (UP).—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on Aug. 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of Aug. 17. The festival will end on Aug. 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 4 - 1940

Lehman Visits Stockbridge, Promises to Return Aug. 16

New York Governor Enjoys Second Concert of Berkshire Festival.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3-- Another huge audience filled the famous "music shed" at Tanglewood tonight for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh season.

Tonight's program actually was the second in the shed today inasmuch as this morning 3,500 festival members and school children were the guests of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra at a rehearsal. The program was enlivened by comments by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and lecturer at Dr. Kossevitzky's unusual Berkshire music center—a school of music designed to fit the needs of serious musicians, professional and non-professional, who want a summer of study under as nearly ideal conditions as could be had.

The guest of honor was Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who was interested enough by what he heard to consent to return Aug. 16 for the first special program the Berkshire festival ever has given. This is a gigantic benefit for Allied relief to be given at Tanglewood at the unusual hour of 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

It will offer music by the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, soloists in the persons of Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, opera scenes directed by Herberg Graft, talks by Governor Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, and at the end dancing and fireworks

The program tonight was devoted to music of three nations, France, America and Germany. There were two soloists, the Russian 'cellist Piatigorsky and the French violist Jean LeFranc. Both were heard in a striking performance of Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote."

The American music was the third symphony of Roy Harris, which had the sort of reading American composers dream of and seldom get. Harris was present to make his acknowledgements at the end.

There were three French works, to all of which Dr. Koussevitzky seemed particularly sympathetic—Berlioz's overtures to "Benvenuto Cellini," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the second suite drawn from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," the last of which closed the concert in a blaze of tone.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

AUG 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
AUG 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

AUG 5 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

AUG 4 - 1940

Then there are the Gordon Musical association concerts at Falls Village, Conn., today and Wednesday and Saturday, and the second week's Berkshire Festival programs at Pittsfield, Mass. Of these latter, today's matinee concert closes "Series A;" it features Jesus Mária Sanroma in the Stravinsky Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo, includes also the Mozart Symphony in E Flat, No. 3 (K-543) and the Brahms Symphony No. 2, in D. "Series B," which begins Thursday, is officially labeled a Tchaikovsky festival in observance of that composer's birthday, but actually programs more Beethoven music. Albert Spalding is soloist in the Beethoven (not the Tchaikovsky) Violin Concerto, in D, on Thursday, when the orchestra plays also the Overture to "Egmont," and offers from Tchaikovsky's works only the Symphony No. 4, in F Minor. The Saturday all-symphony concert is devoted to the Sixth Symphonies of the two composers; incidentally, these two works have an alliterative as well as a numerical affinity, the Beethoven being known as the "Pastoral" and the Tchaikovsky as the "Pathetique." Next Sunday's offering again has a preponderance of Beethoven as will appear then. The orchestra for all is of course the Boston Symphony, and the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

On Friday, the festival has another recital by the South Mountain String Quartet, at which the soloists are Cellist Harvey Shapiro and Violist Sprague Coolidge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 4 - 1940

Umberto Romano Begins Three More Portraits

Umberto Romano, the visiting New England artist who has been much in the social limelight here during the past few weeks, has begun three new oil portraits. One is to be a large full picture of Eileen Butts, another one is a full sitting pose of Ruth Moore and the third is a head of Gertrude Belle Kipp . . . Márguerite Porter, while attending the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Stockbridge, Mass., got to attend rehearsals of Koussevitzki's orchestra through Christopher Honaas, Rollins music director. . . . While Marguerite was busy all summer attending the Normal School of Methods in Auburndale, her mother, Louise Van Hood visited the school music departments on a tour directed by Dr. Griffith, president of the institute. The two women will be back soon after a visit at the New York fair.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1940

MUSIC IN REVIEW

6,000 Hear Boston Symphony Play at Tanglewood—Joan Field With Philharmonic at Stadium

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—A perfect midsummer evening graced the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood here tonight. The result was a large turnout with well over 6,000 persons in the audience. The crowd not only occupied the seats under the graceful music shed but spilled over onto the lawns, where groups sat and reclined, listening to music under the stars.

With equally good weather in prospect for tomorrow afternoon's program, festival officials anticipate one of the biggest week-ends in the seven years of the festival. There was a marked increase in the influx of visitors today, with arrivals taxing the capacities of hotels and rooming houses in the vicinity. Tomorrow the first of a series of symphony specials will be run from New York by the New Haven Railroad. The Festival Special will be operated every Sunday of the festival.

"Don Quixote" Heard

At tonight's concert the first of the festival's soloists made his appearance. He was Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, who has the build of an excellent football tackle and the technique of one of the foremost 'cellists of the day. He joined Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote" which is one of the ensemble's interpretive tours de force.

The program began with the overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini." It ended with two great French works of the early part of this century: Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloë" suite. A contemporary American also was represented—Roy Harris by his Third symphony. This work has been played by a number of American orchestras during the past season; several weeks ago it was done by the Symphony Orchestra of Mexico, under Carlos Chavez, in Mexico City. Mr. Harris was in the music shed tonight to hear his own work and to acknowledge the applause of the audience.

This morning the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky held a public rehearsal open to subscribers. An audience of about 3,500 sat in the shed and on the lawns, listening to and watching the proceedings. About half of this audience was made up of school children from Berkshire County and the Lebanon Valley who had taken the festival layman's course during the school year. The boys and girls sat up front and followed the rehearsal intently. The commentator during the rehearsal was Olin Downes.

Governor Lehman Attends

Among those in tonight's audience was Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York. Governor Lehman, it was announced today, has accepted an invitation to take part in the special evening dedicated to the Allied Relief Fund on Friday, Aug. 16. [illegible] be one of the speakers on that occasion, as will Dorothy Thompson.

As the plans for this special event mature, it becomes clear that it will be a grand, informal gala. It will be like a great lawn fete. There will be various kinds of m be sampled all over the gr
The Boston Symphony Orc
augmented by the Berkshire Music Center Ensemble, will play under Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple in the shed, with Albert Spalding and Mr. Piatigorsky as soloists. There will be several scenes of opera on the newly constructed stage. Chamber music will be heard in another location on the grounds. The formal part of the musical program will begin at 8:30 in the shed, when Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Chapple will lead a program predominantly British. The evening will end with dancing and fireworks.

At this afternoon's concert, which will conclude the festival's first week, the program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, No. 39, Stravinsky's Cappriccio for orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist, and Brahms's Second symphony.

At the Stadium

At last night's concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Wilhelm Steinberg in Lewisohn Stadium, the principal offering consisted of the "Fantastic" symphony of Berlioz and the Mendelssohn concerto with Joan Field, richly gifted young American violinist, as soloist. The rest of the program was given over to Klemperer's "Merry Waltz," presented for the first time in this city, and the overture to Strauss's "Die Fledermaus."

Miss Field, who had made a previous appearance at these concerts two years ago, found an excellent vehicle in the Mendelssohn concerto for her refined and sensitive art. To the more lyric pages of the work she brought all the necessary poetry, while the display passages were cleanly and ably encompassed.

It was a pity that a passing airplane roared over the field during the violinist's soulful announcement of the main theme of the slow movement. But it was still more to be deplored that throughout the concerto, Mr. Steinberg provided a heavy-handed orchestral support, and rarely reached the bar-line simultaneously with the soloist during the tricky finale.

Notwithstanding the handicap, Miss Field made so definitely favorable an impression that an encore was inevitable. For the purpose she chose Bach's "Air on the G string," which she set forth with the same sure sense of style, deep sincerity and restraint evinced in the concerto.

Mr. Steinberg's performance of the Berlioz symphony in spite of the earnest effort expended on its five divisions, somehow missed fire. Little of the essentially Gallic nature of this music was captured in a reading which in general lacked subtlety and atmosphere. Mr. Steinberg could be intense at times, but the waltz movement was ponderously delivered, the scene in the meadows had practically no pastoral mood, and the biting satire and macabre quality of the final sections were barely suggested.

Mr. Klemperer's "Merry Waltz" was an exceedingly conventional and trite excursion into the realm of the Viennese dance with tunes that sounded for the most part like a combination of Lehar's "Merry Widow" waltz melodies and those to be encounted in Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier." It was a slight con-but the nt gave
N. S.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1940

Music Festival At Berkshire Opens Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3 —The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festvial of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, opened Thursday at Tanglewood, near here, for the first of three series of concerts.

The second group, beginning next Thursday commemorates the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth and will feature works of Tschaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear at soloist Thursday.

The final series of concerts opens August 15 with the Bach B Minor mass. The festival chorus of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center will be heard in this classic, and the new organ will be dedicated at this time. Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano, will be heard at the concert August 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 4 - 1940

Berkshire as a Music Center

The seventh of the Berkshire symphonic festivals, given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, opened last week in a soberness of spirit reflecting both the stormy state of the world, in which the musicians of many lands are drifting as helpless waifs, and the increasing importance of such a sanctuary for musical art as the green hills of Berkshire still afford. Boston's famous orchestra was nearly wrecked in the last great hurricane of war, and anxiety for the future necessarily gives to this year's festival a somewhat somber background.

Nevertheless, it is possible in the serene atmosphere of Tanglewood, where thousands of musicians and music lovers from many parts of the country are assembled, to put aside harsh and disturbing realities of the moment and to enter into the serener and more durable reality of the great music which survives many wars and cataclysms. The mission of Tanglewood is even more vital this summer than before because virtually all of the summer music centers of Europe to which for decades American musicians and students have increasingly flocked are either closed or inaccessible.

This makes it the more fortunate that the Berkshire project had been expanded, both by the extension of the festival from six concerts in two weeks to nine concerts in three weeks, and by the launching of the plan for a music center, of which a music school during the weeks just preceding the festival is the central feature. All these things give an exceptional character to this year's festival. The first series of three concerts closes today, but this week and next there will be two more series (Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons) still open for subscriptions or for separate concerts.

The festival in general is following the initial "symphonic' 'policy, but the extension and the addition of a music school have made it possible to devote one evening, the 15th, to a choral performance at which the Berkshire festival chorus will give one of the greatest of choral works, the mass in B minor by Bach. More symphonies are being presented by the orchestra than ever before—six in the first series, five in the second, four in the third. Some new but not experimental works are included, and distinguished soloists take part but only in works for orchestra. The multitudes that attend and the eager attention with which they hang on every note sufficiently justify the severity of the programs.

Even the new chairs, on the comfort of which people comment when they take their seats, do not matter when the music begins. Each year some improvement is made in the grounds or in the music shed, and now this beautiful home of music seems nearly complete except for the roll shutters needed to close the open sides in case of sudden rain.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 4 - 1940

Lehman Visits Stockbridge, Promises to Return Aug. 16

New York Governor Enjoys Second Concert of Berkshire Festival.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3—Another huge audience filled the famous "music shed" at Tanglewood tonight for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, now in its seventh season.

Tonight's program actually was the second in the shed today inasmuch as this morning 3,500 festival members and school children were the guests of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra at a rehearsal. The program was enlivened by comments by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and lecturer at Dr. Kossevitzky's unusual Berkshire music center—a school of music designed to fit the needs of serious musicians, professional and non-professional, who want a summer of study under as nearly ideal conditions as could be had.

The guest of honor was Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who was interested enough by what he heard to consent to return Aug. 16 for the first special program the Berkshire festival ever has given. This is a gigantic benefit for Allied relief to be given at Tanglewood at the unusual hour of 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

It will offer music by the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, soloists in the persons of Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, opera scenes directed by Herberg Graft, talks by Governor Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, and at the end dancing and fireworks

The program tonight was devoted to music of three nations, France, America and Germany. There were two soloists, the Russian 'cellist Piatigorsky and the French violist Jean LeFranc. Both were heard in a striking performance of Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote."

The American music was the third symphony of Roy Harris, which had the sort of reading American composers dream of and seldom get. Harris was present to make his acknowledgements at the end.

There were three French works, to all of which Dr. Koussevitzky seemed particularly sympathetic—Berlioz's overtures to "Benvenuto Cellini," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the second suite drawn from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," the last of which closed the concert in a blaze of tone.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
AUG 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
AUG 4 - 1940

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 5 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN
AUG 4 - 1940

Then there are the Gordon Musical association concerts at Falls Village, Conn., today and Wednesday and Saturday, and the second week's Berkshire Festival programs at Pittsfield, Mass. Of these latter, today's matinee concert closes "Series A;" it features Jesus Maria Sanroma in the Stravinsky Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo, includes also the Mozart Symphony in E Flat, No. 3 (K-543) and the Brahms Symphony No. 2, in D. "Series B," which begins Thursday, is officially labeled a Tchaikovsky festival in observance of that composer's birthday, but actually programs more Beethoven music. Albert Spalding is soloist in the Beethoven (not the Tchaikovsky) Violin Concerto, in D, on Thursday, when the orchestra plays also the Overture to "Egmont," and offers from Tchaikovsky's works only the Symphony No. 4, in F Minor. The Saturday all-symphony concert is devoted to the Sixth Symphonies of the two composers; incidentally, these two works have an alliterative as well as a numerical affinity, the Beethoven being known as the "Pastoral" and the Tchaikovsky as the "Pathetique." Next Sunday's offering again has a preponderance of Beethoven as will appear then. The orchestra for all is of course the Boston Symphony, and the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

On Friday, the festival has another recital by the South Mountain String Quartet, at which the soloists are Cellist Harvey Shapiro and Violist Sprague Coolidge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 4 - 1940

Umberto Romano Begins Three More Portraits

Umberto Romano, the visiting New England artist who has been much in the social limelight here during the past few weeks, has begun three new oil portraits. One is to be a large full picture of Eileen Butts, another one is a full sitting pose of Ruth Moore and the third is a head of Gertrude Belle Kipp . . . Márguerite Porter, while attending the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Stockbridge, Mass., got to attend rehearsals of Koussevitski's orchestra through Christopher Honaas, Rollins music director. . . . While Marguerite was busy all summer attending the Normal School of Methods in Auburndale, her mother, Louise Van Hood visited the school music departments on a tour directed by Dr. Griffith, president of the institute. The two women will be back soon after a visit at the New York fair.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 4 - 1940

MUSIC IN REVIEW

6,000 Hear Boston Symphony Play at Tanglewood—Joan Field With Philharmonic at Stadium

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—A perfect midsummer evening graced the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood here tonight. The result was a large turnout with well over 6,000 persons in the audience. The crowd not only occupied the seats under the graceful music shed but spilled over onto the lawns, where groups sat and reclined, listening to music under the stars.

With equally good weather in prospect for tomorrow afternoon's program, festival officials anticipate one of the biggest week-ends in the seven years of the festival. There was a marked increase in the influx of visitors today, with arrivals taxing the capacities of hotels and rooming houses in the vicinity. Tomorrow the first of a series of symphony specials will be run from New York by the New Haven Railroad. The Festival Special will be operated every Sunday of the festival.

"Don Quixote" Heard

At tonight's concert the first of the festival's soloists made his appearance. He was Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, who has the build of an excellent football tackle and the technique of one of the foremost 'cellists of the day. He joined Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote" which is one of the ensemble's interpretive tours de force.

The program began with the overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini." It ended with two great French works of the early part of this century: Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloë" suite. A contemporary American also was represented—Roy Harris by his Third symphony. This work has been played by a number of American orchestras during the past season; several weeks ago it was done by the Symphony Orchestra of Mexico, under Carlos Chavez, in Mexico City. Mr. Harris was in the music shed tonight to hear his own work and to acknowledge the applause of the audience.

This morning the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky held a public rehearsal open to subscribers. An audience of about 3,500 sat in the shed and on the lawns, listening to and watching the proceedings. About half of this audience was made up of school children from Berkshire County and the Lebanon Valley who had taken the festival layman's course during the school year. The boys and girls sat up front and followed the rehearsal intently. The commentator during the rehearsal was Olin Downes.

Governor Lehman Attends

Among those in tonight's audience was Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York. Governor Lehman, it was announced today, has accepted an invitation to take part in the special evening dedicated to the Allied Relief Fund on Friday, Aug. 16—[illegible]e one of the speakers on that occasion, as will Dorothy Thompson.

As the plans for this special event mature, it becomes clear that it will be a grand, informal gala. It will be like a great lawn fete. There will be various kinds of music to be sampled all over the groun The Boston Symphony Orchest augmented by the Berkshire Music Center Ensemble, will play under Dr. Koussevitzky and Stanley Chapple in the shed, with Albert Spalding and Mr. Piatigorsky as soloists. There will be several scenes of opera on the newly constructed stage. Chamber music will be heard in another location on the grounds. The formal part of the musical program will begin at 8:30 in the shed, when Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Chapple will lead a program predominantly British. The evening will end with dancing and fireworks.

At this afternoon's concert, which will conclude the festival's first week, the program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, No. 39, Stravinsky's Cappriccio for orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist, and Brahms's second symphony.

At the Stadium

At last night's concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Wilhelm Steinberg in Lewisohn Stadium, the principal offering consisted of the "Fantastic" symphony of Berlioz and the Mendelssohn concerto with Joan Field, richly gifted young American violinist, as soloist. The rest of the program was given over to Klemperer's "Merry Waltz," presented for the first time in this city, and the overture to Strauss's "Die Fledermaus."

Miss Field, who had made a previous appearance at these concerts two years ago, found an excellent vehicle in the Mendelssohn concerto for her refined and sensitive art. To the more lyric pages of the work she brought all the necessary poetry, while the display passages were cleanly and ably encompassed.

It was a pity that a passing airplane roared over the field during the violinist's soulful announcement of the main theme of the slow movement. But it was still more to be deplored that throughout the concerto, Mr. Steinberg provided a heavy-handed orchestral support, and rarely reached the bar-line simultaneously with the soloist during the tricky finale.

Notwithstanding the handicap, Miss Field made so definitely favorable an impression that an encore was inevitable. For the purpose she chose Bach's "Air on the G string," which she set forth with the same sure sense of style, deep sincerity and restraint evinced in the concerto.

Mr. Steinberg's performance of the Berlioz symphony in spite of the earnest effort expended on its five divisions, somehow missed fire. Little of the essentially Gallic nature of this music was captured in a reading which in general lacked subtlety and atmosphere. Mr. Steinberg could be intense at times, but the waltz movement was ponderously delivered, the scene in the meadows had practically no pastoral mood, and the biting satire and macabre quality of the final sections were barely suggested.

Mr. Klemperer's "Merry Waltz" was an exceedingly conventional and trite excursion into the realm of the Viennese dance with tunes that sounded for the most part like a combination of Lehar's "Merry Widow" waltz melodies and those to be encounted in Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier." It was a slight con he literature, but the e 6,000 present gave

N. S.

T LAKE CI
TRIBUN
AUG 4 -

Music Festival At Berkshire Opens Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3—The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festvial of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, opened Thursday at Tanglewood, near here, for the first of three series of concerts.

The second group, beginning next Thursday commemorates the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth and will feature works of Tschaikovsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will appear at soloist Thursday.

The final series of concerts opens August 15 with the Bach B Minor mass. The festival chorus of 200 students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center will be heard in this classic, and the new organ will be dedicated at this time. Dorothy Maynor, talented negro soprano, will be heard at the concert August 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 4 - 1940

Berkshire as a Music Center

The seventh of the Berkshire symphonic festivals, given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, opened last week in a soberness of spirit reflecting both the stormy state of the world, in which the musicians of many lands are drifting as helpless waifs, and the increasing importance of such a sanctuary for musical art as the green hills of Berkshire still afford. Boston's famous orchestra was nearly wrecked in the last great hurricane of war, and anxiety for the future necessarily gives to this year's festival a somewhat somber background.

Nevertheless, it is possible in the serene atmosphere of Tanglewood, where thousands of musicians and music lovers from many parts of the country are assembled, to put aside harsh and disturbing realities of the moment and to enter into the serener and more durable reality of the great music which survives many wars and cataclysms. The mission of Tanglewood is even more vital this summer than before because virtually all of the summer music centers of Europe to which for decades American musicians and students have increasingly flocked are either closed or inaccessible.

This makes it the more fortunate that the Berkshire project had been expanded, both by the extension of the festival from six concerts in two weeks to nine concerts in three weeks, and by the launching of the plan for a music center, of which a music school during the weeks just preceding the festival is the central feature. All these things give an exceptional character to this year's festival. The first series of three concerts closes today, but this week and next there will be two more series (Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons) still open for subscriptions or for separate concerts.

The festival in general is following the initial "symphonic' 'policy. but the extension and the addition of a music school have made it possible to devote one evening, the 15th, to a choral performance at which the Berkshire festival chorus will give one of the greatest of choral works, the mass in B minor by Bach. More symphonies are being presented by the orchestra than ever before—six in the first series, five in the second, four in the third. Some new but not experimental works are included, and distinguished soloists take part but only in works for orchestra. The multitudes that attend and the eager attention with which they hang on every note sufficiently justify the severity of the programs.

Even the new chairs, on the comfort of which people comment when they take their seats, do not matter when the music begins. Each year some improvement is made in the grounds or in the music shed, and now this beautiful home of music seems nearly complete except for the roll shutters needed to close the open sides in case of sudden rain.

92

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1940

Symphonic Festival Opens in Berkshires

Music-Lovers From Throughout U. S. Hear Koussevitzky Orchestra At Event in Open-Air 'Music Shed'

By TYRA LUNDBERG FULLER

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 3.—Miles of curves—and such curves—against the blue-misted Berkshire hills, and there we were, in Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox—in Tanglewood where the Music Shed for a second year shelters the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

It is the seventh of these festivals, by the way, for many of the music lovers gathered here from every part of the country, who remember the days when they sat on blankets under the stars facing an improvised stage.

The Music Shed has added thousands to the annual audience. So perfect are the acoustics that the location of seats is a matter of no importance, as every one in tonight's great house would testify.

Enthusiastic Audience

There is something about an open-air music festival that cannot be duplicated within an auditorium enclosed on four sides from the stars and vagrant breezes. It was an enthusiastic gathering. Indeed, that applauded the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, as it swung into the overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," by Berlioz, which opened tonight's program.

The Weather Man predicted: "fair and cooler" for the festival, and music patrons took him at his word. For coats and evening wraps were in evidence throughout the great "fan" of the Music Shed. Dress was optional, for evening gowns mingled freely with street suits and afternoon and dinner dresses.

White tuxedos appeared here and there among escorts of the women in formal attire—a style that was set by the musicians, the entire orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky included, being thus attired.

Acoustics "Marvelous"

To those who are attending the Berkshire Festival for the first time this year, the perfection of the arrangements, the marvelous acoustics encountered within the open "shed," are something to marvel over.

There are acres of land for the parking of cars, and while it is, necessarily, a matter of time for these cars to be released when closing time has arrived, the system is being worked out to perfection this year. It already shows great improvement over a year ago.

It has been suggested that Tanglewood may become the Salzburg of America, and the suggestion is not farfetched in view of the cars to be found here — with number plates that specify, not only the New England States and New York, but such far away places as New Mexico, California, Kansas, Tennessee, Oklahoma and many others of our distant states.

At intermission, it might seem a difficult task to look up one's friends in a milling crowd of about six thousand, but it proved possible to encounter such Worcester lovers of music as Mrs. Leslie P. Leland and her daughter, Miss Dorothy Leland, Rev. Dr. Shepherd Knapp, who is making his annual pilgrimage to Tanglewood, Earl Johnson, director of music at Clark University. Also, Mrs. Frederick R. Williams and her daughter, Miss Marjorie Ann, who are spending the weekend with Mrs. William's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller, by the way, were hosts for one of the big parties this afternoon, in their new home at 500 William street, where one met—on the terrace and in the gardens—representatives of newspapers and musical magazines from many parts of the country.

Mrs. Miller, who is a director of the festival, was assisted in receiving her guests by Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman. Mr. Edman is clerk of the festival.

The highlight of tonight's concert was Strauss' "Don Quixote," the drolleries of which fantasy were so artistically presented under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, and so ably emphasized through the violoncello of Gregor Piatigorsky, with the conductor and with Jean LeFranc, violist, that Koussevitzky was recalled again and again.

The second half of the program was modern music, equally appealing to judge by the enthusiasm of the many thousands who lingered after the final note had faded into silence.

Gov. Lehman Will Aid at Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 3 (AP)—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, here to attend the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, accepted today an invitation to participate in a program for the benefit of Allied Relief [redacted], Aug. 16.

Just what part Lehman will play remained uncertain. The program on the 200-acre Tanglewood estate will include music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, side shows, auctions, dancing and fireworks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

AUG 4 - 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass. with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on August 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on August 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert August 17. The festival will end on August 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

* * *

Shephan Hero, Polish-American violinist, has played five concerts so far this summer in Mexico City and has two more scheduled. His first concert was was with orchestra on behalf of the Union Femenina Ibero-American at the Amfiteatro Bolivar. The next was the Belgian war relief at the Palacio de Bellas Artes, and there were two recitals at the same theater at the Polish legation in honor of U. S. Ambassador Joseph Daniels.

Hero will return to New York in September for his accustomed concert tours in this country.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1940

Festival Ends Opening Week At Tanglewood

Second Series Presents Beethoven, Tchaikovsky Music, Benefit Aug. 16

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the [redacted] concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon at 8:30 in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. The program includes Mozart's symphony in E flat (K. 543), Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the assisting artist, and the second symphony of Brahms.

Series A closes with today's program. The three concerts of Series B will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, 10 and 11, with programs devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the centenary of the latter composer's birth. Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as the soloist, and Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony will be played on Thursday. The two composers' sixth symphonies, the "Pastoral" and the "Pathetic" will be played on Saturday evening. Next Sunday's list consists of Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony. The evening concerts will begin at 8:30 and the matinee at 3:30.

Series C begins Thursday evening, Aug. 15, at 7 o'clock, with Bach's Mass in B minor, in which the Berkshire Festival Chorus, which has been studying the work in the Berkshire Music Center's sessions at Tanglewood, will make its formal debut. The vocal soloists will be Elisabeth Schumann, Viola Silva, William Hain and Alexander Kipnis. On [redacted]ght, Aug. 17, Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will sing [redacted] aria, "Bella mia fiamma" and Beethoven's "Adelaide." The instrumental part of the program includes Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony, Fauré's suite of his stage music for "Pelleas et Melisande" and Respighi's transcription of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. The closing program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 18, consists of Haydn's symphony in G, No. 88, Sibelius's seventh symphony and Brahms's first symphony.

Tickets and Trains

The festival office at Stockbridge has pointed out that there is no danger that intending patrons might be turned away, as many extra benches can be pressed into service if all the regular seats are sold. Buses will run from Pittsfield and Stockbridge one hour before each concert. The New Haven Railroad notes that New Yorkers going to the three Sunday concerts can make use of low-fare excursion tickets good for the special train learing the Grand Central at 7:55 a. m. and 125th Street at 8:05 (daylight saving time) and returning on trains leaving Stockbridge at 5:58 or 7:57 p. m. Tickets should be bought in advance, or at least before boarding the train.

Benefit and Other Events

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival and Boston Symphony Orchestra are sponsoring a large-scale benefit concert for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc., to be held [redacted]wood on Friday evening, Aug. 16. Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Spalding are chairmen of the committee in charge of the program which, owing to its ambitious scope, will begin at 6 o'clock. Reservations can be made by mail at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. All participating artists are donating their services.

The South Mountain Quartet will play at South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., on Friday afternoons, Aug. 9 and 16, at 4 o'clock. Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Harvey Shapiro, cello, will be assist[redacted] Friday in a program including a quintet by Michael Haydn, Reger's sextet in F, Op. 118, and Schönberg's string sextet, "Verklärte Nacht." Harold Bauer will be the guest artist on the following Friday. Tickets can be obtained without charge by written application, inclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope, to Willem Willeke at South Mountain.

Henry Holtz, horn, and Henry Gregor, piano, will be the assisting artists with the Gordon String Quartet today at 4 at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. The program includes Brahms's horn trio, Mozart's quartet (K. 575) and Louis Gruenberg's Four Diversions. The Gordon Quartet will also play next Sunday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 4 - 1940.

SECOND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD PROVES EXCITING

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Remarkable Performance of Strauss Tone Poem and 'Cellini'

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 3—The second of the Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts, given tonight at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted [redacted] Koussevitzky, was more exciting and more tempting to comment than the first, at which the symphonic debuts of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius were recorded. That was a quiet but a delightful opening; tonight's program and performance made more of a stir. Also there was more stress on the orchestral virtuosity in which the Boston organization is unequaled.

First came the famous overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," by Berlioz, perhaps the most gifted as he was the most daring of the early 19th-century creators of the modern orchestra. This made a first-rate preparation for the astonishing effects achieved by Richard Strauss in "Don Quixote," in which the solo parts for violoncello and viola were played by the eminent virtuosi Gregor Piatigorsky and Jean Lefranc.

Harris Symphony Played

The second half of the program was quite different in character, but was also rich in orchestral color. It closed with two well-known modern French works, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," the delicate pastel tints of which were not lost in the wide spaces of the music shed, and extracts from the second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite by Ravel, including "Lever du Jour," "Pantomime" and "Danse Generale."

Before these came one of the principal (comparative) novelties of the festival, the symphony No 3 by the American composer Roy Harris, which has won much acclaim since its first performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra, February 24, 1939. It is a symphony of ultra-modern type, only 20 minutes long, and cast in a single movement. That movement, however, is divided into seven sections, the internal construction of which, and their interrelations, are extremely elaborate, although the composer has made his design appear simple by providing an analytical outline.

Thus, in brief: (1) Tragic, with soft strings; (2) lyric, with strings, horns and wood winds; (3) pastoral, with wood-wind coloring; (4) fugue (dramatic), divided into three parts and developing material previously introduced; (5) dramatic (tragic), beginning with soft violin theme from the opening section, using a canon heard in section 4, and working up to a climax with a rhythmic subject developed from the fugue and now used powerfully with brass and percussion instruments.

Whether the composer's analysis is a blueprint or a rationalization of results less consciously planned, it is helpful to the listener, who is afforded another glimpse into the musical laboratory by a bill of specifications for building materials:

"(1) Melodic contours—diatonic—polytonal.

"(2) Harmonic textures — consonance—polytonal."

No percentages are specified, but the polytonality is neither harsh enough nor continuous enough to distress listeners not yet fully reconciled to modernism. An interesting and well-planned symphony of the compact and neatly dovetailed new type.

"Cellini" Revived in 1913

The overture is substantially all that remains of the opera "Benvenuto Cellini," for its revival at Paris in 1913 brought that long-shelved work much praise but only a weak new lease of life. After its initial failure in 1838 Berlioz confessed that he had been mistaken in thinking the libretto suitable for opera, but much of the music which went into it was beautiful, and the overture was successful from the first and has kept the favor of the public as a concert piece. Its connection with Benvenuto Cellini and his romantic life no longer greatly matters except as inspiration for the romantic imagination of the composer. Berlioz has never been surpassed in his intuitive perception of subtle emotional values of tone color, and this overture is a fine example.

Richard Strauss, coming two generations later, and inheriting the amazing orchestral apparatus which Berlioz, Liszt, Wagner and others had developed and against which austere modernists have revolted, carried perhaps to its limit the use of tone color for description, narrative and the portrayal of character, and his "Don Quixote" is a maximum opus of this kind. To produce its intended effect nothing short of a virtuoso performance serves, and this was given tonight by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston-Tanglewood orchestra, aided by soloists of such surpassing excellence as Piatigorski (Don Quixote) and Jean Lefranc (Sancho Panza).

Cool and crisp weather added greatly to the brilliancy of the remarkable performance, notably of the Strauss tone poem and the interpretation of the part of "Don Quixote" by Mr Piatigorski, which was rapturously applauded.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 4 - 1940

CHILDREN GUESTS OF KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Rehearsal at Stockbridge Also Opened for 3500 Festival Members.

OLIN DOWNES COMMENTS

Governor Lehman Present, Will Return for Benefit; Second Evening Performance Given

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP)—Another huge audience filled the famous "music shed" at Tanglewood tonight for the second concert of the Berkshire symphonic festival, now in its seventh season.

Tonight's program actually was the second in the shed today inasmuch as this morning 3500 festival members and school children were the guests of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a rehearsal. The program was enlivened by comments by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and lecturer at Dr. Koussevitzky's unusual Berkshire Music Centre—a school of music designed to fit the needs of serious musicians, professional and non-professional, who want a summer of study under as nearly ideal conditions as could be had.

Gov. Lehman is Guest

The guest of honor was Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who was interested enough by what he heard to consent to return Aug. 16 for the first special program the Berkshire festival ever has given. This is a gigantic benefit for Allied relief to be given at Tanglewood at the unusual hour of 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

It will offer music by the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Centre orchestras, soloists in the persons of Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, opera scenes directed by Herberg Graft, talks by Governor Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, and at the end dancing and fireworks.

The program tonight was devoted to music of three nations, France, America and Germany. There were two soloists, the Russian 'cellist Piatigorsky and the French violist Jean LeFranc. Both were heard in a striking performance of Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote."

Harris Symphony Played

The American music was the third symphony of Roy Harris, which had the sort of reading American composers dream of and seldom get. Harris was present to make his acknowledgements at the end.

There were three French works, to all of which Dr. Koussevitzky seemed particularly sympathetic—Berlioz's overtures to "Benvenuto Cellini," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the second suite drawn from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," the last of which closed the concert in a blaze of tone.

Tomorrow one of the largest festival audiences in history is expected, including at least one special trainload from New York. The program will close the first third of the festival, which resumes Thursday night with a Beethoven-Tchaikovsky program on which Albert Spalding will be soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1940

43

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the second concert of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival before an audience whose numbers exceeded even Thursday evening's crowd of 6,000. Except for Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," the program was composed of music written within the last fifty years. In Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," Gregor Piatigorsky played the solo cello, which expressed the character and ideas of the Don, and Jean Lefranc, head of his section with this orchestra, played the solo viola, representing Sancho Panza.

The second half of the evening's list presented Roy Harris's third symphony, the only American work to be performed in this summer's festival; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second suite from his ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe." The Harris symphony was also heard in full and the Strauss tone poem in part at Tanglewood this morning, when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in the first of the Saturday morning rehearsals, which are open to festival members. Other works heard by a gathering of about 1,000 during three hours of intensive activity were Mozart's symphony in E flat and Stravinsky's capriccio for orchestra with piano solo, both of which will be performed in Sunday afternoon's concert. Jesus Maria Sanroma was the assisting pianist. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," gave a short lecture on the four compositions which were rehearsed.

Mr. Harris's symphony is not unfamiliar to New York audiences, having been played twice by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in 1939. The National Broadcasting Company's symphony orchestra played it under Arturo Toscanini's direction in one of its regular Saturday broadcasts last spring. In this morning's rehearsal it again impressed as a work of unusual consequence; the notable care bestowed by Dr. Koussevitzky upon its preparation indicated that he regarded it as an important and significant contribution to the literature of American orchestral music. The guests at the rehearsal warmly applauded the conductor and orchestra and the two admirable guest soloists.

Detailed comment upon tonight's concert must be postponed until tomorrow. A record number of advance bookings in the hotels of the Berkshire region suggests that the attendance for the three concerts of the first series will mark a sizable increase over last summer's corresponding figure and equally large audiences are expected for the second and third series, opening on Aug. 8 and 15.

Preliminary plans have already been announced for next year's festival, which will consist of nine concerts in three series on the Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons between July 31 and Aug. 17. Memberships, whose possessors can obtain tickets at less than the regular prices and are entitled to attend one Saturday morning rehearsal, can be taken out before Nov. 1, or until 1,500 memberships have been accepted for each series. Applications can be sent to the festival office in Stockbridge.

Gregor Piatigorsky

Soloist in last night's concert of the Berkshire Music Festival

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
AUG 4 - 1940

School Children Guests At Morning Rehearsal

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Aug. 3—Another huge audience filled the famous "music shed" at Tanglewood tonight for the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, now in its seventh season.

Tonight's program actually was the second today inasmuch as this morning 3500 festival members and school children were the guests of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra at a rehearsal. The program was enlivened by comments by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and lecturer at Dr Koussevitzky's unusual Berkshire music center—a school of music designed to fit the needs of serious musicians, professional and nonprofessional, who want a summer of study under as nearly ideal conditions as could be had.

The guest of honor was Gov Herbert H. Lehman of New York, who was interested enough by what he heard to consent to return the 16th for the first special program the Berkshire festival ever has given. This is a gigantic benefit for allied relief to be given at Tanglewood at the unusual hour of 6 in the afternoon.

It will offer music by the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire music center orchestra, soloists in the persons of Albert Spalding, the violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, opera scenes directed by Herbert Graft, talks by Gov Lehman and Dorothy Thompson, and at the end dancing and fireworks.

Tomorrow one of the largest festival audiences in history is expected, including at least one special trainload from New York. The program will close the first third of the festival, which resumes Thursday night with a Beethoven-Tchaikowsky program on which Albert Spalding will be soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1940

"First" Concerts

MUSIC LOVERS going to Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, for the "first" concerts have heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitsky in an "all first" program, symphonies by Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius of that number being played. This afternoon ends the first series, for which the official weather bureau predicted "fair and cooler."

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced last Thursday that they would sponsor a unique benefit program Aug. 16 for the Allies Relief Fund, Inc. The program will be given at Tanglewood, home of the Festival and the orchestra's newly established Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra and the Festival as well as director of the Musin Center, has been named chairman of the committee in charge of the program with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 p. m. and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it will overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
AUG 4 - 1940

Idea Had Inception In Pre-War Russia

Music Center Distinctive Because of Teaching Program, Calibre of Faculty

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, the 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, who spends his winters directing the Boston Symphony, which was been called the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitzky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitzky won't present it until it has been improved.

The Berkshire music center is actually a "dream walking."

War Killed Idea

It began back in opulent pre-war Russia, when Dr. Koussevitzky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as he himself was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The second attempt was also under a depressing and malignant star—in 1929 and at White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitzky has exactly what he dreamed of for three decades here in the Berkshire hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center is unusual because of its teaching plan and the calibre of its teachers.

Intensive Training

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

But he felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and music experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to reestablish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right; two-thirds of the music center's students are in that class.

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for presonal coaching in the art of conducting—a privilege dozens of American youths would have give their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches 20-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils for study of composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

There is an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performance—even dancing for those who want it.

Music Groups Plan Program For Aug. 16

Benefit To Be Given For Allied Relief Fund

TRUSTEES of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic festival announced today that they would sponsor a unique benefit program Aug 16 for the Allied Relief Fund., Inc. The program will be given at Tanglewood, home of the Festival and the orchestra's newly established Berkshire Music Center.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and the festival as well as director of the music center, has been named chairman of the committee in charge of the program with Albert Spalding.

The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 p. m. and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it will overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

Dr. Koussevitzky, enthusiastic over the prospect of the benefit, declared today:

"We shall make a manifestation from New England to old England in which all America is invited to join."

All artists participating in the program will give their services and the entire net proceeds will go to the Allied Relief Fund.

Winthrop W. Aldrich of New York, president of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc., when informed of the benefit said that in his opinion, "proceeds from the gala performance will go a long way toward providing the civilian and medical help that we are endeavoring to extend abroad . . . just now in England . . . to innocent people suffering the consequences of war."

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
AUG 5 - 1940

Ralph Lycett of Ponus avenue was a guest at an after-concert supper party Saturday evening at the Curtis House, Lenox, Mass., given by Mr. and Mrs. Gregor Piatigorsky. Mr. Piatigorsky, the distinguished Russian 'cellist, was featured soloist in the evening's concert at the Berkshire Festival, playing the Strauss "Don Quixote Variations" with the Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Mme. Piatigorsky, the former Mlle. Germaine deRothschild, also entertained for her father and mother, the Baron and Baroness Alphonse deRothschild, members of the famous Continental banking family, who have recently arrived from France for a visit with their daughter and son-in-law.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1940

Wyantenuck Dance Draws 300 Guests In Berkshire Hills

Mrs. Donald McPherson Gives Luncheon for the Pittsfield Horse Show Judges

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 3.—In addition to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox; Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, is a center of society events. Tonight the annual men's golf tournament ball was held With more than 300 present it was the largest South Berkshire dance of the summer. Mrs. George M. L La Branche jr. was chairman. Eighty attended a "dutch treat" dinner at the club before the dance.

Mrs. Benjamin Holly Rose was chairman of the Wyantenuck tea this afternoon, assisted by Mmes John H. C. Church, Robert L. Redfield jr., John B. Hull, John Dodge Peters, Harold A. Pratt, J. Edward Canby, Reginald M. Lewis, Peter J. Noonan, Joseph C. Keber and Paul J. Keber. Next Saturday the club is holding its annual meeting with an evening clambake.

Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, of Winnetka, Ill., was hostess at a large luncheon party today at Court Hill, Pittsfield, in honor of the Pittsfield Horse Show judges, Mr. Alfred B. Maclay, of Millbrook, N. Y.; Col. D. Douglas Young, of New York, and Mr. F. E. Robinson, of Summit, N. J. In a week-end house party with Mr. and Mrs. McPherson are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neil Cowham and Mr. Arthur G. Cable, of Chicago.

Mahkeenac Boat Club directors had their first Saturday luncheon today at the club house. These are to be bi-weekly events for the rest of the season. Among those who have sailboats on the lake are Messrs. Giraud Foster, David Lincoln Luke, Lowell M. Clucas and James Lawson Karrick.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton are having a dinner party tomorrow at Indian Cave, Monterey, for the Rev. Martin Paul Luther and Mrs. Luther, of Brooklyn. The Monterey Congregational Church service tomorrow morning will have Mr. Luther as preacher. It is to be a memorial to Mrs. Eaton's grandfather, the Rev. Winthrop H. Phelps, who was Civil War minister at Monterey. In the Eaton's house party also are Mrs. Ida Neal Taft and Mrs. George Moeschen, of New York, the Misses Anne Crews and Gladys Williamson, of Raleigh, N. C., and Mr. Joseph Umstead, of Philadelphia.

Arrivals at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, include Dr. Rene H. Huvelle and family, Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Fox, Mr. E. T. Herbig, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Bernhard, of New York; Mr. R. W. Tomlinson and family, Westfield, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Williams, New Haven, Conn; Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Kinnan, Washington; Mr. and Mrs. George W. Caye Yonkers; Mr. and Mrs. Springer Miller, Pelham Manor, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Snyder, Bayport, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Whiting, Buffalo; Mrs. Archibald Rader, Haverford, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Barry jr., Hackensack, N. J., and Mr. Thomas A. Byrnes, Belleville, N. J.

At Curtis Hotel, Lenox, are Mr. George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Judd; Dr and Mrs H. S. Hettinger, Philadelphia; the Misses Agnes D. Gleason and Jean W. Simpson, Chicago; Mrs. Charles Drueching and Miss Drueching Chelsea, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Merel Hill, Weehawken, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Moore, Newington, Conn.; Mr. David Dows, Glen Head, L. I.; Mr. W. J. Weller, Goshen, N. Y., and Mrs. Horace Colwell and Miss Elizabeth Colwell, Boston.

Miss Helen H. Howe, of Boston, will give a monologue entertainment at Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, Tuesday afternoon, with proceeds going to the dental clinic of the Pittsfield Junior League. Mrs. George W. Edman is chairman, assisted by Princess Diane R. Eristavi and Mmes. David T. Dana jr., George Allen Holloway, Robert S. Hibbard, William S. Ginn, Elmer A. Euston, Samuel Gilbert Colt jr., Zenas Crane Colt, James D. Colt 2d, Robert N. Hart, Theodore W. Jones, Jay C. Rosenfeld, Alan Blau, W. Gordon Cox, W. Bradford West, John A. Remick 3d, C. Lambert Heyniger, Lawrence K. Miller, Maurice Woolverton and William B. Hagyard and Miss Julia Ellen Kinney.

94

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 5 - 1940

Tall Tower Topics

BY THE MAN IN THE TOWER

Good evening.

MUSIC IN THE AIR

(News Item: Koussevitzky Conducts Beethoven in the Berkshires.)

There's music in the air,
 Coming from a bosky dell,
Wafted on New England air
 Accompanied by a tolling bell.
It travels through the valleys,
 Reverberates among the hills,
Harmony vying with the birds,
 The trombone toots a few trills.
There's music in the air,
 The cello does its duty,
Brasses sound with authority
 Amid much sylvan beauty.
The conductor whacks his stick,
 Throws a glance at a sky now blue,
Every phrase the musicians play
 Is precise, clearcut and true.
Beethoven comes to the Berkshires,
 Brahms has New England setting,.
Violins are a mighty choir,
 The woodwinds are abetting.
There's music in the air,
 Perhaps a strain from Manon Lescaut,
As on these lush August days
 You get your music al fresco.

—EM EM.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1940

MUSICIAN DROWNS AT STOCKBRIDGE

Charles Naginsky, 31, Berkshire Festival Composer, Was Friend of Koussevitzky.

Charles Naginsky, 31, of Garrison, N. Y., was drowned at Card lake in West Stockbridge last evening. He was a composer connected with the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, and was a close personal friend of Director Serge Koussevitzky.

He had been occupying the barn at the Fred Tobey residence. He had been taking his meals at noon time, and when he failed to appear for dinner at 6:30 last night Carl Lindgren, owner of Hill Top, started to look for him as Naginsky had said he was going for a swim. Mr. Lindgren saw a car at the lake with his clothing in it, but could not find any trace of the missing composer. Lindgren then notified Deputy Sheriff Garrett Troy, who immediately organized a searching party.

After searching about the lake the group undertook diving. Joseph Angeli discovered the body about 40 feet from shore in about 15 feet of water and brought it to shore. Artificial respiration was attempted in vain by Corrina Delmolino and Mrs. Louis Vaber. Naginsky was pronounced dead by Dr. William Persing of West Stockbridge.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1940

MUSICIAN DROWNS

WEST STOCKBRIDGE —Charles Naginsky, 31, of Garrison, N. Y., was drowned at Card lake early last evening. He was a composer connected with the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, and was a close personal friend of Director Serge Koussevitzky.

After searching about the lake the body was found about 40 feet from shore in about 15 feet of water and brought to shore. Artificial respiration was attempted in vain.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1940

Berkshire Festival

When radio got out of the crystal-set stage, and its fullest possibilities were beginning to be realized, gloomy predictions were made about the future of the concert hall. (Americans are always filled with gloomy predictions. Ominous forebodings, they call them. A writer in one of the somber weekly magazines seriously predicted only a few years ago that there would be almost no one left in cities and towns to pay taxes, because most of the populations would be traveling irresponsibly around the country in trailers.) Stokowski even said that the perfect orchestra was invisible; that the sight of fiddlers and horn-blowers was distracting to the listeners. It seemed that radio would be the perfect medium, and that people would not gather together much longer to listen to music. Similar predictions will be made when television hits its stride.

Obviously, the radio has increased the popularity of the concert hall. Its symphonic programs have enlarged the musical public. That stimulation, together with the human desire to go away from home for entertainment, has had something to do with the enormous success of musical festivals, and special programs. In Summer, there are numerous outdoor concerts, many of them excellent, and almost all of them attended by thousands of persons.

The most successful, artistically, and one of the most ambitious, is the Berkshire Festival, which features the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, at the Tanglewood estate in Lenox. This year's festival began Thursday night, and will be more extensive than any of the festivals of the past seven years. An inkling of its popularity is indicated by the presence of six thousand persons at the first concert. Capacity audiences are practically assured for the coming concerts.

When thousands of men and women, many of them arriving early at the music shed with picnic suppers, are willing to travel to a country town to hear good music well played, there must be a reason for it. The reason most likely is that radio, through its excellent musical programs, has brought music to the people; has made it a national preoccupation, which it never was a generation ago.

With Europe in an unmusical frame of mind, the Berkshire Festival is probably the finest institution of its sort in the world. Massachusetts has one more organization in which to take pride.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 5 - 1940

Many Attend First Series At Tanglewood

At Least 10,000 At Each Concert By Boston Symphony

The opening week-end of concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky has been marked ~~by record~~ attendance, yesterday's audience being estimated at 10,000. Many music lovers from Schenectady were observed at the Satruday night concert.

The Saturday night program featured Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist,. Mr. Piatigorsky's interpretation was rich and even throughout the solo passages which give voice to the thoughts and emotions of the leading character. The Strauss score was magnificently read by the orchestra, the poetry, tenderness and mock heroism of the theme superbly expressed.

The program began with the overture to Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini." It ended with two great French works of the early part of this century: Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's second "Dannis et Chloe" suite. A contemporary American, Roy Harris, was represented by his Third Symphony. The most impressive thing about the Harris score is its vitality and sincerity. An impression of breadth and directness of musical thought is immediately apparent in the opening theme which dominates the first part. Mr. Harris was in the music shed to hear his own work and to acknowledge the applause of the audience.

The Debussy work was played enchantingly and the Ravel score was a stirring climax for the evening, irresistible in its eloquence and virtuosity.

The second series of concerts dedevoted to music of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky, will be given Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1940

There's Always Room on Tanglewood's Loge de jardin

—[Photo by William Whitaker

COMFORT AND BEAUTY are perfectly blended at Tanglewood in Stockbridge for the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Orchestra under Koussevitzky. Hundreds of listeners scatter over the lawn in addition to thousands who fill the music shed for the weekend concerts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 4 - 1940

95

Albert Spalding will be the violin soloist at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in its second week this Thursday night. He is shown here in the inset and the orchestra is the Boston Symphony, with which he plays.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Closes First Third of Season

6500 From All Parts of Country and 30 Foreign Nations in Audience; Brahman Priest Attends in Full Indian Regalia

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of 6500 persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States Ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Madame Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Kousevitzky estate near by. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year-dream—the Berkshire Music Centre, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Mme. Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire Festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

Today's music explored three periods: the classic, with the favorite Mozart E Flat Symphony; the late romantic, with Brahms's Second Symphony, and the modern period with a performance of Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, in which Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

The latter is Stravinsky at his least interesting, although the performance of Mr. Sanroma and the redoubtable Boston Symphony was of such quality that the audience could overlook the fact that the music sounds, most of the time, as if it had been made from scraps found in the bottom of the composer's trunk.

Although the Berkshire Festival audience is one of the most distinguished that any summer music venture is able to assemble, it is by no means straight-laced. This afternoon the orchestra appeared nonchalantly in shirt-sleeves, and when Dr. Kossevitzky returned after the opening Mozart Symphony with Mr. Sanroma, both director and soloist also had shed their coats.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
AUG 5 - 1940

6,500 AT CONCERT AT STOCKBRIDGE

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—One of the most successful community enterprises in all the musical world closed triumphantly the first third of its seventh year with a concert heard yesterday afternoon by 6,500 people from all parts of the world.

This is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which each August brings larger and larger audiences to its handsome home—Tikleumd, the estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD
AUG 5 - 1940

Berkshire Music Festival Draws Audienceof6500

Associated Press Arts Editor.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—The Berkshire symphonic festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of 6500 persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much of a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Madame Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Koussevitzky estate nearby. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year dream—the Berkshire music center, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Mme. Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

Today's music explored three periods: The classic, with the favorite Mozart E Flat symphony; the late romantic, with Brahms' second symphony, and the modern period with a performance of Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, in which Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

The latter is Stravinsky at his least interesting, although the performance of M. Sanroma and the redoubtable Boston symphony was of such quality that the audience could overlook the fact that the music sounds, most of the time, as if it had been made from scraps found in the bottom of the composer's trunk.

Although the Berkshire festival audience is one of the most distinguished that any summer music venture is able to assemble, it is by no means straight-laced. This afternoon the orchestra appeared nonchalantly in shirt-sleeves, and when Dr. Koussevitzky returned after the opening Mozart symphony with Sanroma, both director and soloist also had shed their coats.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 5 - 1940

Comment

AT TANGLEWOOD
(Boston Herald)

Since the war has made the famous European festivals of music as those of Salzburg, Bayreuth, Vichy, Zurich and Milan, out of the question for Americans, more attention has been centered on what can be offered locally. Foremost among the summer festivals is that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where, we may congratulate ourselves, the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky holds sway.

A few important changes this year indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky has not temporized. One of his dearest ambitions began to be realized in the past six weeks with the formation of the academy of music, involving a school for advanced musicians in conjunction with the concerts that wind up the season.

In addition, the festival season has been extended a week. The concerts are still all symphonic, with one notable exception. That will occur in the last week, when Bach's B minor Mass will be performed. The chorus has been trained in large measure from the academy students and will therefore provide a practical demonstration of Mr. Koussevitzky's ideal.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1940

New Attendance Record Set At Berkshire Music Festival

Stockbridge, Aug. 5—Records went tumbling again yesterday at the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Tanglewood as the largest audience ever to attend a concert in this seven-year-old project appeared for the third concert, the final one in the first of three series this year. By the time Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra had begun the afternoon program, 7200 persons, or about 1200 more than the capacity of the shell, had passed through the gate.

It sounded like 7200 persons when the pent-up enthusiasm was released at the end of each of the three selections. The orchestra received its share, but there seemed a few extra decibels for Dr Koussevitzky and for Jesus SanRoma, pianist, who was the soloist of the afternoon in the tricky "Capriccio" of Stravinsky. The afternoon was ideal and many who could have been seated on the benches at the side of the shell preferred to recline some distance beyond in the shade of one of the many huge trees which help make the summer home of the orchestra so delightful. The acoustics of the shell and the Sunday go-to-meeting manners of the audience allow the softest murmurings of the strings to carry far over the Berkshire hillsides.

For some, the high spot of yesterday's program was the appearance of SanRoma in the Stravinsky showpiece, while others found Koussevitzky's powerful reading of the Brahms second symphony the cause of their most fervent applause. The program opened with the Mozart E flat symphony, number 39, which was written with the "Jupiter" symphony and the G minor symphony within the period of six weeks.

The Mozart, while it abounds in delightful melody and some sturdy moments, especially in the menuetto movement, failed to reach the peaks attained by the others. It may have been partly the interruption after the first movement to allow the seating of late comers, or the distress of the conductor at being forced to wait, or his attempt to have Mozart cope with the wide-open spaces. Whatever the reason, the best was yet to come.

When Stravinsky needed something to replace his "Piano Concerto" for solo appearance with an orchestra, he composed the "Capriccio," which is all the name implies. Since this is one of the orchestra's winter staples, there was never any doubt as to how it would come out. Its humor, enhanced by split-second timing, was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. The Brahms, however, inspired a church-like silence on the part of the audience, best evidence of the grip the music made on the gathering. The dimensions of this great work are suited to the shell and its soul-stirring surroundings.

Saturday Night Program

Saturday night, the audience had also broken the previous attendance record, set the last Sunday of the 1939 series. There was much interest in the appearance of Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, first instrumental soloist to appear during the festival programs. While the natural timber of the cello does not allow it to soar over or cut through a big orchestra, unless there be perfect rapport between the conductor and the soloist and sometimes a sacrificing of the composer's notations, the towering cellist, a ringer for Primo Carnera, managed quite well to project the story of "Don Quixote" as expressed in the fantastic variations of Richard Strauss. In it he had knowing assistance from the orchestra and from the viola soloist, Jean Lefranc.

The program opened with the triumphant overture to "Benevenuto Cellini," by Berlioz, and included Roy Harris's Third symphony, which Koussevitzky has named the best American symphony yet. Mr Harris was on hand to take his bows after his single movement work had been completed. The program closed with two favorites in which the Boston orchestra cannot be surpassed; the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite.

Thursday night, the second series will begin at 8.30 with the Beethoven overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and the Beethoven concerto for violin in D with the Berkshire's own Albert Spalding as soloist and Tchaikovsky Fourth symphony. It will be the first Tchaikovsky in the festival which is partly dedicated to commemorating his centennial.

J. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
AUG 5 - 1940

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CONCERT AT STOCKBRIDGE DRAWS CROWD OF 6,500

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—One of the most successful community enterprises in all the musical world closed triumphantly the first third of its seventh year with a concert, yesterday afternoon, heard by 6,500 people from all parts of the world.

This is The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which each August brings larger and larger audiences to its handsome home—Tikleumd, the estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

The Berkshires are full of Summer cultural activities, and early in its history the Berkshire Symphonic Festival developed a policy of cooperation which has benefited everybody — including the festival itself.

Yesterday's music included Mozart's E Flat Symphony (No. 39); Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the highly effective soloist, and Brahms' Second Symphony in D Major. The latter is one of Serge Koussevitzky's favorites, and yesterday he and the incomparable Boston Symphony made it sound as if it were something fresh from the brain of its composer, instead of a staple of the symphonic literature played every season by every orchestra in the land.

The festival resumes next Thursday night with a Beethoven-Tchaikowsky program at which Albert Spalding, the violinist, will be soloist. This Summer, there are three instead of two weeks of concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUTCHINSON, KAN.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1940

Eastern Music School Unusual

Berkshire Center Has Noted Russian As Director

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP)—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston symphony orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, the 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, who spends his winters directing the Boston symphony, which has been[redacted] the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitzky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitzky won't present it until it has been improved.

The Berkshire music center is actually a "dream walking."

It began back in opulent prewar Russia, when Dr. Koussevitzky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as himself was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The second attempt was also under a depressing and malignant star—in 1929 and at White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitzky has exactly what he dreamed of for three decades, here in the Berkshire hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center is unusual because of its teaching plan and the calibre of its teachers..

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

But he felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to reestablish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right. two thirds of the music center's students are in that class.

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting—a privilege dozens of American youths would give their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches 20-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils for study of composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

There is an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances—even dancing for those who want it.

President Fulgencio Batista of Cuba began life as a tailor's apprentice.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

At Tanglewood

From the Boston Herald

Since the war has made the famous European festivals of music as those of Salzburg, Bayreuth, Vichy, Zurich and Milan, out of the question for Americans, more attention has been centered on what can be offered locally. Foremost among the summer festivals is that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where, we may congratulate ourselves, the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky holds sway.

A few important changes this yeai indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky has not temporized. One of his dearest ambitions began to be realized in the past six weeks with the formation of the academy of music, involving a school for advanced musicians in conjunction with the concerts that wind up the season.

In addition, the festival season has been extended a week. The concerts are still all symphonic, with one notable exception. That will occur in the last week, when Bach's B minor Mass will be performed. The chorus has been trained in large measure from the academy students and will therefore provide a practical demonstration of Mr. Koussevitzky's ideal.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1940

Huge Audience at Berkshire Festival

Fine Balance in Program Conducted by Koussevitsky.

By [redacted]

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—Before another huge audience the first part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end yesterday afternoon. The weather has been perfect for all three performances—there was another on Saturday evening—in fact almost too perfect, because the night programs had more than their share of coldish tang, atmospherically speaking.

Mr. Koussevitsky, who, it can truthfully be said, bows before no one in the matter of program-making, had devised another of his well-balanced, provocative and thoroughly interesting lists. There was the Mozart Symphony in E flat, No. 39 (K. 543), the Stravinsky Capriccio with mainder of the work fairly scintillated with Mozartean spirit and spontaneity. One could remember long and pleasurably, for instance, the long, luscious centilena of the andante, the Jewel-mechanism precision of the Menuetto and the enthusiasm and drive of the finale.

* * *

A Jazzy Composition.

Stravinsky's composition, a jazzy, lyrico-rhythmic piece had the honor of a first-class reading. Mr. Sanroma was magnificent in the extremely difficult piano part and the orchestral accompaniment reached some zenith or other for active collaboration.

The Russian composer has listened long and profitably to the siren beckonings of jazz, swing and rhumba rhythms. An andante rapsodico, second edition of the number, is really a jerky walk through a briar patch.

Brahms' Symphony moved along with all the expression and sweep that the Bostonians are capable of producing.

The Saturday night concert was distinguished chiefly for the extraordinary performance of the Ravel Daphnis and Chloe Suite (No. 2). It was a good thing, too, because little of what had gone before could properly be described as typical of the conductor and orchestra.

Second in the running came the Richard Strauss Don Quixote with Gregor Piatigorsky as the 'cello soloist, and Jean Lefranc as the subsidiary soloist on the viola. Of course, Mr. Piatigorsky's contribution merited all the accolade one could pour on it, and Mr. Lefranc did his work nobly, too. The orchestra was at times devilishly effective, at other times, just as devilishly not.

* * *

Excellent Creation.

Also played in the Saturday offering were the Berlioz Overture to Benvenuto Cellini, the Roy Harris Third Symphony—an excellent creation, played in so-so manner and the Debussy Afternoon of a faun—also done on the under side.

For the sake of epilogue, one might mention the fact that the Harris Symphony had gone much better at rehearsal on Saturday morning, despite the innumerable stop and go signs flashed by Mr. Koussevitzky in the interests of repetition.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1940

6,500 Hear Boston Symphony At Berkshire Music Festival

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of 6,500 persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman Priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Madame Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Koussevitzky estate nearby. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year dream—the Berkshire music center, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Mme. Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

Today's music explored three periods: the classic, with the favorite Mozart E Flat symphony; the late romantic, with Brahms' second symphony, and the modern period with a performance of Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, in whch Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

Although the Berkshire festival audience is one of the most distinguished that any summer music venture is able to assemble, it is by no means straight-laced. This afternoon the orchestra appeared nonchalantly in shirt-sleeves, and when Dr. Koussevitzky returned after the opening Mozart symphony with Mr. Sanroma, both director and solist also had shed thier coats.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

Hail Boston Symphony At Berkshire Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The final concert of Series A of the Berkshire Symphonic festival ended in a blaze of orchestral glory for Johannas Brahms last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and a coatless Boston Symphony orchestra gave a magnificent performance of the German master's Symphony No. 2.

Unquestionably the high light of the first group of three week's concerts, the audience of over 6,000 people which filled the Tanglewood shed to capacity and overflowed to the benches on either side, lost its American inhibitions, cheering and giving vent to its approval of Dr. Koussevitzky's performance by standing on chairs and bringing him out for countless acknowledgements.

Saturday night's program leaned over backwards to give the equally large audience a full measure of music in the modern manner. With the exception of the Berlioz overture, the entire program was devoted to the works of Strauss, Debussy, Ravel and the American composer, Roy Harris. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," once considered ultra-modern at the time of its first performance, becomes quite unsophisticated in the company of Harris and Ravel. Dr. Koussevitzky evidentally finds merit in the Harris work, since he has given it preference on some of his recent concerts.

PIANIST PRAISED

Whether it will endure is a question of time, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Jean Lefranc, violist, were the assisting soloists in Strauss' "Don Quixote" which only gave either a sparse opportunity to display his individual talent. Considered as two instrumental voices added to the ensemble the results were more than satisfactory.

Yesterday's offering, while nodding slightly to the moderns through the inclusion of Stravinski's "Capriccio" in which the staff pianist, Jesue Maria Sanroma gave a dazzling exhibition of technical skill — he will be remembered for his joint recital with his wife in Albany last winter — while Dr. Koussevitzky, lending the young pianist unusually sympathetic support, beamed his full approval of the pianist's heroic efforts which was seconded by the enthusiastic applause of the audience at, or for its conclusion, depending upon one's likes or dislikes for a musical line as unpredictable as a bolt of lightening.

PERFECT RENDITION

However, good old Brahms came through in a big way to pacify all dissenters against music in dissonace. Here is a melodic line that the players can get their emotional teeth into; music that they can play with the meat of their fingers and music that finds quick response in the consciousness of the listener to the point that he carries the gorgeous melodies home with him. This reviewer heard the Brahm's themes whistled and hummed by the departing members of the audience, but cannot recall anyone indulging in any single motif by Stravinsky or Harris.

The Mozart symphony in E-flat which opened the program was given a virile and wholly satisfying rendition by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men, which is only another way of saying that it was perfection in itself. In a nutshell, the three masters whose sir names begin with a capital B have not much to fear from the present crop of initiates in harmonic construction.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

SANROMA GIVEN GREAT OVATION AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky and Players Draw Record Crowd of 7200

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 — Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, won for himself a veritable ovation yesterday afternoon after his electrifying performance of Stravinsky's "Capriccio." This final concert of the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood drew the record-breaking audience of 7200 persons, the largest in its history.

Barbaric But Effective

The Stravinsky work was written by the composer so that he might have at hand a work other than his piano concerto when he went on tour. It is true Stravinsky, a bit barbaric, a bit unpleasant but diabolically clever and effective. It is just the sort of music in which Sanroma is at his best. He introduced the work in this country and has played it innumerable times under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program opened with the Mozart "Symphony in E flat, No. 39" (543). Never has the consummate virtuosity of the Boston players been so apparent as in their entrancing performance of this charming symphony. The sparkle of the strings, the finely formed contours and the depth of feeling and ardor of the reading combined to provide a memorable experience. One never ceases to wonder at the alertness of the players and their instant response to every demand.

The concert closed with a flawless performance of the second symphony of Brahms. In choosing this work, Dr. Koussevitzky again displayed his uncanny gifts as program arranger. It fitted in perfectly, for this is the most human and best understood of the Brahms symphonies, simplicity itself after the mighty first. The ear was ravished by beautiful tones in the second movement and the crisp delivery of the adagietto was completely in the mood. The finale was a brilliant exposition which won prolonged plaudits from the audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky returned to the platform many times, always insisting his men share in the applause.

The concert Saturday night introduced the first of the guest artists, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. With violinist Jean Lefranc, he was heard in the "Don Quixote" fantastic variations, a work which only the finest orchestra and soloists could perform as it was heard here in the music shed. Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" is the only American work yet provided on the programs and Mr. Harris, who was present, must have been delighted with the performance, for Dr. Koussevitzky has evidently made a profound study of this difficult, yet intriguing score. It falls not too gratefully upon the ear, but its idiom is fresh and original.

It was in the last two works that the full glory of the Boston Symphony players was manifest, for in such compositions as Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel "Daphne and Chloe" suite, they are incomparable. In perfection of playing and in the evocation of myriad colors, they have no peer.

The program opened with a brilliant performance of the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture by Berlioz.

The second series of concerts opens Thursday night. Albert Spalding, American violinist, will be heard in Beethoven's violin concerto and the program will open with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. The Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky will conclude the program and it should be one of the finest of the entire series.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 5 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUTCHINSON, KAN.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1940

Eastern Music School Unusual

Berkshire Center Has Noted Russian As Director

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP)—There never has been a music school quite like the one functioning now under the tall trees of Tanglewood, the Boston symphony orchestra's handsome estate between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For one thing, the 340 students have as their general director Serge Koussevitzky, who spends his winters directing the Boston symphony, which has been called the finest orchestra the world has known. Dr. Koussevitzky no less than another famous conductor, Arturo Toscanini, is a perfectionist. If anything can be improved, Dr. Koussevitzky won't present it until it has been improved.

The Berkshire music center is actually a "dream walking."

It began back in opulent prewar Russia, when Dr. Koussevitzky had money to do things in the grand style of the period. He wanted a school of music for Moscow, wherein all teachers should be as careful as himself was, and all students the cream of the crop. But the war killed it, the revolution took much of the money, and Dr. Koussevitzky came to America.

The second attempt was also under a depressing and malignant star—in 1929 and at White Plains, N. Y. Money ran out once more.

Now, in still another war year, Dr. Koussevitzky has exactly what he dreamed of for three decades, here in the Berkshire hills. It turned out to be exactly what hundreds of the best student material wanted, also. So many applied that only half could be accepted.

Chiefly, the music center is unusual because of its teaching plan and the calibre of its teachers..

Dr. Koussevitzky believed his school should be divided so that it could give intensive training to musicians of first grade, who intended to make a life work of it. About a third of the student body is in that class.

But he felt also that schools ignored many persons of intelligence and musical experience who had no thought of making a living out of music, but who would like to reestablish contact with it for a summer, live in the midst of music, and practice the art to the limit of their ability. Again he was right. two thirds of the music center's students are in that class.

So he tailored the course of study to fit.

Five of the advanced students he has accepted for personal coaching in the art of conducting—a privilege dozens of American youths would give their upper teeth for. Dr. Herbert Graf has a small theater of his own in which he coaches 20-odd pupils in operatic interpretation. Aaron Copland and Paul Hindemith have accepted a few pupils for study of composition. G. Wallace Woodworth has a small class in choral conducting.

There is an advanced orchestra of 60 players.

A chorus of about 200 voices for less advanced students, a less advanced orchestra, a welter of lectures and chamber music performances—even dancing for those who want it.

President Fulgencio Batista of Cuba began life as a tailor's apprentice.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

At Tanglewood

From the Boston Herald

Since the war has made the famous European festivals of music as those of Salzburg, Bayreuth, Vichy, Zurich and Milan, out of the question for Americans, more attention has been centered on what can be offered locally. Foremost among the summer festivals is that at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where, we may congratulate ourselves, the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky holds sway.

A few important changes this year indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky has not temporized. One of his dearest ambitions began to be realized in the past six weeks with the formation of the academy of music, involving a school for advanced musicians in conjunction with the concerts that wind up the season.

In addition, the festival season has been extended a week. The concerts are still all symphonic, with one notable exception. That will occur in the last week, when Bach's B minor Mass will be performed. The chorus has been trained in large measure from the academy students and will therefore provide a practical demonstration of Mr. Koussevitzky's ideal.

1940

Huge Audience at Berkshire Festival

Fine Balance in Program Conducted by Koussevitzky.

By [redacted]

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—Before another huge audience the first part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end yesterday afternoon. The weather has been perfect for all three performances—there was another on Saturday evening—in fact almost too perfect, because the night programs had more than their share of coldish tang, atmospherically speaking.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who, it can truthfully be said, bows before no one in the matter of program-making, had devised another of his well-balanced, provocative and thoroughly interesting lists. There was the Mozart Symphony in E flat, No. 39 (K. 543), the Stravinsky Capriccio with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the piano soloist, and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Curiously, the first movement of the Mozart emerged in the Beethovenish manner, big, grandiose, almost epic in utterance. But there the similarity stopped, for the remainder of the work fairly scintillated with Mozartean spirit and spontaneity. One could remember long and pleasurably, for instance, the long, luscious centilena of the andante, the Jewel-mechanism precision of the Menuetto and the enthusiasm and drive of the finale.

* * *

A Jazzy Composition.

Stravinsky's composition, a jazzy, lyrico-rhythmic piece had the honor of a first-class reading. Mr. Sanroma was magnificent in the extremely difficult piano part and the orchestral accompaniment reached some zenith or other for active collaboration.

The Russian composer has listened long and profitably to the siren beckonings of jazz, swing and rhumba rhythms. An andante rapsodico, second edition of the number, is really a jerky walk through a briar patch.

Brahms' Symphony moved along with all the expression and sweep that the Bostonians are capable of producing.

The Saturday night concert was distinguished chiefly for the extraordinary performance of the Ravel Daphnis and Chloe Suite (No. 2). It was a good thing, too, because little of what had gone before could properly be described as typical of the conductor and orchestra.

Second in the running came the Richard Strauss Don Quixote with Gregor Piatigorsky as the 'cello soloist, and Jean Lefranc as the subsidiary soloist on the viola. Of course, Mr. Piatigorsky's contribution merited all the accolade one could pour on it, and Mr. Lefranc did his work nobly, too. The orchestra was at times devilishly effective, at other times, just as devilishly not.

* * *

Excellent Creation.

Also played in the Saturday offering were the Berlioz Overture to Benvenuto Cellini, the Roy Harris Third Symphony—an excellent creation, played in so-so manner and the Debussy Afternoon of a faun—also done on the under side.

For the sake of epilogue, one might mention the fact that the Harris Symphony had gone much better at rehearsal on Saturday morning, despite the innumerable stop and go signs flashed by Mr. Koussevitzky in the interests of repetition.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1940

Action Photo

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of 6,500 persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman Priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Madame Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Koussevitzky estate nearby. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year dream—the Berkshire music center, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Mme. Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

Today's music explored three periods: the classic, with the favorite Mozart E Flat symphony; the late romantic, with Brahms' second symphony, and the modern period with a performance of Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, in whch Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

Although the Berkshire festival audience is one of the most distinguished that any summer music venture is able to assemble, it is by no means straight-laced. This afternoon the orchestra appeared nonchalantly in shirt-sleeves, and when Dr. Koussevitzky returned after the opening Mozart symphony with Mr. Sanroma, both director and solist also had shed thier coats.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

Hail Boston Symphony At Berkshire Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The final concert of Series A of the Berkshire Symphonic festival ended in a blaze of orchestral glory for Johannas Brahms last night as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and a coatless Boston Symphony orchestra gave a magnificent performance of the German master's Symphony No. 2.

Unquestionably the high light of the first group of three week's concerts, the audience of over 6,000 people which filled the Tanglewood shed to capacity and overflowed to the benches on either side, lost its American inhibitions, cheering and giving vent to its approval of Dr. Koussevitzky's performance by standing on chairs and bringing him out for countless acknowledgements.

Saturday night's program leaned over backwards to give the equally large audience a full measure of music in the modern manner. With the exception of the Berlioz overture, the entire program was devoted to the works of Strauss, Debussy, Ravel and the American composer, Roy Harris. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," once considered ultra-modern at the time of its first performance, becomes quite unsophisticated in the company of Harris and Ravel. Dr. Koussevitzky evidentally finds merit in the Harris work, since he has given it preference on some of his recent concerts.

PIANIST PRAISED

Whether it will endure is a question of time, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Jean Lefranc, violist, were the assisting soloists in Strauss' "Don Quixote" which only gave either a sparse opportunity to display his individual talent. Considered as two instrumental voices added to the ensemble the results were more than satisfactory.

Yesterday's offering, while nodding slightly to the moderns through the inclusion of Stravinski's "Capriccio" in which the staff pianist, Jesue Maria Sanroma gave a dazzling exhibition of technical skill — he will be remembered for his joint recital with his wife in Albany last winter — while Dr. Koussevitzky, lending the young pianist unusually sympathetic support, beamed his full approval of the pianist's heroic efforts which was seconded by the enthusiastic applause of the audience at, or for its conclusion, depending upon one's likes or dislikes for a musical line as unpredictable as a bolt of lightening.

PERFECT RENDITION

However, good old Brahms came through in a big way to pacify all dissenters against music in dissonace. Here is a melodic line that the players can get their emotional teeth into; music that they can play with the meat of their fingers and music that finds quick response in the consciousness of the listener to the point that he carries the gorgeous melodies home with him. This reviewer heard the Brahm's themes whistled and hummed by the departing members of the audience, but cannot recall anyone indulging in any single motif by Stravinsky or Harris.

The Mozart symphony in E-flat which opened the program was given a virile and wholly satisfying rendition by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men, which is only another way of saying that it was perfection in itself. In a nutshell, the three masters whose sir names begin with a capital B have not much to fear from the present crop of initiates in harmonic construction.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 5 - 1940

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 5 - 1940

SANROMA GIVEN GREAT OVATION AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky and Players Draw Record Crowd of 7200

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 — Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, won for himself a veritable ovation yesterday afternoon after his electrifying performance of Stravinsky's "Capriccio." This final concert of the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood drew the record-breaking audience of 7200 persons, the largest in its history.

Barbaric But Effective

The Stravinsky work was written by the composer so that he might have at hand a work other than his piano concerto when he went on tour. It is true Stravinsky, a bit barbaric, a bit unpleasant but diabolically clever and effective. It is just the sort of music in which Sanroma is at his best. He introduced the work in this country and has played it innumerable times under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program opened with the Mozart "Symphony in E flat, No. 39" (543). Never has the consummate virtuosity of the Boston players been so apparent as in their entrancing performance of this charming symphony. The sparkle of the strings, the finely formed contours and the depth of feeling and ardor of the reading combined to provide a memorable experience. One never ceases to wonder at the alertness of the players and their instant response to every demand.

The concert closed with a flawless performance of the second symphony of Brahms. In choosing this work, Dr. Koussevitzky again displayed his uncanny gifts as program arranger. It fitted in perfectly, for this is the most human and best understood of the Brahms symphonies, simplicity itself after the mighty first. The ear was ravished by beautiful tones in the second movement and the crisp delivery of the adagietto was completely in the mood. The finale was a brilliant exposition which won prolonged plaudits from the audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky returned to the platform many times, always insisting his men share in the applause.

The concert Saturday night introduced the first of the guest artists, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. With violinist Jean Lefranc, he was heard in the "Don Quixote" fantastic variations, a work which only the finest orchestra and soloists could perform as it was heard here in the music shed. Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" is the only American work yet provided on the programs and Mr. Harris, who was present, must have been delighted with the performance, for Dr. Koussevitzky has evidently made a profound study of this difficult, yet intriguing score. It falls not too gratefully upon the ear, but its idiom is fresh and original.

It was in the last two works that the full glory of the Boston Symphony players was manifest, for in such compositions as Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel "Daphne and Chloe" suite, they are incomparable. In perfection of playing and in the evocation of myriad colors, they have no peer.

The program opened with a brilliant performance of the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture by Berlioz.

The second series of concerts opens Thursday night. Albert Spalding, American violinist, will be heard in Beethoven's violin concerto and the program will open with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. The Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky will conclude the program and it should be one of the finest of the entire series.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 5 - 1940

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Mozart and Brahms

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Completing the first series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate in a program including two symphonies—Mozart's E-flat (K. 543) and the second of Brahms. Jesus Maria Sanroma, the Boston Symphony's [redacted] pianist, was the orchestra's collaborator in the much more recent composition which separated these two familiar and well loved works, and Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo.

The fair weather which had accompanied Thursday's and Saturday's concerts continued to prevail this afternoon. It was warmer than on the two previous evenings, and the members of the orchestra doffed their coats, but from the viewpoint of the listeners the temperature gave not the slightest ground for criticism. All the 6,038 seats within the shed appeared to be occupied and many took advantage of the opportunity to listen in variously comfortable positions on the grass. According to a preliminary estimate, today's audience numbered over 6,500. Offcial figures for the three concerts were not yet available, but the total attendance was believed to mark a new record for a trio of Berkshire festival concerts.

* * *

Stravinsky's Capriccio has been heard both in Boston and New York, but it is not yet particularly familiar to American symphonic patrons. According to the Boston Symphony's eminent annotator, John N. Burk, Stravinsky composed it to provide a second vehicle, in addition to his piano concerto, for his solo appearances with European orchestras. There are three movements, the first and third relatively formal in structure if not in character, while the second can be described as a series of short interchanges between the piano and the orchestra.

The piano often has a dominant role, and its player must display notable grace and brilliance. From time to time, however, it is interwoven in the orchestral texture and for several pages in the finale provides a rhythmic base for orchestral comment. In his autobiography Stravinsky writes that while composing this work he found his thoughts dominated by "that prince of music, Carl Maria von Weber." Hints of Weber in atmosphere rather than style can be noticed from time to time. There are occasional recollections of a mid-nineteenth century Viennese atmosphere. Obviously the composer has not sought profundity, but grace, animation, polish and proportion. Despite some moments when the entertainment becomes slightly tenuous, the work as a whole, with its generally melodic idiom spiced at times with discreet dissonance, meets its objectives with marked success. Mr. Sanroma's fluent and skilful playing was appropriately in the vein of the music and the orchestra gave him well-proportioned and spirited collaboration. Much aplause followed for all the participants.

* * *

One memorable feature of Saturday night's program was its demonstration of great cello playing in Gregor Piatigorsky's interpretation as soloist in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote." His technique was of the consummate type which gives no indication of the difficulties with which it has to deal. His tone was rich and even throughout the unusually extensive compass which Strauss assigns to the instrument which gives voice to the character, thoughts and emotions of the protagonist of this treasurable tone poem. Along with the realization of the external merits of his playing, his hearers were equally conscious of its emotional conviction and persuasiveness. This was the work of a musician of exceptional artistry and sensitive and perceptive insight, who was completely acquainted with the expressive significance of his music as well as with its notes.

Similar comments could be made about the playing of the orchestra and the interpretation as a whole. In "Don Quixote" one no longer thinks primarily of matters such as wind machines or representations of the bleating of sheep, but of the value of the work as a remarkable musical depiction of human emotions, a persuasive blend of comedy and pathos. Of Strauss's musical sheep, the story is told that the conductor, Artur Rodzinski, attending an early rehearsal of this performance, was suddenly led to wonder, upon hearing these sounds, whether one of the goats in his Great Barrington farm had not strayed to Tanglewood.

Roy Harris's third symphony had its first festival hearing in Saturday's concert, and its composer, who has been lecturing at the Berkshire Music Center, was called to the platform to share the plaudits. This relatively short work, which New Yorkers have heard under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky and Arturo Toscanini, retains its interest in repeated hearings as an important contribution to today's American symphonic literature. An impression of breadth and consequence of musical thought is made by the long articulated theme which dominates the first part with waxing intensity. Some reminiscent moments can be noticed, as in the short figure which is passed from instrument to instrument in the brass choir, with its hint of a tune from "Petrouchka," but one is more conscious of the evidence of an individual style and structure.

* * *

It may be that the brass fanfares, despite their saliency, give an impression of iteration in the long run. This effect may have been due to acoustic conditions in the center of the forward seats. No detail of the score was lost, but the remarkable resonance of the orchestra shell sometimes projected prominent brass passages and proclamative climaxes with almost undue brilliance and prominence. This could also be noticed in the high-spirited close of Ravel's Second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite, which has always been one of this orchestra's most effective offerings. The ensuing demonstration was of unusual length and vigor.

This demonstration was matched by that which followed the triumphantly proclaimed close of a notable performance of the Brahms D major symphony this afternoon. Encomiums were also merited by the imposing interpretation of Berlioz's orotund "Benvenuto Cellini" overture and the playing of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" in Saturday's program and of the Mozart symphony which opened today's list. This called particular attention to the admirable tone quality of the various orchestral choirs and the laudable blending and tonal proportion which marked the playing as a whole.

The second series of the festival will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, with programs devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

Igor Stravinsky

Whose Capriccio for piano and orchestra was performed yesterday at the Berkshire Festival

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1940

STRAVINSKY WORK HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Sanroma Soloist With Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky at Fete in Berkshires

WEATHER FAVORS EVENT

Week-End Ideal for Open-Air Concerts — Brahms and Mozart on Program

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass, Aug. 4—The first week of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival ended at Tanglewood here this afternoon in an optimistic mood. The weather, with warm sunshine and mild breezes, concluded a long week-end of exemplary behavior. The audience this afternoon was one of the largest in the festival's history and the performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky were as clean-cut and as lofty as the surrounding hillls.

This afternoon's concert had Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra, with piano solo, as the contemporary contribution. It was flanked by two masterpieces of symphonic literature — Mozart's symphony in E flat No. 39, and Brahms's D major symphony, No. 2, the soloist in the Stravinsky work was Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Orchestra Gets Ovation

The enthusiasm of the more than 6,500 listeners was a constantly mounting crescendo, until at the end of the Brahms Symphony there was a veritable ovation for conductor and orchestra. It was here, too, in the last movement of the Brahms Symphony, that the orchestra was at its peak, playing with a brilliance and a unity and a majestic lift that have earned it its high rank among modern orchestral bodies. As one young lady aptly put it, on her way out of the music shed: "Boy, they sure went to town."

The audience began to arrive early. It was in informal, holiday mood. Picknickers ate their lunches on the lawn. Groups of youngsters from near-by camps trooped in, wearing camp colors and marching in formation. Strollers admired the formal gardens which never looked greener or more meticulously groomed than they have this Summer. It was the kind of day that caused people to drive in from distances of 200 miles for one concert. The single-ticket sale for the afternoon's concert was brisk.

Play With Coats Off

The players began the concert with their coats off. Mr. Koussevitzky followed suit after the Mozart Symphony, with Mr. Sanroma also playing in his shirt sleeves. What was good enough for the musicians was good enough for many men in the audience. The assemblage under the music shed was a symphony of many colors. The young people sitting and reclining on the lawn on the fringes of the shed and the deep green of the grass added to the brightness of the picture.

The Mozart symphony was traversed with a due sense of the beauty and poetry of the work. Mr. Koussevitzky established his proportions and remained faithful to them. It may be argued that Mozart could be played within a more restricted framework. But Mr. Koussevitzky had justification enough for his point of view. After all, this was a large audience, partly out-of-doors, and Mozart is equal to demands of spaciousness.

The Stravinsky Cappriccio is one of the composer's lighter efforts, rhythmically varied, amusing and gayly colored. Mr. Sanroma played the difficult piano part as if it contained no problems whatever, and the orchestra companioned him in similar vein. If one does not look for apocalyptic utterance — how many compositions of Stravinsky are cast in the mighty mood?—one may find much that is diverting in the score.

The Brahms symphony began somewhat restrainedly. The brasses misbehaved for a moment, and the point is mentioned only because it happens so rarely with this ensemble. But Mr. Koussevitzky surcharged the work with fiery passion, and it grew in design and grandeur as it went along. It was a fitting ending to the week's music making.

Virtuosity Is Displayed

We must not leave the first week's concert without some further comment on the playing of last night's concert. Here was a program that had no such work that is utterly sure-fire with the public as Beethoven's Fifth or Brahms's First or Tchaikovsky's Sixth. The program contained Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," Roy Harris's Third symphony, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloë" Suite No. 2. Yet such was the virtuosity of the orchestra's playing that the performances were irresistible.

Indeed the program called for the utmost virtuosity. The Strauss score, in which there are fewer instrumental mechanics and more sheer inspiration than in some of the other tone-poems, was magnificently read. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello soloist, played superbly, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his men evoked the poetry, the tenderness, the mock-heroism that Strauss has poured into the work.

Mr. Harris's symphony is his best effort in the form; possibly his finest work in a large design. The ideas have merit in themselves and they are worked out with craftsmanship. The most impressive thing about the score is its abundant vitality; it is good to hear music which has something to say and which knows how to say it directly and personally.

Give the Tanglewood audience credit for open-mindedness and responsiveness, for Mr. Harris's symphony had no mere succès d'estime. The audience applauded as if it really liked the work and would not mind hearing it again. When Mr. Harris came forth for a stage bow, the plaudits were thunderous.

The Debussy work was played enamoringly, and the Ravel score was a stirring peroration for the evening. The "Daphnis et Chloë" Suite is one of Mr. Koussevitzky's finest interpretations. The performance last night was orchestral virtuosity at its completest and most eloquent.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1940

Music:

Second and Third Concerts At the Tanglewood Festival

By Carl E. Lindstrom

The second and third concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon provided a number of things for which Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are famous.

One of these was the Daphnis and Chloe second Suite of Ravel which produced a sensation two seasons ago at Tanglewood. It was Koussevitzky who first brought out Roy Harris' Third Symphony. As to the Stravinsky Capriccio, there are special bonds which tie this dashing work to the Bostonians. It was the 42nd time that Jesus Maria Sanroma, the orchestra's [redacted] pianist, has played it, which is probably more times than the composer himself has taken the solo.

Sanroma made a personal triumph Sunday afternoon. He is popular with his colleagues of the orchestra who greeted him, as the audience kept calling him back, much like gratulatory team-mates would hail an 80-yard run with the ball. This figure of speech from the sports field is used reluctantly because, in view of the need to remark Mr. Sanroma's agility, pace, timing and elasticity, it suggests an athletic performance. Certainly it was. But it was intensely musical also. He was fascinating to watch but the ear could not miss the splendid fusion of his pianism with the orchestral stream.

A recently published remark is so to the point that it is reprinted here with the author's permission:

"... Sanroma is the only pianist I know who consistently makes himself a part of the orchestra. He has brilliance, crispness and a world of dash but every tone he produces is orientated with the orchestral timbres and the general scheme of the composition."

There was nothing in yesterday's performance to change my mind about it.

* * *

The opening chords of the Mozart E flat Symphony instanced the tonal perfection of the Boston Orchestra. The purity, balance and sheen of these simple tone columns built a classical majesty for the whole symphonic structure. The andante was out of the inmost shrine, a hushed caroling of Mozartian tidings. The phrases were reverently shaped by an interpreter who is the master of many dialects in the universal language. Is it Koussevitzky's spell or Mozart's?

Overheard on the broad lawns during the intermission:

"... She stood up during the symphony."

"What's the matter? Couldn't she get to her seat?"

"No, it wasn't that. I mean she stood up during the whole symphony in honor of Mozart."

For a less worthy reason, your reviewer stood up during the Brahms symphony — the professional reason of merely trying the acoustics just outside the rim of the pavilion. (The listening there is excellent, by the way.) The reward proved to be the special pleasure of encompassing at once the music, the grandeur and aroma of the Hawthorne pines with glimpses of the sky in an aquarelle of August blue and cloud wisps. The D major seemed the ultimate benison upon mankind and nature. It is witless to fashion new definitions for art but one cannot be blamed for toying with the materials. The Berkshires must have been lovely ages before the region belonged only to the savages. Brahms symphonies were made for man. To drink the beauties of both at once is to be something of a glutton and risk incoherence.

* * *

In spite of the marked impression made by the Harris Symphony, the peak of the Saturday night concert was reached in Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite. Its gorgeous texture and the dionysiac pulse of the general dance lifted the audience to a fervor yet unmatched at this year's festival. Again and again Koussevitzky was recalled by thunderous applause rolling through the rafters and out into the night.

"I saw Nijinski do the ballet," murmured a New York critic in our ear.

"Yes?" we answered, still a bit mute from the impact of the music.

"Toscanini does a grand job of it," pursued this delegate from the Toscanini stronghold.

Yes, yes, of course.

"But the Daphnis and Chloe second Suite belongs to Koussevitzky."

And so it does — they're still applauding and in spite of the crush, thousands remain at their places to prolong the tribute to an artist who plays upon his listeners as he does upon the orchestra. You must go to Toscanini but Koussevitzky will come and get you. . . . To do with as he pleases.

* * *

Gregor Piatigorsky performed admirably as soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote." He has poetry, tone and a bardic vision.

But there was something wrong: The conception of "Don Quixote" as a 'cello concerto is not the proper perspective for this engrossing, canny and philosophical example of programmatic tone painting. It is an orchestral canvas from start to finish. There is here no intimation that Piatigorsky endeavored to make a concerto of it. The fact of his being there at all was supererogatory. It so happens that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has on its roster a first desk 'cellist who is second to none. This part belonged to Jean Bedetti and he should have had it, just as Jean Lefranc, the orchestra's first violist, took the solos assigned to his instrument. I cannot help but think that there would be resentment if the violin solos in "Scheherezade" or "Danse Macabre" were taken away from any orchestra's concert master and given to a special soloist. It would place either of these compositions in an artificial and distorted light. It was significant that Bedetti led the applause for Piatigorsky, which was generous of him. But there is a more important issue than personal relationships.

It is not to disparage Piatigorsky to say that there is no need of stars at Tanglewood.

* * *

The Harris symphony grows with every performance. The first impression is one of dourness, rough-hewn proportions, angularity and power. Its contours soften as we know it better, not that it compromises but rather it conveys a feeling of heavily-veiled human consciousness. It is stern but sincere; it is expressive but makes guarded reservations; the message is only partly uttered but the restraint is calculated. It will never be slapped on the back.

The design of this symphony is sure, economical and handled with a masterly technique. The only hint of derivation lies in the use of antique chordal progressions that may indicate a more or less conscious admiration for early church polyphony. The persistent use of canonic imitation in the brasses is a trifle academic but there are warm modulations toward the close. All in all it is a whole-hearted New England symphony. The composer, looking bewildered, pleased and grateful, was called up before a demonstrative audience.

A characteristic bit of Koussevitzky conducting opened the Saturday night program in Berlioz's "Overture to Benvenuto Cellini." It was a thing of vivid contrasts, burnished to a dazzling light in spots, presently to be attenuated in finely spun song.

Past ten is a trifle late for Debussy's Faun to be out, previous performances at Tanglewood having been properly assigned to the afternoon, but such is the idyll of the Berkshires that it can be called ". . . a land

In which it seemed always afternoon."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 5 - 1940

97

MUSIC

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Mozart and Brahms

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Completing the first series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate in a program including two symphonies—Mozart's E-flat (K. 543) and the second of Brahms. Jesus Maria Sanroma, the Boston Symphony's [redacted]-pianist, was the orchestra's collaborator in the much more recent composition which separated these two familiar and well loved works, and Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for orchestra with piano solo.

The fair weather which had accompanied Thursday's and Saturday's concerts continued to prevail this afternoon. It was warmer than on the two previous evenings, and the members of the orchestra doffed their coats, but from the viewpoint of the listeners the temperature gave not the slightest ground for criticism. All the 6,038 seats within the shed appeared to be occupied and many took advantage of the opportunity to listen in variously comfortable positions on the grass. According to a preliminary estimate, today's audience numbered over 6,500. Offcial figures for the three concerts were not yet available, but the total attendance was believed to mark a new record for a trio of Berkshire festival concerts.

* * *

Stravinsky's Capriccio has been heard both in Boston and New York, but it is not yet particularly familiar to American symphonic patrons. According to the Boston Symphony's eminent annotator, John N. Burk, Stravinsky composed it to provide a second vehicle, in addition to his piano concerto, for his solo appearances with European orchestras. There are three movements, the first and third relatively formal in structure if not in character, while the second can be described as a series of short interchanges between the piano and the orchestra.

The piano often has a dominant role, and its player must display notable grace and brilliance. From time to time, however, it is interwoven in the orchestral texture and for several pages in the finale provides a rhythmic base for orchestral comment. In his autobiography Stravinsky writes that while composing this work he found his thoughts dominated by "that prince of music, Carl Maria von Weber." Hints of Weber in atmosphere rather than style can be noticed from time to time. There are occasional recollections of a mid-nineteenth century Viennese atmosphere. Obviously the composer has not sought profundity, but grace, animation, polish and proportion. Despite some moments when the entertainment becomes slightly tenuous, the work as a whole, with its generally melodic idiom spiced at times with discreet dissonance, meets its objectives with marked success. Mr. Sanroma's fluent and skilful playing was appropriately in the vein of the music and the orchestra gave him well-proportioned and spirited collaboration. Much aplause followed for all the participants.

* * *

One memorable feature of Saturday night's program was its demonstration of great cello playing in Gregor Piatigorsky's interpretation as soloist in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote." His technique was of the consummate type which gives no indication of the difficulties with which it has to deal. His tone was rich and even throughout the unusually extensive compass which Strauss assigns to the instrument which gives voice to the character, thoughts and emotions of the protagonist of this treasurable tone poem. Along with the realization of the external merits of his playing, his hearers were equally conscious of its emotional conviction and persuasiveness. This was the work of a musician of exceptional artistry and sensitive and perceptive insight, who was completely acquainted with the expressive significance of his music as well as with its notes.

Similar comments could be made about the playing of the orchestra and the interpretation as a whole. In "Don Quixote" one no longer thinks primarily of matters such as wind machines or representations of the bleating of sheep, but of the value of the work as a remarkable musical depiction of human emotions, a persuasive blend of comedy and pathos. Of Strauss's musical sheep, the story is told that the conductor, Artur Rodzinski, attending an early rehearsal of this performance, was suddenly led to wonder, upon hearing these sounds, whether one of the goats in his Great Barrington farm had not strayed to Tanglewood.

Roy Harris's third symphony had its first festival hearing in Saturday's concert, and its composer, who has been lecturing at the Berkshire Music Center, was called to the platform to share the plaudits. This relatively short work, which New Yorkers have heard under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky and Arturo Toscanini, retains its interest in repeated hearings as an important contribution to today's American symphonic literature. An impression of breadth and consequence of musical thought is made by the long articulated theme which dominates the first part with waxing intensity. Some reminiscent moments can be noticed, as in the short figure which is passed from instrument to instrument in the brass choir, with its hint of a tune from "Petrouchka," but one is more conscious of the evidence of an individual style and structure.

* * *

It may be that the brass fanfares, despite their saliency, give an impression of iteration in the long run. This effect may have been due to acoustic conditions in the center of the forward seats. No detail of the score was lost, but the remarkable resonance of the orchestra shell sometimes projected prominent brass passages and proclamative climaxes with almost undue brilliance and prominence. This could also be noticed in the high-spirited close of Ravel's Second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite, which has always been one of this orchestra's most effective offerings. The ensuing demonstration was of unusual length and vigor.

This demonstration was matched by that which followed the triumphantly proclaimed close of a notable performance of the Brahms D major symphony this afternoon. Encomiums were also merited by the imposing interpretation of Berlioz's orotund "Benvenuto Cellini" overture and the playing of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" in Saturday's program and of the Mozart symphony which opened today's list. This called particular attention to the admirable tone quality of the various orchestral choirs and the laudable blending and tonal proportion which marked the playing as a whole.

The second series of the festival will be held next Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, with programs devoted to Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

Igor Stravinsky

Whose Capriccio for piano and orchestra was performed yesterday at the Berkshire Festival

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1940

STRAVINSKY WORK HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Sanroma Soloist With Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky at Fete in Berkshires

WEATHER FAVC

Week-End Ideal fc
Concerts — Bra
Mozart on Pro

By HOWARD TAU
Special to THE NEW YORK

LENOX, Mass, Aug. 4 week of the seventh ann shire Symphonic Festival
Tanglewood here this aft an optimistic mood. The with warm sunshine a breezes, concluded a long v of exemplary behavior. T ence this afternoon was on largest in the festival's hist the performances by the Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky were as clean-c as lofty as the surrounding hi

This afternoon's concert had vinsky's Capriccio for orche with piano solo, as the conte rary contribution. It was fla by two masterpieces of symph literature — Mozart's symphony
E flat No. 39, and Brahms's major symphony, No. 2, the solo in the Stravinsky work was Jes Maria Sanroma.

Orchestra Gets Ovation

The enthusiasm of the more tha
6,500 listeners was a constantl mounting crescendo, until at th end of the Brahms Symphony there was a veritable ovation for conductor and orchestra. It was here, too, in the last movement of the Brahms Symphony, that the orchestra was at its peak, playing with a brilliance and a unity and a majestic lift that have earned it its high rank among modern orchestral bodies. As one young lady aptly put it, on her way out of the music shed: "Boy, they sure went to town."

The audience began to arrive early. It was in informal, holiday mood. Picknickers ate their lunches on the lawn. Groups of youngsters from near-by camps trooped in, wearing camp colors and marching in formation. Strollers admired the formal gardens which never looked greener or more meticulously groomed than they have this Summer. It was the kind of day that caused people to drive in from distances of 200 miles for one concert. The single-ticket sale for the afternoon's concert was brisk.

Play With Coats Off

The players began the concert with their coats off. Mr. Koussevitzky followed suit after the Mozart Symphony, with Mr. Sanroma also playing in his shirt sleeves. What was good enough for the musicians was good enough for many men in the audience. The assemblage under the music shed was a symphony of many colors. The young people sitting and reclining on the lawn on the fringes of the shed and the deep green of the grass added to the brightness of the picture.

The Mozart symphony was traversed with a due sense of the beauty and poetry of the work. Mr. Koussevitzky established his proportions and remained faithful to them. It may be argued that Mozart could be played within a more restricted framework. But Mr. Koussevitzky had justification enough for his point of view. After all, this was a large audience, partly out-of-doors, and Mozart is equal to demands of spaciousness.

The Stravinsky Cappriccio is one of the composer's lighter efforts, rhythmically varied, amusing and gayly colored. Mr. Sanroma played the difficult piano part as if it contained no problems whatever, and the orchestra companioned him in similar vein. If one does not look for apocalyptic utterance — how many compositions of Stravinsky are cast in the mighty mood?—one may find much that is diverting in the score.

The Brahms symphony began somewhat restrainedly. The brasses misbehaved for a moment, and the point is mentioned only because it happens so rarely with this ensemble. But Mr. Koussevitzky surcharged the work with fiery passion, and it grew in design and grandeur as it went along. It was a fitting ending to the week's music making.

Virtuosity Is Displayed

We must not leave the first week's concert without some further comment on the playing of last night's concert. Here was a program that had no such work that is utterly sure-fire with the public as Beethoven's Fifth or Brahms's First or Tchaikovsky's Sixth. The program contained Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," Roy Harris's Third symphony, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloë" Suite No. 2. Yet such was the virtuosity of the orchestra's playing that the performances were irresistible.

Indeed the program called for the utmost virtuosity. The Strauss score, in which there are fewer instrumental mechanics and more sheer inspiration than in some of the other tone-poems, was magnificently read. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello soloist, played superbly, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his men evoked the poetry, the tenderness, the mock-heroism that Strauss has poured into the work.

Mr. Harris's symphony is his best effort in the form; possibly his finest work in a large design. The ideas have merit in themselves and they are worked out with craftsmanship. The most impressive thing about the score is its abundant vitality; it is good to hear music which has something to say and which knows how to say it directly and personally.

Give the Tanglewood audience credit for open-mindedness and responsiveness, for Mr. Harris's symphony had no mere succès d'estime. The audience applauded as if it really liked the work and would not mind hearing it again. When Mr. Harris came forth for a stage bow, the plaudits were thunderous.

The Debussy work was played enamoringly, and the Ravel score was a stirring peroration for the evening. The "Daphnis et Chloë" Suite is one of Mr. Koussevitzky's finest interpretations. The performance last night was orchestral virtuosity at its completest and most eloquent.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1940

Music:

Second and Third Concerts At the Tanglewood Festival

By Carl E. Lin

rd concerts of the estival on Saturday ernoon provided a ich Serge Koussemphony Orchestra

aphnis and Chloe ensation two seavitzky who first s to the Stravin-in yester-ge my

Moz-ed the n Or-and col-y for ture.
ing of ases inof rsal ky's wns

he n't

F
Silver
Fox
Rump

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 5 - 1940

First Tanglewood Series Closes

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—The first series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, closed yesterday at Tanglewood before an audience of nearly 7,000 from all parts of America and from 30 foreign countries. The second series begins Thursday at 8:30 o'clock.

58

Tanglewood Tale

Boston Transcript

In Europe where for so many years the summer music festival flourished, the classic beauty of Mozart, the profundities of Bach and Beethoven have been replaced by the sounds of marching feet, of thundering cannon and detonating bombs.

Today many an American who formerly made musical pilgrimage this time of year to Salzburg or Vienna or Munich now is turning to "Tanglewood" in the rolling Berkshires where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is taking place under the inspiring direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

A great tradition is being kept alive. Not only that, at the music school established this year at "Tanglewood" young men and women are being taught the immortal language of the masters by distinguished teachers.

Dr. Koussevitzky, whose imagination, enthusiasm and genius are largely responsible for the festival and the school, foresees a far longer season in the near future at "Tanglewood." He prophesies the presentation there of operas, chamber music concerts and recitals—all by artists trained at this very place.

Meanwhile, men of good will in Europe and America look gratefully toward "Tanglewood," deeply heartened by the knowledge that in a world gone mad there is a section where a great art is greatly nurtured.

Aug 5, 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 5 - 1940

SANROMA PLAYS STRAVINSKY WORK

First Week of Festival Concluded.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—One of the distinctions which make Serge Koussevitzky unique among symphonic conductors of his era was neatly exemplified by the concerts which yesterday concluded the first week end of this year's Berkshire Festival. It would be unfair to say that he is the only conductor to play contemporary music persistently, but he is certainly alone in his determination to re-play it. The recurrence of Roy Harris's third symphony and the "Capriccio" of Stravinsky, which were outstanding experiences of the orchestra's season in New York last winter, emphasized not only his partiality to new music, but also how wisely he selects his novelties.

To speak of the Stravinsky work, which is a decade old, as a "novelty" is to employ a shading of that term, rather than its primary meaning. In truth, the novelty of it is the realization, as it amasses repetitions, that it is a work more durable and individual than most of those the composer has written during the years of his celebrity. Perhaps this is because it has little more than diversion as its intent, and it achieves that end with finesse, interest and originality. The brightness and point of Jesus Maria Sanroma's piano playing undoubtedly enhanced its effect, but the vast skill of its workmanship, the fertility of its patterns are no workaday matters. Even in the vast space of the Music Shed, the pinpoint sharpness of Mr. Sanroma's performance, its dash and humor were completely exhilarating.

Score by Harris.

It is asking much of a listener to expect him to recall another contemporary work on a program which includes Strauss's "Don Quixote" and ends with the aural blaze of Ravel's second suite of "Daphnis et Chloe" excerpts, but Mr. Koussevitzky's confidence in the ability of the Harris third symphony to withstand that test was not misplaced. One can still "place" its texture and sound in the mind's ear, but the total effect of the score remains elusive. It is by much the best planned and most consistently realized of the composer's major works, but this does not invalidate the comment that much of it is monotonous, unconvincing and weighted with a portentousness which is not justified by the composer's emotional capacity. The performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra certainly entitled them to the thanks which Mr. Harris gestured as he bowed to the applause of the audience.

No doubt for most of the thousands who crowded the cool, green grounds of Tanglewood over the week end (the total count was close to thirteen thousand) there was greater satisfaction in the standard repertory works which balanced the week-end programs. The "Don Quixote" on Saturday night with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist was as stunning a summation of the music in that magnificent score as one could hear, its detail embroidered with a tenderness of feeling that made the knightly fool almost visible. Yesterday afternoon the powers of the orchestra were also devoted to a stylish performance of Mozart's E flat symphony and a hearty one of the Brahms second.

Tanglewood Triumph

Boston Transcript
Aug 5, 1940

Brilliant Audience, 6500 Strong, Attends First Week-End of Berkshire Festival

By EDWARD DOWNES

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—In a crescendo of orchestral virtuosity, of social glitter and serene summer sunshine, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony brought to a close the first concert series of the Berkshire Festival yesterday afternoon in the famous Music Shed of Tanglewood. Some 6500 music-lovers, including the United States Ambassador to France, William B. Bullitt, made up the audience of what seems today, without question, the most significant music festival in the world. They heard Boston's orchestra in shirtsleeves, go through music of three centuries: Mozart's great E flat major Symphony, K-543; Igor Stravinsky's effervescent Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo, and the Brahms Second Symphony.

The orchestra was in good fettle. Koussevitzky, afire with enthusiasm for his orchestra, his music, and his festival, had a vociferously appreciative audience. The piano soloist of the day, Jesus Maria Sanroma, played with his usual fleet-fingered mastery and acute appreciation of modern musical idiom.

Conductor and soloist combined in an ensemble so full of zest, so sensitively co-ordinated that the shallowness of the Stravinsky Capriccio itself was made unfortunately evident. As a performance, this was superior to the one given last winter by the Boston Symphony and Mr. Sanroma with Stravinsky himself conducting.

Alas, it served but to strengthen previous impressions of the music's weakness.

Mozart's E Flat

There could be differences of opinion as to Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the Mozart E flat Symphony. But such was the power and individuality of his conception, that it is difficult to carp. To the writer, the first movement had a ruggedness and breadth which suggested Beethoven almost as much as Mozart. There is a seraphic naivete which can shine more clearly in pages of the Andante and Trio of the Menuetto.

Lastly it is questionable whether any orchestra of Mozart's day could have played the Finale with the dazzling speed of yesterday. Yet in spite of all reservations, and when all is said and done, it was a performance of transcending sensitivity, of inward glow and enthusiasm, of tonal glamour and, given the fundamental approach, of real logic and cohesion.

The interpretation of the Brahms Second Symphony was one of Koussevitzky's most magnificent achievements. Seldom has he seemed more eloquent. Seldom so moving and moved.

Here was a rare combination of subtley of nuance, profundity of thought, with sweeping drama, cyclonic clash of forces. The tremenoous climix of the final allegro brought the audience to its feet with a roar of enthusiasm. There was cheering, waving of handkerchiefs and unending ovations for both conductor and orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky was, and he had every reason to be, happy over the outcome of this first lap of the three weeks' festival.

Saturday morning there was a rehearsal of the orchestra to which members of the Festival, that is, subscribers to the whole series, who had taken their tickets before last December, were invited. Several bus loads of music appreciation students from surrounding schools were also guests of the Festival for this occasion. In the intermission of the rehearsal Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, commented informally on Strauss's "Don Quixote" and other works which the orchestra was preparing.

Saturday Concert

Saturday evening, Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony in the Overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," the Strauss "Don Quixote," Roy Harris't Third Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe."

Gregor Piatigorsky and Jean Lefranc took the 'cello and viola solos respectively in "Don Quixote." Koussevitzky quite appropriately emphasized the intimate chamber music character of this most programmatic of the Strauss tone-poems. Piatigorsky interpreted the solo music of the Don freely: with delicacy of perception, with sensitive sonorities, yet with a masculine firmness of tone and line. Koussevitzky revealed unsuspected profoundities and new flights of nobility. Only an occasional dragging of tempi, as in the death of Don Quixote, made sentiment incline to sentimentality.

Koussevitzky's continued advocacy of the Roy Harris Third Symphony justifies itself afresh with every performance. The score may have its derivative moments, but it also has original thought and emotion, which it projects with force and concision.

The brilliance of Dr. Koussevitzky's "Daphnis et Chloe" is a thrice told tale which needs no retelling here. It was another demonstration, if one were needed, of the virtuosity of our orchestra and the superlative standards of its festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 4 - 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on Aug. 8, will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of Aug. 17. The festival will end on Aug. 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 5 - 1940

Music

BOSTON SYMPHONY WINS ACCLAIM IN BERKSHIRE FEST

The Berkshire Music Festival covered the first lap of its three-week run before a gallery of spectators which cheered Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on three separate occasions last night at Stockbridge, Mass. There was good reason, in addition to the fact that the out-of-doors encourages a more vigorous demonstration than the stuffy concert hall, for the programs of the weekend were superb, the acoustics of the Shed are somethings for which heaven deserves the credit, and the playing can only be described in superlatives.

Dr. Koussevitsky has always been uncompromising in his selection of works, but audiences are now accustomed to his excellent judgment and accept, for the most part, the fact that there is a rabbit in every hat. For his Saturday program, he chose to dwell with the wild men of days gone by. Berlioz, Strauss, Roy Harris, Debussy, Ravel—what a list of composers who have defied convention! And, with the exception of Belioz, all have come through the mill in our own day, winning approval through a mighty struggle with convention on the basis of sound merits underlying novel modes of expression and due—everyone of them—to last so long as music is heard.

Strauss' "Don Quixote" is a windy and discursive affair while Berlioz' "Overture to Benvenuto Cellini" contributes its share of trumpery, but models of clarity and conciseness are the three works of the later period. Mr. Harris' Third Symphony is only a year old, but its frequent performance has only served to deepen the impression first made that the young composer has attained a superb maturity, that it is by far his best work to date, and that it is worthy of comparison with the best of his generation. The "Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Daphnis and Chloe" have long since established themselves as favorite examples of French culture at its finest.

Over 6,000 Attend

The conjunction of the clear and crisp idioms of Mozart and of Stravinsky was a most happy one for the first half of the Sunday program, and the change to Brahms vernal Second Symphony to conclude made an appropriate close. More than 6,000 persons found the concert a joy, and welcomed the Stravinsky Capriccio for piano and orchestra with prolonged applause. This is a light-weight work which Jesus Maria Sanroma turns off with digital flexibility almost deceiving, for the piece is a trick one in many respects, though written to show off a good deal of the composer's own skill since he wrote for himself.

This is a symphonic festival in the literal sense, for five symphonies were performed in the opening three concerts. Mozart's was the charmingly mannered E flat with its slow and stately introduction and the favorite minuet which all know in some form or other. In all works the orchestra was at its best, which is very good indeed, to put it mildly, and the acoustics of the Shed were again a source of wonder and delight since every last nuance could be clearly heard beyond the immediate confines of the auditorium. Surely here is the world's greatest summer festival at our doorstep, eloquent testimony to the glories of a new-created world.

H. EARLE JOHNSON

78

Tanglewood Tale

Boston Transcript

In Europe where for so many years the summer music festival flourished, the classic beauty of Mozart, the profundities of Bach and Beethoven have been replaced by the sounds of marching feet, of thundering cannon and detonating bombs.

Today many an American who formerly made musical pilgrimage this time of year to Salzburg or Vienna or Munich now is turning to "Tanglewood" in the rolling Berkshires where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is taking place under the inspiring direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

A great tradition is being kept alive. Not only that, at the music school established this year at "Tanglewood" young men and women are being taught the immortal language of the masters by distinguished teachers.

Dr. Koussevitzky, whose imagination, enthusiasm and genius are largely responsible for the festival and the school, foresees a far longer season in the near future at "Tanglewood." He prophesies the presentation there of operas, chamber music concerts and recitals—all by artists trained at this very place.

Meanwhile, men of good will in Europe and America look gratefully toward "Tanglewood," deeply heartened by the knowledge that in a world gone mad there is a section where a great art is greatly nurtured.

Aug 5, 1940

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 5 - 1940

SANROMA PLAYS STRAVINSKY WORK

First Week of Festival Concluded.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—One of the distinctions which make Serge Koussevitzky unique among symphonic conductors of his era was neatly exemplified by the concerts which yesterday concluded the first week end of this year's Berkshire Festival. It would be unfair to say that he is the only conductor to play contemporary music persistently, but he is certainly alone in his determination to re-play it. The recurrence of Roy Harris's third symphony and the "Capriccio" of Stravinsky, which were outstanding experiences of the orchestra's season in New York last winter, emphasized not only his partiality to new music, but also how wisely he selects his novelties.

To speak of the Stravinsky work, which is a decade old, as a "novelty" is to employ a shading of that term, rather than its primary meaning. In truth, the novelty of it is the realization, as it amasses repetitions, that it is a work more durable and individual than most of those the composer has written during the years of his celebrity. Perhaps this is because it has little more than diversion as its intent, and it achieves that end with finesse, interest and originality. The brightness and point of Jesus Maria Sanroma's piano playing undoubtedly enhanced its effect, but the vast skill of its workmanship, the fertility of its patterns are no workaday matters. Even in the vast space of the Music Shed, the pinpoint sharpness of Mr. Sanroma's performance, its dash and humor were completely exhilarating.

Score by Harris.

It is asking much of a listener to expect him to recall another contemporary work on a program which includes Strauss's "Don Quixote" and ends with the aural blaze of Ravel's second suite of "Daphnis et Chloe" excerpts, but Mr. Koussevitzky's confidence in the ability of the Harris third symphony to withstand that test was not misplaced. One can still "place" its texture and sound in the mind's ear, but the total effect of the score remains elusive. It is by much the best planned and most consistently realized of the composer's major works, but this does not invalidate the comment that much of it is monotonous, unconvincing and weighted with a portentousness which is not justified by the composer's emotional capacity. The performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra certainly entitled them to the thanks which Mr. Harris gestured as he bowed to the applause of the audience.

No doubt for most of the thousands who crowded the cool, green grounds of Tanglewood over the week end (the total count was close to thirteen thousand) there was greater satisfaction in the standard repertory works which balanced the week-end programs. The "Don Quixote" on Saturday night with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist was as stunning a summation of the music in that magnificent score as one could hear, its detail embroidered with a tenderness of feeling that made the knightly fool almost visible. Yesterday afternoon the powers of the orchestra were also devoted to a stylish performance of Mozart's E flat symphony and a hearty one of the Brahms second.

Tanglewood Triumph

Boston Transcript
Aug 5, 1940

Brilliant Audience, 6500 Strong, Attends First Week-End of Berkshire Festival

By EDWARD DOWNES

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—In a crescendo of orchestral virtuosity, of social glitter and serene summer sunshine, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony brought to a close the first concert series of the Berkshire Festival yesterday afternoon in the famous Music Shed of Tanglewood. Some 6500 music-lovers, including the United States Ambassador to France, William B. Bullitt, made up the audience of what seems today, without question, the most significant music festival in the world. They heard Boston's orchestra in shirtsleeves, go through music of three centuries: Mozart's great E flat major Symphony, K-543; Igor Stravinsky's effervescent Capriccio for Orchestra with Piano Solo, and the Brahms Second Symphony.

The orchestra was in good fettle. Koussevitzky, afire with enthusiasm for his orchestra, his music, and his festival, had a vociferously appreciative audience. The piano soloist of the day, Jesus Maria Sanroma, played with his usual fleet-fingered mastery and acute appreciation of modern musical idiom.

Conductor and soloist combined in an ensemble so full of zest, so sensitively co-ordinated that the shallowness of the Stravinsky Capriccio itself was made unfortunately evident. As a performance, this was superior to the one given last winter by the Boston Symphony and Mr. Sanroma with Stravinsky himself conducting.

Alas, it served but to strengthen previous impressions of the music's weakness.

Mozart's E Flat

There could be differences of opinion as to Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the Mozart E flat Symphony. But such was the power and individuality of his conception, that it is difficult to carp. To the writer, the first movement had a ruggedness and breadth which suggested Beethoven almost as much as Mozart. There is a seraphic naivete which can shine more clearly in pages of the Andante and Trio of the Menuetto.

Lastly it is questionable whether any orchestra of Mozart's day could have played the Finale with the dazzling speed of yesterday. Yet in spite of all reservations, and when all is said and done, it was a performance of transcending sensitivity, of inward glow and enthusiasm, of tonal glamour and, given the fundamental approach, of real logic and cohesion.

The interpretation of the Brahms Second Symphony was one of Koussevitzky's most magnificent achievements. Seldom has he seemed more eloquent. Seldom so moving and moved. Here was a rare combination of subtley of nuance, profundity of thought, with sweeping drama, cyclonic clash of forces. The tremendous climix of the final allegro brought the audience to its feet with a roar of enthusiasm. There was cheering, waving of handkerchiefs and unending ovations for both conductor and orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky was, and he had every reason to be, happy over the outcome of this first lap of the three weeks' festival.

Saturday morning there was a rehearsal of the orchestra to which members of the Festival, that is, subscribers to the whole series, who had taken their tickets before last December, were invited. Several bus loads of music appreciation students from surrounding schools were also guests of the Festival for this occasion. In the intermission of the rehearsal Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, commented informally on Strauss's "Don Quixote" and other works which the orchestra was preparing.

Saturday Concert

Saturday evening, Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony in the Overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," the Strauss "Don Quixote," Roy Harris't Third Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe."

Gregor Piatigorsky and Jean Lefranc took the 'cello and viola solos respectively in "Don Quixote." Koussevitzky quite appropriately emphasized the intimate chamber music character of this most programmatic of the Strauss tone-poems. Piatigorsky interpreted the solo music of the Don freely: with delicacy of perception, with sensitive sonorities, yet with a masculine firmness of tone and line. Koussevitzky revealed unsuspected profoundities and new flights of nobility. Only an occasional dragging of tempi, as in the death of Don Quixote, made sentiment incline to sentimentality.

Koussevitzky's continued advocacy of the Roy Harris Third Symphony justifies itself afresh with every performance. The score may have its derivative moments, but it also has original thought and emotion, which it projects with force and concision.

The brilliance of Dr. Koussevitzky's "Daphnis et Chloe" is a thrice told tale which needs no retelling here. It was another demonstration, if one were needed, of the virtuosity of our orchestra and the superlative standards of its festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 4 - 1940

The seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky is in progress at the Tanglewood Estate near Stockbridge, Mass., with thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country attending.

The sessions opened with Beethoven's first symphony. The second series, opening on Aug. 8. will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, and will feature works by Tchaikovsky and Beethoven.

The final series of concerts will open on Aug. 15, with the Bach B Minor Mass, in which a chorus of 200 students from the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center will be heard.

Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano, will be heard in the concert of Aug. 17. The festival will end on Aug. 18 with the Brahms first symphony as the closing number.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 5 - 1940

Music

BOSTON SYMPHONY WINS ACCLAIM IN BERKSHIRE FEST

The Berkshire Music Festival covered the first lap of its three-week run before a gallery of spectators which cheered Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on three separate occasions last night at Stockbridge, Mass. There was good reason, in addition to the fact that the out-of-doors encourages a more vigorous demonstration than the stuffy concert hall, for the programs of the weekend were superb, the acoustics of the Shed are somethings for which heaven deserves the credit, and the playing can only be described in superlatives.

Dr. Koussevitsky has always been uncompromising in his selection of works, but audiences are now accustomed to his excellent judgment and accept, for the most part, the fact that there is a rabbit in every hat. For his Saturday program, he chose to dwell with the wild men of days gone by. Berlioz, Strauss, Roy Harris, Debussy, Ravel—what a list of composers who have defied convention! And, with the exception of Belioz, all have come through the mill in our own day, winning approval through a mighty struggle with convention on the basis of sound merits underlying novel modes of expression and due—everyone of them—to last so long as music is heard.

Strauss' "Don Quixote" is a windy and discursive affair while Berlioz' "Overture to Benvenuto Cellini" contributes its share of trumpery, but models of clarity and conciseness are the three works of the later period. Mr. Harris' Third Symphony is only a year old, but its frequent performance has only served to deepen the impression first made that the young composer has attained a superb maturity, that it is by far his best work to date, and that it is worthy of comparison with the best of his generation. The "Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Daphnis and Chloe" have long since established themselves as favorite examples of French culture at its finest.

Over 6,000 Attend

The conjunction of the clear and crisp idioms of Mozart and of Stravinsky was a most happy one for the first half of the Sunday program, and the change to Brahms vernal Second Symphony to conclude made an appropriate close. More than 6,000 persons found the concert a joy, and welcomed the Stravinsky Capriccio for piano and orchestra with prolonged applause. This is a light-weight work which Jesus Maria Sanroma turns off with digital flexibility almost deceiving, for the piece is a trick one in many respects, though written to show off a good deal of the composer's own skill since he wrote for himself.

This is a symphonic festival in the literal sense, for five symphonies were performed in the opening three concerts. Mozart's was the charmingly mannered E flat with its slow and stately introduction and the favorite minuet which all know in some form or other. In all works the orchestra was at its best, which is very good indeed, to put it mildly, and the acoustics of the Shed were again a source of wonder and delight since every last nuance could be clearly heard beyond the immediate confines of the auditorium. Surely here is the world's greatest summer festival at our doorstep, eloquent testimony to the glories of a new-created world.

H. EARLE JOHNSON

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1940

99

7,000 From All Parts Of U. S., 30 Foreign Nations At Concert

◆

Crowd Overflows Berkshire Festival Music Shed As Boston Symphony Orchestra Ends First Series

◆

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4—The first series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, closed this afternoon at Tanglewood before an audience of nearly 7,000 from all parts of America and from 30 foreign countries. The second series begins Thursday at 8:30 o'clock.

A guest of honor at today's concert was William Bullitt, ambassador to France.

Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music, has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave one of its finest concerts. The crowd, which overflowed the giant music shed, pouring itself over the grass at the rear and sides of the building, listened to Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, play a fine solo part with the orchestra in Stravinskys "Capriccio for orchestra and piano."

Festival Atmosphere Prevails

The festival atmosphere which always prevails at Sunday afternoon concerts on this beautiful estate was much in evidence, for the weather was ideal and much of the music harmonized with the day. The playing of Mozart's "Symphony in E-Flat" with which the concert opened was glorious, gracious, and graceful. The orchestra was superb, however, in its rendition of Brahms' "Symphony No. 2 in D major." In this number the orchestra approached the almost perfect performances it gave Saturday night when it played Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and Ravel's "Orchestral Excerpts from Daphnis and Chloe" with such exquisite beauty as even this orchestra has seldom managed to put into its playing.

Saturday the orchestra was assisted by Gregor Piatigorsky who gave a beautiful performance in Strauss' "Don Quixote". His playing of the violoncello solo was smooth, easy, ad deeply moving. Jean LeFranc, head of the viola section of the orchestra, assisted Mr. Piatigorsky. Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" was also on the same program and at its conclusion the composer was called to the platform for several bows.

Excels In Debussy And Ravel Numbers

But it was in the Debussy and Ravel numbers that the Boston Symphony orchestra played perhaps its best so far this festival. In these two numbers every man played superbly and the whole orchestra functioned as if inspired. The performance was worth coming a long way to hear. It was much better than any of the same numbers given elsewhere. The flutes and the harps were particularly noteworthy.

Of today's playing of Brahms only superlatives can be used. The audience knew it and refused to leave the shed after the concert. Dr. Koussevitzky was called back again and again. Of the Stravinsky number the comments were more varied. Most people were agreed that the playing of this was excellent but there were many differences of opinion about the music itself.

So far these three concerts of the festival season have been heard by about 19,000 persons.

Second Series Starts Thursday.

The second series, which begins Thursday evening and continues on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, will be dedicated to the observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tschiakowsky. During this series the programs will be divided between the music of Tschaikowsky and Beethoven. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be heard as soloist with the orchestra in Beethoven's "Concerto for Violin in D" on Thursday. Other programs of the series will include Beethoven's "Sixth Symphony" and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique."

Plans for the gala program for Allied Relief to be given at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 16, at 6 p. m. are going forward with more famous names being added to the list of participants almost hourly. Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York has volunteered to participate as has Dorothy Thompson. Archibald MacLeish, poet, librarian of the Library of Congress, is expected to preside as master-of-ceremonies. Included on the program will be several singers of the Metropolitan Opera, the Boston Symphony orchestra, the chorus of the music school, and leading statesmen of New England. The proceeds will go to the Allied Relief fund and many thousands of dollars are looked for.

Among the local chairmen in charge of tickets in Western Connecticut towns are the following: Mrs. Guy E. Carleton, Sharon; Mrs. William Mather Lewis, Colebrook; Mrs. Bertrand Peck, Torrington, Winsted, Norfolk; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury and Lakeville.

—SAMUEL MEYERS.

Mme. Koussevitzky Too Ill to Attend

By John Selby
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of thousands of persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Mme. Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Mme. Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Koussevitzky estate near by. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year dream—the Berkshire Music Center, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Mme. Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire Festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1940

More Tanglewood Student Tickets Are Available

Although already he has distributed 300 student tickets for the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on the mornings of Aug. 10 and 17, F. Carl Gorman, music supervisor, said today he has received several more tickets for distribution.

Any student desiring to attend should report to Mr. Gorman at the High School music room tomorrow between 10.30 and 1. The orchestra will start at 9.30 Saturday instead of the usual hour, 10. Because of the change Mr. Gorman requests all persons planning to take students to the Festival grounds be at the front of the High Schol building not later than 8.45 AM.

He added that many who promised to drive last Saturday failed to make an appearance with their automobiles, thus leaving him in a serious predicament. He said today "we are depending on these people who have given us promises, to drive their cars."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 5 - 1940

SANROMA GIVEN GREAT OVATION AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky and Players Draw Record Crowd of 7200

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Auf. 4 — Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, won for himself a veritable ovation this afternoon after his electrifying performance of Stravinsky's "Capriccio." This final concert of the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood drew the record-breaking audience of 7200 persons, the largest in its history.

Barbaric But Effective

The Stravinsky work was written by the composer so that he might have at hand a work other than his piano concerto when he went on tour. It is true Stravinsky, a bit barbaric, a bit unpleasant but diabolically clever and effective. It is just the sort of music in which Sanroma is at his best. He introduced the work in this country and has played it innumerable times under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program opened with the Mozart "Symphony in E flat, No. 39" (543). Never has the consummate virtuosity of the Boston players been so apparent as in their entrancing performance of this charming symphony. The sparkle of the strings, the finely formed contours and the depth of feeling and ardor of the reading combined to provide a memorable experience. One never ceases to wonder at the alertness of the players and their instant response to every demand.

The concert closed with a flawless performance of the second symphony of Brahms. In choosing this work, Dr. Koussevitzky again displayed his uncanny gifts as program arranger. It fitted in perfectly, for this is the most human and best understood of the Brahms symphonies, simplicity itself after the mighty first. The ear was ravished by beautiful tones in the second movement and the crisp delivery of the adagietto was completely in the mood. The finale was a brilliant exposition which won prolonged plaudits from the audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky returned to the platform many times, always insisting his men share in the applause.

The concert Saturday night introduced the first of the guest artists, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. With violinist Jean Lefranc, he was heard in the "Don Quixote" fantastic variations, a work which only the finest orchestra and soloists could perform as it was heard here in the music shed. Roy Harris' "Symphony No. 3" is the only American work yet provided on the programs and Mr. Harris, who was present, must have been delighted with the performance, for Dr. Koussevitzky has evidently made a profound study of this difficult, yet intriguing score. It falls not too gratefully upon the ear, but its idiom is fresh and original.

It was in the last two works that the full glory of the Boston Symphony players was manifest, for in such compositions as Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel "Daphne and Chloe" suite, they are incomparable. In perfection of playing and in the evocation of myriad colors, they have no peer.

The program opened with a brilliant performance of the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture by Berlioz.

The second series of concerts opens Thursday night. Albert Spalding, American violinist, will be heard in Beethoven's violin concerto and the program will open with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. The Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky will conclude the program and it should be one of the finest of the entire series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 5 - 1940

Boston Symphony Wins Praise in First Series

—By C. R. ROSEBERRY

With weather smiling and crowds milling, the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday doffed its coats and finished off in the grand style the first of the three series of concerts into which the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is grouped this year.

There were no reservations in the audience's unanimous acceptance of the soul-satisfying Mozart and Brahms symphonies on the Sunday afternoon program, and even the most reactionary connoisseur had to admit the amusing qualities of the Stravinsky Capriccio sandwiched between them and the extreme grace and skill with which the piano soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, negotiated it.

The weekend concerts were as well attended as the opening one on Thursday night, with the gate balancing in the neighborhood of 6,000 paid admissions. To a considerable extent, however, these were mere preliminaries to the Tschaikowsky Centenary music on this week's programs. The fourth, fifth and sixth Tschaikowsky symphonies will be played on successive nights, interspersed with Beethoven and nothing else. For instance, the program this Thursday night contains the Tschaikowsky Fourth, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and also his Concerto for Violin in D, for which Albert Spalding is soloist.

Musical Grandeur

Maestro Serge Koussevitzky, casting aside his own coat to join the orchestra members in the informal comfort of shirtsleeves, brought yesterday's program to the heights of musical grandeur in his sweeping, uninhibited rendition of the Brahms Second. For many minutes after the last thunderous chords had echoed across the Tanglewood Estate, the audience under the music shed flung them back in its applause and shouted approval. That his was a more genuine manifestation of popular acclaim than that which had greeted the modernistic display of the night before, there could be little question.

While the 110-piece Boston Orchestra has instrumental resources (not to say technical skill) beyond the wildest dreams of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, it played his Symphony in E flat No. 39) with all the clarity and lightness that might have been accorded it by a chamber music group. The Stravinsky Capriccio that ensued (it scarcely merits the term "concerto," although it is written in the conventional three movements) was an agreeable surprise to those of the audience who were prepared for almost any excesses of dissonance. This Capriccio has not been much performed as yet, and so has to prove itself with a general audience. It was found to be not in the least unpleasant at first hearing, actually melodic in most of its themes, and as rhythmic as Gershwin. Mr. Sanroma, the official pianist of the orchestra, performed his part with the utmost of sensitivity.

Other Contemporary Music

Not all contemporary music is so congenial, as was evidenced Saturday night when Dr. Koussevitzky devoted an entire program to the moderns (with the exception of Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"). He took this occasion to give additional impetus to the Symphony No. 3 of Roy Harris, the youthful composer being present to take the bows. Koussevitzky seems to be greatly impressed with this new American symphony, having given it first performance in Boston. Doubtless, however, the work will find slow acceptance with the musical multitudes, for its thematic material is sparse, and Mr. Harris appears primarily interested in experimenting with mere orchestration.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the cello virtuoso, was the principal solist Saturday night in a rendition of the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan." Since most of the passages for both him and the violist, Jean Lefranc, were integrally bound up with the orchestral score, they are not to be judged strickly as solo work. Nevertheless, there was great tonal richness and expression in Mr. Piatigorsky's stringed portrayal of the addled knight who jousted with windmills. The imaginativeness of the Strauss work, however, becomes somewhat attenuated by the protracted length of its many variations.

Debussy ("Afternoon of a Faun") and Ravel ("Daphnis and Chloe") seemed almost old-fashioned by contrast with their forerunners on the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 6 - 1940

* * *

Saturday night was probably the first time that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has played while a considerable group of its younger listening audience was indulging in a modern version of New England bundling.

The week before Western Massachusetts was sweltering, but Saturday night some of the symphony festival socialites undoubtedly had more gooseflesh than the floodlights could reveal. Some of the more prudent dressers brought gaudy blankets, stretched out on the lawn and wrapped themselves up like squaws.

Shivering Springfield listeners, compelled to run their auto heaters full blast half way home from Lenox, have good reason to agree with Mark Twain who, in addressing the New England Society of New York, remarked that "there is a sumptuous variety about New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration — and regret."

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS

AUG 6 - 1940

Now going on in the Berkshires in Massachusetts is the Berkshire Festival, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by chorus and soloists, presenting nine programs from August 1 to 18, about every other evening. Three of the concerts are devoted to a festival of Tschaikowsky's music in honor of the 300th anniversary of his birth. Koussevitzky is conducting.

150

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 5 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Ends First Third of Its Series

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed the first third of its seventh season this afternoon before an audience of 6,500 persons from all corners of America and at least 30 foreign countries.

One Brahman priest came in full Indian regalia. A guest of honor was William Bullitt, United States Ambassador to France.

But behind the absence of one person was a story that few in the huge audience knew.

This concerned the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, and Madame Koussevitzky, who for more than three decades has been almost as much a part of her husband's career as his music. This season Madame Koussevitzky has been absent from her usual seat because of illness.

Last June she was stricken with a heart attack at the Koussevitzky estate nearby. The attack came a few days before the opening of her husband's 30-year dream — the Berkshire Music Center, at which more than 300 students are studying music, not for scholastic credit, but for what they personally can get from the art.

According to Madame Koussevitzky's wish, Dr. Koussevitzky has continued to head the school, teach a small class of gifted young conductors, and direct the Berkshire Festival. She has been promised by her physician that she may attend one of the concerts this year, but so far her condition has not warranted the venture.

Today's music explored three periods: The classic, with the favorite Mozart E flat Symphony; the late romantic, with Brahms' Second Symphony, and the modern period with a performance of Igor Stravinsky's Capriccio for piano and orchestra, in which Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

The latter is Stravinsky at his least interesting, although the performance of Mr. Sanroma and the redoubtable Boston Symphony was of such high quality that the audience could overlook the fact that the music sounds, most of the time, as if it had been made from scraps found in the bottom of the composer's trunk.

Although the Berkshire Festival audience is one of the most distinguished that any Summer music venture is able to assemble, it is by no means straight-laced. This afternoon the orchestra appeared nonchalantly in shirt-sleeves, and when Dr. Koussevitzky returned after the opening Mozart symphony with Mr. Sanroma, both director and soloist had shed their coats.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 6 - 1940

Thousands of music lovers from all parts of America will head for Tanglewood within a few days for the opening August 1 of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

This Clipp
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 6 - 1940

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 6 - 1940

Hill Country Residents Fear Jitterbugging By Gothamites

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, Aug. 6, 1940

WITH the great Boston Symphony doing its best to turn Stockbridge, Mass., into an American Salzburg, my two sisters and I have just finished our second week-end in the beautiful Berkshires, soaking up a spot of music culture and bulldozing our men folk into some semblance of order.

That lovely hill country has long been a favorite summer haunt of the cultured, wealthy and elderly of the east coast, especially what is left of the Back Bay and Beacon Hill Brahmins of Boston. Lenox and Stockbridge and Lee have big old wooden hotels to shelter those who don't possess rich estates in the countryside. In 1938 Conductor Koussevitsky and his able, ambitious wife were able to open their brief summer concert series in the open-sided shed on the beautiful Tanglewood estate, and already have established these affairs as probably the most important summer symphonic events in this part of the country.

Thus Earnest Seekers are beginning to flock into the exclusive area, and both natives and summer colonists tend to look down the long white nose at those of us with New York licenses on our cars. True, we are clean, neat, nicely dressed, and softly spoken, but the Yankees of these parts are a stuffy conservative lot, and seem to feel that as Gotham vulgarians we are very apt to start jitterbugging on the steps of the Congregational Meetin' House at any moment. The ersatz Cabots and Lodges view us with silent alarm.

We try to bear up. We go to the magnificent concerts, in which one of my brothers-in-law saws a fiddle, we walk under the trees and chat with well-met friends from everywhere. We conduct ourselves with propriety in order to fool the cultural stiff shirts into believing that we know a Brahms score by heart, and if I can keep Hall off the ale we may do all right.

* * *

Women in the Berkshires seem to run to flesh. Maybe they just don't care. It's a shock to me, whose mob in New York, I fear, thinks more about its hips than it does about its immortal soul. Never in my puff have I seen so many outsize women as up here. It shocks our men, too, but so what?

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 6 - 1940

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

AUG 4 - 1940

Arts And Music

Iturbi And Alec Templeton Feature Programs Next Week At Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell

Dynamic Jose Iturbi, amazing Alec Templeton, Stell Andersen, outstanding of American-born pianists, and Hans Wilhelm Steinberg, co-conductor of the NBC Symphony, are among the musical greats who will appear at Robin Hood Dell the coming week.

Iturbi occupies the dual role of conductor and soloist Monday night, when he plays Mozart's Concerto Number 20, in D Minor, Liszt's Fantasie Hongroise and Amphitheatrof's Panorama American, which will be the latter's premiere in Philadelphia.

When Templeton returns Thursday, it will be the first time in the Dell's 11-year history that an artist has received a return invitation during the current season. Following Templeton's appearance July 11, hundreds of persons, who had missed his concert because of threatening weather, besieged the Dell with requests that he be brought back. When Vladimir Horowitz cancelled his Aug. 8 engagement, due to an injured hand. Templeton was immediately substituted.

Alexander Smallens again will occupy the podium Friday night for the solo appearance of Stell Andersen, who was widely acclaimed in Europe for her premiere presentation of Darius Milhaud's "Pastorale," which the great French composer wrote especially for her. It will have its American debut at the Dell and Milhaud will be on hand to hear it.

Another feature of the Friday program will be a revised translation of Prokofieff's "Peter and The Wolf," by Samuel Rosenbaum, Dell president, which Smallens will use. Rosenbaum will also act as narrator.

All concerts will begin at 8:30.

* * *

The Week's Programs

Monday, Aug. 5
Jose Iturbi
Conductor and Piano Soloist

Unfinished Symphony ....Schubert
Concerto No. 20 in D Minor for Piano and Orchestra ....Mozart
Iturbi
American Panorama ....Amphitheatrof
(First performance in Philadelphia)
Fantasie Hongroise .... Liszt
For piano and orchestra
Iturbi

Tuesday, Aug. 6
Alexander Smallens, Conducting
John Corigliano, Violinist

Ballet Suite No. 1 ....Gluck-Mottl
1. Introduction from "Don Juan." Air gai.
2. Dance of the Blessed Spirits, from "Orpheus."
3. Musette, from "Armide."
4. Air gai, Sicilienne, from "Armide."
Concerto in K Minor ....Bruch
Corigliano
Symphony No. 40 in G Minor......Mozart
Poeme in Eb Major............Chausson
Corigliano
Prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin". Wagner

Wednesday, Aug. 7
Alexander Smallens, Conducting

The Academic Festival Overture...Brahms
Symphony No. 3 in F Major ......Brahms
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ....Nicolai
Nutcracker Suite ....Tchaikovsky

Thursday, Aug. 8
Hans Wilhelm Steinerg, Conductor
Alec Templeton, Pianist

Mazeppa ....Liszt
Concerto in A Minor...............Grieg
Templeton
Symphony No. 1 in C Major ...Beethoven
Solos and Improvisations
Templeton

Friday, Aug. 9
Alexander Smallens, Conducting
Stell Andersen, Pianist
Samuel R. Rosenbaum, Narrator

Water Music ....Handel-Harty
Coronation Concerto ....Mozart
Miss Andersen
Peter and the Wolf............Prokofieff
Narrator—Samuel R. Rosenbaum
Pastorale ....Milhaud
Miss Andersen
La Valse ....Ravel

* * *

Berkshire Festival Opens

With less fuss than usually attends the daily opening of a movie theatre, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its seventh season Thursday night before a colorful, international audience of nearly 6000 persons at Stockbridge, Mass.

Although the Festival Association would never make such a claim, it is probable that the nine concerts which comprise this season constitute the highest level which Summer symphonic music has yet reached in America.

There are even those who insist that the Berkshire Festival, as served by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the logical successor to the old Salzburg Festival, in war-torn Europe's Austrian Tyrol.

Serge Koussevitzky and his magnificent orchestra were heard by an audience from every corner of America, and from most European countries as well. As always at the Festival, the orchestra was precisely the one that plays through the Winter in Boston's Symphony Hall, and the program—comprising the first symphonies of Beethoven, Schumann and Sibelius—was rehearsed with the same fastidious care.

This year the Festival is the climax of another unique venture, Koussevitzky's now famous Berkshire Music Center, in which more than 300 students are studying and living with music through the months of July and August.

The grounds of Tanglewood, home of the Festival, were peppered with Festival patrons wandering from building to building, looking in on classes and rehearsals. . . . J. H. W.

* * *

Ventnor Concerts Shifted

Because of the fire last Thursday which destroyed the Ventnor Municipal Pier, all activities have been shifted to the auditorium of the Ventnor Avenue School. Thus the Sunday night concert by the orchestra under the direction of Vincent E. Speciale, goes indoors.

Aurora Kework, contralto, and Phillip Barrett, baritone, will be vocal soloists. The full program follows:

Star Spangled Banner.

1—Overture—"Morning, Noon and night in Vienna," Suppe'.

2—(a) Kashmiri Song (from "Four Indian Love Lyrics") Finden; (b) Aragonaise—Air de Ballet (from "Le Cid"), Massenet.

3—Baritone Solo—(a) The Lord's Prayer, Malotte; (b) Pale Moon, Logan.

4—Fantasie on the Opera "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo.

5—Unfinished Symphony — (1st Movement-Allegro Moderato) Schubert.

6—A Suite of 3 Numbers—(By request)—(a) Serenade Italienne, (b) Chiquita-Tango Capriccioso, (c) Mi Andosilla-Paso Doble, Russo.

7—Contralto Solo—(a) My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice, Saint-Saens, (from "Samson and Dalila"). (b) Because, D'Hardelot, Miss Aurora Kework.

8—Selection from the Operetta—"Fortune Teller," Herbert.

God Bless America.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TIMES TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS

AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
READING, PA.
EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-INQUIRER

AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 6 - 1940

Many Local People Attend Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Many residents of Poughkeepsie and Dutchess county are attending the concerts given by the Boston Symphony orchestra in the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival. The concerts, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, are being held at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Among the reservations received by Rebecca Hyde Rider and Eric de Cordova for various concerts were those of Polly Wyckoff, Helen C. Cole, John Kuhn, Mr. and Mrs. Harry V. Welsh, Mr. and Mrs. A. Allendorph Schoonmaker, Mr. and Mrs. Eric de Cordova, Earle V. W. Foote, Miss Rider, Mrs. A. L. Rider and Marie Tschudin.

Included in the county residents who are boxholders for the 1940 season are: Mrs. William J. Knapp and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Mendelssohn, Millbrook.

The festival opened last Thursday night, and will continue through Saturday night, August 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1940

GOV. SALTONSTALL GUEST AT CONCERT

To Attend Festival Thursday Night

Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall will be the guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in her box, No. 1, at the opening concert of the second series by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday night. Other guests in the box will be Miss Smith's mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Mirriam K. Oliver, John Cunningham, King Wu and Malcolm Vaughan, all of New York, and Stuart Montgomery of Medford.

Preceding the concert, the governor will be a guest at the annual dinner of the Berkshire county Harvard club at the Hotel Wendell in Pittsfield. Others who will be at the dinner are Edward A. Taft of Boston, president of the Boston Harvard club, and Ernest B. Vane, Jr., of Chestnut Hill, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1940

TOSCANINI VISITS TANGLEWOOD SHED

Recently Back From South American Tour, Maestro Arrives Unannounced at Stockbridge.

Arturo Toscanini, world famous conductor who has recently returned from a South American tour with the NBC Symphony orchestra, yesterday visited Tanglewood in Stockbridge, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The maestro arrived unannounced. He was on his way to New York after visiting his granddaughter in New Hampshire, and paused to inspect the Boston orchestra's summer home and the Music center. After walking about the grounds and looking at the mammoth shed, he called on Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera company, head of the opera department of the Music center, and drove with Dr. Graf to his cottage at South Lee for luncheon.

101

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
AUG 6 - 1940

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Music at Tanglewood projects a new aspect to the future of outdoor concerts. The fact that the orchestra can be heard without electrical amplification at greater distances than is necessary at many amplified stadium concerts, with better musical effect, suggests that the future of outdoor music will not depend on electrical sound reenforcement.

All the way across the green, several hundred feet, even pianissimo strains were clear, especially at night. Of course this depends on the absence of extraneous noises of traffic and voices, a situation realized at Tanglewood.

* * *

Koussevitzky is a master program-maker, better than most of his famous contemporaries. These Festival concerts attest it. He has a flair for the unusual, gives new composers a break, is generous with so-called modern music (Debussy, Strausse, Ravel, Stravinsky, etc.), but doesn't neglect the solid foundations of classicism and romanticism. But perhaps he hasn't so much a flair for the unusual as he has a desire to be catholic in taste.

Saturday's program depended on Berlioz' "Benevenuto Cellini" overture for the foundation, then went into the long, colorful "Don Quixote" of Strauss. Roy Harris's one-movement Symphony No. 2 started the second half, followed by Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe".

It is so easy to find fault with new music. Mr. Harris's Symphony (we have to revise our definition of the term) annoyed more than it pleased, and I didn't get the impression that the audience was by any means sold to it. By nature we're friendly to our own contemporaries, but we just can't throw our hats into the air. We're glad it was given, and we want more just the same.

On Sunday were heard the E-flat (No. 39) Symphony of Mozart, Stravinsky's pleasant "Capriccio for Orchestra and Piano", with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Brahms really stirred the crowd. The applause was a true demonstration. It was a great performance. In the Stravinsky work Sanroma played the difficult score with masterful technic. It would not do to forget mention of Piatigorsky's soloing in "Don Quixote". The famous cellist gave what might be called a very philosophical interpretation of the pathetic knight.

* * *

Many at the Festival are spending their vacations somewhere in the Berkshires. Others have traveled long distances just to be here. Their uninterested friends in such cases invariably are surprised at the long distance traveled just to go to a concert. It shows, though, how much music is in their hearts.

We haven't been able to determine just how many Bergenites are here, but auto license plates indicate there must be many score. We've seen lots of friends already, but hesitate to give names without being somewhere near complete. Hope to be able to do that later.

A Berkshire Evening Eagle reporter discovered this interesting story about Miss Jane Griffin of Bogota:

> Mrs. C. Raymond Downes of Old Greenwich, niece of Miss Leonora Rockwell, proprietor of the Breezy Knoll Inn, and Miss Carolyn Luce, social secretary of the inn, were driving to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Mrs. Downes had purchased tickets in Lenox.
>
> Since there was room for two more persons, Miss Rockwell made arrangements for Miss Ellen Cook of Bridgehampton, L. I., and Miss Jane Griffin of Bogota, N. J., guests of the inn, to accompany her niece.
>
> After making detailed arrangements where to meet and glancing closely at each other for fear that they would not recognize each other in the large throng at the conclusion of the concert, they learned that their worries were needless. The four seats were together. Miss Cook and Griffith had bought their two tickets in New York a month ago!

* * *

Albert Spalding will be the soloist Thursday, playing the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the Orchestra. Other numbers will be Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
AUG 6 - 1940

MUSIC NOTES

By Ear

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—One of the most successful community enterprises in all the musical world closed triumphantly the first third of its seventh year with a concert heard yesterday afternoon by 6,500 people from all parts of the world.

This is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which each August brings larger and larger audiences to its handsome home—Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

The Berkshires are full of Summer cultural activities, and early in its history the Berkshire Symphonic Festival developed a policy of cooperation which has benefitted everybody—including the festival itself.

A nearby venture of long standing, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's weekly concerts at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, sets up its Sunday programs to Friday afternoon, on which day there is no festival program.

The Ted Shawn Dance School and festival, a few miles to the east, rearranges its programs to fit. So with the festival at Bennington College, in southern Vermont, and other ventures even farther away.

In addition the festival itself is entirely a community affair, in which Summer and year-round residents cooperate.

Yesterday's music included Mozart's E flat symphony (No. 39); Stravinsky's capriccio for piano and orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the highly effective soloist, and Brahms second symphony in D major. The latter is one of Serge Koussevitzky's favorites, and yesterday he and the incomparable Boston Symphony made it sound as if it were something fresh from the brain of its composer, instead of a staple of the symphonic literature played every season by every orchestra in the land.

The festival resumes next Thursday night with a Beethoven-Tschaikowsky program at which Albert Spalding, the violinist, will be soloist. This Summer there are three instead of two weeks of concerts owing to insistent demand from the concertgoers.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 7 - 1940

SEATS WITHIN TANGLEWOOD'S BIG SHED GONE

General Admission Tickets Are Still Available for Second Series

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 6— A complete sellout of the great shed at Tanglewood for the second series of concerts starting Thursday was reported today by officials of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Tickets Still Available

While every seat apparently has been sold within the shed, general admission tickets are still available. These tickets admit to the great lawn and benches outside the building itself.

With success of the final series of concerts assured, the festival began today its campaign for equal success of the benefit concert Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund.

Archibald MacLeish, poet and librarian of the Library of Congress, whose summer home is in Conway will be master of ceremonies. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Dorothy Thompson, columnist, will speak, as well as others who are still to be announced.

The program starts at 6 p. m. with exhibition performances by the various departments of the Music Center. Then come the official exercises, with intermission to follow. A beer license has been granted the festival for the event.

Two Orchestras

The gala concert will feature the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Institute Orchestra as well as the festival chorus. Soloists will be Albert Spalding, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

Following this concert the Boston orchestra, under the baton of Arthur Fiedler, will play Strauss waltzes for dancing on the lawn. Fireworks will close the program.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1940

Berkshire Festival Seats Nearly Gone

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox—Almost every seat in the Tanglewood Shed has been sold for the second series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky.

However, no one will be turned away, according to Festival trustees, who say they have an unlimited number of general admission tickets.

The program for the series will be commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky and will include works of this composer and Beethoven.

Albert Spalding will be the soloist tomorrow night, when the orchestra plays Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D.

Among the distinguished guests tomorrow night will be Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, as well as Empress Zita and her family, now living in Royalston.

The second concert of the series will be heard Saturday evening and the third Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 8 - 1940

The Boston Symphony begins its second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., tonight. A feature of tonight's program will be the Beethoven violin concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist. Former Empress Zita of Austria and her family, now living in Royalston, Mass., are among those who have reserved seats for this concert. Other concerts in this series take place on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 7 - 1940

Second Concert Series Opens Tomorrow Evening

Practically Every Seat in Music Shed at Tanglewood Sold for Three Concerts—No One Will be Turned Away as Unlimited Number of General Admission Tickets is Available—Series Commemorates 100th Anniversary of Birth of Tchaikowsky—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to Direct.

Practically every seat in the immense music shed at Tanglewood has been sold for the three concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's 1940 second series opening tomorrow evening, it was announced today by George W. Edman, clerk of the Festival organization, for the trustees.

At the same time it was asserted that no one will be turned away as an unlimited number of general admission tickets is available. These admit their holders to the grounds and the use of the benches around the big shed. The building itself contains seats for nearly 6,000.

All three of the concerts in the second series, to be given tomorrow evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon by the Boston symphony orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky and each program will feature one of his works. The others to be presented in the series are compositions of Beethoven.

Tomorrow evening's program includes Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont" and his concerto for violin in D, with Albert Spalding as soloist. Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony in F minor will complete the program. On Saturday evening Beethoven's Sixth or "Pastoral" symphony in F major and Tchaikowsky's Sixth or "Pathetique" symphony in B minor will be played. Sunday afternoon's program consists of the Beethoven Coliolanus overture, his Fourth symphony in B flat and Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony in E minor.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall and the Empress Zita of Austria-Hungary and her family who have been staying in South Royalston, will be among the distinguished guests tomorrow night.

Meantime, the detailed program for the gala special performance to be given at Tanglewood on Friday evening of next week for the benefit of the Allied Relief fund in aid of Great Britain was announced today.

Activities will begin at 6 o'clock and will occupy the shed, the Tanglewood theater, the lawn between them and other buildings of the Berkshire Music Center, new school of musical performance now in session.

First features of the program will be simultaneous exhibition performances in various parts of the grounds by Music Center members, their programs including orchestral selections, opera scenes, chamber music, combined chorus and orchestra music and country dancing.

The official exercises will follow in the shed, opening with the singing of the "Alleluia" song composed by Randall Thompson for the Music Center, by the academy chorus. Then will follow addresses by Dorothy Thompson and Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York with Archibald MacLeish, librarian of Congress presiding, and the national anthems will be played by the Boston Symphony. There will be an auction sale and refreshments during an intermission after which the concert program will be given. It will include Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" march by the combined Boston Symphony and Institute orchestras under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, the performance of "Jupiter" from Holst's "The Planets," by the two orchestras under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso," by Albert Spalding, noted violinist, and the orchestra, and a violoncello solo with orchestral accompaniment by Gregor Piatigorsky, choruses from Bach's Mass in B minor by the Academy chorus and the Boston Symphony orchesra with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, the "Hallelujah" chorus from Handel's "Messiah" by the chorus and orchestra, again under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, and finally a program of Strauss waltzes by the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. A drawing for prizes and fireworks will conclude the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1940

Saltonstall, Empress Zita To Attend Festival Tomorrow

Virtually All Seats in Tanglewood Shed Sold—Albert Spalding Soloist Tomorrow Night

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall and Empress Zita of Austria and her family will be among the distinguished guests at tomorrow evening's opening concert of Series B of the 1940 Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The governor will go to Tanglewood after attending the Harvard Club dinner at the Wendell Hotel. He will be among the guests in President Gertrude Robinson Smith's official Festival box.

The refugee Austrian empress will attend as the guest of Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown.

Tickets in Demand

Tickets for the second series were selling rapidly today and according to the Festival staff, indications pointed to a sellout for all three concerts.

The demand for the third series was increasing in tempo, three boxes having been sold yesterday and many mail orders filled.

The second series will commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikowsky. His fourth symphony will be played at tomorrow night's concert; his sixth, Saturday evening, and his fifth, Sunday afternoon.

Albert Spalding, noted American violinist and summer resident of Great Barrington, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night in Beethoven's concerto for violin.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1940

Empress Zita, formerly of Austria-Hungary, is not to be the guest of Prof and Mrs Philip Marshall Brown in their box at the first concert of the music festival second series at Tanglewood tomorrow night, as was reported today at Pittsfield. Albert Spalding, violinist, is to be the soloist for the Boston symphony orchestra in Beethoven's violin concerto. Guests in the Brown box will be Mr and Mrs Charles Louis Safford of Williamstown.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
8/8/40

Tanglewood Concert Will Benefit Allied Relief Fund

Program To Be Presented Aug. 16 Under Direction Of Serge Koussevitzky

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced recently that they would sponsor a unique benefit program Aug. 16 for the Allied Relief Fund, Inc. The program will be given at Tanglewood, home of the Festival and the orchestra's newly established Berkshire Music Center.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and the Festival as well as director of the Music Center, has been named chairman of the committee in charge of the program with Albert Spalding. The program will be so varied that it will be necessary to begin at 6 P. M. and promises such a wealth of entertainment that it will overflow the spacious grounds of the estate with two assemblies in the shed.

Dr. Koussevitzky, enthusiastic over the prospect of the benefit, declared today:

"We shall make a manifestation from New England to old England in which all America is invited to join."

All artists participating in the program will give their services and the entire net proceeds will go to the Allied Relief Fund.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, of New York, president of the Allied Relief Fund, Inc., when informed of the benefit said that in his opinion "proceeds from the gala performance will go a long way toward providing the civilian and medical help that we are endeavoring to extend abroad . . . just now in England . . . to innocent people suffering the consequence of war."

The whole program was announced at the opening Festival concert, Thursday evening (Aug. 1) together with information where boxes and tickets may be secured. The sale for this special concert was opened Friday (Aug. 2) throughout the East. Reservations will be accepted by mail at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The joint committee of the Festival and the orchestra stated that it would be pleased to receive contributions for the fund from anyone unable to attend the program. These contributions may be sent to the Housatonic National Bank, Stockbridge, Mass.

On the joint committee are Albert Spalding, Ernest B. Dane, Richard C. Paine, Reginald C. Foster, Mrs. William Felton Barrett and Robert K. Wheeler.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1940

Front Views and Profiles

By June Provines

Visit in the Berkshires.

The Berkshire music center established by the Boston Symphony orchestra is in the midst of its first season here on the historic estate of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales. For six seasons thousands of music lovers have come to the Berkshires to hear Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony, but never before have all the buildings at Tanglewood been thus in use.

* * *

We went to a morning rehearsal of the orchestra. While the strains of Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe were coming from the great outdoor symphony shed, voices of the festival chorus, practicing the Kyrie from Bach's Mass in B Minor, could be heard from the barn down the hill and in one of the classrooms. Composer Roy Harris was addressing a class on composition, and there were activities in garage, toolhouse, and classrooms.

* * *

It was as pastoral a scene as you could imagine at Tanglewood, in spite of all this musical activity. Cows grazed in the pasture, the meadows lay green in the August sunshine, and the view from Tanglewood across Lake Mahkeenac to the blue misted Berkshires was as enchanting as you could find anywhere. Three hundred students are "living and working in music." A young orchestra with youthful conductors is one of the departments. Dr. Koussevitzky sits in the audience and occasionally interrupts the playing by an electric flash signal, to advise or correct, while pupils of conducting watch and listen.

* * *

Music students also flock to the morning rehearsal and, scores in hand, follow the symphony being rehearsed. Present, by permission, at this morning's rehearsal were many notables of the music world. Conductor Artur Rodzinski, who has a house near by; Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston "Pops" orchestra, and several others stood chatting in a little group in the sunshine; a sister-in-law of Rodzinski and her small son, refugees from Poland, sat on a nearby bench; Actress Tallulah Bankhead, who has been playing in summer theater, sat in the shed, in slacks and a tomato red blouse, listening intently.

* * *

During rehearsal intermission Arthur Cable, trustee and official of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, was taken backstage to see Mr. Koussevitzky. The great conductor, perspiring profusely, a sweater thrown about him, was gracious and cordial.

"The Chicago Symphony orchestra must come to Boston next winter to play," he said. "We want you."

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/8/40

Music Festival Has Big Opening

Many Thousands Come to Berkshire for Event

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in Fine Performances— First Series Attracts Many Celebrities. —Inns, Lodging Houses, Restaurants Busy

With an average attendance of well over 6000 persons at the three concerts of the first seres, the Berkshir Symphonic Festival opened its seventh annual season last week-end amid the beautiful surroundings of the Tanglewood estate. The high quality of performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, which has made the festival the enormous success which it is, was once again displayed to the enthusiastic pleasure of the audience.

The openng night last Thursday found many notables present to enjoy the program, which opened the series of nine concerts to take place on three successive week-ends. The total of 6700 persons who attended Sunday afternoon's concert almost equalled the attendance record for the Festival, for it was exceeded only once, when 7000 were present at the closing program last year. While music critics praised the faultless presentation of symphonies, thousands roamed about the grounds, visiting the formal gardens and enjoying the close-cropped lawns.

Among the notables whose appearance caused a flurry at the performances were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Herbert Lehman, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, William Bullard, ambassador to France, and Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski.

At the refreshment tent the ladies of the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington and a corp of workers under the direction of the Misses Margaret and Mary Dewey, found themselves busily employed before the concerts and during intermissions purveying sandwiches and soft drinks to satisfy the appetites of music-lovers. State police directed traffic in the parking lots so that 3000 cars at each concert were quickly sent on their way at the close.

The second series, which promises to be even more brilliant, opens tonight for a special program in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, composed entirely of works by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington will be violin soloist tonight. The program follows:

Thursday Evening, Aug. 8, 8:30
Beethoven — Overture to Goethe's 'Egmont," op 84.
Beethoven — Concerto for Violn in D, opus 61.
Soloist, Albert Spalding
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 4 in F minor, op 36.
Saturday Evening, Aug. 10, 8:30
Beethoven — Symphony No. 6 in F major, op 68, "Pastoral."
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique," op 74.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 11, 3:30
Beethoven— Overture, "Coriolanus," op 62.
Beethoven — Symphony No. 4, in B flat major, op 60.
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 5 in E minor, op 64.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 8 - 1940

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY long has dreamed of creating an American Salzburg, now that the Vienna original has become a city of dead memories. Last week in the Berkshires, he and his Boston Orchestra opened their seventh annual symphonic festival with a program of Wagner, Beethoven and Sibelius. Here is a great opportunity to weld together the genius that has flowed to this country in recent years in search of free expression. Here, in the environs of an American Salzburg, the challenging names of Walter, Klemperer, Schnabel, Stravinsky, Hindemith, Lehmann, Flagstad could serve to remind music lovers everywhere, including Germany, that great art can persist only in the atmosphere of liberty.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1940

Berkshires Get Advertising From Thomas

Lowell Thomas, radio commentator, who was at the Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, over the week end with his wife and mother-in-law and attended the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, praised this section in his daily broadcast Monday night.

Here's what he had to say:

While Europe lapses into semibarbarism, it's thrilling to find civilization making a step forward anywhere.

And that's an experience I have just had in the Berkshire Hills, near Stockbridge, Massachusetts, and Great Barrington. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is in full swing, its seventh and greatest season. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a gorgeous natural setting, delighting greater crowds than ever. And the audiences are undoubtedly the most distinguished to be found anywhere on this earth this year of our Lord 1940.

You turn one way and see a distinguished editor like Frank Crowninshield, over there Lucretia Bori of opera fame, Ted Shawn, the dancer, Joseph Cummings Chase, the artist, Governor Lehman of New York and his lady, the widows of two presidents of the United States, and there sits Norman H. Davis, head of the American Red Cross, and so on, and so on.

Nor will you find more perfect parking arrangements in any great football stadium than for this inspiring symphonic festival for which music lovers are indebted to Gertrude Robinson Smith and her colleagues.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 8 - 1940

SECOND BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL SERIES TO START TODAY

The second series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., will begin tonight at 8:30 o'clock with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra in three concerts dedicated to the observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer, Tschaikowsky. Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the soloist tonight in the playing of Beethoven's "Concerto for Violin in D". Other selections will be Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 4" and Beethoven's "Overture to Egmont".

In planning the celebration of Tschaikowsky's birth, Dr. Koussevitsky decided to divide the time of the three concerts of the second series of the festival to music of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky. A large number of music lovers is expected to be on hand for these special concerts. The first series of three concerts which closed on Sunday was heard by some 19,000 persons. Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock the orchestra will play Beethoven's "Symphony No. 6" and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 6, the Pathetique." The Sunday program will begin at 3:30 p. m. A third series of concerts will begin Aug. 15.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 8 - 1940

Critic Praises Symphonic Festival

Carl Lindstrom of Hartford Times Addresses Rotary

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is writing more brilliant a page in history than did the county's legendary figures of years ago, Carl Lindstrom, music editor of the Hartford Times, told Rotarians at their weekly luncheon meeting at the Hotel Wendell this noon.

"The Berkshire region," he said, "has its traditions, its legends. There is the literary legend of Melville and Hawthorne. The area has a 'glamour' period, which, of course, it rightly cherishes in memory. It provides an interesting background for present activities, but let no one make a mistake—this is the great Berkshire period. It will transcend the old Berkshire legend."

A reviewer of the Festival since the Boston Symphony Orchestra first played here in 1936. Mr. Lindstrom "can find nothing to criticize. There was nothing wrong in the past, there is nothing wrong in the present. That leaves us with only the future for critical material, and so far as I can see there will be nothing to criticize then.

Such a music festival always runs the risk of false standards, of snobbery, of artificial aristocracy. But if the Berkshire community continues in its present democratic way, there is little danger of that here. You, meaning the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Festival organization and the community-at-large, beat a critic to the draw. How can he criticize when there is nothing wrong?"

John J. O'Connell, president of the Rotary Club, presided at the meeting. At the conclusion of his talk, Mr. Lindstrom was given a rising vote of thanks by the members and guests.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 8 - 1940

Spalding to Play Solos at Festival

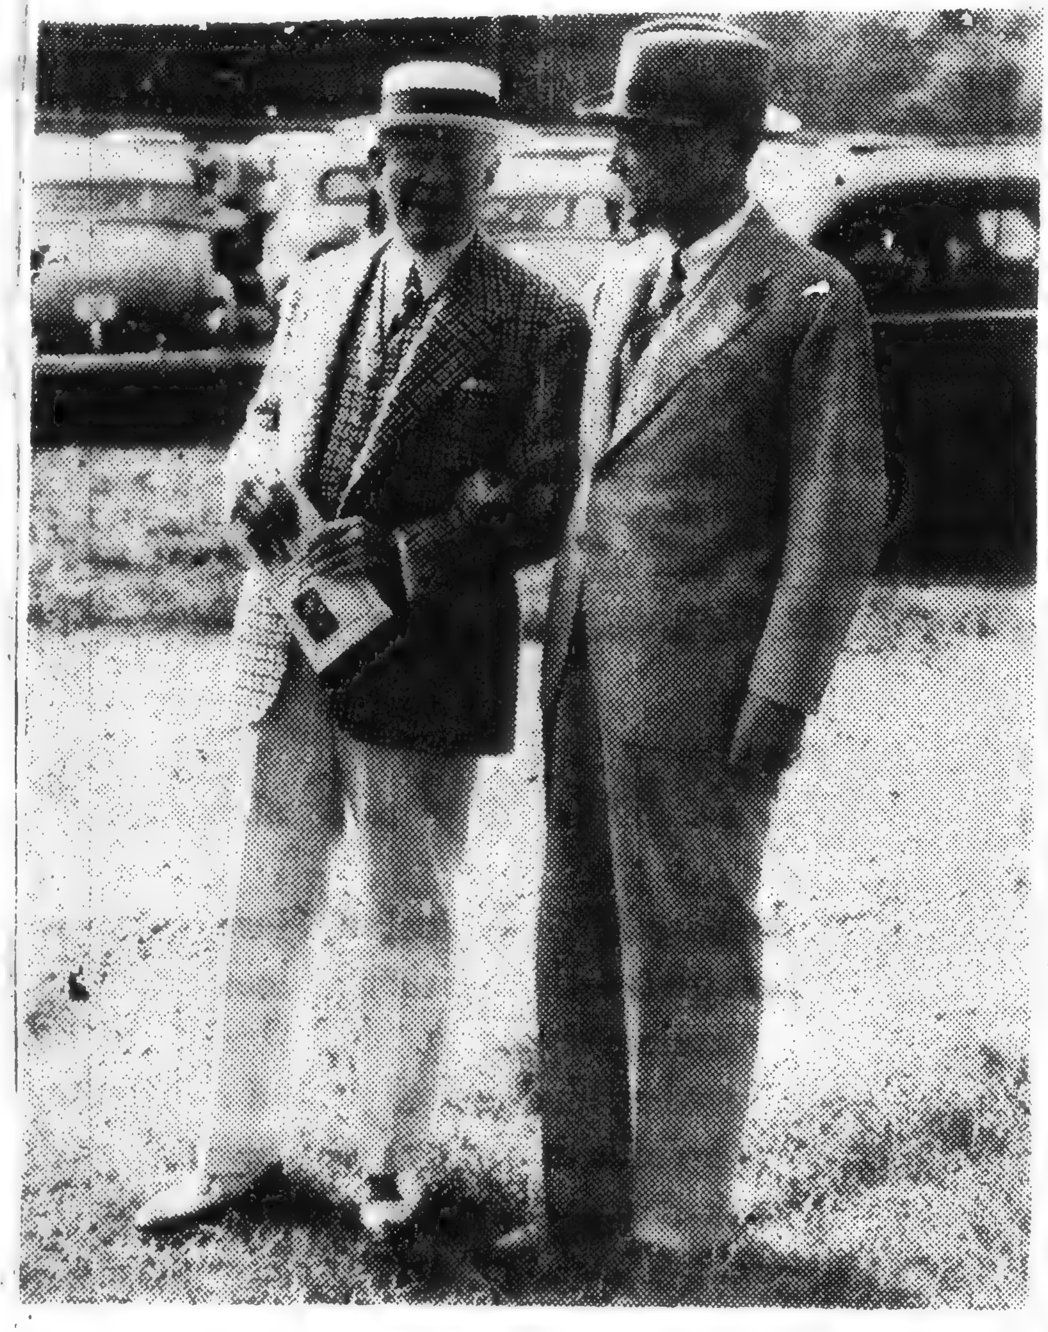
Albert Spalding, violinist, will be the soloist at the second series of the seventh annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass., tonight at 8:30 o'clock. Serge Koussevitzky is conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra in three concerts dedicated to the observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer, Tschaikowsky.

In planning the celebration of Tschaikowsky's birth, Dr. Koussevitsky decided to divide the time of the three concerts of the second series of the festival to music of Beethoven and Tschaikowsky. A large number of music lovers is expected to be on hand for these special concerts. The first series of three concerts which closed on Sunday was heard by some 19,000 persons. Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock the orchestra will play Beethoven's "Symphony No. 6" and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 6, the Pathetique." The Sunday program will begin at 3:30 p. m. A third series of concerts will begin Aug. 15.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1940

Ambassador Visits Tanglewood



—[Photo by William Whitaker

William C. Bullitt (right), ambassador to France who recently returned to this country, attends opening series of the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky with his cousin, William M. Bullitt of Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANSAS CITY, MO.
JOURNAL
AUG 9 - 1940

~~flashes~~—

In the Social Panorama

By Ursula Genung

For you, dear (we hope) readers (not that we hope you're dear, because you are, but we hope you exist) here goes a beautiful friendship. We had a letter from Blanche Lederman in the morning mail that threatens us with inch-by-inch destruction if it isn't kept entre nous; but, feeling that we've been dull of late and that you deserve something better, here are some quotes anyhow.

☆ ☆ ☆

"If you've never attended this particular music festival in the Berkshire Hills at Tanglewood (a setting that would make the Garden of Eden wither with shame if it got a peep at this picturesque estate) it's a must that you do so the first chance . . . The first few days were busy ones here, for TIME wanted material on the Music Center. That meant days of interviewing the faculty and attending departmental activities. TIME had heard that there was a ballet class for conductors, to give them freedom—poise—elasticity. When I had the story folded and on its eastern way, another wire came from their picture editor—to get shots of Eric Hawkins (Martha Graham's associate) showing how a conductor should look after having had a course in ballet! . . .

☆ ☆ ☆

"The Summer has been grand. Before coming here, spent time on Cape Cod—a week; then a week at Kennebunk Beach. I'm at the festival, of course, now, with attendance at rehearsals when I'm not at the school listening to Herbert Graf (stage director of the Metropolitan) coach young artists, or listening to Aaron Copland teach composition, or hearing the institute orchestra, directed occasionally by Koussevitzky himself—when his five "finds" aren't conducting. This class of 25 gets personal coaching from first desk men of the Boston Orchestra. Yesterday, Toscanini visited his friend, Herbert Graf, and attended one of the rehearsals of "Acis and Galatea" (Handel) in the formal garden. The student body (325) was in a dither over his unexpected presence. (He's no taller than I—and mostly head!) . . .

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1940

Car Drivers To Report Earlier

F. Carl Gorman requsts that all car drivers, who transport children to the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood should meet in front of the Pittsfield High School tomorrow morning at 8.45.

This is a little earlier than usual because the orchestra has been starting its rehearsals about a half-hour earlier.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 9 - 1940

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 9 - 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 9 - 1940

7,000 HEAR CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Overflow Attendance Is Cared for by Dozens of Benches Set Alongside "Shed."

By JOHN SELBY.
(Associated Press Arts Editor.)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9.—Seven thousand persons heard last night's opening concert of the second series, Berkshire symphonic festival programs, in spite of the fact that the now famous music "shed" at Tanglewood, the festival's home, seats only 6,038.

The overflow was cared for on dozens of benches set alongside the "shed" and several hundred comfortable listeners lay on steamer rugs and blankets under the stars, trodden on only occasionally by passers by.

This, the fourth concert of the nine that make up the festival this summer, was also the beginning of Serge Koussevitzky's Tchaikowsky-Beethoven cycle. The Tchaikowsky part of the week end's music is in honor of the 100th anniversary of the Russian's birth, the leaven of Beethoven was inserted, apparently, as a balance to the introspective and hyper-emotional music of the Slav.

Last night's symphony was the strong and brilliant fourth, instead of the "Pathetique," as programmed earlier. It was preceded by Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, and by the Beethoven Concerto for Violin with Albert Spalding as soloist—a program of exactly the proper contrast for an audience such as this one, assembled from every section of the world, and every stratum of society.

Last night's seven thousand included Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, and was to have included the former Empress Zita of Austria, as well. But the empress, now living at Royalston temporarily, excused herself at the last minute and now is expected to attend either the Saturday night or Sunday afternoon concert instead.

Spalding's appearance was another manifestation of the neighborhood spirit which made the Berkshire festival a model for the country.

The violinist's summer place is near Great Barrington, just south of here, and he not only plays the violin for the visitors, but contributes his time as one of the festival trustees.

He has played more accurately on occasion but never with deeper appreciation of the musical content of the music and a higher level of inspiration. The incomparable Boston symphony, and Dr. Koussevitzky, were at the top of their form.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1940

Why Tschaikowsky Holds Firm Place in Music World Today

SOMEWHAT belated though it be, the tribute to the manes and achievements of Peter Ilich Tschaikowsky by the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Festival this week, brings to mind most forcibly the important place the great Russian composer occupies in the musical world today, one hundred years after his birth.

At last evening's concert in the Tanglewood shed, the Fourth Symphony was the featured work. On Saturday evening the Sixth will be performed and on Sunday afternoon the Fifth will conclude the evening's program. There are some who felt that the significance of the occasion warranted presenting a more comprehensive array of Tschaikowsky's music, but Conductor Serge Koussevitzky deemed otherwise, selecting various works by Beethoven for the first half of each of the three programs.

Tschaikowsky was born in Kamsko-Vatinak on May 7, 1840, and died in Petrograd on Nov. 6, 1893. A full century after his birth and 47 years after his death, he has been universally ranked as one of the greatest of Russian composers. Strange as it may seem, he showed no particular aptitude for music in his boyhood years, although studying the piano with various teachers. His family gave him slight encouragement and his first employment was as a clerk in the Ministry of Justice. It was not until he was 21 that he realized that his real vocation was that of a musician and, like the fictional heroes, gave up a paying position to face a life of poverty for the sake of his art. At the Conservatory in St. Petersburg, where the family then resided, Tschaikowsky studied with Rubinstein and Zaremba. With no financial help from his family, he struggled along on the bare pittance he managed to earn by giving private lessons. When given a teaching part at the Moscow Conservatory, his earnings still were small, but he had the opportunity of meeting several talented musiicans, from whose years of experience and advice he profited. Tschaikowsky was greatly aided by Rubinstein, with whom he lived in Moscow. Rubinstein was influential, and being conductor of the Russian Musical society, produced many of Tschaikowsky's works on his programs.

But it was a long time before he received anything like genuine acclaim. For a few years he acted as music critic for the Russki Viedomosti, all the while teaching as well as composing. In the summer of 1876 he went to Vichy (a very familiar name nowadays) for a rest cure from a threatened mental and physical collapse. Somewhat later that year he went to the Bayreuth Wagnerian Festival as special correspondent for the same journal. Those who have read much of Tschaikowsky's life know of his marriage, its failure and the dire results that followed, although his letters completely exororate his wife of any responsibility. Shortly after the dissolution of his unhappy marriage, Tschaikowsky, through correspondence only, became a "favorite" of the wealthy Mme. Von Meck, whose financial assistance enabled him, for the first time in his career, to live and compose in comfort.

Not until 1880, however, when Tschaikowsky was 40 years old, did his popularity as a composer begin to increase in Russia, due largely to the support of Rubinstein. Outside Russia he was not very well known or received. Hanslick, in Vienna, who is known chiefly for his critical fulminations against Wagner, also found in Tschaikowsky's music another target for his now largely discredited lampoons. The Berlin press unanimously condemned "Francesca da Rimini," and Paris was cold to "Romeo and Juliet," "The Tempest" and as late as 1880 the Fourth Symphony proved unpalatable at the Colonne concerts.

In England and the United States, which he visited in 1891, his music was much more cordially received and seems to have been the starting point of world-wide recognition of Tschaikowsky's genius. In a certain sense he is a paradox, being too greatly and too little appreciated at one and the same time. The so-called cognoscenti are wont to magnify his faults so as to obscure his talents, whereas the lesser schooled or novices draw more satisfaction from his works than they do from Beethoven or Brahms. Paraphrasing what Bacon once wrote of religion, it might be said that a little learning brings one away from Tschaikowsky, but that a great deal of learning brings one back to him. More or less justly Tschaikowsky has been censured for the morbidity, blatancy and hysteria of his music, still he speaks often with a directness that all can understand and with a beauty and eloquence that are unique and unrivalled in the annals of the musical art. Lacking the profundity and cerebral qualities of certain other luminaries, few, if any, can approach Tschaikowsky along purely emotional lines. His symphonies are his autobiography, so adroitly do they lay bare the mental tortures of his melancholy nature and career. Where else can one find such heart-searing music as the Sixth or Pathetique Symphony unfolds? Some there are among the connoisseurs who lean more towards the Fourth of Fifth Symphonies, but the consensus of opinion favors the Sixth as his greatest achievement. It was once said by the late Rosa Newmarch that only a Russian could have written this symphony, but only a Russian penetrated by strong Latin tendencies could have clothed its gloom in such purple hues and perfumed its odor of mortality with such subtle blends of incense.

—A. L. M.

PRIZE COMPETITION FOR SYMPHONIC WORK BY WOMAN COMPOSER

The Women's Symphony society of Boston, founded last year by Alexander Thiede, its conductor, announces a prize competition for a composition for symphony orchestra by an American woman composer. The winning work will be given its first performance by the orchestra at one of its regular Boston concerts, and will become the property of Edition-Musicus of New York by whom it will be copyrighted and published. Entries must be submitted before Nov. 1.

The composition must not be more than ten minutes in duration and may be a single piece, or a suite of pieces. All works must be sent under a pseudonym and be accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing the pseudonym on the face and enclosing the real name and the address of the composer. They should be forwarded to Walter Piston, Music Department, Harvard University, Cambridge. Detailed information of the contest may be obtained by addressing Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, president of the society, 74 Marlborough street, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1940

To Issue Tickets for Rehearsal

LEE—High school students of the music appreciation course interested in attending the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday morning at 10 are requested to notify Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller or Principal Walter J. Potter so that transportation may be arranged. Tickets may be obtained at the high school on Saturday morning from 9.30 to 9.45. Mr. Miller requests the donation of cars to transport the children, the drivers of which will be issued passes to attend the rehearsals.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1940

Sees Billions Needed for Armaments

Saltonstall Says 26th Division One of Best

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, new president of the Harvard Alumni Association, and overseer of Harvard College, told Harvard graduates assembled in his honor at the Hotel Wendell last night that the duties of the state and local governments, while the federal government is building up national defense, are "to carry out local functions of government just as efficiently and honestly as possible," as well as to "see that young people have confidence in our government and want it rather than some other form of government."

"We are going to have to pay billions for armament," said the governor. "We need efficient local government to carry our share and burden of this cost, if we are not going to pass on a terrific, overwhelming burden to our children."

Gov. Saltonstall, who attended the dinner of about 60 Harvard men, wives and guests before he and Mrs. Saltonstall went to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concert at Tanglewood, was asked for comment on the protest against his nomination papers filed by William H. McMasters, who will receive a hearing on the protest by the State Ballot Law Commission next week. The governor smiled and said simply:

Is Not Worried

"I am not worried."

The governor said he had thought a good deal about the relation between the state and federal governments in regard to emergency work. Local governments, he pointed out, being closest to our people, should continue their functions of keeping the people served.

The 26th Division of the National Guard, described as one of the best throughout the country, is enlisted today to full strength, the chief executive said, not full wartime strength, but as requested by the federal government. It is now training in Potsdam, N. Y., and the governor expects to go there next week. Last Friday he spent a "very inspiring day" in reviewing state military units at Bourne and Fort Devens, later attending the Marblehead meeting of the Massachusetts Selectmen's Association and discussing a co-operative program. All showed "spirit, desire and hope" to aid their country, he said.

If the National Guard is called to federal service, he continued, the Home Guard is now being prepared to take military charge here, under Maj. Gen. Edward Fish. On the non-military side, said the governor, local emergency committees now number 270, with civilians ready to help in a general way, and if an emergency arises, such services as fire, police and food would be organized and co-ordinated by the committees.

"We want to see that Massachusetts, which is an industrial state, gets its share of the orders placed by the government," continued Saltonstall, who had chosen his own subject and was speaking extemporaneously. "New England has received about one-fifth of the orders so far. We have organized a committee of Mr. Tinsley of the Associated Industries and Mr. Cabot of the State Industrial Development Commission to acquaint manufacturers with what the federal government wants, find out what they could manufacture and what they would change in their plant equipment orders were forthcoming."

Employment Figures

Approximate figures were cited by the chief executive showing that in Massachusetts approximately 100,000 more are employed today than were two years ago, that business activity is four per cent higher than last year, payrolls seven per cent, and the cost of living down.

"It is encouraging," said Gov. Saltonstall, "when I am going home at night, anywhere between 10 and 1, to see the factories working nights—even though we don't want people to work nights—because at least, we are working."

State Education Commissioner Walter F. Downey will report next year to the Legislature, said Saltonstall, on what can be done to provide employment for young people, as a result of the state-wide survey of youth conditions that Downey has made this year and is now studying. "This is all based on the theory that we have the best type of government yet devised," said Gov. Saltonstall, and that "we must see that young people have confidence in our government."

Charles C. Miller, president of the local Harvard Club, welcomed the governor at the meeting and introduced guests at the head table: Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Edward A. Taft, president of the Harvard Club of Boston and trustee of the orchestra board; George E. Judd, manager of the Boston orchestra; Dr. Remsen B. Ogilby, president of Trinity College, Hartford, and president of the board of trustees of the Lenox School; Walter Prichard Eaton, well-known writer, lecturer and Eagle columnist; and Winthrop M. Crane Jr., who was the good-natured butt of Harvard jests, being a Yale graduate.

David J. Malcolm, superintendent of schools of the Charlemont District, tendered his resignation from the secretaryship of the local Harvard Club, and after a tribute to his work President Miller announced the appointment of Gardner F. Knight, actuary of the Berkshire Life Insurance Company, to take his place. At the October meeting, it was announced, Samuel E. Morison, Harvard professor, will be guest speaker and will describe his researches into the voyage of Columbus, which he has studied by sailing the same route in the West Indies.

A Governor in the Berkshires

Edward A. Taft, left, a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and president of the Harvard Club of Boston, greeted Gov. Leverett Saltonstall and Mrs. Saltonstall as they arrived in the Berkshires. The group attended the Harvard Club dinner and then the Festival.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1940

Saltonstalls Guests In Berkshires for Festival Concert

Governor and Wife With Mrs. C. R. Smith and Daughter as Second Series Opens

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 8.—Governor Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Mrs. Saltonstall were among the guests at the first of the second series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tonight. They were in Box No. 1 with Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and daughter, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who is president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. Mrs. Smith and Miss Smith entertained at dinner at the Dugway before the concert.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, of Pittsfield, were Mrs. A. Henry Mosle, of New York; Mrs. William Mosle, New Canaan, Conn.; Mrs. William S. Ginn and Mrs. John Maurice Hastings (Rosemary Crane), Basing Stoke, Hants, England.

Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt had Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Blair Mitchell, of New York, in their box and with Professor and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Louis Safford, Williamstown.

With Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett were Mr. and Mrs. Francis C. Trimble, the Misses Ann and Margery Adams, of Mt. Airy, Pa. Mrs. Samuel Reber, of Washington, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway, Chicago, were guests of Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs in her box. With Mrs. Norman H. Davis were Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis, of Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. and Mrs. Goode P. Davis, Salisbury, Conn.

Visiting Mrs. William Penn Cresson at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, for the second series are Miss Emily Vaux Cresson and Mr. Caleb Cresson jr., of Oakland Hall Oaks, Pa.; Miss Diane Huntress, Messrs. John Amore and Thomas Beck, of New York.

Miss Louise Edey, of New York, is with Mr. and Mrs. Carl de Gersdorff Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1940

Bus Leaves for Festival at 9

STOCKBRIDGE—The bus which takes children to the Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will leave the school grounds at 9, the Glendale store at 9.15, and the Interlaken store at 9.30.

Officials of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival laymen's music courses report that 695 Berkshire County school children attended the rehearsal last Saturday, and that 715 are expected to attend the one tomorrow. All children who take these music courses in the schools are invited to attend the Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 9 - 1940

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1940

GOVERNOR ATTENDS TANGLEWOOD FETE

The Leverett Saltonstalls Are Guests as the Second Series Opens in Berkshires

MRS. N. H. DAVIS HOSTESS

David T. Danas, Samuel Colts and the William M. Bullitts Also Have Parties

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 8—All the boxes were again occupied for the first concert in the second series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, entertained at dinner at The Dugway, Stockbridge, and later took their guests, who included Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall, to the concert.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis of Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. and Mrs. Goode P. Davis of Salisbury, Conn., attended the concert with Mrs. Norman H. Davis.

Albin C. Swensons in Party

With Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana were Mr. and Mrs. Albin C. Swenson, and guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodget included Mr. and Mrs. Francis C. Trimble and the Misses Ann and Margery Adams of Mount Airy, Pa.

Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, who arrived this afternoon at the Schermeer, Lenox, had as guests Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren, Mrs. Nina L. Duryea, Mrs. Henry Townsend Ashmore and Miss Marian Hague of New York, and Miss Annie Endicott Nourse of Boston.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs had as guests Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Chicago and Mrs. Samuel Reber of Washington.

In the box with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt of Pittsfield were their daughter, Mrs. William S. Ginn; Mrs. John Maurice Hastings of Basing-Stoke, Hants, England; Mrs. A. Henry Mosle of New York and Mrs. William Mosle of New Canaan, Conn.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt were Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Blair Mitchell of New York.

Mrs. W. P. Cresson Has Guests

Mrs. William Penn Cresson has as house guests at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, for the second series Miss Emily Vaux Cresson, Caleb Cresson Jr. of Oaks, Pa.; Miss Diane Huntress, Thomas Beck and John Amory of New York.

With Professor and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Louis Safford of Williamstown.

At the Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield, are Mrs. James McKinley Rose of New York, Mrs. Frederick Upham of Keene Valley, N. Y., and Mrs. Grace M. Houghton of Rockville Center, L. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Gourlay Thacher, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Gavin and Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Farrington of New York are at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox.

Miss Louise Edey is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff at Stockbridge.

105

THIS CLIPPING FROM CONSHOHOCKEN, PA
RECORDER
8/9/40

Local Residents to Attend Berkshire Music Festival, Now Underway, Molly Tells

Many motorists heading Massachusetts-ward just now, to attend the seventh season of the famed Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, Mass., which opened August first and will continue through a course of nine brilliant concerts to August 18, inclusive.

Caleb Cresson, 6th. and his sister, Emily Vaux Cresson, son and daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Caleb Cresson of "Oak land Hall," Oaks—Rev. Mr. Cresson is vicar of Trinity Episcopal Church, Gulph Mills—are leaving today, Molly is told, to join the great throngs of music lovers at the concerts. They will be the guests of their cousin, Mrs. William Penn Cresson at "Chesterwood," Stockbridge.

Conshohocken's Mrs. Charles Heber Clark spends her summer in Stockbridge—or in fact the majority of the year at her lovely home there—and Molly feels sure with her intense love and appreciation of things musical, she will miss scarcely any of the nine magnificent programs, all conducted of course by the inimitable Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which organization as you all know, presents the annual, unique festival.

The placid, dignified small New England town takes on a cosmopolitan atmosphere during the Symphonic Festival, with the members of one of the world's greatest orchestras, famous soloists, musicians from many cities, the great, the rich, the permanent residents, the "summer colony" all rubbing elbows in the quietly gala atmosphere, visitors and townsfolk alike sharing a genuine satisfaction that they are promoting and participating in a project of real significance in the cultural life of America. That lends a depth to any entertainment.

Sketched briefly, the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins but a short half dozen years ago, when Henry Hadley advanced the idea and directed the first festival, with Gertrude Robinson-Smith as president of the Festival. In leaps and bounds, it grew, until after the first two seasons, it had become important enough to attract Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The rest is a twice-told tale, with the exception of the newest development, which is the opening of th Berkshire Music Center by Dr. Koussevitzky, probably a direct result of the modestly-begun Stockbridge festival.

Concerts were first given in a tent, until a severe thunderstorm proved the impractibility of such an enclosure. The storm however proved a blessing in disguise, for the very night it put a temporary end to a festival program, Miss Robinson-Smith collected $20,000 in pledges for the erection of an auditorium.

Now, the Music Shed, designed by Eliel Saarineen, Finnish architect, seats close to 6000, has superb acoustics, fits any kind of weather.

* * *

Which leads one's thoughts, naturally, to beloved Robin Hood Dell, whose aesthetic attributes may, too, have to bow to a more practical program. Music with Men of the Philadelphia Orchestra Under the Stars is something that is hard to duplicate on a mundane sphere, but with the elements to battle, music under the stars often becomes no music at all under rain, thunder and lightning. Molly would be loathe to see a roof between the audience and the heavens in the lovely natural setting of the Dell, but with the interference which the weather has given the concerts this year, there is little else to do to make the concerts "safe from the skies". This summer's numerous storms—one group happening virtually every night for a week in succession—have so affected expected revenue that it was necessary to curtail the season and abandon the final week, set for next week, entirely.

Molly knows you will all join her in a fervent hope that Some Way Out will be found to make Robin Hood Dell as healthy a project, as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival appears to be. Long may they wave.

MOLLY MATSON.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

AUG 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens New Series In Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood

Music lovers of Danbury and vicinity who plan to attend concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., tomorrow, Sunday, or next week, will be interested in the following dispatch by John Selby, Associated Press arts editor:

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Seven thousand persons heard last night's opening concert of the second series, Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs, in spite of the fact that the now famous music "shed" at Tanglewood, the festival's home, seats only 6,038.

The overflow was cared for on dozens of benches set alongside the "shed" and several hundred comfortable listeners lay on steamer rugs and blankets under the stars, trodden on only occasionally by passers by.

This, the fourth concert of the nine that make up the festival this summer, was also the beginning of Serge Koussevitzky's Tchaikowsky-Beethoven cycle. The Tchaikowsky part of the week-end's music is in honor of the 100th anniversary of the Russian's birth, the leaven of Beethoven was inserted, apparently, as a balance to the introspective and hyper-emotional music of the Slav.

Last night's eymphony was the strong and brilliant fourth, instead of the "Pathetique," as programmed earlier. It was preceded by Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, and by the Beethoven concerto for violin with Albert Spalding as soloist—a program of exactly the proper contrast for an audience such as this one, assembled from every section of the world, and every stratum of society.

Last night's seven thousand included Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, and was to have included the former Empress Zita of Austria, as well. But the empress, now living at Royalston temporarily, excused herself at the last minute and now is expected to attend either the Saturday night or Sundey afternoon concert instead.

Spaulding's appearance was another manifestation of the neighborhood spirit which made the Berkshire festival a model for the country.

The violinist's summer place is near Great Barrington, just south of here, and he not only plays the violin for the visitors, but contributes his time as one of the festival trustees.

He has played more accurately on occasion but never with deeper appreciation of the musical content of the music and a higher level of inspiration. The incomparable Boston Symphony, and Dr. Koussevitzky, were at the top of their form.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 9 - 1940

7000 ATTEND STOCKBRIDGE MUSIC EVENT

Spalding Shares Honors With Orchestra at Berkshire Festival

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—Applause, punctuated with bravos rang out as Albert Spalding, American violinist and one of Berkshire's own, completed his moving, intellectual performance of Beethoven's only concerto for violin and orchestra. Five times he was called back to receive this applause and he finally persuaded Serge Koussevitzky to share it with him.

All too seldom these days one hears this concerto. It lacks the brilliance and popular appeal of other violin concerto, but it is effective in the right hands. The combination of Albert Spalding and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was irresistible. The concerto reaches its height in the slow movement and to this Mr. Spalding brought a warm and luscious tone, richer and deeper than in the first movement. In the finale, which is attached to the second movement, making for greater continuity, Beethoven comes down to the common people and the rustic dance abounds in humor. The orchestra played superbly, providing a perfectly balanced performance.

The audience at this first concert of the second series is said to have exceeded in size all previous audiences, but after the first 7000 people arrive, a few hundred, more or less, doesn't make much difference. Once again the weather was ideal and a new moon added to the beauty of the evening.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony is an old story to symphony lovers. It is one of his finest achievements and the symphony is one of the best for outdoor performance. It was a reading of breadth and tremendous thrust that practically brought the audience to its feet. The contrasts between dramatic conflict and tender emotion were superbly realized.

The program opened with a stunning performance of the Egmont overture by Beethoven. This is red blooded music and it was played as such.

(Continued on Sixteenth Page)

The program Saturday night will include two symphonies, Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." The Sunday program will open with the Beethoven "Coriolanus" overture and his fourth symphony. The final number will be Tschaikowsky's "Fifth" symphony.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1940

Front Views and Profiles

By June Provines

Names and Faces.

Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 8.—The opening week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival drew a representative audience in which celebrities and bearers of fine old New England names made up a big slice of the 5,000 present. Sedgewicks, Danas, Choates, Fields, and Beecher Stowes were represented—Ellery Sedgewick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly; Miss Mable Choate, an impressive looking woman with a twinkle in her eye, daughter of the late ambassador to Great Britain and granddaughter of Rufus Choate; Lyman Beecher Stowe of the family of the great preacher. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes was present. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the festival, had in her box the Artur Rodzinskis, Carleton Smith, and Gregor Piatigorsky. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and Norman Davis were guests in another box. Lucretia Bori, Paul Hindemith, and Aaron Copland, both members of the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music school, and Germain Schnitzer were among the musicians in the audience. There was an elderly Austrian grand duke with a white goatee, and a half dozen counts and princes; an almond-eyed girl in Japanese dress; a turbaned East Indian in Miss Choate's box. There were wonderful New England dowagers in boned collars and Queen Mary hats, and townsfolk and music students and critics. And there was Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave the land for the festival, who almost didn't get in. Mrs. Brooks drove herself to the festival grounds in a small car of inexpensive make and had neglected to provide herself with a card required at the box holders' entrance. Some one rescued her just as a policeman was ejecting her.

For the first time Mme. Koussevitzky was not present when her husband conducted at the festival. She lay ill a short distance away in the white house on Bald Head that, formerly the summer home of Chicago's late Miss Kate Buckingham, recently was purchased by the Koussevitzkys. The conductor of the Boston symphony and his wife seldom have house guests; indeed, it is said that only two persons, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky and music writer and lecturer Carleton Smith, have ever stayed under this roof, but this week Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston symphony, and his wife, as well as Mr. Smith, are guests there. Dr. Koussevitzky was very much upset by his wife's inability to attend the concerts. She has been very helpful in his career. Mme. Koussevitzky is said to have come from the richest family in Russia in the days before the revolution. One day when Koussevitzky, then a bull fiddle player in an orchestra, was playing in a St. Petersburg salon, he played especially to an interested little girl who loitered at the foot of the steps leading to the platform. That little girl is now Mme. Koussevitzky. An ironical note is that her family, who objected to her marriage to a poor musician, now is being supported by him. Similarly, parents of Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky's wife, who was a Rothschild, objected to her marriage. A week or so ago Piatigorsky signed the affidavit that he would be responsible for them, in order that they might be permitted to enter the United States.

Former Empress Zita Fails to Attend

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—The former Empress Zita of Austria failed to show up at the opening of the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight, but 7000 others did come. It was the greatest throng ever to attend a musical event in this end of the state.

While Zita and her children, who had been scheduled to sit in one of the boxes, failed to appear, the audience seemed to lack little of the glitter which makes these concerts memorable. Every one of the 80 boxes was crammed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall and Mrs. Saltonstall were guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival. He had previously attended the annual Harvard dinner in Pittsfield.

The festival officials stopped selling seats in the shed this morning when it was found that every one of the 6000 chairs had been taken. Sales of general admission tickets continued, however, and tonight alone more than 1000 bought at the box offices. Long lines stretched for blocks, if there had been blocks laid out among the trees, and the last box office patron was not served until after the opening number.

As usual hundreds of music lovers spread themselves under the trees and over the lawn, but as large a number packed 10 deep behind the last row of seats, and crowded into the areaways at the side.

Perhaps 4000 automobiles were parked in the various spaces reserved for motorists, and despite dense traffic on all roads leading to Tanglewood, not an accident was reported.

Heavy business was done at a special booth set up on the lawn where tickets for the benefit for Allied relief which will be held the [illegible] sold.

Saturday night as large a throng as tonight is expected, for nearly all seats have already been sold.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 9 - 1940

105

THIS CLIPPING FROM CONSHOHOCKEN, PA
RECORDER
8/9/40

Local Residents to Attend Berkshire Music Festival, Now Underway, Molly Tells

Many motorists heading Massachusetts-ward just now, to attend the seventh season of the famed Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, Mass., which opened August first and will continue through a course of nine brilliant concerts to August 18, inclusive.

Caleb Cresson, 6th. and his sister, Emily Vaux Cresson, son and daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Caleb Cresson of "Oak land Hall," Oaks—Rev. Mr. Cresson is vicar of Trinity Episcopal Church, Gulph Mills—are leaving today, Molly is told, to join the great throngs of music lovers at the concerts. They will be the guests of their cousin, Mrs. William Penn Cresson at "Chesterwood," Stockbridge.

Conshohocken's Mrs. Charles Heber Clark spends her summer in Stockbridge—or in fact the majority of the year at her lovely home there—and Molly feels sure with her intense love and appreciation of things musical, she will miss scarcely any of the nine magnificent programs, all conducted of course by the inimitable Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which organization, as you all know, presents the annual, unique festival.

The placid, dignified small New England town takes on a cosmopolitan atmosphere during the Symphonic Festival, with the members of one of the world's greatest orchestras, famous soloists, musicians from many cities, the great, the rich, the permanent residents, the "summer colony" all rubbing elbows in the quietly gala atmosphere, visitors and townsfolk alike sharing a genuine satisfaction that they are promoting and participating in a project of real significance in the cultural life of America. That lends a depth to any entertainment.

Sketched briefly, the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins but a short half dozen years ago, when Henry Hadley advanced the idea and directed the first festival, with Gertrude Robinson-Smith as president of the Festival. In leaps and bounds, it grew, until after the first two seasons, it had become important enough to attract Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The rest is a twice-told tale, with the exception of the newest development, which is the opening of th Berkshire Music Center by Dr. Koussevitzky, probably a direct result of the modestly-begun Stockbridge festival.

Concerts were first given in a tent, until a severe thunderstorm proved the impractibility of such an enclosure. The storm however proved a blessing in disguise, for the very night it put a temporary end to a festival program, Miss Robinson-Smith collected $20,000 in pledges for the erection of an auditorium.

Now, the Music Shed, designed by Eliel Saarineen, Finnish architect, seats close to 6000, has superb acoustics, fits any kind of weather.

* * *

Which leads one's thoughts, naturally, to beloved Robin Hood Dell, whose aesthetic attributes may, too, have to bow to a more practical program. Music with Men of the Philadelphia Orchestra Under the Stars is something that is hard to duplicate on a mundane sphere, but with the elements to battle, music under the stars often becomes no music at all under rain, thunder and lightning. Molly would be loathe to see a roof between the audience and the heavens in the lovely natural setting of the Dell, but with the interference which the weather has given the concerts this year, there is little else to do to make the concerts "safe from the skies". This summer's numerous storms—one group happening virtually every night for a week in succession—have so affected expected revenue that it was necessary to curtail the season and abandon the final week, set for next week, entirely.

Molly knows you will all join her in a fervent hope that Some Way Out will be found to make Robin Hood Dell as healthy a project, as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival appears to be. Long may they wave.

MOLLY MATSON.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

AUG 9 - 1940

Koussevitzky Opens New Series In Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood

Music lovers of Danbury and vicinity who plan to attend concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., tomorrow, Sunday, or next week, will be interested in the following dispatch by John Selby, Associated Press arts editor:

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9—Seven thousand persons heard last night's opening concert of the second series, Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs, in spite of the fact that the now famous music "shed" at Tanglewood, the festival's home, seats only 6,038.

The overflow was cared for on dozens of benches set alongside the "shed" and several hundred comfortable listeners lay on steamer rugs and blankets under the stars, trodden on only occasionally by passers by.

This, the fourth concert of the nine that make up the festival this summer, was also the beginning of Serge Koussevitzky's Tchaikowsky-Beethoven cycle. The Tchaikowsky part of the weekend's music is in honor of the 100th anniversary of the Russian's birth, the leaven of Beethoven was inserted, apparently, as a balance to the introspective and hyper-emotional music of the Slav.

Last night's eymphony was the strong and brilliant fourth, instead of the "Pathetique," as programmed earlier. It was preceded by Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, and by the Beethoven concerto for violin with Albert Spalding as soloist—a program of exactly the proper contrast for an audience such as this one, assembled from every section of the world, and every stratum of society.

Last night's seven thousand included Governor and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, and was to have included the former Empress Zita of Austria, as well. But the empress, now living at Royalston temporarily, excused herself at the last minute and now is expected to attend either the Saturday night or Sundey afternoon concert instead.

Spaulding's appearance was another manifestation of the neighborhood spirit which made the Berkshire festival a model for the country.

The violinist's summer place is near Great Barrington, just south of here, and he not only plays the violin for the visitors, but contributes his time as one of the festival trustees.

He has played more accurately on occasion but never with deeper appreciation of the musical content of the music and a higher level of inspiration. The incomparable Boston Symphony, and Dr. Koussevitzky, were at the top of their form.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1940

Front Views and Profiles

By June Provines

Names and Faces.

Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 8. — The opening week of the Berkshire Symphonic festival drew a representative audience in which celebrities and bearers of fine old New England names made up a big slice of the 5,000 present. Sedgewicks, Danas, Choates, Fields, and Beecher Stowes were represented — Ellery Sedgewick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly; Miss Mable Choate, an impressive looking woman with a twinkle in her eye, daughter of the late ambassador to Great Britain and granddaughter of Rufus Choate; Lyman Beecher Stowe of the family of the great preacher. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes was present. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the festival, had in her box the Artur Rodzinskis, Carleton Smith, and Gregor Piatigorsky. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and Norman Davis were guests in another box. Lucretia Bori, Paul Hindemith, and Aaron Copland, both members of the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music school, and Germain Schnitzer were among the musicians in the audience. There was an elderly Austrian grand duke with a white goatee, and a half dozen counts and princes; an almond-eyed girl in Japanese dress; a turbaned East Indian in Miss Choate's box. There were wonderful New England dowagers in boned collars and Queen Mary hats, and townsfolk and music students and critics. And there was Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave the land for the festival, who almost didn't get in. Mrs. Brooks drove herself to the festival grounds in a small car of inexpensive make and had neglected to provide herself with a card required at the box holders' entrance. Some one rescued her just as a policeman was ejecting her.

For the first time Mme. Koussevitzky was not present when her husband conducted at the festival. She lay ill a short distance away in the white house on Bald Head that, formerly the summer home of Chicago's late Miss Kate Buckingham, recently was purchased by the Koussevitzkys. The conductor of the Boston symphony and his wife seldom have house guests; indeed, it is said that only two persons, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky and music writer and lecturer Carleton Smith, have ever stayed under this roof, but this week Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston symphony, and his wife, as well as Mr. Smith, are guests there. Dr. Koussevitzky was very much upset by his wife's inability to attend the concerts. She has been very helpful in his career. Mme. Koussevitzky is said to have come from the richest family in Russia in the days before the revolution. One day when Koussevitzky, then a bull fiddle player in an orchestra, was playing in a St. Petersburg salon, he played especially to an interested little girl who loitered at the foot of the steps leading to the platform. That little girl is now Mme. Koussevitzky. An ironical note is that her family, who objected to her marriage to a poor musician, now is being supported by him. Similarly, parents of Cellist Gregor Piatigorsky's wife, who was a Rothschild, objected to her marriage. A week or so ago Piatigorsky signed the affidavit that he would be responsible for them, in order that they might be permitted to enter the United States.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 9 - 1940

7000 ATTEND STOCKBRIDGE MUSIC EVENT

Spalding Shares Honors With Orchestra at Berkshire Festival

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—Applause, punctuated with bravos rang out as Albert Spalding, American violinist and one of Berkshire's own, completed his moving, intellectual performance of Beethoven's only concerto for violin and orchestra. Five times he was called back to receive this applause and he finally persuaded Serge Koussevitzky to share it with him.

All too seldom these days one hears this concerto. It lacks the brilliance and popular appeal of other violin concerto, but it is effective in the right hands. The combination of Albert Spalding and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was irresistible. The concerto reaches its height in the slow movement and to this Mr. Spalding brought a warm and luscious tone, richer and deeper than in the first movement. In the finale, which is attached to the second movement, making for greater continuity, Beethoven comes down to the common people and the rustic dance abounds in humor. The orchestra played superbly, providing a perfectly balanced performance.

The audience at this first concert of the second series is said to have exceeded in size all previous audiences, but after the first 7000 people arrive, a few hundred, more or less, doesn't make much difference. Once again the weather was ideal and a new moon added to the beauty of the evening.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony is an old story to symphony lovers. It is one of his finest achievements and the symphony is one of the best for outdoor performance. It was a reading of breadth and tremendous thrust that practically brought the audience to its feet. The contrasts between dramatic conflict and tender emotion were superbly realized.

The program opened with a stunning performance of the Egmont

(Continued on Sixteenth Page)

overture by Beethoven. This is red blooded music and it was played as such.

The program Saturday night will include two symphonies, Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." The Sunday program will open with the Beethoven "Coriolanus" overture and his fourth symphony. The final number will be Tschaikowsky's "Fifth" symphony.

Former Empress Zita Fails to Attend

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—The former Empress Zita of Austria failed to show up at the opening of the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here tonight, but 7000 others did come. It was the greatest throng ever to attend a musical event in this end of the state.

While Zita and her children, who had been scheduled to sit in one of the boxes, failed to appear, the audience seemed to lack little of the glitter which makes these concerts memorable. Every one of the 80 boxes was crammed. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall and Mrs. Saltonstall were guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival. He had previously attended the annual Harvard dinner in Pittsfield.

The festival officials stopped selling seats in the shed this morning when it was found that every one of the 6000 chairs had been taken. Sales of general admission tickets continued, however, and tonight alone more than 1000 bought at the box offices. Long lines stretched for blocks, if there had been blocks laid out among the trees, and the last box office patron was not served until after the opening number.

As usual hundreds of music lovers spread themselves under the trees and over the lawn, but as large a number packed 10 deep behind the last row of seats, and crowded into the areaways at the side.

Perhaps 4000 automobiles were parked in the various spaces reserved for motorists, and despite dense traffic on all roads leading to Tanglewood, not an accident was reported.

Heavy business was done at a special booth set up on the lawn where tickets for the benefit for Allied relief which will be held the [illegible] sold.

Saturday night as large a throng as tonight is expected, for nearly all seats have already been sold.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 9 - 1940

AUG 9 - 1940
Pittsfield Mass - Eagle.

With hands joined Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (right), and Albert Spalding (left), acknowledge the plaudits of the Festival crowd following Beethoven's concerto for violin. Mr. Spalding was the first violin soloist to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Festival Shed and Grounds Crowded for Fourth Concert

Week-end Concerts Expected To Smash All Tanglewood Attendance Records

Although new celebrities attending the first concert of the second series at Tanglewood were few last night, a record breaking crowd, estimated at more than 7500, crowded the Shed and grounds, leaving every indication that the attendance figures will continue to rise for the second and third concerts tomorrow and Sunday.

The week end is expected to attract a number of nationally famous people to the Festival, including Bette Davis, the movie actress, vacationing in New Hampshire who is expected to drive down here for the concert tomorrow evening.

Gov. and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall attended last night's concert, sitting in the official box as the guests of the Festival. Without fanfare and minus the usual confusion which accompanies the entrance of a governor, the chief executive quietly made his way to the center of the box section, chatted with people in the aisle and sat down to enjoy the program.

Governor Pleased

Highly pleased with the success of the Festival, Gov. Saltonstall said before leaving:

"This remarkable Festival, held in such perfect surrounding, deserves the support of everyone. While I have heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra many times in the eastern part of the state, I can't recall when I have heard it play so magnificently. I think Miss Robinson Smith and the others connected with the Festival have done a fine job. They have a great organization."

Once again the weather man treated the Festival-goers with favorable weather.

Apparently many who have attended previous concerts here thought it best to attend the second series early, for judging by the number of music lovers under the Shed as early at 7.45, three-quarters of an hour before concert time, they wanted to be on the grounds, close to their seats long before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky walked to the platform.

While there was practically no congestion in the traffic areas, the men in charge of traffic and parking reported that more automobiles entered the grounds last night at Tanglewood than at any time in the history of the Festival.

Every seat in the Shed was occupied and the overflow crowd, estimated at 1500, filled the benches at the side of the Shed and made themselves comfortable on the lawn between the house and the Shed.

In fact, the lawn was so crowded that one had to be careful in the dark not to step on people, sprawled on blankets.

As evidence of the fact that many came early, the nurses in the Red Cross tent, near the north entrance reported that "many must have hurried their dinners to get to the Festival on time tonight." Instead of handing out aspirin, as was the case during the first series, the popular thing last night was bicarbonate of soda.

During the program the nurses had two "permanent" patients. Both spent the evening on cots in the tent.

The Allied relief fund stand on the lawn between the Shed and the house was a busy place during intermission. Many tickets were sold during the night for the program to be given at Tanglewood Friday, Aug. 16.

All Food Sold

Mrs. Frank J. Brothers, president of the Thursday Morning Club, and the women assisting her at the organization's refreshment tent at the west side of the Festival grounds reported three-quarters of the way through intermission that "all food was sold out," in spite of the fact that provisions were made to care for more people last night than on opening night—a week ago.

Sgt. Francis O'Connell of the Massachusetts State Police and eight troopers from barracks in Western Massachusetts, aided the volunteer American Legion workmen and local police in handling the heavy traffic.

Late Opening: Pleased Couple

A New York couple, late in arriving, were determined to listen to part of last night's program. They arrived at Tanglewood just as the Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the first movement of Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor. The box office, about to close, was reopened for business. The couple purchased two general admission tickets and hurried to the side of the Shed where they heard the last part of the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1940

More Than 7500 Attend Festival

Orchestra and Spalding Given Great Applause

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival went into its second week last night at Tanglewood under weather conditions that will be making Californians of us all. The first week had been so phenomenally perfect in that respect, as well as in the brilliance of the audiences and the calibre of the performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its famous leader, Serge Koussevitsky, that even the most sanguine well-wishers of the Festival must have been willing to concede a point on the weather. But here again for this fourth concert came crystal clear air under heavens as luminous as a Berkshire August can display.

This middle week will be devoted to the celebration of the 100th anniversary of Tschaikowsky's birth.

The celebration takes the form of the performance of one of his symphonies at each of the three concerts of this week, with the remainder of the programs completely devoted to Beethoven. In 1970 Dr. Koussevitsky undoubtedly will play mostly Tschaikowsky at the celebration of the 200th anniversary of Beethoven's birth.

10/6

Honor Well Bestowed

The appearance of Albert Spalding in the Beethoven concerto was a new venture for the Festival, for he was the first violinist to appear as soloist with the orchestra in the great Shed which is the scene of the concerts. The honor was well bestowed, however, by reason of Mr. Spalding's rank in his field, and, additionally, because of the pride the Berkshires take in counting him one of their welcome summer residents.

Mr. Spalding's tone has the body and incisive, piercing quality which made his interpretation telling, both in the spacious themes, and in the more involved passage work. The accompaniment by Dr. Koussevitsky was a thing of beauty in itself. The introductions to the first and second movements, this latter terribly draggy, incidentally, were developed with a watchmaker's care for detail and precision, and provided a background from which only a tone like Mr. Spalding's could have emerged in matching beauty.

Mr. Spalding bent over backwards, we thought, to give the concerto a severe purity of style. Every note he produced and phrase he turned was in the greatest tonal distinction. His technical achievements in the unnecessary and unlovely cadenzas were astonishing, and the triumph the huge audience accorded him at the end would not subside, despite repeated returns alone and with the orchestra's conductor. The music, itself, dates from the particularly rich and prolific period of Beethoven, the days of the fifth and pastoral symphonies, the Waldstein sonata, the Rasoumoffsky quartets, the Geister trio, "Fidelio," the Emperor concerto, the period which Schauffler describes as one in which he enjoyed "the continual bliss of truimphant creation."

Continued From First Page

Largest Audience

The audience, which was the largest ever to attend a Festival concert (there were over 1700 general admissions sold in addition to the reserved seats within the shed, totalling over 7500), gave vent to another ovation, this time to the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky, at the end of the symphony. This sort of experience takes place each Festival several times, but its repetition each time seems like a new and fresh spontaneous eruption of the excitement which had been accumulating during the performance of some favorite.

Tschaikowsky himself pointed out the utter failure of words to convey the intense feeling which finds its only outlet in tone. His fourth symphony possibly was the portrayal of some program, but the reams of paper which have been covered to delineate every intention and gesture are not worth half the fun that the full-throated, imaginative performance we heard last night affords every listener.

The explosion at the beginning of the final movement after the astounding pizzicato scherzo is positively to make one shudder, and then the pomp of the march, as Koussevitzky controlled it, and all that follows as well as had gone before, was so exciting that the record audience remained in a near-frenzy for minutes after the completion of the symphony.

Tschaikowsky is depicted in so many accounts of his life as a man who avoided contact with other folks, and yet his music, as shown in this example, is that of the complete extrovert, laying bare his inmost soul for whosoever cares to look. He wrote six symphonies in all, of which the three being heard this week end are the ones in the usual orchestral repertories.

He visited America in 1891, two years before his death, coming to New York at the invitation of Walter Damrosch, to help dedicate Carnegie Hall, which had just been erected.

The concert had opened with Beethoven's overture to "Egmont." Goethe's play is probably moderately faithful to the history of the gallant count who died a martyr for Flemish freedom nearly four centuries ago under conditions which are so similar in many ways to actual conditions prevailing today that they are frightening.

